and meanes reasonable how to maintaine the same: and therefore hath offered conditions and manifold waies of peace, to be had to the no small preiudice of his owne cause. And yet is ready to admit any reasonable offer of peace, if by any meanes it may be sought, &c. With this answere the cardinals going to the French king, the kings aduersary, to perswade with him in like maner, returned to king Edward againe, offering to him in the French kings name, the dukedome of Aquitane, in as full assurance as his father before him euer had it: besides further hope also of obtaining more, if intreatie of peace might be obtained. But forsomuch as that contented not enough the kings mind, neither did the cardinals find the French king so tractable and propense to the studie of peace as they looked for, the cardinals returned, leauing the matter as they found it. And so the king speeding forward, by the way as his iourney did lie, hee subdued the countrie and the great townes without any resistance of the inhabitants, who did all flee and runne away. Such feare God stroke into them, that it seemed they had lost their hearts. In the same voiage, as the king had gotten many townes and villages, so also hee subdued castles and munitions, very strong, and that with little stresse. His enemy being at the same time at Rome had reared a great armie, who notwithstanding being well manned, yet euer kept on the other side of the riuer Seane, breaking downe all the bridges that we should not come ouer to him. And although the countrey round about continually was spoiled, sackt, and with fire consumed by the circuit of twentie miles round about: yet the French king being distant scarce the space of one mile from vs, either would not or else durst not (when he might easilie haue passed ouer the riuer) make any resistance for the defence of his countrie and people. And so our king iourneying forward came to Pusiake or Poisy, where the French king had likewise broken downe the bridge, and keeping on the other side of the riuer would rest in no place.

The kings answere to the Cardinals.

The French king stirreth no stresse in the way of peace.

The king comming to Pusiake.

After whose comming to Poitie, the foresaid chaplaine and confessor to the king, named Michael Northburgh, describing the kings voiage and the acts of the Englishmen from the towne of Poisse, to his comming to Calis, in his letters writeth in this wise.

A letter of William Northburgh the kings confessor, describing the kings voiage into France.

SAlutations premised, we giue you to vnderstand, that our soueraigne lord the king came to the towne of Poisye, the day before the assumption of our Ladie, where was a certaine bridge ouer the water of Seane broken downe of the enemy, but the king tarried there so long till that the bridge was made againe. And whiles the bridge was in reparing there came a great number of men at armes and other souldiers were armed, to hinder the same. But the earle of Northhampton issued out against them and slue of them more then one thousand; the rest fled away, thankes be to God. And at an other time our men passed the water, although with much trauell, and slues great number of the common souldiers of France, about the citie of Paris, and countrie adioyning, being part of the French kings armie, and thoroughly well appointed: so that our people haue now made other good bridges vpon our enemies, God be thanked, without any great losse and damage to vs. And on the morrow after the assumption of our Ladie, the king passed the water of Seane, and marched toward Poisye, which is a towne of great defence and strongly immured, and a maruellous strong castle within the same, which our enemies kept. And when our vandguard was passed the towne, our rereguard gaue an assault thereunto and tooke the same: where were slaine more then three hundred men at armes of our enemies part. And the next day following, the earle of Suffolke and sir Hugh Spenser marched forth vpon the commons of the countrie assembled and well armed, and in fine discomfited them, and slue of them more then two hundred, and tooke 60. gentlemen prisoners beside others. And after that, the king marched toward graund Villers, and while he was there encamped, the kings vandgard was descried by the men of armes by the king Benamee: whereupon, our men issued out in great haste and ioyned battel with them, but were inforced to retire. Notwithstanding, thanks be vnto God, the earle of Northhampton issued out and rescued the horsmen with other souldiers; so that few or none of them were either taken or slaine, sauing onely Thomas Talbot, but had againe the enemie in chase within two leagues of Amians: of whom we tooke 8. and slue 12. of their best men at armes, the rest being well horsed, tooke the towne of Amians. After this, the king of England and marched toward Pountife vpon Bartholomew day, and came vnto the water of Som, where the French king had laid 900. men at armes, and three thousand footmen, purposing to haue kept and stopped our passage: but thankes be to God, the king of England and his host entered the same water of Som, where neuer man passed before, without the losse of any of our men: and after that encountred with the enemie, and slue of them more then two thousand, the rest fled to

Abeuile,

Abeuile, in which chase were taken many knights, squires, and men at armes. The same day Sir Hugh Spencer tooke the town of Croylay, where hee and his souldiers slew foure hundred men at armes, and kept the towne, where they found great store of victuals. The same night encamped the king of England in the forrest of Cressy vpon the same water, for that the French kings host came on the other side of the towne neer vnto our passage: but hee would not take the water of vs, and so marched toward Abeuyle. And vpon the friday next following, the king being still incamped in the sad forrest, our Scuriers descried the French king, which marched toward vs in foure great battels. And hauing then vnderstanding of our enemies (as God will was) a little before the euening tide we drew vnto the plaine field, and set our battels in array; and immediatly the fight began, which was sore and cruell, and indured long, for our enemies behaued themselues right nobly. But thanks bee giuen to God, the victory fell on our side, and the king our aduersary was discomfited with all his host, and put to flight: where also was slaine the king of Benamie, the duke of Loreine, the earle of Dabefon, the earle of Flanders, the earle of Bloys, the earle of Ascot, with his two sonnes, the earle of Damerley, the earle of Nauers, and his brother, the lord of Tronard, the archbishop of Meymes, the archbishop of Saundes, the high prior of France, the earle of Sauoy, the lord of Morles, the Lord de Guis, Segniour de S. Nouant, Seigniour de Rosingburgh, with six earles of Almaine, and diuers other earles, barons, knights, and squires, whose names are vnknowne. And Philip de Valois himselfe, with another Marquesse, which was called lord Electour among the Romans, escaped from the battell. The number of the men at armes which were found dead in the field, beside the common souldiers and footmen, were one thousand, fiue hundred, forty, and two. And all that night the king of England with his host abode armed in the field where the battell was fought. On the next morrow before the Sunne rose, there marched toward vs another great host, mightie and strong, of the Frenchmen. But the earle of Northhampton, and the earle of Northfolke issued out against them in three battels, and after long and terrible fight, them in like wise they discomfited by Gods great helpe & grace (for otherwise it could neuer haue been) where they tooke of knights and squires a great number, and slew about two thousand, pursuing the chase three leagues from the place where the battell was fought. The same night also the king encamped himselfe againe in the forrest of Cressy, & on the morrow marched toward Boleine, and by the way he tooke the towne of Staples; and from thence he marched toward Calis, where he intendeth to plant his siege and his battery to the same. And therefore our soueraigne lord the king willeth and commandeth you in all that euer you may, to send to the said siege victuals conuenient. For after the time of our departing from Chaam, we haue trauelled through the country with great perill and danger of our people, but yet alwaies had of victuall plenty, thanks be to God therefore. But now as the case standeth, we partly need your helpe to be refreshed with victuals. Thus fare you well. Written at the siege before the towne of Calis the 14. day of September.

{Anno 1346 Siege of Calis.

After the siege and winning of Poisse, the third day of September anno 1346. the king through the midst of France directed his passage vnto Calis, as by the tenour of this letter you heare, and besieged the same. In the meane time, during the siege of Calis, Dauid the Scottish king, at the request of the French king, with a great army hasted into the North parts of England; and first besieging the towne of Lidel, within sir dales obtained the greatest part of the towne, and there taking all that hee could finde, with Sir Walter Sallup a valiant knight, which was the keeper of the hold, caused him vncourteously to bee put to the sword: and so from thence proceeded further into England; till at length being met withall by William Zurch archbishoppe of Yorke, and the lord Percie, and the lord Neuel, with other nobles of those parts (calling and gathering their men together) in the plaine neere to Durham, the seuentenih day of October in the yere aboue said, through the gracious hand of Christ, there were subdued and conquered. In the which conflict, the earles of Murrie, and Stratheron, with the flower of all the clualry and principall warriors of Scotland were slaine. Also the foresaid king Dauid, with the earles of Wintife and Fiffes, and other lords, and William Douglasse Dalhilme, Fleming, and William Douglasse, and other many mo men of armes were taken prisoners: and so the mischiefe which they intended to other, fell vpon their owne heads.

The letter of the pope to the king of England, in the behalfe of the Frenchmen.

CLement the bishop, seruant of Gods seruants: To his welbeloued sonne in Christ, Edward the puisant king of England; salutation and apostolicall blessing. If you diligently consider deare son, (as ought a catholike prince) to doe the slaughter of such an innumerable fort, bought with the precious bloud of Christ our redeemer: the losse of their substance and soules, and the lamentable perils which the dissensions and warres stirred vp betweene you and our welbeloued sonne Philip, the noble king of France, haue brought vpon vs, and yet daily doe without intermission: and also the bewailing of so many poore people, crying out of orphans and pupils, lamentation of widowes, and other miserable people which be robbed and spoiled, and almost famished: what exclamation they make with teares running downe their cheekes, yelling and crying vnto God for help; as also the destruction of churches, monasteries, and holy places, holy vessels, and other ornaments vnto Gods seruice dedicated; the sacrilegious robberies, sackings, & imprisonings; the spoiling of holy churches & religious persons, with many other such innumerable, detestable, carefull mischiefes, offending the eies of the diuine maiesty: all which, if your princely heart would consider and well remember; with this also, that catholike faith (especially in the East parts) and the christians there abiding by meanes of the same dissensions and wars, destitute of the helps of such catholike men as are in the West parts, are so afflicted of the infidels, seeing the other parts of Christendom so troubled with cruell persecutions, yea and more cruell then euer it hath bin (although in these times to amplifie this our faith in the said East parts is cruell persecution shewed, more then hath bin of many yeares past) doubtlesse we beliue it would pity your heart. And to the end that such and so great euils should no further proceed, nor yet that so great good as might be done by dilating of our foresaid faith in these times should be let and hindered; we desire you that ye would apply your mind to make some agreement and peace with the foresaid king. For if (my welbeloued sonne) God hath giuen vnto you prosperous successe and fortune, ye ought rather to humble then to extoll your selfe; and so much the more readier to incline to his peace, & to indeuor your selfe to please God, which loueth peace, and delighteth in peaceable men; and to eschew the foresaid euils, which without doubt do grieuously offend him. Furthermore, we maruell greatly, that vnto our reuerend brother Anibaldus bishop of Tusculane, and our beloued son Stephan, of the title of S. Iohn, and Paul, priest and cardinall of the apostolicall see, being sent as legats by vs and the same see apostolicall to intreat a peace, who diligently and faithfully laboring for the same, as louers of verity, iustice, and equity, and therewithall regarders of your honor, could not be suffered touching the intreaty of the same peace, to come vnto your graces presence.

Wherefore we desire your kingly highnesse more earnestly, and for the mercy of God with more vehemence require the same, that ouer taking vp the foresaid horrible euils, and preuenting the sweetnesse of piety and compassion, may escape the vengeance of Gods indignation, which were to be feared, if you should persueure in your former euils, as God forbid. And as touching the intreaty for peace, for which our foresaid cardinals were sent vnto you, (how beit secretly, lest it should be any derogation to your honour) we desire you to condescend thereunto, and with all your affection you will incline your mind to the same, so pleasant vnto God, so desired of the world, as also to you, the foresaid king, and vnto the catholike faith profitable. And that the same peace by Gods helpe and grace established and made perfit, you might assay your puissant strength about Gods businesse in the foresaid East parts (so good occasion seruing, as before is said, in these our times) being so apt aduancements of your honour, and happy increasing of your princely name: for seruently we haue heard of you reported to behaue your selfe in all your attempts. Thus we doubt not but that you will write vnto vs againe touching the premisses, and the purpose of your intention touching the same. Dated at Auinion the 18. of February, and 5. yeare of our Papacie.

The answere of the king of England, to the foresaid letter of the pope.

King Edward answereth the pope.

MOst holy father, we vnderstand by the letters of the reuerend fathers in God, the bishop of Tusculan, and Stephan of the title of Saint Iohn Prieft, Cardinals and Legats of the court of Rome, as also by the letters of your holinesse sent vnto vs, that yee maruell greatly for that your said legats were of purpose sent vnto vs, and commanded to intreat of a peace betweene our aduersary of France and vs, that wee would not suffer them secretly to talke with vs, for the safegard of our honour. The intention of your heart to make the foresaid peace, complaining and bewailing therein the death of Christian men, the losse of their goods, the perill of their soules, the lamentable wailings of the poore, of orphanes, the widowes, and destruction of other pitifull persons, the pillage and robberies robberies of churches, and other mischies innumerable, and namely, the diminishing of Christian faith in the East parts, which by the warres betwene our aduersary of France and vs is forth decaied, as the said letters plainly doe import. And that forsmuch as God hath giuen you triumphent fortune, that so much the more we ought to abase and humble our heart, and to be the readier to make and incline to a peace. As touching these things, holy Father, we giue your holinesse to vnderstand, that as well vnto your foresaid legats, as other messengers sent from you vnto vs, we haue offered vnto euery of them reasonable waies of peace, and euery day declare the same, and that not feerefully, but openly. For we doubt not to let our purpose be vnderstood; for he that is the high iudge both of him and vs, in whose disposition all things lieth, hath giuen vnto vs the crowne of France to our right and proper heritage. The which right, our foresaid aduersary hath by force of long time detained from vs, we seeking to obtaine the same in peaceable wise, and yet doe, if we might obtaine the same in any good manner, rather for the benefit of Christian men, and that the foresaid euils might cease, which by his wrongfull meanes onely haue increased and growen. Yet notwithstanding, as before this time you know we assented to a truce, with certaine articles contained in the same writing; all this hee hath infringed: Neither doth the wrong suffice him, which hee offereth vs in our foresaid heritage, but he indeoureth himselfe during the said truce, to inuade our realme of England & other our landes: and furthermore maintaineth the Scots, and aideth them to the vtter destruction of vs, our people and lands aforesaid; wherein we were inforced for the safegard of our people and lands, by such lawfull meanes as we may, to defend our selues. & put him from his wicked purpose. And furthermore, for the same our quarrell being in the hands of God, haue wee come against him to conquer our inheritance of France; ouer whom God hath giuen vs diuers victories, as we haue trusted hee would by his right wise iudgement and power; which thing he hath shewed vpon vs, (all chance of fortune set apart) in respect of our rightfull title therein, and without our deserts: wherefore with all humility of heart we giue him thanks alwaies therefore, most deuoutly night & day praising his holy name; for we acknowledge the same commeth not by our strength & force. Wherefore most holy father, we desire your holinesse, and, so much as in vs lieth, require the same, that you that supply the place of the Sonne of God in earth, and haue the gouernment of the soules of all christian men, and ought to be vpright and equall to words all men, without exception of persons, that ye will receiue good information and true, of the obiections abouesaid, and will put to your holy helping hand, as much as in you is, that our said aduersary of France may acknowledge his wrong which he hath done to vs herein, and may be by your aid redressed, and that he in this his wrong haue no maintenance and aid at your hand. For if it be so, we then appeale vnto the iudge of iudges, which suffereth for a time wrongs to be done for the sinfull default of man, but in the end reuelleth the same, leauing no good deed vnrewarded, nor euill vnpunished: most humbly requiring him to be to vs a true and vpright iudge of all our controuersies, for his mercies sake, as in the meane time we repose our full trust and confidence in him. The holy spirit of God, &c.

Moreouer, during yet the siege of Calis, the French king had sent certaine letters to the men of Flanders, that if they would returne with the king of England, and adhere to him:

First, he would remit all their former transgressions.

Secondly, he would vnburden them of their interdict.

Third ly, he would send vnto them such plenty of come, that what was sold for twelue shillings with them, should be sold for some shillings, and that for fiue yeres.

Fourthly, he would store them with plenty of French woll to make cloth, for a small price; and that they might sell the said clothes both in Flanders & in France, and that the French men should vse the same cloth, forsomuch as all other maner of cloth should be forbidden in France, so long as any of that (made of French woll) might be found.

Fiftly, he would restore them to these three cities, Insulam, Rodoretum and Betenie.

Sixtly, he would defend them from all their aduersaries; and in lieu of the same, would send them many besoyned, and mercifull, such as were able and forward men among them, he would retaine and promote them, &c.

But these offers seeming to proceed more of faire words to serue the present turne, then of any hearty truth, were not receiued. Then the lord John, prince and heire to the French king, during the foresaid siege of Calis about mentioned, comming with a mighty army of Frenchmen, set vpon the men of Flanders and Englishmen in the towne of Cassels. In the which conflict, during from morning to none, the Frenchmen were vanquished, and the young Dolphin driuen backe from whence he came. Of whose number diuers were slaine and taken prisoners. Where on the other side (through the Lords defence) not one is reported to bee greeuously wounded.

As this passed on, not long after about the seuenth day of June, an. 1347. king Edward continuing still his siege against Calis, Philip the French king came down with a mighty army, purposing to remoue the siege: where, not far off from the English host, he encamped himselfe. Which done, two cardinals, Ambalous and Stephanus (procured for the same purpose) going betwen the two kings, gaue to the king of England thus to vnderstand: That if he would condescend to any reasonable way of peace, the French king was ready to offer such honest proffers vnto him, as to reason & to his contemnation should seeme agreeable. But in conclusion when it came to talke, the nobles could not agree vpon the conditions. Wherefore the French king seeing no other remedy, did it to be signified to king Edward; that betweene that present tuesday, and the next friday, if he would come forth into the field, he should haue battell giuen him. Thus the place being viewed of foure captaines of either host for the battell to bee fought; it so fell, that the French king on wednesday at night, before the battell should begine, secretly by night setting his pauilions on fire, returned backe with his army out of the sight of Englishmen.

Upon the friday following, they which were besieged in the towne of Calis, seeing the king to be retired vpon whose helpe they trusted, being also in great penury and famin for lacke of victuals, and otherwise in much misery vehemently distressed) surrendred the towne to the kings hands: who like a mercifull prince onely detaining certaine of the chiefe, the rest with the whole commons he let goe with bagge and baggage, diminishing no part of their goods, hewing therein more princely fauour to them, then they did of late in Quene Maries dates vnto our men, in recouering the said towne of Calis againe.

After the winning thus of Calis, as hath been premised, king Edward remaining in the said towne a certaine space, was in consultation concerning his voiage and proceeding farther into France. But by meanes of the foresaid cardinals, truce for a certaine time was taken, and instruments made (so prouided, that certaine noble men as well for the French king, as for the king of England, should come to the pope there to debate vpon the articles. Vnto the which king Edward, for peace sake was not greatly disagreing. Which was an. 1347. Ex Tho. Walsingh.

The next yere following, which was an. 1348. fell a sore plague, which they call the first generall pestilence in the realme of England. This plague (as they say) first springing from the East, and so spreading Westward, did so mightily preuail here in this land, beginning first at Dorcester, and the countries thereabout, that euery day lightly twenty, some daies forty, some fifty, and mo dead corpses were brought and laid together in one pit. This beginning the first day of August, by the first of December it came to London. Where the vehement rage thereof was so hot, and did increase so much, that from the first day of February, till about the beginning of May, in a churchyard then newly made by Smithfield, about two hundred dead corpses euery day were buried, besides them which in other churchyards of the citie were laid also. At length by the grace of Christ ceasing there, it proceeded from thence to the north parts. Where also the next yere after, anno 1349. it swaged.

After this, in the next yere ensuing, an. 1350. the towne of Calis was by treason of the keeper of the castell, almost betraied and wonne from the Englishmen. Within the compasse of which yere, died Philip the French king. After whom king John his sonne succeeded in the crowne. Who the next yere after, vnder false pretence of friendship, caused the Constable of France earle of Eue, to be beheaded; who being taken prisoner before in war by Englishmen, and long detained in prison in England, was licenced by king Edward to visit his country of France. In the same yere the towne of Guines was taken by Englishmen, while the keepers of the hold were negligent and a sleepe.

The yere next following, the marshall of France with a great army was put to flight by sir Roger Bentele knight, and captaine in Britaine, hauing but only 600. souldiers with him. In this battell were taken nine knights, esquires and gentlemen one hundred and forty. The French men and Britaines by this victory were exceedingly discouraged, and their pride cut downe.

In the yere after, was Henry first made duke of Lancaster, which before was earle of Darbie and Lancaster. Also diuers good ordinances were appointed in the parliament at Westminster. Which after by auarice and partiall fauor of the head men, were againe vndone.

Concord and agreement about the yere 1354. began to come well forward, and instruments were drawne vpon the same betweene the two kings. But that the matter being brought by to pope Innocent 6. partly by the quarrelling of the French men, partly by the winking of the pope, which euer held with the French side, the conditions were repealed, which were these: That to the king of England, all the duke dome of Aquitaine with other lands there, should be to him restored, without hemage to the French king. And that king Edward againe should surrender to him all his right and title, which he her had in France: whereupon rose the occasion of great warre and tumult, which followed after betweene the two realmes.

It followed after this, the yere of our Lord 1355. that king Edward hearing of the death of Philip the French king, and that king John his sonne had granted the dukedome of Aquitaine to Charles his eldest sonne and Dolphin of Vienna; sent ouer prince Edward with the earle of Warwicke, of Salisbury, of Oxford, and with them a sufficient number of able souldiers into Aquitania. Where hee being willingly receiued of diuers, the rest hee subdued; partly by force of sword, partly receiued, submitting themselues to his protection.

Not long after this, in the same yere, wood being brought to king Edward, that John the French king was ready to meet him at S. Omers, there to giue him battell, he gathered his power, & set ouer to Calis with his two sons, Leonel earle of Ulston, and John of Gaunt earle of Richmond, and with Henry duke of Lancaster, &c. Who being come to Saint Omers, the French king with a mighty army of his Frenchkings, hearing of his comming, the nerer hee approched to them, the further they retired backe; walling and destroying behind them, to the intent that the English army in pursuing them, should finde no victuals. By reason wherof, king Edward soli. ging him by the space of nine or ten daies vnto Hadenham, when neither he could finde his enemy to fight, nor victuals or forage for his army, he returned vnto Calis: where war againe being offered in the name of the king vpon vnlikable conditions, and yet the same not performed, king Edward seeing the vnwilling of his enemy, from Calis crossed the seas into England, where hee recouered againe the towne of Barwicke, which the Scots before by subtill traine had gotten. At which time was granted vnto the king in parliament, 50. s. for euery sacke of woll that should be carried ouer, for the space of six yeres together. By the which grant, the king might dispend euery day by estimation, aboue 100. marks sterling. And for as much as euery yere 100000. sacks of woll were thought to be exported out of the realme; the sum thereof for six yeres space was esteemed to mount to 1500000. pound sterling.

The same yere, when king Edward had recouered Barwicke, and subdued Scotland, prince Edward being in Gascoine, made toward the French king. Who, notwithstanding by the way all bridges were cast downe, and great resistance made; yet the victorious prince making way with his sword, after much slaughter of the Frenchmen, and many prisoners taken, at length ioyning with the French king at Poytiers, scarse with 2000. gaue the ouerthrow to the French king with 7000. men of armes and mo. In which conflict, the French king himselfe, and Philip his sonne, with lord James of Bourbon, the archbishop of Senon, 11. earles, 22. lords were taken. Of other warriers and men of armes 2000. Some affirme, in this conflict were slaine two dukes, of lords and noblemen 24. of men of armes 200. of other souldiers about 8000. The common report is, that no Frenchmen were there taken prisoners, then were the number of them which tooke them. This noble victory gotten by the grace of God, brought no little admiration to all men.

If I were too long, and little pertaining to the purpose of this history, to comprehend in order all the doings of this king, with the circumstances of his victories, of the bringing in of the French king into England, of his abode there, of the ransome leuied on him, and of Dauid the Scottish king; of which, the one was rated at three millions of Scutes, the other at 100000. marks, to be paid in ten yeres, how the staple was after translated to Calis, with such like. I refer the them that would see more, to the chronicle of Tho. Walsing. of S. Albans, of Iohn Froyfard, Adam Merimouth, who discourse all this at large.

Thus hauing discoursed at large all such martiall affaires and warlike exploits, incident in the raigne of this king betwixt him and the realmes of France and Scotland: Now to returne againe to our matters ecclesiasticall, followeth in order to recapitulate and notifie the troubles and contentions growing betwene the same king and the pope, and other ecclesiasticall persons in matters touching the church, in order of yeres remaining in the volumes taken out of the records, as followeth. As where first in the fourth yere of his raigne, the king wrote to the archbishop of Canturbury to this effect: That whereas king Edward the first his grandfather did giue to a clerke of his owne, being his chaplaine, the dignitie of treasurer of Yorke, the archbishoprycke of Yorke being then vacant and in the kings hands, in the quiet possession whereof, the said clerke continued vntill the pope millliking therewith, would haue displaced him, and prouided to the same dignitie a cardinal of Rome, to the manifest preiudice of the crowne of England: the king therefore kindly charged the archbishop of Yorke, not to suffer any matter to passe, that may be preiudiciall to the donation of his grandfather, but that his owne clerke should inioy the said dignitie accordingly, vpon paine of his highnesse displeasure.

The like precepts were also directed to these bishops following, videl. to the bishop of Lincolne, bishop of Worcester, bishop of Sar, Nounser Parmion, archdeacon of Richmond, archdeacon of Lincolne, the prior of Lewen, the prior of Kenton, to maister Rich of Wentworth, to maister Iustred de Concoze, to the popes Nuncio, to maister Guido of Calma. And withall, wrote his letters vnto the pope, as touching the same matter consisting in three parts. First, in the declaration and defence of his right and title to the donation and gift of all manner of temporalties, of offices, prebends, benefices and dignities ecclesiasticall, holden of him in capite, as in the right of his crowne of England. Secondly, in expostulating with the pope for intruding himselfe into the ancient right of the crowne of England, intermeddling with such collations, contrary to right and reason, and the example of all his predecessours, which were popes before. Thirdly, intreating him that he would henceforth abstaine and desist from molesting the realme with such nouelties and strange vsurpations; and so much the more, for that in the publike parliament lately holden at Westminster, it was generally agreed vpon by the vniuersall assent of all the estates of the realme, that the king should stand to the defence of all such rights and iurisdictions as to his regall dignitie and crowne any way appertained.

After this, in the ninth yere of the raigne of this king, pope Benedict the twelfth, sendeth downe letters touching his new creation, with certaine other matters and requests to the king: whereunto the king answering again, declareth how glad he is of that his preferment; adding moreouer, that his purpose was to haue sent vnto him certaine ambassadors for congratulation of the same. But being otherwise occupied by reason of warres, could not attend his holinesse requests: notwithstanding he minded to call a parliament about the feast of Ascension next, where vpon the assembly of his clergy and other estates, hee would take order for the same, and to direct his ambassadors to his holinesse accordingly.

The next yere after, which was the tenth yere of his raigne, the king writeth another letter to the pope; that forasmuch as his clergy had granted him one yeres tenth for the suppotation of his warres, and for that the pope also had the same time to take vp the paiment of six yeres tenth granted him by the clergy a little before, therfore the pope would vouchsafe at his request, to forbeare the exaction of that money for one yere, till that his tenth for the necessities of his wars were dispatched.

In the same yere hee wrote also to the pope to this effect: That whereas the prior and chapter of Norwich did nominat a clerke to be bishop of Norwich, and sent him to Rome for his inuestiture, without the kings knowledge; therefore the pope would withdraw his consent, and not intermeddle in the matter appertaining to the kings peculiar iurisdiction and prerogatiue.

After this, in the fifteenth yere of this king; it happened that the pope sent ouer certaine legats to heare and determin matters appertaining to the right of patronages of benefices: which the king perceiuing to tend to the no small derogation of his right, and the liberties of his subiects, writeth vnto the said legats, admonishing and requiring them, not to proceed therein, nor attempt any thing vnduefully, otherwise then might stand with the lawfull ordinances and customes of the lawes of his realme, and the freedome and liberty of his subiects.

Writing moreouer the same yere to other legats being sent ouer by the pope to treat of peace betwene the king and the French king, with request that they would first make their repaire to the French king, who had so often times broken with him, and prosecute what conformitie the French king would offer: which if he found reasonable, they should soone accord with him: otherwise hee exhorted them not to enter into the land, nor to proceed any further in that behalfe.

The yere following, which was the seuententh of his raigne, ensueth another letter to the pope against his prouisions and reseruations of benefices, worthy here to bee placed and specified, but that the sum thereof is before set downe to be found in the pag. 355.

The yere following, another letter likewise was sent by the king to the pope, vpon occasion taken of the church of Norwich, requiring him to surcease his reseruations and prouisions of the bishoprichs within the realme, and to leaue the elections thereof free to the chapters of such cathedrall churches, according to the ancient grants and ordinances of his noble progenitors.

Proceeding now to the nineteenth yere of this kings raigne, there came to the presence of the king certaine legats from Rome, complaining of certaine statutes past in his parliament tending to the preiudice of the church of Rome, and the popes primacie; viz. that if abbats, priors, or any other ecclesiasticall patrons of benefices, should not present to the said benefices within a certaine time, the lapse of the same should come to the ordinary or chapter thereof: or if they did not present, then to the archbishop: if the archbishop likewise did faile to present, then the gift to pertaine not vnto the lord pope, but vnto the king and his heires. Another complaint also was was this, that if archbishops should bee slacke in giuing such benefices as properly pertained to their owne patronage in due time, then the collation thereof likewise should appertaine to the forsaid king and his heires. Another complaint was, that if the pope should make void any elections in the Church of England for any defect found therein, and so bad places of some honest and discreet persons in the same, that then the king and his heires was not bound to render the temporalities vnto the parties placed by the popes prouision. Whereupon the pope being not a little agreeued, the king writeth vnto him, certifying that it was misinformed, denying that there was any such statute made in that parliament. And further, as touching all other things, he would conferre with his prelats and nobles, and thereof would returne answere by his legats.

In the 20. yere of his raigne, another letter was written to the pope by the king, the effect whereof in few words to expresse, was this: to certifie him that in respect of his great charges sustained in his wars, he hath by the counsell of his nobles, taken into his owne handes the fruits and profits of all his benefices here in England.

To proceede in the order of yeres, in the twentie six yere of his king, one Nicolas Heath clerke, a busie headed boie, and a troubler of the realme, had procured diuers bishops, and others of the kings counsell to bee cited vp to the court of Rome, there to answere such complaints as hee had made against them. Whereupon commandement was giuen by the king to all the ports of the realme for the restraint of all passengers out, and for searching and arresting all persons bringing in any bulls or other processe from Rome, tending to the derogation of the dignitie of the crowne, or molestation of the subiects: concerning which Nicolas Heath, the king also writeth to the pope his letters, complaining of the said Heath, and desiring him to giue no care to his leaud complaints.

The same yere the king writeth also to the popes legat resident in England, requiring him to surcease from craking diuers sums of money of the clergy, in the name of first fruits of benefices.

The 27. yere of this kings raigne, the king by his letters complaineth to the pope of a troublesome fellow named Nicolas Stainsby, remaining in Rome, which by his slanderous complaints procured diuers citations to bee sent into the realme, to the great disturbance of diuers and sundry honest men. Whereupon he praieth and aduiseth the pope to stay himselfe and not to send ouer such hastie citations vpon euery light occasion.

To passe further to the 28. yere of the same king, thus we finde in the rolles: That the king the same yere take order by two of his clergy, to wit, John a Stocke and John of Northon to take into their hands all the temporalities of all benefices, prebends, dignities, and benefices being then vacant in England, and to answere the profits of the same to the kings vse.

The same yere an ordinance was made by the king and his counsell, and to the same proclaimed in all port townes within the realme, that god and diligent search should bee made, that no person whatsoeuer, comming from the court of Rome, &c. doe bring into the realme with him any bull, instrument, letters patents, or other processe, that may be preiudiciall to the king, or any of his subiects: nor that any person passing out of this realme toward the court of Rome, doe carrie with him any instrument or processe that may redound to the preiudice of the king or his subiects: and that all persons passing to the foresaid court of Rome, or with the kings speciall licence, bee notwithstanding promist and finde suretie to the lord chancellor, that they shall not in any wise attempt or pursue any matter to the preiudice of the king or his subiects, vnder paine to be put out of the kings protection, and to forfeit his body, goods, and chattels, according to the statute thereof made, Anno 27.

And thus much concerning the letters and writings of the king, with such other domesticall matters, perturbations, and troubles passing betweene him and the pope, taken out of the publike records of the realme, whereby I thought to giue the Reader to vnderstand the horrible abuses, the intolerable pride, and the vnsatiable auarice of that bishop, more like a proud Lucifer, then a pastor of the church of Christ, in abusing the king, and oppressing his subiects with exactions immeasurable: not onely exercising his tyrannie in this realme, but raging also against other princes both far and neere, amongst whom neither spared he the emperor himselfe. In the story and acts of which emperor Ludouicus, mentioned a little before, pag. 342. whom the pope did most arrogantly excommunicate vpon Maundy thursday, and the selfe same day placing another emperour in his roome: relation was made of certaine learned men which take the emperors part against the pope. In number of whom was Marsilius Patauinus, Guliermus Ockam, Ioannes Gandauensis, Luitpoldus, Andreas Landensis, Vlricus Haugenor treasurer to the emperor. Dantes, Aligerius, &c. Of whom Marsilius Patauinus compiled and exhibited vnto the emperor Ludouike, a worthy worke intituled Defensor pacis: written in the emperours behalfe against the pope. Wherein (both godly and learnedly disputing against the pope) hee proueth all bishops and priests to be equall, and that the pope hath no superioritie aboue other bishops; much lesse aboue the emperor. That the word of God ought to be onely the chiefe iudge in deciding and determining causes ecclesiasticall: that not onely spirituall persons, but lay men also being godly and learned, ought to bee admitted vnto generall councels: That the clergy and the pope ought to be subiect vnto magistrates: That the church is the vniuersitie of the faithfull, and that the foundation and head of the church is Christ, and that hee neuer appointed any vicar or pope ouer his vniuersall church: That bishoppes ought to bee chosen euery one by their owne church and clergie: That the marriage of priests may lawfully bee permitted: That Saint Peter was neuer at Rome: That the clergy and synagogue of the pope is a berne of theeues: That the doctrine of the pope is not to be followed, because it leadeth to destruction: And that the corrupt manners of the Christians doe spring and flow out of the wickednesse of the spiritualty, &c. He disputeth moreouer in another booke of free iustification by grace: And extenuated merits, saying, that they are no causes efficient of our saluation, but onely sine qua non, that is to say, that workes bee no cause of our iustification, but yet our iustification goeth not without them. For the which his doctrine most sound and catholike, hee was condemned by the pope, anno 1324. by the popes decree extrauagant. cap. Licet intra de Crimin. Concerning the which man and his doctrine, I thought good thus much to commit to history, to the intent men may see, that they which charge this doctrine now taught in the church, with the note of nouelty or newnesse, how ignorant and vnskilfull they be in the histories and order of times forepast.

In the same part of condemnation at the same time, also was Ioannes de Gunduno, anno 1320. and contained also in the foresaid Extrauagant, with Marsilius Patauinus. Which Ioannes wrote much vpon Aristotle, and Auerroi, and are yet remaining. And no doubt but hee wrote also of diuinitie, but not withe that these workes haue been abolished.

Ioannes Gandauensis condemned by the pope.

In the same number and catalogue commeth also Guliermus Ockam, who was in the yere of our Lord 1326. as is afore mentioned, pag. 342. and wrote likewise in defence of Ludouicus the emperor against the pope: and also in defence of Michael, Generall of Gray friers, whom the pope had excommunicated and cursed for an heretike. Diuers treatises were by the said Ockam set forth, whereof some are extant and in print, as his questions and diffinctions: some are extant and suppressed (as Alcentius reporteth) quòd essent aliquando asperiora. Some againe be published vnder no name of the author, being of his doing: as the dialogue betweene the souldier and the clerke: wherein it is to be conjectured, what bookes and works this Ockam had collected against the pope. Of this Ockam Iohn Sleidane in his history inserteth mention, to his great commendation, whose words bee these: William Ockam in time of Ludouicus the fourth emperor did flourish, about the yere of our Lord 1326. who among other things wrote of the authoritie of the bishop of Rome. In the which booke hee handleth these eight questions very copiously: whether both the administrations of the bishops office, and of the emperors, may bee in one man: secondly, whether the emperor taketh his power and authoritie onely of God, or else of the pope: thirdly, whether the pope and church of Rome haue power by Christ, to set and place kings and emperors, and to commit to them their iurisdiction to be exercised: fourthly, whether the emperor being elected, hath full authoritie vpon the said his election, to administer his empire: fiftly, whether other kings besides the emperor and king of Romans, in that they are consecrated of priests, receiue of them any part of their power: sixthly, whether the said kings in any case bee subiect to their consecrators: seuenthly, whether if the said kings should admit any new sacrifice, or should take to themselues the diademe without any further consecration, they should thereby lose their kingly right and title: eightly, whether the seuen princes electors giue as much to the election of the emperour, as succession rightfully giueth to other kings. Upon these questions hee disputeth and argueth with sundrie arguments and sundrie reasons on both sides, at length hee decideth the matter on the part of the ciuill magistrate: and by occasion thereof, entreth into the mention of the Popes decrees Extrauagant: declaring how little force or regard is to bee giuen thereunto.

Trithemius maketh mention of one Gregorius Arimenensis, a learned and a famous and right godly man: who not much differing from the age of this Ockam, about the yere of our Lord 1350. disputed in the same doctrine of grace and free will, as wee doe now, and dissented therein from the Papistes and Sophisters, counting them worse then Pelagians.

Of the like iudgement, and in the same time was also Andreas de Castro, as appeareth super lit. 1. Sentent. dist. 45. and Burdianus vpon the Ethiques of Aristotle: which both maintained the grace of the gospell, as is now in the church receiued aboue 200. yeres since.

And what should I speake of the duke of Burgundy, named Eudo, who at the same time, an. 1350. withstood the French king not to receiue in his land the new found constitutions, decretall and Extrauagant, within his realme: whose sage counsell then giuen, yet remaineth among the French kings records, as witnesseth Carol. Molinæus?

Dantes an Italian writer, against the pope.

Dantes an Italian writer, a Florentine, lined in the time of Ludouicus the emperor, about the yere of our Lord 1300. and take his part with Marsilius Patauinus, against three sorts of men, which he said were enemies to the truth: That is, the pope: Secondly, the order of religious men, which count themselues the children of the church, when they are the children of the diuell their father: Thirdly, the doctors of decrees and decretals. Certaine of his writings bee extant abroad, wherein he proueth the pope not to be aboue the emperor, nor to haue any right or iurisdiction in the empire. Hee confuteth the donation of Constantine to be a forged and a fained thing, as which neither did stand with any law or right. For the which he was taken of many for an heretike. He complaineth moreouer very much, the preaching of Gods word to be omitted: and in stead thereof, the vaine fables of monks and friers to be preached and beleeued of the people, and so the flocke of Christ to be fed not with the food of the Gospell, but with wind. The pope, saith hee, of a pastor is made a wolfe, to waste the church of Christ, and to procure with his clergy not the word of God to bee preached, but his owne decrees. In his canticle of Purgatory, he declareth the pope to be the whore of Babylon. And to her ministers, to some hee applieth two hornes, to some foure. As to the Patriarchs, whom hee noteth to bee the tower of the said whore Babylonicall. Ex libris Dantes Italicè.

The pope the whore of Babylon.

Ex lib. Iornandi, Pope, antichrist.

Herevnto may be added the saying out of the booke of Iornandus imprinted, with the foresaid Dantes: that forsomuch as antichrist commeth not before the destruction of the empire, therefore such as goe about to haue the empire extinct, are forerunners and messengers in so doing of antichrist. Wherefore let the Romans (saith hee) and their bishoppes beware, lest their sinnes and wickednesse so deseruing by the iust iudgement of God, the priesthood be taken from them. Furthermore, let all the prelats and princes of Germany take heed, &c.

The pope maketh the emperour and Lay men his asses.

An admonition to the Romans.

And because our aduersaries, which obiect vnto vs the newnesse of our doctrine, shall see and perceiue the course and forme of this religion now receiued, not to haue been either such a new thing now, or a thing so strange in times past: I will adde to these aboue recited, master Taulerus a Preacher of Argentine in Germany, anno 1350. Who contrary to the popes proceedings, taught openly against all mens merits, and against inuocation of Saints, and preached sincerely of our free iustification by grace, referring all mans trust onely to the mercy of God, and was an enemy to all superstition.

Taulerus of Germany, a preacher against the popes practisings.

With whom also may be adioined Franciscus Petrarcha, a writer of the same age, who in his workes and his Italian matter speaking of Rome, calleth it the whore of Babylon, the schoole & mother of errour, the temple of heresie, the nest of treachery, growing and increasing by the oppressing of others: and saith further, that the, (meaning the popes court) ertcteth her selfe against her founders; that is, the emperors, who first set her vp, and did so inrich her: and so seemeth plainly to affirme, that the pope was antichrist, declaring that no greater euil could happen to any man, then to be made pope. This Franciscus was about the yere of our lord 1350.

And if time would serue vs to fetche out old histories, wee should finde plenty of faithfull witnesses of old and ancient time, to giue witnesse with vs against the pope, beside the other aboue rehearsed: as Ioannes de rupe scissa, an. 1340. Who for rebuking the spirituality for their great enormities, and neglecting their office and duty, was cast into prison.

Ioannes de rupe scissa. Iohn cast into prison.

Illyricus a writer in our daies, testifieth that he found and read in an old pamphlet, that the said Ioannes should call the church of Rome, the whore of Babylon; and the pope to be the minister of antichrist; and the cardinals to bee the false prophets. Being in prison, hee wrote a booke of prophecies, bearing the title; Vade mecum in tribulationem: in which booke (which also I haue seene) hee prophecied and admonished, affliction and tribulation to hang ouer the spiritualitie. And pronounceth plainely, that God will purge his clergy, and will haue priests that shall be pure, godly, and that shall faithfully feed the Lords flocke: Moreouer, that the gods of the church shall returne againe to the lay men. Hee prophecied also the same time, that the French king and his army should haue an ouerthrow. Which came likewise to passe during the time of his imprisonment. Of this Ioannes de rupe, writeth Froyssard in his time, and also Wicklike: of whose prophecies, much more may bee said at more leasure (Christ willing) hereafter.

Church of Rome, the whore of Babylon.

The deformation of the church before prophecied.

About the same yere of our Lord 1340. in the citie of Herspoil, was one named maister Conradus Hager. Who (as appeareth by the old bulls and registers of that bishopric of the said citie) is there recorded, to haue maintained and taught the space of twenty foure yeres together, the masse to be no manner of sacrifice: neither that it profiteth any man either quicke or dead, and that the money giuen of the dead for masses, bee very robberies and sacrileges of priests, which they wickedly doe intercept and take away from the poore. And said moreouer, that if hee had a stone full of gold and siluer, hee would not giue one farthing for any masse. For the same his doctrine, this good preacher was condemned and vnclosed in prison: what afterward became vpon him we doe not finde.

Ex bullis original. Ecclesiæ Herbipol.

There is among other old and ancient records of antiquitie belonging to this present time, a certaine monument in verse poetically compiled, but not without a certaine morall, intituled Pœnitentiarius Asini, the asses confessor; bearing the date and yere of our Lord in this number, Completus An. 1342. In this treatise are brought forth the wolfe, the fox, and the asse, comming to Christ and doing penance. First, the wolfe confesseth him to the fox, who easily doth absolue him from all his faults, and also excuseth him in the same. In like maner the wolfe hearing the fores thrift, theweth to him the like fauour againe. After this, commeth the asse to confession, whose fault was this; that hee being hungry, tooke a straw out from the thacke of one that went in peregrination vnto Rome. The asse, although repenting of this fact, yet because he thought it not so hainous as the faults of the other, the more he hoped for his absolution. But what followed? After the silly asse had vttered his crime in auricular confession, immediatly the discipline of the law was executed vpon him with seuerity: neither was hee iudged worthy of any absolution, but was apprehended vpon the same, flaine, and deuoured. Whosoeuer was the author of this fabulous tale, had a mysticall ment standing in the same; so by the wolfe no doubt was meant the pope. What the fox was resembled to the prelates, curtisans, priests, and the rest of the spiritualtie. Of the spirituality, the lord pope is some absolued; as contrary, the pope some doth absolue them in like manner. By the asse is meant the pope laitie, vpon whose backe the strait censure of the law is sharply executed, especially when the German emperors come vnder the popes inquisition, to be examined by his discipline, there is no absolution nor pardon to be found, but in all haste he must be deposed, as in these stories may partly appeare before. And though the master bee not the weight of a straw, yet what saith the holy father the wolfe, if it please him to make any matter of it?

Pœnitentiarius Asini.

Pœnitentiarius Asini.

The pope hath infinitie confidence against the laity.

Immensum scelus est, iniuria quam peregrina
Feci si, fyramen subripiendo tibi.
Non aduertisti, quod plura pericula passus
Plurima passimus, quod peregrinus erat.
Non aduertisti quòd ei per maxima terra
Et pelagi spacia, sit peragranda via.
Non aduertisti sanctos, nec limina sanctæ
Ille retransiuit eadem loca, iam violentum
Ex inopinato sensit adesse malum.
De papa taceo, cuius prorsus tibi talem
Conduxit, cuius ea vilipendis opem.
Totius Ecclesiæ fuerit quam minimus iste,
Pertulit abstracto gramine damna vie, &c.

And thus they aggerating and exaggerating the fault to the vttermost, die vpon the poore asse and deuoure him. By the which apologie, the tyrannicall and fraudulent practises of these spirituall Romanists are likely described.

Not long after these aboue rehearsed, about the yere of our Lord 1350. Gotharcus Kyper wrote also against the monks and friers a booke intituled, Lacryma Ecclesiæ: wherein he disputeth against the foresaid religious orders, namely against the begging friers: proouing that kind of life to be farre from christian perfection, for that it is against charitie to liue vpon other, when a man may liue by his owne labors. And affirmeth them to be hypocrits, filthy lucers, and such as for mans fauor, and for lucre sake, doe nny with true diuinitie, fables, Apocryphaes, and dreams of sanctse. Also, that they vnder pretence of long prayer, deuoure widowes houses, and with their confessions, sermons, and burials, doe trouble the church of Christ manifold waies. And therefore perswaded the prelats to bridle and keepe short the inordinat licence and abuses of these monasticall persons, &c.

Yet I haue made no mention of Michael Ceseras, prouincial of the gray Friers, nor Petrus de Corbaria, of whom writeth Antoninus, in quarta parte summæ, and saith they were condemned in the extrauegant of pope John, with one Ioannes de Poliaco. Their opinions, saith Antoninus, were these; That Peter the Apostle was no more the head of the church, then the other Apostles: And that Christ left no vicar behinde him or head in his church: And that the pope hath no such authority to correct and punish, to institute or depose the emperor. Item, that all priests, of what degree soeuer, are of equall authority, power and iurisdiction by the institution of Christ:

Chriſt: but by the inſtitution of the emperor, the pope to be ſuperior, which by the ſame emperor alſo may bee reuoked againe. Item, that neither the pope nor yet the church may puniſh any man, punitione coactiua; That is, by externe coaction; vnleſſe they receiue licence of the emperor. This foreſaid Michael, generall of the gray friers, wrote againſt the tyranny, pride, and primacie of the pope, accuſing him to be antichriſt, and the church of Rome to be the whore of Babylon, drunke with the bloud of ſaints. He ſaid there were two churches, one of the wicked ſtanding, wherein raigned the pope: the other of the godly afflicted. Item, that the bertie was almoſt vtterly extinct. And for this cauſe he was depriued of his dignitie, and condemned of the pope. Notwithſtanding, hee ſtood conſtant in his aſſertions. This Michael was about the yere of our Lord 1322. And left behind him many fautors and followers of his doctrine, of whom a great part there ſlaine by the pope: ſome were condemned, as William Ockam; ſome were burned, as Ioannes de Caſtilione, and Franciſcus de Arcatara. With him alſo was condemned in the ſaid Extrauagant, Ioannes de Poliaco about touched, whoſe aſſertions were theſe: That the pope could not giue licence to heare confeſſions to whom hee would, but that euery paſtor in his owne church ought to ſuffice. Item, that paſtors and bishoppes had their authority immediatly from Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and not from the pope. Item, that the conſtitution of pope Benedict 11. wherein he granteth larger priuiledges to the friers aboue other paſtors, was no declaration of the law, but a ſubuerſion. And for this he was by the ſaid friers oppreſſed, about the yere of our Lord, 1322.

After Simon Sepham archbiſhop of Canturbury before mentioned, who liued not long, ſucceded Iohn Stratford. After whom came Iohn Offord, who liued but ten moneths. In whoſe roome ſucceded Thomas, and remained but one yere, an. 1350. And after him Simon Iſlep was made archbiſhop of Canturbury, by pope Clement the 6. who ſate 17. yeres, and builded Canturbury colledge in Oxford. Which Simon Iſlep ſucceeded the biſhop of Ely, named Simon Langham, who within two yeres was made cardinall. In whoſe ſtead pope Vrban the 5. ordained William Wittleſey biſhop of Worceſter to be archbiſhop of Canturbry, an. 1366. In which yere, William biſhop of Winchester, elected and founded the new colledge at Oxford.

Againe, in the order of the popes, next vnto pope Clement the 6. before mentioned, about the ſame time, an. 1353. ſucceded pope Innocent the 6. In the firſt yere of which pope, two friers minors or Franciſcans were burned at Auinion: Propinionibus (as mine author ſaith) erroneis, prout D. papæ & eius cardinalibus videbatur. 1. For certaine opinions, as ſeemed to the pope and his cardinals, erroneous. Ex chron. Wall.

Pope Innocent the 6. Two Franciſcans burned at Auinion.

Of the which two friers, I finde in the Chronicles De actis Rom. pontificum, and in the hiſtory of Premonſtratenſis, that the one was Ioannes Rochtaplada. Or rather, as I finde in Catal. teſtium cited out of the chronicle of Henricus de Herfordia, his name to be Bapabalus. Who being (as he recordeth) a Frier Minorite, began firſt in the time of pope Clement the 6. an. 1345. to preach and affirme openly, that he was by Gods reuelation charged and commanded to preach; that the church of Rome was the whore of Babylon, and the pope with his cardinals to be very antichriſt. And that pope Benedict, and the other before him his predeceſſors were damned; with other ſuch like words tending much againſt the popes tyrannicall maieſtie. And that the foreſaid Bapabalus being brought before the popes face, conſtantly did ſtand in the ſame, ſaying: that he was commanded by Gods reuelation ſo to ſay, and alſo that he would preach the ſame if he might. To whom it was then obiected, that he had ſome hereticall bookes, and ſo was committed to priſon in Auinion. In the time of his accuſation it happened, that a certaine prieſt comming before the pope, call the popes bull downe before his feete, ſaying: Loe here, take your bull vnto you, for it doth me no good at all. I haue laboured now theſe three yeres with all, and yet notwithſtanding for all this your bull, I cannot bee reſpoſed to my right. The pope hearing this, commanded the poore prieſt to be ſcourged, and after to be laid in priſon with the foreſaid frier. What became of them afterward, the foreſaid writer Henricus de Herfordia maketh no mention. But I may probably coniecture this prieſt and this frier Rochtaplada, or rather Bapabalus, were the two, whom mine author Thom. Wal. writeth to be burned at this time in Auinion, about the firſt beginning of this pope Innocentius the 6. Of this Rochtaplada, I thought good here to inſerte the teſtimony and mention of Iohn Froſſard, written of him in his firſt volume, chapter 211. in theſe words:

Ioannes Rochtaplada martyr. Catal. teſtium veritat. fol. 331.

Froſſard. Hiſtoire de Gaſtone Conte de Foix.

There was (ſaith Froſſard) a frier minor, full of great clergie in the citie of Auinion, called Frier Iohn of Rochetaplada, the which frier pope Innocent the firſt held in priſon in the caſtell of Baignour, for ſhewing of many matteries after to come; principally hee ſhewed many things to fall vnto the prelats of the church for the great ſuperfluitie and pride, that was then vſed among them. And alſo hee ſpake many things to fall of the realme of France, and of the great lords of Chriſtendome, for the oppreſſions that they did to the poore common people. This Frier, ſaid hee, would proue all his ſaying by the authority of the Apocalyps, and by other bookes of holy Saints and Prophets, the which were opened to him by the grace of the holy Ghoſt: hee ſhewed many things hard to beleeue, and many things fell after as hee ſaid. Hee ſaid them not as a Prophet, but hee ſhewed them by authority of ancient Scriptures, and by the grace of the holy Ghoſt, who gaue him vnderſtanding to declare the ancient Prophets, and to ſhew to all chriſtian people the peeres and times when ſuch things ſhould fall. He made diuers bookes founded on great ſciences and clergy, whereof one was made the yere of our Lord 1346, wherein was written ſuch maruels, that it were hard to beleeue them; howbeit many things according thereto fell out after. And when hee was demanded of the warres of France, hee ſaid that all that had been ſeene, was not like that ſhould bee ſeene after. For hee ſaid that the warres in France ſhould not bee ended, till the realme were vtterly waſted and exiled in euery part. The which ſaying was well ſeene after, for the noble realme of France was ſore waſted and exiled, and ſpecially in the terme that the ſaid frier had ſet. The which was in the yeres of our Lord 1356, 57, 58. and 59. Hee ſaid in thoſe yeres, the princes and gentlemen of the Realme ſhould not for feare ſhew themſelues againſt the people of low eſtate, aſſembled of all countries without head or Captaine, and they ſhould doe as they liſt in the realme of France; the which fell after, as ye haue heard, how the companions aſſembled them together, and by reaſon of their robbery and pillage waxed rich, and became great Captaines.

About the ſame time happened in France a certaine contention betweene the French prelats, and the friers of Paris, certified and reported by Godefridus de Fontanis; the briefe effect of which ſtorie is this: The prelates of France conuenting and aſſembling together in the citie of Paris, after a long deliberation among themſelues, cauſed by the Bedles to bee called together all the ſtudents, maſters, and bachelers of euery faculitie, with the chiefe heads alſo of all the religious houſes and friers in the Vniuerſitie of Paris. Who being all there congregated together in the biſhop of Paris his houſe, where there were preſent foure archbiſhops, and twentie biſhops: firſt, ſtood vp the biſhop of Bitturecenſe, who there making his ſermon, take for his theame the place of Saint Paul to the Epheſians: Fratres vt ſciatis quæ ſit longitudo, latitudo, altitudo, & profunditas charitatis, &c: and concluded thereupon, firſt that true charitie would compell them to ſee and prouide for their flockes. Secondly, that the vigor of charitie would arme them to withſtand errors. Thirdly, hee concluded, that by dutie of charitie they were bound to giue their liues for the ſoules of their flocke committed to their charge. Fourthly, that by the ſame charitie euery man to hold himſelfe content with that which was his owne, and not to intermeddle or buſie himſelfe further then to him appertained, or belonged to his office. For there (ſaith hee) all order eccleſiaſticall is diſſolued, whereas men not containing themſelues in their owne precincts, preſume in other mens charges where they haue nothing to doe. But this charitie (ſaith hee) now adaies waxeth cold, and all eccleſiaſticall order is confounded and vtterly out of order. For many there bee, which now adaies preſume to thruſt in themſelues where they haue nothing to doe; ſo that now the church may ſeeme a monſter. For as in a naturall body appeareth a monſter, where one member doth the office of another; ſo in the ſpirituall body, which is the Church, may bee thought likewiſe. As when our learned and prudent brethren, to wit, the Friers minors and minors, doe take vpon them to preache and occupy the office to vs ſpecially appertaining: namely, where as the Scripture warneth vs all, none to take vpon him any office, except hee be called thereunto of the Lord, as Aron was. Wherefore wee haue heretofore oftentimes cauſed the ſaid Friers, both by the king himſelfe in his owne perſon, and alſo by other nobles to be ſpoken to and deſired, to forceale from doing and intermedling in our office, and yet they would not, but haue preached againſt our wils through all our dioceſſes, and haue heard confeſſions, ſaying, that they haue the popes priuiledge to beare them out therein. For the which cauſe we come to you, and not we here preſent only, but alſo wee haue the handwriting, and the full conſent of all other our fellow biſhops throughout the kingdome of France, to complaine to you of this ſo great inſolencie and preſumption of the friers. For that as we are, you ſhall be. Neither doe I thinke to be any of vs prelats here note, which haue not ſometime been taken out of the Vniuerſitie of peares. Wee haue deſired moreouer, and cauſed to be deſired the foreſaid friers, to ſend their priuiledges to the apoſtolike ſea, to be interpreted and expounded more plainly by the lord pope: which they refuſed alſo to doe. Wherefore to the intent you may the better vnderſtand and ſee what their priuiledges be, and how farre they doe extend, we haue appointed the ſaid priuiledges here openly to bee read vnto you.

Then ſtood vp another in the publike place, and there read the priuiledges of both the orders: and afterward read alſo the conſtitution

Ex ſcripto Godfri. de Fontanis.

A contention in France betweene the prelates and the friers there.

A ſermon of the biſhop of Bytturecs to the ſtudents of Paris againſt the friers.

That is, the Dominicke friers, and the Franciſcan friers.

The conſtitution of pope Innocent 3. Omnis vtriuſque ſexus.

The friers priuiledges pronounced contrary to the popes conſtitution.

The biſhop Ambianenſis. Friers ought not to preach in churches without expreſſe licence of them to whom the church belongeth.

The friers priuiledges confeſſed in diſputation at Paris.

conſtitution of pope Innocent 3. written in the 5. of the decretals, and beginneth: Omnis vtriuſque ſexus, &c. Which conſtitution was repugnant and contrary to the foreſaid priuiledges, as he there manifeſtly proued, declaring how both the ſaid priuiledges were derogatorie to that conſtitution.

This done, then roſe vp the biſhop Ambianenſis, a great lawyer, who diſcourſing from article to article, there proued by good law, that the ſaid conſtitution ſtood in his full force and vigor, and ought not to be infringed by the friers priuiledges in no part. And therefore by the vertue of that conſtitution, that the friers ought not ſo miſorderly to intrude themſelues in hearing confeſſions, in inioyning of penance, and in preaching in churches and dioceſſes, without ſpeciall licence of the biſhop of the dioceſſe, and curate of the parith; vnto whoſe words neuer a frier at that time replied againe. And ſo the biſhop proceeding to his concluſion, deſired the Vniuerſitie to aſſiſt them in that caſe, wherein they were all determined (ſaith he) to ſtand ſtrongly to the ſhedding of their blood, in reſiſting that miſorder and iniuries of the friers. This happened the 6. day of December, which they dedicate to ſaint Nicolas.

The next day being Sunday, one of the order of the minorites or Franciſcans, went to the church of the maiorites or preaching friers: where he made a ſermon (which was neuer ſeene before, the one order to come and reſort with the other) beginning in the foreſaid matter to replie, and to expound in order through euery article as well as he could: adding moreouer and ſaying, that they went not ſo far in their priuiledges, as they lawfully might. And ſaid moreouer, that what time the ſaid priuiledges were in obtaining in Rome; the biſhop Ambianenſis was there preſent himſelfe, reſiſting the ſame with all his power; yea all the prelats alſo of France ſent and wrote vp to the court againſt the ſame, and yet did not preuaile. For when the friers there preſently declared and opened to the pope in what manner and how far they had theſe priuiledges; the pope the ſame time ſaid, Placet: That is, agreed vnto the ſame. And now (ſaith hee) the prelats require and demand of vs to ſend vp our priuiledges to the court; which were great follie in vs: For in ſo doing, what ſhould wee elſe but giue place and occaſion, to renoke againe the authoritie which is giuen in our hands alreadie? Furthermore, our Warden and maſter is now lately dead, and the maſter here of the Dominicke friers, is not now preſent. Therefore we dare not determine in ſuch a weightie cauſe (touching the priuiledges of our order) without the preſence of them. And therefore wee deſire you of the Vniuerſitie to hold vs therein excuſed, and not to bee ſo lightly ſtirred againſt vs, for we are not the worſt and vileſt part of the Vniuerſitie, &c.

The biſhop Ambianenſis.

The friers preuailed with all.

The next day being the 8. day of the ſame moneth, which is alſo dedicate to the conception of our ladie, vpon which day it was determined likewiſe, that one of the Dominicke friers ſhould preach in the church of the Franciſcan or gray friers, and ſo he did: tending to the ſame end, as the other frier in the other church had done before. Whereby it may ſeeme the pope neuer well anſwered vnto, whereof we reade in the Goſpell: Facti ſunt amici Herodes & Pilatus in ipſa die.

Herod and Pilate were made friends in crucifying of Chriſt.

It was not long after, that the feaſt of S. Thomas the apoſtle followed, in whoſe Vigil all the heads of the Vniuerſitie againe, were warned the third day after to congregate together in the church of ſaint Bernard at the ſermon time. Which being done, and the aſſemblie meeting together, an other ſermon was made by a diuine of the Vniuerſitie, whoſe theame was: Prope eſt Dominus omnibus inuocantibus eum in veritate, &c. Wherein he with many words and great authorities argued againſt them that would not bee obedient vnto their prelats, &c. The ſermon being ended, then roſe vp againe the biſhop Ambianenſis, who proſecuting the reſt of the theame, and coming to the word in veritate, diuided it into three parts, according to the common gloſſe of the decretals:

Another ſermon againſt the friers.

Biſhop Ambianenſis.

In veritate, &c.

Eſt verum vitæ, doctrinæ, inſtitiæque,
Primum ſemper habe, deo propter ſcandala linque.

Charity in three parts conſidered.

Shewing and declaring by many authorities both of canonicall Scriptures and out of the law, and by euident demonſtration of experience; that the friers firſt had no veritie of life, becauſe they were full of hypocriſie: neither had they veritie of doctrine, becauſe in their heart they hate all, and in their tongue hypocritically they flatter all: neither had they veritie of iuſtice, becauſe they vſurped another mens offices. And thus concluding with the ſame, cauſed againe to be read the ſaid priuiledges, with the conſtitution aboue ſpecified. And ſo expounding place by place, did argue and proue that the ſaid conſtitution, in no part was euacuate or infringed by the priuiledges aforeſaid. Which thing being declared, he added moreouer, that whereas the friers ſay (ſaith he) that I ſhould be preſent in the obtaining of the priuiledges, I grant it to be true, and when word came to me thrice therof, I went to the pope reclaiming and requiring the ſaid priuiledges to be reuoked: but the next day after, it ſo pleaſed the pope to ſend me out abroade vpon weightie affaires, ſo that then the matter had no end. After that, we ſent alſo other meſſengers with our letters, for the ſame cauſe vnto the court of Rome, whom the friers ſay not to haue preuailed, but they lie therein. For the ſaid meſſengers againe brought vs letters, from the chiefe of the court of Rome, ſealed with their ſeales: which letters were haue diuers times preſented to our king, and will thereby ſhew them vnto you all. In the which letters the laid pope hath promiſed the ſaid priuiledges, either to be vtterly abrogate, or elſe to be mitigated with ſome more plaine interpretation, of the which we truſt ſhortly to haue the publike bull or writ from the pope.

At laſt, the ſaid biſhop required and deſired of all there, of what dioceſſe, or countrie ſoeuer they were, that they would copie out the foreſaid priuiledges, and ſend them abroade into their countries, that all men might ſee what they were, and how farre they did extend. In fine, the matter comming into open diſputation, it was concluded by maſter Giles one of the Auſtine friers (who was thought to be moſt reaſonable of all the other friers, in this wiſe) that after his ſentence, the prelats were in the truer part, &c. Hæc ex Godfrido de Fontanis.

Concerning this wrangling contention betweene the Vniuerſitie and friers of France heretofore mentioned, whereof partly the originall cauſe there may be vnderſtood by that which hath beene ſaid, to riſe vpon certaine priuiledges granted by popes to the friers, to intermeddle in matters of parith churches: As to heare confeſſions, to preach and teach, with power thereto annexed to gather for their labour, to bury within their houſes, and to receiue inpropriations, &c: becauſe it were too long here to deſcribe the full circumſtances thereof, alſo becauſe the ſaid contention did indure a long time not only in France, but alſo came ouer into England: the whole diſcourſe thereof more amplie (Chriſt willing) ſhall be declared in the beginning of the nert booke following, when we come to the ſtorie of Armachanus.

About that time and yeare, this bralle was in the Vniuerſitie of Paris betweene the friers and prelats there, as hath beene declared: the like contention happened alſo in the Vniuerſitie of Oxford in the yeare aboue prefixed, 1354. ſaue only that the ſtrife among the maſters of Paris, as it roſe vpon frierly ceremonies, ſo it went no further, then brawling words and matter of excommunication: but this tumult riſing of a drunken cauſe, proceded further vnto bloodie ſtripes. The firſt originall whereof began in a tauerne, betweene a ſcholar and the good man of the houſe. Who falling together in altercation, grew to ſuch heate of words, that the ſtudent (contra ius hoſpitij) powred the wine vpon the head of the hoſt and brake his head with the quart pot. Vpon this occaſion giuen, eſtſoones parts began to be taken betweene the townes men and the ſcholars. Inſomuch that a grieuous ſedition and conflict followed vpon the ſame: wherein many of the townſmen were wounded, and to the number of twentie ſlaine. Diuers alſo of the ſcholars grieuouſlie hurt. The ſpace of two daies this hurlie burlie continued. Vpon the ſecond day certaine religious and deuout perſons ordained a ſolemne proceſſion generall, to pray for peace. Yet notwithſtanding all that proceſſion as holy as it was, it would not bring peace. In the which proceſſion (the ſkirmiſh ſtill waxing hote) one of the ſtudents being hardly purſued by the townſmen, for ſuccour in his flight, came running to the prieſt or frier, which caried about (as the manner was) the pixe: thinking to find refuge at the preſence of the tranſubſtantiated God of the altar there caried and inbored. Notwithſtanding, the God there not preſent, or elſe not ſeeing him, or elſe peraduenture being aſleepe, the ſcholar found there ſmall helpe. For the townſmen in the heate of the chaſe, forgetting belike the vertue of the popes tranſubſtantiation, followed him ſo hard, that in the preſence of the pixe they brake his head, and wounded him grieuouſlie. This done, at length ſome peace or truce for that day was taken. The nert morow following, other townſmen in the billages about, ioyning with the the townſmen of Oxford; conſederated together in great force and power to ſet vpon the ſtudents there, and ſo did, hauing a blacke flag borne before them, and ſo inuaded the Vniuerſitie men. Whereupon the ſcholars being ouermatched and compelled to flee into their halles and hoſtles, were ſo purſued by their enemies, that twentie of the doores of their halles & chambers were broke open, & many of them wounded, and (as it is ſaid) ſlaine and throwne into priues: their bookes with linkes and bils cut all in pieces, and much of their goods caried away. And thus the ſtudents of that Vniuerſitie being conquered by the townſmen of Oxford, and of the countrie about, departed and left the Vniuerſitie. So that for a time, the ſchooles there, and all ſchoole acts did vtterly ceaſe from all exerciſe of ſtudie, except onely Merton college hall, with a few other remaining behind.

Anno 1354.

A ſedicious commotion betweene the townes men and the ſcholars in the Vniuerſitie of Oxford.

Proceſſion for peace.

The holy proceſſion would bring no peace.

Tranſubſtantiation will not helpe in time of necde.

A conqueſt of the ſcholars of Oxford.

The Vniuerſitie of Oxford diſſolued for a time.

This being done the 12. day of February, the quæne at the ſame time being at Woodſtocke, was brought to bed, and purified on the firſt Sunday in Lent with great ſolemnitie of iuſting. About which time the biſhop of Lincolne their Diocesane hearing of this exceſſiue outrage, ſendeth his inhibition to all parſons and prieſts, forbidding them throughout all Oxford, none to celebrate maſſe or any diuine ſeruice in the preſence of any lay perſon within the ſaid towne of Oxford, interdicting withall the whole towne. Which interdiction indured the ſpace of a whole yeare and more.

The reuerence of Oxford interdicted.

The king alſo ſent thither his inſtices to examine & inquire of the matter. Before whom diuers lay men and of the clergie were indicted, and foure of the chiefe burgesses of the said towne were indicted, and by the kings commandement sent to the tower of Lo. 30n, were there imprisoned. At length through much labour of the nobles, the king is tooke vp the matter, that sending his writings into all shrieffes in England offered pardon, to all and singuler students of that Universitie, (vnterferaur dispersed) for that transgression: Whereby the Universitie in short time was replenished againe as before. Moreouer was granted to the Vtechaucer or commissarie (as they terme him) of the towne and Universitie of Oxford, to haue the assise of bread, ale, wine, and all other victuals, the maior of the said towne being excluded. Also was granted and decreed, that the commons of Oxford should giue to the Universitie of Oxford 200. pound sterling, in part of satisfaction for their excesses: reserued notwithstanding to euery one of the students his seuerall action against any seuerall person of the towne since, &c.

Granted to the commissarie of Oxford to haue the assise of bread and ale, and such priuiledges about the cognizance of the towne.

About the yeare of our Lord 1354. the king with the consent of his counsell, reuoked home againe out of Flanders the staple of Woolł, with all things thereunto appertaining, and stablished the same in limbite places within the realme, namely in Westminster, Canturbury, Chichester, Winsoll, Lincolne, and in Hull. Which staple after An. 1362. was translated ouer into Callis.

Of Simon Islip archbishop of Canturburie mentioned a little before, pag. 360. I reade in the said author aboue specified, that he by his letters patent directed to all parsons and vicars within his prouince: straitely charged them and their parishioners vnder paine of excommunication, not to abstaine from bodily labor, vpon certaine saints daies, which before were wont to be hallowed and consecrated to bin bishitie idlenesse. Item, that to priests should be giuen no more for their yearely stipend, but 7. pound 6. shil. d. which made diuers of them to rob and steale. &c. An. 1362. The next yeare following, which was 1363. the foresaid king Edward kept his parliament at London in the moneth of October: wherein was prohibited, no gold nor siluer to be worne in knines, girdles, broaches, rings, or in any other ornament belonging to the body, except the wearer might dispend 10. pound by yeare. Item, that none should weare other silks or costly furres, except such as might dispend 100. pound by yeare. Also that Merchant venturers should not export ouer any merchandise out of the realme, or take for wines in other countries: whereby other nations should be constrained rather to seeke to vs, &c. But none of this did take any great effect.

An wholesome decree of a good archbishop not to abstaine from bodily labor vpon certaine holy daies.

A parliament.

After this Simon Islip as is aboue recorded, followed Simon Langham, then William Wittelesey, after whom next in the place succeeded Simon Sudburie.

Simon Sudburie archb. of Canturbury.

Much about the same time, the Nuns of saint Bridgits order began first. About which time also was builded the queenes colledge in Oxford, by queene Philip of England, wife to king Edward the third: Circa annum domini 1360.

The nuns of saint Bridgits order.

Hereunto in the time of this pope Innocent, frier John Lyle bishop of Ely, moued with certaine iniuries (as hee thought) done to him by the lady Blanch, made his complaint to the pope. Who sending downe his curse to the bishop of Lincolne, and other prelats to bee executed vpon the aduersaries of the bishop of Ely: commanded them, that if they did know any of the said aduersaries dead and buried (that notwithstanding) they should cause the same to be taken vp: which also they performed accordingly, of whom some had beene of the kings counsell. Wherefore the king being displeased, and not without cause, did trouble and molest against the said prelats. This comming to the popes hearing, certaine were directed downe from the court of Rome, in the behalfe of the foresaid bishop of Ely: who meeting with the bishop of Rochester the kings treasurer, deliuered vnto him being armed, letters from the bishop of Rome, the tenour whereof was not known. Which done, they incontinent auoided aboue. But certaine of the kings seruants pursuing, did ouertake them of whom some they imprisoned, some they brought to the Iustices, and so were condemned to be hanged. Wherevnto may appeare what reuerence the popes letters in this kings daies had in this Realme of England. Ex Chro. Walsing.

This ladie Blanch was Dutchesse of Lancaster.

Dead men excommunicated by the pope.

The popes messengers hanged.

This pope Innocent ordained the feast of the holy speare, and of the holie nailes.

The feast of the speare and of the holy nailes.

And here to make an end of this fourth booke, now remaineth after our order and custome before begunne, to prosecute the race of the archbishops of Canturburie, in this foresaid fourth booke contained, beginning where before wee left, pag. 154. at Lanfrancus.

A Table of the archbishops of Canturbury in this fourth booke contained.

34. Lanfrancus. 19.

Polydor Virg. lib. 9. numbereth this Lanfrancus to bee the thirtie three archbishop. But by the count of other authors (namely by the chronicle of the monke of Dour) seemeth to be deceiued, as he was in the 28. yeares of Dunstan, which indeed did sit but nineteene or twentie at the most. This errour of Polydore seemeth to come by leauing out either Elfius, which was the 22. or by leauing out Elfricus, which was the 26. as in some authors I find.

Moreouer here is to bee noted, that although the said Elfricus were left out, yet Lanfrancus cannot be 33.

Note also, that in the table of the third booke before, after Stricius to put in Sanctus Alueduc. Which in the order of archbishops I left out in the end of the third booke, page 154.

This Lanfrancus was an Italian, and a stout champion of the pope. After his stubborne dissention with Thomas archbishop of Yorke, hee wrote against Berengarius, intituling his booke, Opus Scinillarum, pag. 157.

Also the same Lanfranke builded the new church at Canturburie, and pluckt downe the old. By him was builded the church of saint Gregorie. At length hee was expulsed by king William Rufus.

35. Anselmus. 20.

Of this Anselmus and the strife betweene him and the king, looke in the pag. 168.

36. Ratulphus. 8.

Under Rad. the order of Cistercians began.

37. Gulielmus. Curboil. 13

By this W. the new worke of the church of saint Martins at Douer was builded.

38. Theobaldus. 24.

By this Theobald, monks were first brought into the church of Douer. He was expulsed by K. Stephan. In his time the church of S. Gregory was burned at Canturbury.

39. Tho. Becket. 9.

Of the life and death of this Becket, see the pag. 186.

Ex Cricketadensi.

Ex Cricketadensi: Magnates in Anglia interdixerunt, ne quis martyrem Thomam nominaret, ne quis eius miracula prædicaret, interminantes minas mortis seu maximarum pœnarum omnibus confitentibus eum fuisse martyrem, & miracula eius prædicantibus, &c.

40. Richardus. 10.

This Richard was a monke: in his time Quilts church at Canturburie was burned.

41. Baldwinus. 7.

Betweene this Baldwine and the monks was great diuision. He suspended the prior from his priorship, and 22. monks from all seruice. He caused the Subprior with all his adherents to be excommunicate through all Kent.

42. Hubertus. 14.

In the time of this Hubert the chapell of Lambeth was pluckt downe. Also the church of Douer was burned.

43. Stephanus Langhton. 22.

This Stephan with the monks of Canturbury, were expulsed by king Iohn.

This Stephan intending to giue orders in the chapell of Lambeth, was stopped by the monks of Canturburie, though their appeale and prohibition. Wherfore he required Eustace bishop of London, to minister the same orders in the church of S. Paul.

In his time fell great variance betweene the monks of Rochester and the monks of Canturburie, for the election of their bishop, which election the monks of Canturburie would would not admit, before the Rochester monkes had presented the bishoppes staffe in the church of Canturburie, so that both the churches sent their messengers to the court of Rome.

44. Richardus Magnus. 4.

At the consecration of this Richard, contention rose between the Bishop of Rochester & bishop of Bathe, who should consecrate him.

Item, betweene the said Richard and the monks of Canturburie fell a grieuous discord, about certaine liberties belonging to the Archbishop.

The said archbishop for certaine quarrels against the king, went vp to Rome, who died in Tuscia.

After this Richard, the election of three archbishops was raised at Rome: of Radulphus de noua villa, of John Pyot of Canturburie, of John Blund.

45. Edmund of Abenden. 7.

This Edmund was called saint Edmund, at whose election the pryor of Douer thinking to bee present, as at y mariage of his mother, was not permitted by the monkes of Canturburie. For the which iniurie hee appealed and went to Rome to complaine, not against the elect, but against the election: where hee obtained of the pope for all the priors and successors of Douer, to haue full interest in the election of the archbishops, besides other priuiledges which hee obtained, perceiue not without some good store of money. Afterward the monks of Canturburie, accused him to the archbishop, as though hee stood against the person of the elect, and so obtained of the archbishop being angry with him, to haue brought him vnder the chapter of Canturburie, there to bee punished. Whereupon the prior seeing him so destitute of all helpe of lawyers, was constrained in the foresaid chapter to cry peccaui. Then being suspended from his priorship, was at length sent home to Douer, being compelled first to set his hand to a certaine composition betweene him and the foresaid monks.

The said Edmund archbishop, also hauing some quarrell against the king, went vp to Rome, and died before his comming home.

46. Bonifacius. 25.

46. Bonifacius.

In the time of this Boniface, pope Gregorie wickedly granted to king Henrie the third (for the getting of the kingdome of Sicile, which belonged not to him to giue, nor to the other to take,) tenths of goods temporall and spirituall, for fiue yeares. Item, all the first yeares fruites of churches that should bee vacant for fiue yeares. Item, halfe of all the goods of beneficed men not resident at their benefices. Item, all Legacies not distinctly giuen. And yet the kingdome of Sicile neuer came to his hands, which belonged to Manfredus, sonne of Fredericke the emperor. Strife betweene this Boniface, and the pryor of Canturburie. Item, betweene him and bish. of Roff. Item, betweene him and the chapter of Lincolne: all which was after agreed: Chro. Douerense. fol. 20. pag. 2.

Strife at Winchester, about chusing the bishop after the death of Aponarus the kings brother.

Strife in the Conuocation which Boniface did hold at Lambeth. In the which councell were recited the statutes of Octobonus, and other new statutes made against which John Hemelingford the kings chaplen with other moe, and prince Edward on the kings behalfe, did appeale. Chro. Douer. fol. 21.

Under this Boniface archbish. Tunbridge and Hadlo first came vnder the custodie of the archb. of Canturburie.

Walter John of Exeter bought the bishopricke of Winchester for 6000. marks, which being knowne hee was faine to pay the same summe againe to the pope, and so was sent home.

Boniface the archbishop being in the parts of Sebaudia, An. 1262. fell an other altercation betweene the pryor and chapter of Canturburie on the one part, and the pryor and chapter of Douer on the other part. Which two houses almost were neuer in quiet, and all about certaine liberties and priuiledges: as for making the subpryor, for receiuing in of monkes, and for visitations of the Church of Douer.

Anno 1268. Boniface archbishop interdicted the city of London, because in the same citie the archbishop of Yorke did hold vp his crosse, the archbishop of Canturbury being there present, the king holding then his parliament at Westminster.

This archbish died in the parts of Sebaudia.

John pryor of Canturburie was elected by the monks against the kings mind, but by the pope refused.

Adam Chilinden was elect, but he resigned his election to ỳ pope.

47. Robert Kilwardbie. Frier. 6.

In the time of this Robert Kilwarby, appeale was taken against the chapter of Canturbury by the bishop of Winchester, of Worcester, and Exeter: for the which cause the said bishops went vp to Rome to prosecute the appeale. The matter was, because they did not their obedience to the monks of Canturburie, the see beeing emptie.

Walter Giffard archbishop of Yorke, going toward the generall councell, bare vp his crosse through the middle of Kent, in the time of this Robert archbishop of Canturburie, An. 1272.

By pope Gregorie 10. in the generall councell at Lions, all the orders of friers were put downe, 4. orders only except, that is, Dominicks, Franciscans, Carmelites, and Augustines.

This Robert Kilwarby by the commandement of pope Nicolas was made cardinall of Rome, bishop of Portuensis.

Canterburie in Polyd. Virgil.

Where is to be noted an vntruth in Polydore Virgil, which saith that he was made cardinall by pope Gregorie, which could not be.

48. John Peckham. 13.

Robert Burnell bishop of Bathe was elected, but by the pope refused: For whom John Peckham a gray frier, was placed by pope Nicolas.

In the first yeare of this frier Peckham, Wil. Wickwane archb. of Yorke comming from his consecration at Rome to Douer, bare vp his crosse through the midst of Kent, whereat was no little adoe.

Robert Gernemine archdeacon of Canturbury went to Iaw at Rome for the liberties and possessions of his archdeaconship 2. yeares, and there died.

In his time also an other wrangling fell betweene the monks of Canturbury, & the monks of Douer, in the time of this John Peckham, for admitting certaine nouices of Douer into orders. Ex chr. Monach. Douer. fol. 42.

This Peckham holding a councell at Lambeth ordeined diuers statutes, and caused the ordinances of the councell of Lions, and of Boniface archbishop of Canturburie, and his predecessor to be obserued.

Great strife and hatred was betweene this Peckham and Thomas bishop of Hereford: who being excommunicated by Peckham, appealed to Rome, and went to the pope.

The pryor and couent of Cant. made their appeale, against this archb. Peckham, that he should not consecrate Walter le Schamel new elect bishop of Salisburie, in any other place, except only in the church of Canturbury, but by their leaue and licence first obtained. Notwithstanding the archbishop nothing regarding their appeale, proceeded in the consecration of the said bishop neere to the towne of Reading, whereupon the pryor and couent cealed not to prosecute their appeale against the archbishop.

Betweene Richard Ferrings archdeacon of Cant. of the one partie, and the barons of Douer of the other partie, the same yeare fell out an other like wrangling, for that the archdeacon claimed to visit the church of Douer: contrarie the barons affirmed, that none had nor should haue to do there to order or dispose in spirituall matters but onely the archbishop, and the pryor and couent of saint Martin. Ex eod. chron. fol. 46.

After the death of William Whitwane archbishop of Yorke, John de Roma succeeded after him, and comming from his consecration at Rome to Douer, bare his crosse through the middle of Kent, contrary to the inhibition of John Peckham.

49. Robert. Winchelsey. 19.

This Robert which was archb. in the latter time of king Edward the 1. for certaine displeasure of the king conceiued against him, departed the realme, and in his banishment remained two or three yeares. And about the beginning of the reigne of king Edward the second was restored againe: Anno 1309. Ex chro. Rich. 2. Thus few archbishops of Cant. haue bin, with whom kings haue not had some quarrel or other. The cause betweene the king and him (saith mine author) was this: that the king accused him to pope Clement to disturbe his realme, and to take part with rebels, &c. Ex chro. S. Albani.

This Robert also excommunicated Walter, bishop of Couent. for holding with the king and Peter Gaueston against the ordinances of the barons: wherefore the said bishop appealed to the pope, against whom the archbishop sent Adam Perimouth.

This Adam Perimouth was compiler of the Storie of K. Edward.

In the time of this Robert archbishop, the order of Templaries were abolished by pope Clement 5. in the counsell of Vienna with this sentence diffinitiue: Quanquam de iure non possimus, tamen ad plenitudinem potestatis dictum ordinem reprobamus.

50. Gualter Reynald. 15.

After the decease of Rob. Winchelsey, who departed Anno 1312. Thomas Cobham a learned man was elected by full consent of the Monks: who came to Auinion, to haue his election confirmed. But the pope refusing the vacant seate to his owne hands put in Walter Reynald B. of Worcester Chancellor of England, who gouerned the seate 15. yeares.

The chronicler of S. Albans, recordeth also how in the dates of this archb. An. 1319. certaine lepers conspiring with the Turks and Iewes went about to impoisonate, and infect all christendome, by inuenoming their fountaines, lakes, pits, barrels, and such other places. Of the which crime diuers of them being conuict, were worthily burned in France. About the which yeare, the said author maketh also relation, how in the realme of England much murren fell among the beasts: insomuch, that the dogges eating vpon their flesh (infected belike by the waters and fountaines) fell downe dead incontinent. Neither durst men for that cause almost taste of any beefe: An. 1318. 1319. Ex Chron. Alban.

This Walter archb. taking part with the queene Isabell against king Edward her husband, died the same yeer in which he was deposed: An. 1237. Ex Chro. S. Albani.

After Walter the archb. as affirmeth the chron. of S. Alban, succeeded Simon Mepham. Of whom I maruell that Polydore maketh no word or mention: he liued not long: after followed John Stratford.

51. John Stratford. 29.

In the story of Adam Perimouth is recorded that this I. Stratford intending to visit the diocesse of Northfolke, was not received by the bishop, the chapter and clergie there, alledging that he obserued not the ordinary canon therein. To whom the archbishop said againe, he had the popes letters, and shewed the same. But the other answered, that those letters were falsly obtained and tended to the suppression of the clergie, and therefore they would not obey: wherefore the archbishop excommunicated the bishop, and suspended the prior, and interdicted the couent: An. 1343.

52. Ioh. Offord. 10. moneths.

Maister John Offord chancellor of England was elected and confirmed archb. of Canturburie, but not consecrated, and sat but 10. months, about the yeare of our Lord, 1350. Pestilentia in Anglia.

53. Tho. Braidwarden. 1.

This Thomas Braidwarden following after John Stratford sate not long but died within 10 moneths of the plague, as they say. Which was called then the first great plague in England, raging so sore in all quarters, that it was thought scarce the tenth part of men to bee left aliue.

The first great plague in England.

54. Simon Islepe. 17.

In the time of Simon Islepe which followed after Braidwarden; king Edw. An. 1362. is reported after the blind superstition of those daies, to offer in the church of Westminster the testiments wherein saint Peter did celebrate masse. Which belike were well kept from mothes, to last so long. Ex Chron. Alban.

The testiments wherein S. Peter said masse, or els the pixis he kept.

The same Simon Islepe, among other constitutions ordeined through all churches and chapels vnder paine of excommunication; that no man should abstaine from bodily labors vpon certaine saints daies, as is before touched: which fact of his is not a little noted in our monkish histories.

This Simon builded Canturburie colledge in Oxford.

The conclusion of this fourth Booke.

The conclusion of this booke. Antichrist in his pride.

FOr asmuch as Satan being chained vp all this while, for the space of a thousand yeares, beginneth about this time to bee loosed and to come abroad, according to the forewarning of saint Iohns Reuelation: Therfore to conclude the fourth Booke, wherin sufficiently hath beene described the excessiue pride and pompe of Antichrist, flourishing in his rosse, and securitie, from the time of William Conquerour hitherto: now (Christ willing and assisting vs thereunto) wee minde in these latter Bookes hereafter following, in order of history to expresse the latter persecutions and horrible troubles of the church, raised vp by Satanas in his minister Antichrist, with therssistance against Christs church against him. And so to prosecute (by the mercifull grace of Christ) the proceeding and course of times, till we come at length to the fall and ruine of the said Antichrist. To the intent that if any be in such error to thinke that Antichrist is yet to come, let him consider and ponder well the tragicall rages, the miserable and most sorrowfull persecutions, murthers, and vexations of these latter 300. yeares now following, and I doubt not but he will be put out of all doubt to know, that not only Antichrist is already come, but also to know where hee sitteth and how he is now falling apace (the Lord Christ be thanked for euer) to his decay and confusion.

The Fifth Booke containing the ## last three hundred yeares from the loosing out of Satan.

The fifth booke.

THus hauing discoursed in these former bookes, the order and course of yeres, from the first tying vp of Satan vnto the yeer of our Lord 1360. I haue a little ouerpassed the stint of time in the Scripture appointed, for the loosing out of him againe. For so it is written by S. John Apoc. 20. that after a thousand yeares, Satanas the old Dragon shall bee let loose againe for a season, &c.

The yeares and time of loosing out Satan examined.

For the better explanation of the which mystery, let vs first consider the content of the Scripture: afterward let vs examine by processe and course of times, the meaning of the same: and first to recite the words of the Apocalypse, the text of the prophesie is this, chap. 20.

Apoc. 20.

And I saw an angell descending from heauen, hauing a key of the bottomlesse pit, and a great chaine in his hand. And he tooke the Dragon the old serpent, which is the diuell and Satanas, and bound him for a thousand yeares, and put him in the bottomlesse dungeon & shut him vp, and signed him with his seale, that he should no more seduce the Gentils, till a thousand yeares were expired. And after that he must bee loosed againe for a little space of time. And I saw seates, and they sat vpon them, and iudgement was giuen vnto them; and the soules I saw of them which were beheaded for the testimonie of Iesus, &c.

By these words of the Reuelation here recited, three speciall times are to be noted.

The place of the Apoc. 20. expounded, for the loosing out of Satan.

First, the being abrode of Satan to deceiue the world.

Secondly, the binding vp of him.

Thirdly, the loosing out of him againe, after a thousand yeares confummate, for a time.

Concerning the interpretation of which times, I see the common opinion of many to be deceiued by ignorance of histories, and state of things done in the church: supposing that the chaining vp of Satan for a thousand yeares, spoken of in the Reuelation, was ment from the birth of Christ our Lord. Wherein I grant that spiritually the strength and dominion of Satan in accusing and condemning vs for sinne, was cast downe at the passion and by the passion of Christ our Sauior, and locked vp not only for a thousand yeares, but for euer and euer. Albeit as touching the malicious hatred and furie of that serpent, against the outward bodies of Christs poore saints (which is the heele of Christ) to afflict and torment the church outwardly: That I iudge to bee ment in the Reuelation of saint John, not to be restrained till the ceasing of those terrible persecutions of the primitiue church. At what time it pleased God to pitie the sorowfull affliction of his poore flocke, being so long vnder persecution, the space of three hundred yeares, and so to allwage their griefes and torments. Which is ment by binding vp of Satan, brother of all those mischiefes: vnderstanding thereby, that forsomuch as the diuell prince of this world, had no hold by the death of Christ the sonne of God left at his power and interest against the soule of man, should turne his furious rage and malice which he had to Christ, against the people of Christ (which is ment by the heele of the seed. Genesis 3.) in tormenting their outward bodies. Which yet should not be for euer, but for a determinate time, when as it should please the Lord to bridle the malice, and shackle the power of the old serpent, and giue rest vnto his church for the tearme of a thousand yeares. Which time being expired, the said serpent should be suffred loose againe for a certaine or a small time. Apoc. 20

What the loosing of Satan both meane in Scripture.

About what time and yeare Satan was let out by the count of the Apocalypse.

And thus to expound this prophetical place of Scripture I am led by three reasons.

Three reasons.

The first reason.

The first is, for that the binding vp of Satan, and closing him in the bottomlesse pit by the angell, importeth as much that he was at libertie, raging and doing mischiefe before. And certes those so terrible and so horrible persecutions of the primitiue time vniuersally through the whole world, during the space of three hundred yeares of the church, doe declare no lesse. Wherein it is to be thought and supposed, that Satan all that time, was not fettered and closed vp.

The 2. reason.

The second reason mouing me to thinke that the closing vp of Satan was after the ten persecutions of the primitiue church, is taken out of the twelfth chapter of the Apocalypse. Where we reade, that after the woman (meaning the church) had trauelled forth her man child, the old Dragon the diuell, the same time being cast downe from heauen, drawing the third part of the starres with him; stood before the woman with great anger, and persecuted her (that is, the church of God) with a whole flood of water (that is, with abundance of all kinds of torments) and from thence went moreouer to fight against the residue of her seede, and stood vpon the sands of the sea, whereby it appeareth that he was not as yet locked vp.

The 3. reason.

Apoc. cap. 13.

The third reason I collect out of the Apocalyps thirteenth chapter, where is written of the beast, signifying the emperiall Monarchie of Rome: that he had power to make warre forty and two moneths. Vp the which moneths is meant no doubt, the time that the Dragon, and the persecuting emperours, should haue in afflicting the saints of the primitiue church. The computation of which fortie two moneths (counting euery moneth for a Sabbath of yeares, that is, for seuen yeares, after the order of Scripture) riseth to the summe (counting from the passion of the Lord Christ) three hundred yeares lacking fire, at what time Sarentius the last persecutor in Rome fighting against Constantinus, was drowned with his souldiers, like as Pharao was drowned persecuting the children of Israel in the red sea. Vnto the which fifty moneths, or Sabbaths of yeares, if we adde the other six yeares wherein Licinius persecuted in the East; we shall find full three hundred yeares, as is specified before in the first booke of this volume, pag. 79.

Xlii. moneths in the Apoc. cap. 13. examined.

After the which fortie and two moneths being expired, manifest it is that the furie of Satan, that is, his violent malice and power ouer the saints of Christ, was diminished and restrained vniuersally through the whole world.

What time Satan was tied vp.

Thus then the matter standing euident, that Satan after 300. yeares, counting from the passion of Christ, began to be chained vp, at what time the persecution of the primitiue church began to cease: now let vs see, how long this binding vp of Satan should continue, which was promised in the booke of the Reuelation to be a thousand yeares. Which thousand yeers, if we adde to the fifty moneths of yeares, that is, to 294. yeers: they make 1294. yeares after the passion of the Lord. To these moreouer adde the 30. yeares of the age of Christ, and it commeth to the yeare of our Lord 1324. which was the yeare of the letting out of Satan, according to the prophesie of the Apocalyps.

L. Lich. About

The time of loosing of Satan.

About which yeare pope Boniface the eighth was pope, and made the firth booke of the decretals: confirmed the orders of friers, and priuiledged them with great freedomes, as appeareth by his constitution: Super cathedram, An. 1294.

The time of Antichrist, examined.

Unto the which count of yeares doth not much disagree that I found in a certaine old chronicle prophesied and written in the latter end of a booke, which booke was written as it seemeth, by a monke of Dower, and remaineth yet in the custody of William Carie, a citizen of London: alledging the prophesie of one Haymericus a gray frier, grounded vpon the authoritie of Joachim the abbat, prophesying that Antichrist should bee borne the yeare from the natuitie of Christ 1260. Which is, counting after the Lords passion, the very same yeare and time when the orders of friers both Dominickes and Franciscans began first to bee set vp by pope Honorius the third, and by pope Gregorius the 9. which was the yeare of our Lord, counting after his passion, 1226.

And counting after the natuitie of the Lord, was the yeare, 1260.

Whereof these verses in the author were written.

Cum fuerint anni completi mille ducenti,
Et decies seni post partum virginis almæ:
Tunc Antichristus nascetur dæmone plenus.

Arises prophesying of the coming of Antichrist.

And these verses were written, as appeareth by the said author, An. 1285.

These things thus premised for the loosing out of Satan, according to the prophetie of the Apocalyps, now let vs enter (Christ willing) to the declaration of these latter times, which followed after the letting out of Satan into the world. Describing the wondrous perturbations and cruell tyrannie stirred vp by him against Christs church: also the valiant resistance of the church of Christ against him and Antichrist, as in these our bookes here vnder following may appeare.

The argument of the bookes after following.

The argument of which booke consisteth in two parts: first to entreate of the raging furie of Satan nowlosed, and of Antichrist: against the saints of Christ fighting and trauelling for the maintenance of the truth, and reformation of the church. Secondly, to declare the decay and ruine of the said Antichrist, through the power of the word of God, being at length, either (in a great part of the world) ouerthrowne, or at least vnsuccessfully in the whole world detected.

Anno 1260. A diuersity there is found in writers, which hath been the occasion of the erring of the pope.

Thus then to begin with the yeare of our Lord, 1260. wherein I haue a little, as is aforesaid, transgressed the time of the first loosing out of Satan: wee are come now to the time wherein the Lord, after long darkenesse, beginneth some reformation of his church, by the diligent industrie of sundrie his faithfull and learned seruants: of whom diuers already wee haue touched in the former booke before, as namely Guliel. de Sancto Amore, Marcilius Patauinus, Ockam, Robertus Gallus, Robertus Grosthed, Petrus de Cugnerijs, Ioannes Rupescissanus, Conradus Hager, Ioannes de Poliaco, Cesenas, with other more, which withstood the corrupt errours, and intollerable enormities of the bishop of Rome, beside them which about these times were put to death by the said bishop of Rome, as Chatillion, and Franciscus de Arcatara in the booke before recorded: also the two Franciscans, martyrs, which were burned at Auinion, mentioned, pag. 260.

Now to these (the Lord willing) wee will adde such other holy martyrs and confessors, who following after in the course of yeares with like zeale and strength of Gods word, and also with like danger of their liues, gaue the like resistance against the enemie of Christs religion, and suffered at his hands the like persecutions. First beginning with that godly man, whosoeuer he was the author of the booke (his name I haue not) intituled the prayer and complaint of the Ploughman: written as it appeareth, about this present time.

The author of the ploughmans prayer not known.

Which booke as it was faithfully set forth by William Tindall, so I haue as truely distributed the same abrode to the readers hands: neither changing any thing of the matter, neither altering many words of the phrase thereof. Although the olde rude and age of his speech and tearmes be almost growne now out of vse: yet I thought it so well, both for the vtilitie of the booke to reserue it from oblation, as also in his owne language to let it goe abrode, for the more credit and testimonie of the true antiquitie of the same. Adding withall in the margent for the better vnderstanding of the Reader, some interpretation of certaine difficult tearmes and speeches, as otherwise might perhaps hinder or stay the Reader. The matter of this complaining prater of the ploughman thus proceedeth.

An old ancient writing intituled, The prayer and complaint of the Ploughman.

JEsu Christ that was ybore of the maide Marie, haue on thy poore seruants mercy and pitie, and helpe them in their great neede to fight against sinne, and against the diuell that is author of sinne, and more needes there neuer to crie to Christ for helpe, then it is right now. For it is fulfilled that God said by Hay the prophet: ye riseth vp earlich to follow drunkennesse, and to drinke till it be euen, the harpe and other minstrelsies beeth in your feasts and wine. But the worke of God yee ne beholdeth not, ne taketh no keepe to the workes of his hands: And therefore my people is take prisoner, for they ne had no cunning. And the noblemen of my people deyeden for hunger, and the multitude of my people weren drie for thirst, and therefore hell hath drawne abrode their soule, and hath vepened his mouth without any end. And eftsoones saith Hay the prophet: The wordis sloten away, and the highnes of the people is ymade sicke, and the earth is infect of his wonnyers, for they haue broken my lawes, and ychanged my right, and han destroyed mine euerlasting bond and ª forward betweene them and me. And therefore cursing shall deuour the earth, and they that wonneth on the earthly shallen done sinne. And therefore the earth tilyars shullen waxe wood, and few men shullen ben yleft vpon the earth. And yet saith Hay the prophet, this saith God, forasmuch as this people nigheth me with their mouth, and glorifieth me with their lips, and their heart is farre from me. And they han ydrad more mens commandement, then mine, and more draw to their doctrines, then mine. Therefore will I make a great wondring vnto this people, wisedome shall perish away from wise men, and vnderstanding of readie men shall bee yhid. And so it seemeth that another saying of Hay is fulfilled, there as God bad him goe teach the people, and said, goe forth and say to this people: eares haue ye, and vnderstand ye not, and eyes yee haue and sight ne know ye not. Make blind the heart of this people, and make their eares heauie, and close their eyen, lest he see with his eyne, and yheare with his eares, and vnderstand with his heart, and be yturned, and ych heale him of his sicknesse. And Hay said to God: how long Lord shall this be? And God said, For to that the cities ben desolate withouten a wonnier, and an house withouten a man.

ª Forward, that is, couenant.

Here is mychel nede for to make sorrow, and to crie to our Lord Iesu Christ hertilich for helpe and for succour, that hee wole forgiue vs our sinnes, and giue vs grace and conning to fruen him better hereafter. And God of his endlesse mercy giue vs grace and conning trulich to tellen which is Christs law in helping of mens soules, for we beeth ful wel men, and sinfull men, and vncunning, and if he woll be our helpe and our succour, we shullen well performe our purpose. And blessed be our Lord God that hideth his wisedome from wisemen, and fro readie mens and teacheth it to small children, as Christ teacheth in the gospell.

The law of Christ standeth on two parts.

Christen men haue a law to keepe, the which law hath twe parties. Beleue in Christ that is God, and is the foundment of their law, and vpon this foundment, as he said to Peter, and the gospell beareth witnes, he wol byelden his church, and this is the first partie of Christs law. The second partie of this law beth Christs commandements that beth written in the gospell, and more verilich in mens hearts.

And as touching the beleue, we beleuen that Christ is God, and that there ne is no God but he. We beleuen neuertheleste that in the godhead there bene three persons, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy ghost, and all these three persons ben one God, and not many gods, and al they beth ylich mighti, ylich good, and ylich wise, and euer haue ben, and euer shullen ben. We beleuen this God made the world of nought, and man he made after his owne likenesse in Paradise that was a land of blisse, and gaue him that land for his heritage, and bad him that he should not eate of the tree of knowledge of good and euill, that was ª amid Paradise. Then the diuell that was fallen out of heauen for his pride, had enuie to man, and by a false suggestion he made man eate of this tree, and brake the commandement of God, and tho was man ouercome of the diuell, and so he lost his heritage, and was put out therof into the world that was a land of trauel, and of sorrow vnder the fiends thraldome, to be punished for his trespasse. There man followed wickednesse and sinne, and God for the sinne of man sent a sloud into this world, and dround all mankind saue eight soules. And after this sloud he let men multiplie in the world, and so he assayed whether man dread him or loued him, and among other he found a man, that hight Abraham: this man he proued whether he loued him and dread him, and bad him that he should offeren Isaac his son vpon an hil, and Abraham as a true seruant fulfilled the Lords commandement: and for his buxumnesse and truth, God sware vnto Abraham that he would multiply his seed as the grauell in the sea, and as the stars of heauen, and he behight to him and to his heires the land of beheſt for heritage for euer, gif they wolden ben his true seruants and keepe his hests. And God ª held him forward, for Isaac Abrahams son begat Iacob and Esau: and of Iacob that is ycleped Israel, comen Gods people that he chose to be his seruants, and to whō he behight the land of beheſt. This people was in great thraldome in Egypt vnder Pharao that was king of Egypt: and they crieden to God that he ſhould deliuren them out of that thraldome, and so he did: for he sent to Pharao, Moses and his brother Aaron, and bad him deliuer his people to done him sacrifice: and tofore Pharao he made Moses done many wonders, or that Pharao would deliuer his people, and at the last by night he deliuered his people out of thraldome, and led them through a desert toward the land of beheſt, and there he gaue them a law, that they ſhoulden lyuen after, when they comen into their country, and in their way thitherward, the ten commandements God wrote himſelfe in two tables of stone: the remnant of the law he taught them by Moses his seruant, how they ſhoulden doe euerichone to other, and gif they trespassed againe the law, he ordained how they ſhoulden be punished. Also he taught them what maner sacrifices they ſhould doe to him, and he chose him a people to ben his priests, that was Aaron and his children, to done sacrifices in the tabernacle, and afterward in the temple also. He chese him the remnant of the children of Leuy to ben seruants in the tabernacle to the priest, and he said: When ye come into the land of beheſt, the children of Leuy they ſhullen haue none heritage amongst their brethren, for I would be their part, and their heritage, and they ſhullen serue me in the tabernacle by daies and by nights, and he ordained that priests ſhould haue a part of the sacrifices that were offered in the tabernacle, and the first begotten beasts, both of men and beasts and other things, as the law teleth. And the other children of Leuy that serued in the tabernacle, ſhould haue tithings of the people to their liuelode, of the which tithings they ſhould geuen the priests the tenth party in forme of offering. The children of Leuy, both priests and other, ſhould haue houſes and crofts, and leſewes for their beasts in the land of beheſt, and none other heritage: and so God gaue them their land of beheſt, and bad them that they ne ſhould worship no other God then him. Also he bad that they ſhould keepe his commandements: and gif they did so, all their enemies about them ſhould drede them, and be their seruants. And gif they worshipped false gods, and so forsaken his lawes, he behight them that he would bring them out of that land, and make them serue their enemies: but yet he ſaid hee would not benemen his mercie away from them, if they would cry mercie and amend their defaults: and all this was done on Gods side.

ª Amid Paradise, that is, in the middest of Paradise.

ª Forward, that is, couenant.

Gode loue to man.

And here is much loue showed of God to man. And who so looketh the bible, he ſhall finde that man showed him little loue againward: for when they were come into their heritage, they forgatten their God, and worshipped false gods. And God sent to them the Prophets and his seruants ª feile times to bid them withdrawen them from their sinnes, and other they haue slowen them, or they beaten them, or they led them in prison: and oft times God tooke vpon them great vengeance for their sinnes, and when they cried after helpen to God, he sent them helpe and succour. This is the generall processe of the old Testament, that God gaue to his people by Moses his seruant. And all this testament and this doing ne was but a shadow and a figure of a new Testament that was guen by Christ. And it was byhoten by Jeremy the Prophet, as Saint Paul beareth witnes in the Epistle that he writeth to the Iewes. And Ieremy saith in this wise: Loe daies ſhall come, God saith, and I will make a new band to the houſe of Israel, and to the houſe of Iuda, not like the forward that I made with their fathers, in that day that I tooke their hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt, the which forward they maden vein, and I had lordſhip ouer them. But this ſhall be the forward that I wold make with them after thoſe dates: I will giue my lawes with them in their inwardnesse, and I will writen them in their hearts, and I will be their God, and they ſhould be my people: and after that a man ſhall not teach his neighbour, ne his brother. For all (God saith) from the least to the most, ſhould know me, for I will forgiuen them their sins, and will no more thinke on their sinnes.

ª Feile times, that is, oft times.

The honouring of God standeth in two things.

This is the new testament, that Christ both God and man, borne of the maid Mary, he taught here in this world to bring man out of sinne, and out of the diuels thraldome and seruice, to heauen, that is land of blisse and heritage, to all tho that beleeuen on him, and keepen his commandements, and for his teaching he was done to the death. But the third day arose againe from death to life, and set Adam and Eue, and many other folke out of hell, and after ward he came to his disciples, and comforted them. After, he stied vp to heauen to his father, and tho he sent the holy Ghost amonges his disciples: and in time coming, he will come and demen all mankind after their werkes, and after the words he spake vpon earth: some to blisse, within body and in soule euer withouten end; and some to paine without end, both in body and in soule.

Abraham.

ª Forward, that is, couenant with her.

This is our beleeue and all christen mens, and this beleeue is the first point of the new Testament, that ych christen man is hold stedfastly to beleeue, and rather to suffer the death, than forsaken this beleeue; and so this beleeue is the bread of spirituall life, in forsaking sinne, that Christ brought vs to life.

But for asmuch as mans liuing ne standeth not all onlych by bread, he hath ygiuen vs a draught of water of life to drinke. And who that drinketh of that water, he ne ſhall neuer afterward ben a thurſt. For this water is the cleare teaching of the gospell, that encloseth seuen commandements.

The first is this: Thou ſhalt loue thy God ouer all other things, and thy brother as thy selfe, both enemy and friend.

Specialt. prefer to ouer ſtone of the gospels.

The second commandement is of meeknesse, in the which Christ chargeth vs to forsake lordſhip vpon our brethren, and other worldly worſhips, and so he did himſelfe.

The third commandement, is in ſtondiug stedfaſtlich in truth, and forsaking all falſenesse.

The fourth commandement, is to ſuffer in this world diseases and wrongs, withouten agenſtondings.

The fifth commandement is mercy, to forgiuen our brethren their treſpaſſe, as often time as they gilteth, without asking of vengeance.

The sixth commandement is poorenesse in spirit, but not to ben a beggar.

The seuenth commandement, is chaſtitie: that is, a forsaking of fleſhlich likings diſpleasing to God. Theſe commandements enclosen the ten commandements of the old, and somewhat more.

This water is a blessed drinke for christen mens soule. But more harme is, much folke would drinke of this water, but they mowe not come thereto: for God saith by Ezekiel the Prophet; When ich le geue to you the moſt cleane water to drinke, yet troubled that water with your feet, and that water is so defouled, ye geue my sheep to drinke. But the cleane water is yhid fro the sheep, and but gif God cleare this, it is dread left the sheep dyen for thurſt. And Christ that is the wiſdome of the father of heauen, and well of this wiſdome that come from heauen to earth to teach man this wiſdome, through the which man ſhould ouercome the sleights of the diuell, that is principall enemy of mankind: haue mercy and pitie of his people, and shew if it be his will how this water is troubled, and by whom and ª telle cleare this water that his sheep mowne drinken herof, and kele the thirſt of their soule. Blessed mote our Lord ben, for he hath yraught vs in the gospell, that ere then hee would come to the vniuerſall dome, then ſhould come many in his name, & ſayen, that they weren Christ, and they ſhoulden done many wonders, and begilen many men: and many falſe Prophets ſhoulden arisen and begilen much folke.

Christ is sheep. ª Stir, that is, afterward.

A Lord, yblesſed mote thou ben of euerich creature: which ben they that haue yſaid that they weren in Christ, and haue thus begiled thus thy people? Trulich Lord I trow, thilke that sayen that they ben in thy sted, and ª binemen thy worship, and forgatten their God, and worshipped falſe gods. And God sent to them the Prophets and his seruants ª feile times to bid them withdrawen them from their sinnes, and other they haue slowen them, or they beaten them, or they led them in prison: and oft times God tooke vpon them great vengeance for their sinnes, and when they cried after helpen to God, he sent them helpe and succour. This is the generall proceſſe of the old Testament, that God gaue to his people by Moses his seruant. And all this testament and this doing ne was but a shadow and a figure of a new Testament that was guen by Christ. And it was byhoten by Ieremy the Prophet, as Saint Paul beareth witnes in the Epiſtle that he writeth to the Iewes. And Ieremy saith in this wiſe: Loe daies ſhall come, God saith, and I will make a new band to the houſe of Israel, and to the houſe of Iuda, not like the forward that I made with their fathers, in that day that I tooke their hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt, the which forward they maden vein, and I had lordſhip ouer them. But this ſhall be the forward that I wold make with them after thoſe dates: I will giue my lawes with them in their inwardneſſe, and I will writen them in their hearts, and I will be their God, and they ſhould be my people: and after that a man ſhall not teach his neighbour, ne his brother. For all (God saith) from the least to the moſt, ſhould know me, for I will forgiuen them their sins, and will no more thinke on their sinnes.

ª Binemen, that is, taketh away.

The honouring of God standeth in three things.

The herying of God standeth in three things. In louing God ouer all other things: in dreading God ouer all other things: in trusting in God ouer all other things.

ª Herying, that is, worshipping.

Theſe three points Christ teacheth in the gospel. But I trow men louen him but a little. For who so loueth Christ, he wole kepen his words. But men holden his words for hereſie and follie, and keepeth mens words. Also men dreden more men and mens lawes and their curſings, then Christ and his lawes and his curſings. Also men hopen more in men and mens helps, than they do in Christ and in his helpe. And thus hath he that setteth in Gods ſtede, bynomen God theſe three herygings, and maketh men louen him and his lawes, more then Christ & Christs lawes, and dreaden him also. And there as the people ſhulden yeeld to God their vowes, he saith he hath power to aſſoylen them of their auowes, and so this sacrifice hee ª nemeth away from God. And there as the people ſhould cry to God in the day of tribulation, he letteth them of their crying to God, and bynemeth God that worſhip. This day of tribulation is whan man is fallen through sinne, into the diuels seruice, and than we ſhulden cry to God after helpe, and axen forgeueneſſe of our sinne, and make great sorrow for our sinne, and ben in full will to doe so no more, ne none other sinne, and that our Lord God wole forgeuen vs our sinne, and maken our soule clene. For his mercy is endleſſe.

ª Nemeth, that is, taketh away.

Against auricular confeſſion.

But Lord, here men haue benomen thee much worshippe: for men seyn that thou ne might not cleane aſſoylen vs of our sinne. But if we knowlegen our sinnes to priests, and taken of them a penance for our sinne, gif we mowen speake with them.

Sins forgiuen without confeſſe.

A Lord, thou forgaue sometime Peter his sinnes, and also Mary Magdaleine, and many other ſinfull men without shriuing to priests, and taking penance of priests for their sins. And Lord thou art as mighty now as thou were that time, but gif any man haue bynomen thee thy might. And we lewd men beleuen, that there nis no man of ſo great power, and gif any man maketh himſelfe of ſo great power, he ª heighteth himſelfe aboue God. And S. Paul speaketh of one that ſitteth in the temple of God, and heighten him aboue God; and gif any ſuch be, he is a falſe Christ.

ª Heighteth, that is, exalteth.

Objection of the priests to maintain their ſtate.

But hereto seyn priests, that when Christ made clean leprous men, he bade them goe and shew them to priests. And therefore Enioyned to the whitecleon.

fore they seyn that it is a commandement of Christ, that a man should shewen his sinne to priests. For as they seyn, lepre in the old law betokeneth sinne in this new law. A Lord God, whether thine apostles knew not thy meaning as well as men done now? And gif they hadden yknow that thou haddest commanded men to shriuen them to priests, and they ne taught not that commandement to the people, me thinketh they hadden ben to blame. But I trow they knewen well that it was none of thy commandements, ne needfull to heale of mans soule. And as me thinketh, the law of lepre is nothing to the purpose of shri-uing: for priests in the old law, hadden certaine points and tokens to know whether a man were leprous or nou: and gif they were leprous, they hadden power to putten them away from other cleane men, for to that they weren cleane, and then they hadden power to receiuen him among his brethren, and offer-en for him a sacrifice to God.

This nis nothing to the purpose of shriuing. For there nis but one priest, that is Christ, that may know in certaine the le-pre of the soule. Ne no priest may make the soule cleane of ther sinne, but Christ that is priest after Melchisedekes order: ne no priest here beneath may wyt for certaine whether a man be cleane of his sinne, or cleane assoyled, but gif God tell it him by reuelation. Ne God ordained not that his priests should set men a penance for their sinne, after the quantity of the sinne, but this is mans ordinance, and it may well be that there commeth good thereof. But I wote well that God is much vn-worshiped thereby. For men trust more in his absolutions, and in his yeeres of grace, then in Christs absolutions, and thereby is the people much appaired. For now, the sorow a man should make for his sinne, is put away by this shrift: and a man is more bold to doe sinne for trust of this shrift, and of this bodilich penance.

Another mischiefe is, that the people is ybrought into this beliefe, that one priest hath a great power to assoylen a man of his sinne and clennere, then another priest hath.

Another mischiefe is this, that sone priest may assoylen them both of sinne and paine: and in this they taken them a power that Christ granted no man in earth, ne he ne vsed it dought on earth himselfe.

Another mischiefe is, that these priests sellen forgiuenesse of mens sinnes and absolutions for money, and this is an heresie accursed, that is yeleped simony: and all thilke priests that seken price for granting of spirituall grace, beth by holy lawes de-prined of their priesthood, and thilke that assenteth to this he-resie. And be they ware, for Helyse the Prophet toke no money of Naaman, when he was made cleane of his lepre, but Giesi his seruant: and therefore the lepre of Naaman abode with him and with his heires euermore after.

Here is much matter of sorrow, to see the people thus far vlad away from God and worshupen a false God in earth, that by might and by strength hath ydone away the great sacrifice of God out of his temple: of which mischiefe and discomfort, Daniel maketh mention, and Christ beareth thereof witnesse in the gospell. Who that readeth it, vnderstand it. Thus we have ytold shortly, how he that saith he fiteth in Christs stede binei-meth Christ his worship, and his sacrifice of his people, and ma-keth the people worshepen him as a god on earth.

Cry we to God, and knowledge we our sinnes euerichone to other, as S. Iames teacheth, and pray we hartilich to God euerichone one for other, and then we shulen hopen forgiuenes of our sins. For God that is endelesse in mercy faith, that he ne will not a sinfull mans death, but that he be turned from his sin and liuen. And therefore, when he came downe to saue mankind, he gaue vs a law of loue and of mercy: and bade, gif a man doe a trespasse, amend him priuilich, and gif he leue not his sin, amend him before witnesse: and gif he ne amendeth not, men should tell to the church: and gif he ne amendeth not that, men should shunne his company as a publican, or a man that is misbeleeued:
and this law was yfigured in the law of lepre, who that readeth it, he may see the sooth.

But Lord God, he that sitteth in thy stede, hath vndoe thy law of mercy and loue; Lord, thou biddest louen enemies as our selfe; and thou shewedst in the gospell, there as the Samaritan had mercy on the Iew. And thou biddest vs also prayen for them that cursen vs, and that desamen vs, and pursuen vs to death. And so Lord thou biddest, and thine apostles also. But hee that clepeth himselfe thy vicar on earth, and head of thy church, he hath vndone thy law of loue and mercy. For gif we speaken of louing our enemies, hee teacheth vs to fight with our enemies, that Christ hath forbeden. He curseth and des-reth vengeance to them that so doth to him. Gif any man pursueth him, he curseth him, that it is a sorrow a christen man to hearen the cursings that they maken, and blaspheries in such cursing. Of what thing that I know, I may beare true wit-nesse.

But gif we speake of louing of our brethren, this is vndone by him that saith he is Gods vicar in earth. For Christ in the gospell biddeth vs, that we shoulden clepen vs no father vpon earth: but clepen God our father. to maken vs loue perfitlich together. And he clepeth himselfe father of fathers, and maketh many religions, & to euerich a father. But whether is loue and charity encresed by these fathers and by their religions, or elle ymade lesse? For a frier ne loueth not a monke, ne a secular man neither, nor yet one frier another that is not of the order, and it is againward.

A Lord, me thinketh that there is little perfection in these religions. For Lord, what charity hauen such men of religion, that know in how they mown againstand sin, & fleen away fro their brethren that ben more vncunning then they ben, and suf-fren them to trauelen in the world withouten their counsell as beasts? Trulich Lord, me thinketh that there is but little charitie, & thus is there little perfection. Lord God, when thou were on earth, thou were among sinfull men to drawen them from sin, and thy disciples also. And Lord, I trow thou ne granteft not one man more cunning then another al for himselfe: and I wote well that lewd men that ben laborers, ne trauell not alonlich for himselfe. Lord our beliefe is, that thou ne were not of the world, ne thy teaching neither, ne thy seruants that liueden after thy teaching. But all they forsaken the world, and so euery christen man must. But Lord, whether thou taughtest men forsake their brethrens company and trauell of the world, to liuen in ease and in rest, and out of trouble and anger of the world, by their brethrens trauell, and so forsaken the world?

A Lord, thou ne taughtest not a man to forsaken a poore estate and trauell, to ben after ward a lord of his brethren, or ben a lords fellow, & dwelling with lords, as doth men of these new religions. Lord thou ne taughtest not men of thy religion thus to forsake the world, to liuen in perfection by themselfe in ease, and by other mens trauel. But Lord they sayen they ben ybound to thy seruice, and seruen thee both night and day in singing their prymes, both for themselfe and for other men, that done them good both quick and dead, and some of them gone about to teach thy people when they hauen leisure.

A Lord, gif they ben thy seruants; whose seruants ben we that cannot preien as they done? And when thou were here on earth, for our need thou taughtest thy seruants to preien thy father priuilich and thorilich: and gif there had ben a better manner of preying, I trow thou wouldest haue taught it in help of thy people. And Lord thou reprouest hypocrits that preyen in long prairer, and in open places, to ben yholden holy men. And thou seyst in the Gospell; Wo to you Pharisies hypocrites. And Lord thou ne chargedst not thy seruants with such manner seruice: but thou seyst in the gospell, that the Pharisies worshopen thee with their lips, and their heart is farre from thee.
For they chargen more mens traditions than thy command-dement.

And Lord, we lewed men han a beliefe, that thy goodnesse is endlesse and gif we keepen thine hestes, than ben we thy true seruants. And though we preyen thee but a little and thorilich, thou wilt thinken on vs, and granten vs that vs nedeth, for so thou behited vs sometime. And Lord I trow, that pray a man neuer so many quaint praiers, gif he ne keep not thine hests, he is not thy good seruant. But gif he keep thine hestes, then he is thy good seruant, and so me thinketh. Lord that praying of long praiers ne is not the seruice that thou desirest, but keeping of thine hests: and then a lewd man may serue God as well as a man of religion: though that the ploughman ne may not haue so much siluer for his prairer, as men of religion. For they kunnen not so well preisen their praiers as these other chapmen: but Lord our hope is, that our praiers bee neuer the worse, though it be not so well sold as other mens praiers.

Lord, Ezechiel the Prophet saith, that when he spake to the people thy words, they turned thy wordes into songs and into tales. And so Lord men done now: they singin merilich thy words, & that singing they clepen thy seruice. But Lord I trow that the best fingers he heriech thee not most: but he that fulfilleth thy words, he heriech thee full well, though he weep more then sing: and I trow that weeping for breaking of thy commandements, be more pleasing seruice to thee, than the singing of thy words. And would God that men would serue him in for-row for their sinnes, and that they shoulden afterward seruen thee in mirth. For Christ saith, yblessed ben they that maken for-row, for they shoulden ben yconforted. And wo to them that ben merry, and haue their comfort in this world. And Christ said, that the world should ioyen, and his seruants shulden bee sory, but their sorrow should be turned into ioy.

A Lord, he that clepeth himselfe thy vicar vpon earth, hath yordained an order of priests to doe thy seruice in church to fore thy lewed people in singing mattens, euensong and masse.
And therefore hee chargeth lewd men in a lone of curtsing, to bring to his priests tithings and offerings to finden his priests, and hee clepeth that Gods part, and due to priests that seruen him in church.

But Lord, in the old law the tithings of the lewd people ne were not due to priests, but to that other childer of Leui that serueden thee in the temple, and the priest hadden their part of sacrifices, and the first bygeten beasts and other things as the law telleth. And Lord, Saint Paul thy seruant saith, that the order of the priesthood of Aaron ceased in Christs comming and the law of that priesthood. For Christ was end of sacrifices yofferd vpon the crosse to the father of heauen, to bring man out of sinne, and become himselfe a priest of Melchisedeckes order. For he was both king and priest, without beginning and end, and both the priesthood of Aaron and also the law of that priesthood, priesthood, ben ychanged in the comming of Christ. And S.

Paul saith it is reproued, for it brought no man to perfection.
For blood of goats, ne of other beasts ne might done away sin, for to that Christ shad his blood.

A Lord Iesu, whether thou ordenest an order of priests to of-fren in the auter thy flesh and thy blood to bringen men out of sinne, and also out of peine? And whether thou geue them alonelich a power to eat thy flesh & thy blood, & whether none other man may eat thy flesh, and thy blood withouten leue of priests? Lord, we beleuen, that thy flesh is very meat, and thy blood very drinke; and who eateth thy flesh, and drinketh thy blood, dwelleth in thee, and thou in him; and who that eateth this bread, shall liue without end. But Lord thine disciples said; this is an hard word: but thou answerest them and seidest: when ye seeth mans soone flouen vp there he was rather, the spirit is that maketh you liue, the words that ych haue spoken to you ben spirit and life. Lord, yblessed mote thou be, for in this word thou teachest vs that he that keepeth thy words, and doth after them, eateth thy flesh, and drinketh thy blood, and hath an euerlasting life in thee. And for wee shoulden haue minde of this liuing, thou gauest vs the sacrament of thy flesh and blood, in forme of bread and wine at thy supper, before that thou shuldest suffer thy death, and tooke bread in thine hand, and saidest:
Take ye this, & eat it, for it is my body: and thou tookest wine, and blessedst it, and said: This is the blood of a new and an euerlasting Testament, that shall bee shed for many men in for-giuenesse of sinnes: as oft as ye done this, doe ye this in mind of me.

A Lord, thou ne bede not thine disciples maken this a sacrifice, to bring men out of peines, gif a priest offred thy body in the altar: but thou bed them go, and fulfillen all the folke in the name of the father, and the sonne, and the holy ghost, in for-giuenesse of their sins: and teach ye them to keep those things that ych haue commanded you. And Lord, thine disciples ne ordained not priests principallich to make thy body in sacrament, but for to teach the people, and good husbandmen that well gouerne their housholds, both wiues and children, and their meiny, they ordeined to be priests to teachen other men the law of Christ, both in word, in deede, and they liueden as true christian men, euery day they eaten Christs body, and drinken his blood, to the sustenance of liuing of their soules, and other-whiles they tooken the sacrament of his body in form of bread and wine, in mind of our Lord Iesu Christ.

But all this is turned vpside down now: for now who so wil liuen as thou taughtest, he shall ben holden a foole. And gif he speak thy teaching, he shal ben holden an heretike, & accursed. Lord, yhaue no lenger wonder hereof, for so they seiden to thee when thou were here sometime. And therefore we moten take in patience their words of blasphemy as thou diddest thy selfe, or elfe we weren to blame. And trulich Lord I trow, that if thou were now in the world, and taughtest as thou diddest sometime, thou shouldest ben done to death. For thy teaching is damned for heresie of wise men of the world, and then moten they nedes ben heretikes that teachen thy lore, and all they also that trauelen to liue thereafter.

And therefore Lord, gif it be thy will, help thine ynkunning and lewd seruants, that wolen by their power and their kunning, helpe to destroy sinne. Leue Lord, sith thou madest woman in help of man, and in a more fraile degree then man is, to be gouerned by mans reason: What perfection of charitie is in these priests and in men of religion, that haue forsaken spousted that thou ordeinedst in Paradise betwixt man and woman, for perfection to forsaken trauelle, and liuen in ease by other mens trauelle? For they mow not doe bodilich works for defouling of their hands, with whom they touchen thy precious body in the altar.

Leue Lord, gif good men forsaken the company of woman, and needs they moten haue the gouernaile of man, then moten they ben ycoupled with shrewes, and therefore they sinnen bloe that thou madest in cleannes from sinne, it is now ychanged into liking of the flesh. And Lord, this is a great mischiefe vnto thy people. And young priests and men of religion, for defaute of wiues, maken many women horen, and drawn through their ensample many other men to sinne, and the ease that they liuen in, and their welfare, is a great cause of this mischief. And Lord me thinketh, that these ben quaint orders of religion, and none of thy sect that wolen taken horen, whilke God forsendes, and forsaken wiues that God ne forsendeth not: and forsaken trauail that God commands, and geuen their selfe to idlenes, that is the mother of all noughtinesse.

And Lord, May thy blessed mother & Ioseph, touched oftentimes thy body, and wrougheen with their hands, and liueden in as much cleannes of soule, as our priests done now, and touched thy body, and thou touchedest them in their souls. And Lord our hope is, that thou goen not out of a poore mans soule that trauelleth for his liuelode with his hands. For Lord, our beliefe is, that thine house is mans soule, that thou madest after thine owne likenesse.

But Lord God, men maketh now great stonen houses full of glasen windowes, and clepeth thilke thine houses and churches. And they feeten in these houses Mawmets of stocks and stones, to fore them they knelen priuilich and apert, and ma-children. But Lord, sith thy teaching is ycome from heauen aboue, our hope is, that with thy grace it shall breaken these wards, and shew him to thy pupil, to kele both the hunger and the thrust of the soule. And then shall no shepheard, ner no false hiridman begile thy pupile no more. For by thy law I write, as great thanke of thee, for his smiting. And Lord, thou were mighty enough to haue against stond thine enemies, for through thy looking they fellen downe to the ground: Lord ybleffed mote thou be. Here thou teacheft vs that we shoulden suffren:

for thou were mighty ynow to haue against stand thine enemies, and thou haddest wonpu, and thy men weren hearty to haue no man may serue two lords at once. O Lord then, euery liet for the time that he heth, other forsweareth himselfe, and forsaketh thy seruice for dread of his bodily death, becommeth the diuels seruant.

O Lord, what truth is in him that cleepeth himselfe off as they did before. And gif they preachen, commonlich it is before rich men, there as they mowen beare worship and also profit of their preaching. But before poore men they preachen but seldem, when they ben maisters: and so by their works we may seene that they ben false glosers.

And Lord, me thinketh that who so wole keepen thine hests, him needeth no glose: but thilke that clepen themselfe christen men, and liuen against thy teaching and thine hests, needelich they mote glose thine hests, after their liuing, other elsemen shulden openlich y know their hypocrisie and their falshod.

But Lord, thou fayst that there is nothing yhid that shall not be shewed sometime. And Lord, yblessed mote thou be: For somewhat thou shewest vs now of our mischiefes that we ben fallen in through the wisdomes of maisters, that haue by sleights yled vs away from thee and thy teaching, that thou that were the maister of heauen, taught vs for loue, when thou were here sometime to heale of our soules, withouten error or heresie. But maisters of worlds wisdome and their founder, haue ydamned it for heresie and for error.

O Lord, me thinketh it is a great pride thus to reproue thy wisdo me & thy teaching. And Lord, me thinketh that this Nabuge donosor king of Babylon, that thus hath reproued thy teaching and thine hests, and commandeth on all wise to kepen his hests, maken thy people hearen him as a God on earth, and maketh them his thralles and his seruants.

But Lord, we lewd men knowen no God but thee, and we with thine helpe and thy grace, forsaken Nabugodonoser and his lawes. For hee in his proud estate wole haue all men vnder him, and he nele be vnder no man. He ondoth thy lawes that thou ordainest to ben kept, and maketh his owne lawes as him liketh: and so he maketh him king aboue all other kings of the earth, and maketh men to worshippen him as a God, and thy great sacrifice he hath ydone away.

O Lord, here is thy commandement of meeknes, mischisiich to broken: and thy blessed commandement of poorenes is also to broken, and yhid from thy people. Lord, Zachary thy Prophet saith, that thou that shouldest be our king, shouldest ben a poore man, and so thou were: for thou saidest thy selfe; Foxes haue dens, and birds of heauen nests, and mans sonne hath not where to legge his head on. And thou saydest, yblessed ben poore men in spirit, for thy kingdome of heauen is therein: and woe to rich men, for they han their comfort in this world. And thou bad thy disciples to ben ware of all couetise, for thou sai-dest, in the abundance of a mans hauing, ne is not his lifelode.
And so thou teachest that thilke that han more then them nee-deth to their liuing liuen in couetise. Also thou sayst, but gif a man forsake all things that he oweth, hee ne may not ben thy disciple. Lord, thou sayst also, that thy word that is sown in rich mens harts, bringeth forth no fruit: for riches and the busines of this world maken it withouten fruit.

O Lord, here ben many blessed teachings to teach men to ben poore, and loue poorenesse. But Lord harme is, poore men and poorenes ben yhated, and rich men ben yloued and honored: and gif a man be a poore man, men holden him a man without grace: and gif a man defireth poorenes, men holden him but a fole: and gif a man be a rich man, men clepen him a gratious man, and thilke that ben busie in getting of riches, ben yhold wise men and ready: but Lord, these rich men sayen, that it is both lefull and needfull to them to gather riches together. For they ne gathereth it for themselfe, but for other men that ben needy, and Lord their works shewen the truth. For if a poore needy man would borowen of their riches, he nele lean him none of his good; but gif he mow be seker to haue it againe by a certaine day.

But Lord, thou bed that a man should lend, and not hoping yelding againe of him that he lendeth to: and thy father of heauen wole quite him his mede. And gif a poore man aske a rich man any good, the rich man will giue him but a little, and yet it shall be little worth. And Lord me thinketh that here is little loue and charity, both to God and to our brethren.

For Lord, thou teachest in thy gospell, that what men do to thy seruants, they done to thee. A Lord, gif a poore man axe good for thy loue, men giueth him a little of the wurst. For these rich men ordeinen both bread and ale for Gods men of the wurst that they haue. O Lord, sith all good that men hath, commeth of thee: how dare any man geue thee of the wurst, and kepe to himselfe the best? How may such men say that they gatheren riches for others need, as wel as himselfe, sith their works ben contrary to their words? and that is no great truth. And be ye seker these goods that rich men han, they ben Gods goods, ytake to your keeping, to looke how he wolen be setten them to the worshipping of God. And Lord, thou saidst in the gos-pell, that who so is true in litle, hee is true in that thing that is more: and who that is falfe in a little thing, who wole taken him more and true? And therefore be yee ware toward things of a greater value? And therefore be yee ware that han Gods goods to keepe. Spend ye thilke trulich to the worship of God. Ieft ye leesen the blisse of heauen, for the vntrue dispending of Gods goods in this world.

O Lord, these rich men seggen that they don much for thy then they giuen them againward. For the poore men mote gone to his labor in cold and in heat, in were and dry, and spend his flesh and his bloud in the rich mens works, vpon Gods ground, to finde the rich man in ease, and in liking, and in good fare of meat, of drinke, and of clothing. Here is a great gift of the poore man, for he giueth his owne body. But what giueth the rich man him againward? Certes feeble meat, and feeble drinke, and feeble clothing. What euer they seggen, such bee their works, and here is little loue. And whoso euer looketh well about, all the world fareth as we seggen: and all men stu-dieth on euery side, how they may wex rich men: and euerich man almost is ashamed to ben holden a poore man.

And Lord, I trow for thou were a poore man, men token little regard to thee, and to thy teaching. But Lord thou came to giue vs a new testament of loue; and therefore it was semelich that thou came in poorenes, to proue who would loue thee, and kepen thy hests. For gif thou haddest ycome in forme of a rich man and of a lord, men wold rather for thy dread then for thy loue, haue ykept thine hests. And so Lord, now thou might wel yse which louen thee as they should in keeping thine hests. For who that loueth thee in thy poorenes and in thy lowneſſe, needs he mote loue thee in thy lordship and highnesse.

But Lord, the world is turned vpse downe, and men loue poore men but a little, ne pooreneſſe neither. But men be ashamed of poorenes; and therefore Lord, I trow that thou art a poore king. And therefore I trow that he that clepeth himselfe thy vicar on earth, hath forsaken poorenesse, as he hath doe the remnant of thy law, and is become a rich man and a Lord, and maketh his treasure vpon the earth, that thou forbiddest in the gospell: and for his right and riches, he will plete, and fight, and curse. And yet Lord he will segge, that he forsaketh all things that he oweth, as thy true disciple mete done after thy teaching in the gospell.

But Lord, thou ne taughtest not a man to forsaken his goods, and plete for them, and fight, and curse. And Lord, he taketh on him power to affoile a man of all manner things, but if it be of debt. Truly Lord, me thinketh he knoweth little of charitie.
For who that beth in charity, possesseth thy goods in common, and not in proper at his neighbors need. And then shall there none of them segge that is mine, but it is Gods that God granteth to vs to spenden it to his worship. And so if any of them boroweth a portion of those goods, and dispendeth them to Gods worship, God is apayed of this spending, and alloweth him this true doing. And if God is payed of that dispending, that is the principall lord of those goods, how dare any of his seruants axen thereof accounts, other challenge it for det? Ser-ten, of one thing I am incerteine, that these that charge so much det of worldly cattell, they know litle of Christs law of charity. For if Ich am a baily of Gods goods in the world: If I see my brother in need; I am hold by charity to part with him of these goods to his nede: and if he spendeth them wel to the worship of God, I mote be well apaid, as though I my selfe had spended them to the worship of God. And if the principal Lord is well payed of my brothers doing, and the dispending of his goods, how may I segge for shame that my brother is dettour to me, of the goods that I tooke him to spend in Gods worship at his nede? And if my brother spendeth amisse the goods that I take him, I am discharged of my deliuerance of the goods, if I take him in charity thilke goods at his nede. And I am hold to be sory of his euill dispending, ne I may not axen the goods, that I tooke him to his nede in forme of det, for at his need they were his as well as mine. And thus is my brother yhold to done to me gif he see me in nede, and gif we ben in charitie, little should we chargen of det. And ne we should not axen so dets, as men that know nen not God: and than we be poore in forsaking all things that we own. For gif we ben in charitie, we wollen nother fight nor curse, ne plete for our goods with our brethren.

O Lord, thus thou taughtest thy seruants to liuen: and so they liueden while they hadden good shepheards, that fedden thy sheep, and robbed them not of their lifelode, as Peter thy good shepheard and thy other apostles. But Lord, he that clepeth himselfe thy vicar vpon earth and successour to Peter, he robbeth thy puple of their bodilich lifelode, for he ordeineth proud shepheards to liuen in ease by the tenth party of poore mens trauell: and he giueth them leue to liuen where them li-keth. And gif men no wolen willfullich geuen thē the tithings, they wolen han them against their will by maistery and by cursing, to maken them rich.

Lord, how may any man segge that such shepheards that louen more the wolle then the sheepe, and feden not thy sheep in body, ne in soule, ne ben such rauenors and theeues? And who may segge that the maintaynor of such shepheards, ne is not a maintenour of theeues and robbers? How wole hee assoile shepheards of their robbing without restitution of their goods, that they robben thy sheepe of against their will? Lord of all shepheards, blessed mote thou be. For thou loudest more the sheepe then their wolle. For thou feedest thy sheepe both in body and soule. And for loue of thy sheepe, thou tooke thy death

Purgatorie.

And Lord me thinketh that gif there were a purgatorie, and anie earthlich man had power to deliueren sinfull men from the peines of purgatorie, he should, and he were in charitie, fauen cuerich man that were in way of saluation from thilke peines, sith they make them greater then anybodilich peines of this world. Also gif the bishop of Rome had such a power, he himselfe should neuer comen in purgatorie ne in hel. And sith we see well that he ne hath no power to kepen himselfe ne other men nother out of these bodilich peines of the would, and he may go to hell for his sinne as another man may: Ine beleeue nos, that he hath so great power to assoylen men of their sinne as he taketh vpon him abouen all other men. And I trow that in this he higheth himselfe aboue God.

Selling of bishoprikes and parsonages.

As touching the selling of bishoprickes and parsonages, I trow it be a point of falsehed. For agenst Gods ordinance hee robbeth poore men of a portion of their sustenance, and selleth it, other giueth it, to find proud men in idleneſſe that don the lewd pupple little profit, but much harme, as we told before. Thus ben thy commandements of truth, of meekeneſſe, and of pooreneſſe, vndone by him that clepeth himselfe thy vicar here vpon earth.

Marriage.

A Lord thou gaue vs a commandement of chaſtice, that is, a forbidding of fleshlich lusts. For thou broughtest vs to a liuing of single, that is, vgouerned by the word. For Lord, thou ordeinedist women more frele than man to ben vgouerned by mans rule, and his helpe to pleaſe thee and keepe thine hestes. Ne thou ne ordainedist that a man should desire the companie of a woman, and maken her his wife, to liuen with her in his lusts, as a swine doth or a horse. And his wife ne like him not to his lustes, Lord thou ne gaue not a man leaue to departen him from his wife, and taken him another.

But Lord, thy marriage is a common accord betweene man and woman, to liuen together to their liues end, and in thy seruice either the better for others helpe, and thilke that thus ben ycome together, ben ioyned by thee, and thilke that God ioyneth, may no man depart. But Lord, thou saiest that gif a man see a woman to coueten her, then he doth with the woman lecherie in his heart. And so Lord, gif a man desire his wife in coueitise of such lusts, and not to flie from whoredome, his weddins is lecherie, ne thou ne ioyneſt them not together. Thus was Raguels daughter yeadded to seuen husbands that the diuel imtrangled. But Tobie tooke her to liue with her in cleanneſſe, and bringing vp of her children in thy worship, and on him the diuell ne had no power. For the wedding was I maked in God, for God, and through God.

A lesson how to marrie.

A Lord, the people is sure ygo from this manner of wedding. For now men wedden their wiues for faireneſſe, other for richies, or some such other fleshlich lusts. And Lord, so it preueth by them for the most part. For a man shall not find two wedded in a land, where the husband loues the wife, and the wife is buxum to the man, as they shoulden after the law of marriage. But other the man loues not his wife, or the wife is not buxum to her man. And thus Lord is the rule of prese, that neuer faileth ne preue whether it bee done by thee or no. And Lord, all this mischiefe is common among thy people, for that they know not thy word, but their shepheards and hired men feeden them with their * sweuens and leasings. And Lord, where they shoulden gon before vs in the field, they seggen their order is to holy for thy marriage. And Lord, he that calleth himselfe thy vicar vpon earth, will not suffren priests to taken them wiues, for it is against his law: But Lord, he will dispensen with them to kepen horen for a certaine summe of money. And Lord, all whordome is forfended in th law. And Lord, thou neuer forfendedst priests their wiues, ner thy apoſtles neither. And well I wote in our land, priests hadden wiues vntil Anselmus daies in the yeare of our Lord God, a leuen hundred and twentie and nine, as Huntingdon writes. And Lord, this makes people for the most part beleuen, that lecherie is no sinne. Therefore we lewd men prayen thee that thou wolt send vs shepheards of thine owne that wolen feeden thy flocke in thy lefew, and gon before themselfe, and so written thy law in our hearts, that from the least to the most all they mayen knowen thee. And Lord, geue our king and his lords, heart to defenden thy true shepheards and thy sheep from out of the wolues mouthes, and grace to know thee that art the true Christ, the Sonne of thy heauenly father, from the antichrist, that is, the sonne of pride. And Lord, geue vs thy poore sheepe patience and strength to suffer for thy law, the cruelnes of the mischieuous wolues. And Lord, as thou hast promised, shorten these daies. Lord we axen this now, for more need was there neuer.

* Sweuens, that is, dreames.

Priests had leaue to marrie time of Anselmus.

I doubt not gentle reader, but in reading this goodly treatise aboue prefixed, the matter is manifeſt and plaine of it selfe without any further explication, what is to be thought and iudged of this vicar of Christ, and successour of Peter, whom we call the bishop of Rome: whose life here thou seest not only to be disordered in all points, swarming from the steps and example of Christ the Prince and Bishop of our soules, but also whose lawes and doctrines are so repugnant and contrarie to the precepts and rule of the Gospell, that almost there is no conuenience betweene them as in the perusing of this complaining prayer, thou maiest notoriously vnderstand. Wherefore hauing no need to stand in any further expressing of this matter, but leauing it to thine owne consideration, and discretion: I will speed my selfe (Christ willing) to proceed toward the time of John Wickliffe, and his fellowes, taking by order of yeares as I go, such things by the way, as both happened before the said time of Wickliffe, and also may the better prepare the mind of the reader, to the entring of that storie. Where first I thinke it not inconuenient to inserte a prophetical parable, written about this time or not much before, which the author morally applieth vnto the bishop of Rome. To what author this prophecie or moral is to be ascribed, I haue not certainly to affirme. Some say, that Rupescissanus (of whom mention is made before, pag. 359) was the author thereof, and alleage it out of Froyſard; but in Froyſard as yet I haue not found it. In the meane season, as I haue found it in Latine expressed, because it pointeth out the pope so rightly in his feathers and colours, as I thought the thing not to be omitted, so I take this present place, as most fit (although peraduenture missing the order of yeares a little) to insert the same. The effect of which parable followeth here vnder written.

A parable prophesying the destruction of the pope.

In the time of pope Innocent the sixt aboue specified, this Ioannes de Rupescissa, a frier, among other his prophecies manuelously forespake (as alleageth Froyſard, who both heard and saw him) of the taking of John the French king prisoner, and brought forth many other notable collections concerning the perils, mutations & changings in the church to come. And at that time the pope kept him at Auinion in prison: there Froyſard is said to see him and to speake with him, the said Froyſard heard in the popes court this example and parable, recited by the foresaid frier Rupescissanus, to the two cardinals, to wit, cardinall Hostiensis, and cardinall Auxerrensis. Which followeth in these words.

When on a certaine time, a bird was brought into the world all bare and without feathers, the other birds hearing thereof, came to visit her: and for that they saw her to be a marueilous faire and beautifull bird, they counselled together how they might best do her good, with by no meanes without feathers, she might either flie or live commodiously. They all with ben her to liue so, her excellent fourme and beautie saide, in so much that among them all there was not one, that would not grant some part of her owne feathers to decke this bird withall: yea, and the more trim they saw her to be, the more feathers still they gaue vnto her, so that by this meanes she was passing well penned and feathered, and began to flie. The other birds that thus had adorned her with goodly feathers, by holding her to flie abroad, were marueilously delighted therewith. In the end, this bird seeing her selfe so gorgeously feathered, and of all the rest to be had in honor; began to waxe proud and hautie. In so much that she had no regard at all vnto them, by whom she was aduanced: yea she punged them with her beake, taking them by the stem and feathers, and in all places hurted them. Whereupon the birds sitting in counsell again, called the matter in question, demanding one of another what was best to be done touching this vnkind bird, whom they louingly with their owne feathers had decked and adorned: affirming that they gaue not their feathers to the intent that she thereby puft vp with pride, should contemptuously despise them all. The Peacocke therefore answereth first: Truly, saith hee, for that thee is beauely set forth with my painted feathers, I will againe take them from her. Then saith the Faulcon, and I also will haue mine againe. This sentence at length take place among them all, so that euery one plucked from her thole feathers which before they had given, challenging to them their olume againe. Hold this proud bird seeing her selfe thus to be dealt withall, began forthwith to abate her hautie stomacke, and humblie to submit her selfe openly, confessing and acknowledging that of her selfe shee did nothing: but that her feathers, her honor, and other ornaments was their gift: shee came into the world all naked and bare, they clad her with comely feathers, and therefore of right may they reccine them againe. Wherefore in most humble wise she desireth pardon, promising to amend all that is past, neither would shee at any time hereafter commit, whereby through pride shee might lose her feathers againe. The gentle birds that before had given their feathers, seeing her so humble and lowlie, being moued with pitie, restored againe the feathers, which lately they had taken away, adding withall this admonition: Wee will gladly, say they, beholo thy flying among vs, so long as thou wilt vse thine office with humblenesse of mind, which is the chiefest comelinesse of all the rest. But this haue thou for certaintie, that if at any time hereafter thou ertoll thy selfe in pride, we will straightwaies deprive thee of thy feathers. and reduce the into thy former state where in we found thee. Such to, oh you cardinals (saith Ioannes Rupescissanus) shall it happen vnto you. For the emperors of Romans and Almaine, and other christian kings, potentates, and princes of the earth, haue bestowed vpon you gods, lands, and riches, that should serue God, but you haue powred it out and consumed it vpon pride, all kind of wickednesse, riot and wantonnesse.

Arma-

Armachanus.

The life and state of Armachanus, archbishop and primat of Ireland.

IN the catalogue of these learned and zealous defenders of Christ against Antichrist aboue rehearled, whom the Lord about this time began to raise vp for reformation of his church, being then farre out of frame, I cannot forget nor omit something to write of the reuerend prelat, and famous clerke, Richard Armachanus, primate and archbishop of Ireland: A man for his life and learning so memorable, as the condition of those daies then serued, that the same daies then as they had but few good, so had none almoſt his better. His name was Richard Fitzraf, made primate and archbishop, as is said, of Ireland. First brought vp in the Vniuerlitie of Oxford, in the studie of all liberall knowledge, wherein he did exceedingly profit vnder John Baketthorpe his tutor, and instructor. In this time the begging friers began greatly to multiple and spread, into whom this Baketthorpe was euer a great enemie. Whose steps the scholars also following, began to do the like. Such was the capacitie and dexteritie of this Fitzraf, that he being commended to king Edward the third, was promoted by him, first to be archdeacon of Lichfield, then to be the Commissarie of the Vniuerlitie of Oxford: At length to be archbishop of Armach in Ireland. He being archbishop, vpon a time had cause to come vp to London: At what time here in the said citie of London was contention betweene the friers and the clergie about preaching, and hearing confessions, &c. Wherevpon this Armachanus being requested to preach, made seuen or eight sermons. Wherein he propounded nine conclusions against the friers, for the which he was cited vp by the friers before this pope Innocent 6. to appeare: & so he did: who before the face of the pope valiantly defended, both in preaching and in writing the same conclusions, and therein had constantly vnto the death, as the words of John Wickliffe in his Trialogo doe well testifie in this wise: Ab Anglorum episcopis conductus Armachanus, nouem in Auinione conclusiones coram Innocentio 6. & suorum cardinalium coetu, contra fratrum mendicitatem, audaceter publicauit, verbóque ac scriptis ad mortem vsque defendit. The like also testifieth of him Waldenus in fasciculo zizaniorum. Also Volateranus reporteth the same. Gulielmus Botonerus testifying of him in like manner, saith: that Armachanus first reproued begging friers for hearing the confessions of professed nuns, without licence of their superiors, and also of married women without knowledge of their husbands. What dangers and troubles he sustained by his perlecutors, and how miraculouſlie the Lord deliuered him from their hands: in so much, that they meeting him in the open streets and in cleare day light, yet had no power to se him, nor to apprehend him. In what perill of theeues and searchers he was in, and yet the Lord deliuered him, yea and caused his money being taken from him, to be restored again to him by portions, in time of his necessitie and famine. And from what dangers of the kings officers, which comming with the kings letters, laid all the hauens for him: yet how the Lord Iesus deliuered him, theiwing him by what waies how to escape them. Moreouer, what appeales were laid against him, to the number of fiftéene, and yet how the Lord gaue him to ouercome all his enemies. How the Lord also taught him and brought him out of the profound vanities of Aristoteles subtilitie, to the studie of the Scriptures of God. All this with much more, he himselfe expreſſeth in a certaine prayer or confession made to Christ Iesus our Lord, in which hee describeth almoſt the whole historie of his owne life. Which prayer I haue to shew in old written hand, and hereafter (Christ willing) intend, as time serueth, to publish the same. The beginning of the prayer in Latine is this.

The prayer of Armachanus.

Tibi laus, tibi gloria, tibi gratiarum actio, Iesu pissime, Iesu potentissime, Iesu dulcissime: qui dixisti, Ego sum via, veritas & vita. Via sine deuio, veritas sine nubilo: & vita sine termino. Quod tute viam mihi ostendisti. Tute veritatem me docuisti. Et tute vitam mihi promisisti. Via eras mihi in exilio. Veritas eras in consilio. Et vita eris mihi in præmio. With the rest that followeth in the foresaid prayer.

Thus what were the troubles of this good man, and how he was cited vp by the friers to the pope, you haue partly heard. Now what were his reasons and arguments wherewith he defended his cause in the popes presence, followeth to be declared. For the tractation whereof, first I must put the Reader in remembrance of the controuerlie mentioned before in the storie of Guliehmus de sancto Amore, pag. 287. Also in the storie of the Vniuerlitie of Paris contending against the friers, pag. 360. For so long did this controuerlie continue in the church, from the yeare 1240. when the Oxford men began first to stand against the friers, to the time of this Armachanus, that is, to the yeare 1360. and after this time yet more increased. So it pleased the secret prouidence of God (for what cause he best knoweth) to suffer his church to be entangled and exercised sometimes with matters and controuerlies of no great importance: Either to keepe the rancke of mens wits thus occupied from idleneſſe, or else to prepare their minds by these smaller matters, to the consideration and searching out of other things more graue and waighty. Like as now in these our Queenes daies, wee see what tragedies hath raised vp in England about formes and fashions of apparell: wearings, what troubles grow, what placing and displacing there is about the same: Euen so at this time happned the like stir about the liberties and priuiledges of the friers, which not a little troubled and occupied all the churches and Diuines almoſt through Christendome. The which controuerlie, to the intent it may better be vnderstood (all the circumstances thereof being explained) we will first begin from the originall and foundation of the matter, to declare by order and course of yeares, vpon what occasion this variance first rising, in continuance of time increased and multiplied in gathering more matter, and last out at length to this tumultuous contention among learned men.

Concerning therefore this present matter, first it is to bee vnderstood, that in the yeare of our Lord 1215. vnder pope Innocent the third, was called a generall councell at Laterane, mentioned before, pag. 231. in the daies of king John. In the which councell among many other things, was constituted a certaine law or canon, beginning Omnis vtriusque sexus, &c. the tenor of which canon in English is thus.

Can. omnis vtriusque sexus, Sess. 21. de Pœn.

Be it decred, that euerie faithfull Christian, both man and woman comming to the yeares of discretion, shall confesse himselfe alone of all his sinnes, to the priest of his owne proper parish, once in the yeare at least: and that hee shall endeuour by his owne selfe to fulfill the penance, whensoeuer hee receiueth the sacrament of Eucharistie, at least at the time of Easter. Vnlesse by the assent of his Minister, vpon some reasonable cause to abstaine for the time. Otherwise doing, let him both lacke the communion of the church being aliue, and christian buriall when he is dead. Wherefore bee it decreed, that this wholesome constitution shall be published accustomable in churches, to the end that no man of ignorance or of blindneſſe make himselfe a cloke of excuse. And if any shall confesse himselfe to any other priest then of his owne parish vpon anie iuſt cause, let him aske and obtaine first licence of his owne priest: Otherwise, the priest to haue no power to bind him or to loose him, &c.

Note here, he calleth it not the sacrament of the altar.

The occasion of the controuersie betweene the friers and the clergie.

Armachanus cited by the friers, to appeare before the pope.

In the time of this Innocentius, and of this Laterane councell, was Dominicke, the first author and founder of the preaching friers: who laboured to the said pope Innocent, for the confirmation of his order; but did not obtaine, in his life time.

Peter Dominicke in the time of pope Innocent the 3. obtained not the confirmation of his order.

The order of Peter Dominick first confirmed by pope Honorius the third.

The order of the Franciscans confirmed three yeare after the Dominickes.

The next yeare after this Laterane councell, died pope Innocent, an. 1216. after whom came Honorius the third. Who in the first yeare of his popedome confirmed the order of the frier Dominicke, and gaue to him and his friers authoritie to preach and to heare confessions, with diuers other priuiledges more. And vnder this pope, which gouerned ten yeares, lined Dominicke flue yeares after the confirmation of his order, and died, an. 1221. About which yeare, the order of the Franciscan friers began also to breed, and to spread in the world, through preaching and hearing confessions.

After this Honorius, next followed pope Gregorie the ninth, about the yeare of our Lord 1228. who for the promoting of the foresaid order of Dominickes, gaue out this Bull, in tenor as followeth.

The Bull of pope Gregorie in the behalfe of the Dominicke friers.

Gregorius bishop, seruant of Gods seruants, to his reuerend brethren, archbishops, bishops, and to his welbeloued children, abbats, priors, and to all prelats of churches, to whom soeuer these presents shall come, greeting, and Apostolicall blessing. Because * iniquitie hath abounded, and the charitie of many hath waxt cold: Behold, the Lord hath raised vp the order of our welbeloued children the preaching friers, who not seeking things of their owne, but pertaining to Iesus Christ, to the extirping as well of hereſies, as to the rooting out also of other pernicious pestilences; haue dedicated themselues to the preaching of the b word of God. We therefore minding to aduance their faced purpose, &c. and followeth: commanding you to see the said persons, gently to be receiued among you: And that your flockes committed to your charge doe receiue deuoutly the seed of Gods word out of their mouth, and do confesse their sinnes vnto them, all such as list, whom wee haue authorised to the same, to heare confessions, and to enioine penance, &c. Dat. Perusij. an. Pont. nostri 8.

* Iniquitie hath abounded at Rome.

b Nay, to the preaching ministher of mens traditions against the word of God. The friers authorised to heare confessions, and to enioyne penance.

This pope Gregory died about the yeare of our Lord 1241. after whom came Celestinus the fourth, and sate but eight dayes: then came Innocentius the fourth, and sate eleuen yeares and six moneths. Who although he began first to fauour the friers: yet afterward being altered by certaine Diuines, of Vniuersities, prelats of churches, and curats; debarred them of their liberties and priuiledges, and gaue out against precepts and excommunications, as well against the friers, as all other religious persons. And not long after the same he was disputched and made away.

the yeare of our Lord 1353. Then succeeded pope Alexander the fourth a great maintainer of the friers, and sate 7. yeares. He renoked and repealed the acts and writings of pope Innocent his predecessour, which forth against the friers: wherewith the Diuines and students of Paris being not well contented, stirred vp foure principall doctours: The first and chiefe captaine was Guliel. de sancto Amore, mentioned before, pag. 287. against whom wrote Albertus Magnus, and Thomas Aquine. And at last he was condemned by this foresaid pope Alexander the fourth, in the Extrau. Non sine multa.

Extrau. non sine multa.

The second was Simon Iornalensis, the third Godfridus de fontibus, the fourth Henricus de Gandauo. These foure with other their complices, compiled a certaine booke against the begging order of friers, both Dominicans, and Franciscans, intituled, De periculis Ecclesiæ, containing fourteene chapters, whereof the fourteenth, which is the last, with thirtie nine articles against the friers we haue already translated and expelled, pag. 291. Beside these thirtie nine articles, he other seuen articles moreouer to the said booke annexed, vnder the name of the students of Paris against the friers, pouring why the said friers ought not to be admitted into their societie. Which seuen articles because they are but short, I thought heere better to place, then to omit them.

Certaine articles giuen out by the students of Paris, against the friers, why they should not be admitted to their societie.

Articles of the students of Paris against the friers.

FIrst we say, they are not to be admitted to the societie of our schole, but vpon out will and licence. For our companie or fellowship ought not to be coactiue, but voluntarie and free.

Secondly, we say they are not to be admitted, for so much as we of a priuiled, their communitie manifold waies to be hurtfull and inconuenious.

Thirdly, seeing they be of a diuers profession from vs (for they are called regular, and not scholastical) we therefore ought not to be ioyned and associate together in one scholastical office: For as much as the councell of Spaine doth say, Thou shalt not plough with an oxe, and with an asse together. Which is to say: Men of diuers professions ought not together to be matched in one kind of calling, or kinding, for their studies and conditions be disagreeing and differered from ours, and cannot frame or couple together in one communion.

Concilium Hispan.

Fourthly, we all rme by the Apostle that they are not to be admitted, because they worke dissensions and offences: for so saith the Apostle, Rom. vlt. We desire you brethren, that ye obserue and take heed of such as make dissensions and offendicles about the doctrine which you haue learned by the Apostles, and auoid them. For such serue not the Lord, but their owne belly. Gloss. Some they flatter, some they backbite, whereby they might feed their bellies. That through their sweete and pleasant words, and by their benedictions, they may deceiue the hearts of the simple. Gloss. That is, with their fine figured and trim couched words they set forth their owne traditions, wherwith they beguile the hearts of the simple innocents.

The friers make dissensions.

Fifthly, we say they are not to be admitted: For that we feare lest they be in the number of them, which go about and deuour mens houses. For they thrust in themselues into euery mans house, searching and sacking the consciences and states of all persons. And when they find cause to be seduced, as women: such they be circumuent, and leade them away from the counsels of their prelats, binding them either in act or otherwise from such vse are warned by the apostle to auoid.

Friers deuour mens houses. Penetrantes domos.

Sixthly, we say they are to be auoided: because we feare they are false prophets. Which being neither bishops, nor parish priests, nor yet their vicars, nor sent by them, yet they preach (not sent) against the mind of the apostle, Rom. 10. saying: How shall they preach except they be sent? for else there appeareth in them no such great vertue, for the which they ought to be admitted to preach vncalled. Seeing therefore that such are so dangerous to the church, they ought to be auoided.

Friers preach vncalled.

Seuenthly, we say they are not to be admitted, because they be a people so curious in searching and inquiring of other mens doings and spirituall demeanor. And yet be they neither Apostles, nor yet successours of the apostles, as bishops: nor of the number of the seuentie two disciples of the Lord: nor their successours, that is parish priests: nor their helpers, nor yet vicars. Wherefore, seeing they liue so in no order by the sentence of the apostle we are commanded to auoid them. 2. Thessal. vlt. Where he saith: We admonish and denounce vnto you O brethren in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ: that is, as the Glosse saith (We command you by the authoritie of Christ) that you withdraw your selues from euerie brother, that walketh inordinately, and not after the tradition, which you haue receiued of vs. & Luke vpon the common glosse of this place, and you shall find, that such are to be auoided till time they amend from so doing, &c.

Friers liue no order of life falling in the church.

Besides these articles aboue rehearsed, certaine propositions or conclusions were also propounded in the schooles of Paris the same time, solemnely to be disputed and defended against the friers: which in a briefe summe of words to collect, were these.

Certaine conclusions vnder Vniuersitie of Paris to be disputed of against the friers.

First, that the begging friers were not in the state of saluation.

Secondly, that they were bound to labor with their hands that could, and not to beg.

Thirdlie, that they ought not to exercise the office of preaching, or to heare the confessions of them that will come vnto them, although being licensed thereunto by the bishop of Rome, or by the Diocesan: for so much as the same is preiudiciall to the Parishens and Priests of the parishes.

All these foresaid articles and conclusions with the booke set forth by their Paris men; this pope Alexander the fourth condemned to be abolished and burned, writing his precepts to the French king, and also the Vniuersitie of Paris, in the fauour of the friers: willing and commanding the said friers to be restored to all their priuiledges and liberties, in as ample manner, as in pope Gregories time before.

Pope Alexander the fourth great fauorer of the friers.

Not long after pope Alexander the fourth, followed Clement the fourth, an. 1263. and sate three yeares. Who also gaue the priuiledge to the friers, beginning, Quidam temere, &c. In which priuiledge he condemneth them that say, that no man without licence of his curat or minister, ought to confesse him to the friers: or that a subiect ought to aske licence of their ministers so to do, which was against the canon Omnis vtriusque sexus, &c. made by pope Innocent the third, before recited.

Another priuiledge giuen to the friers by pope Clement the fourth.

After this Clement, against came pope Martine the fourth, an. 1281. who renued againe the canon, Omnis vtriusque sexus, in the behalfe of the curats against the friers.

In the which priuiledge he licenseth the friers, that without licence of bicars of churches, they shall first present themselues to the prelats to be admitted: by whom if they be refused the second time, then they vpon speciall authoritie of this pope shall be priuiledged, without either bishop or curat, to preach, to burie, and to heare confessions, whosoeuer will come to them: notwithstanding all that was decreed by his predecessours before to the contrarie notwithstanding.

Ex Clement. sæpe. stit. Bonif. Super Cathedram.

By this pope Boniface a certaine Dominicke frier was made cardinall, named Nicolaus de Treuiso, and after the death of Boniface was made also pope, an. 1303. surnamed pope Benedictus 11. Who seeing the constitution of Boniface his predecessour, to breede dissension betweene the priests and friers, made another constitution, beginning, Inter cunctas, &c. reuoking the constitution of Boniface his predecessour. Upon which constitution of pope Benedict, Ioannes Monachus, making a glosse, treadeth also his other glosse made vpon the constitution of Boniface before.

Ex Clement. in- ter cunctas. Ioan. Monach. reuoketh his glosse.

Against this Benedictus the eleuenth, followed pope Clement the fifth, an. 1305. and sate nine yeares. Who in his generall councell holden at Vienna, reuoked the constitution of Benedictus his predecessour, and renued againe the former decree of Boniface, by a new constitution of his, beginning, Dudum à Bonifacio 8. &c. Which constitution moreouer was confirmed afterward by pope Iohn the 22. an. 1316. Which pope also caused Ioannes de Poliaco to recant.

Pope Clement the fifth holdeth with the friers, and repeateth the confirmation of Benedictus. Ex Clemens. sæpe dudum.

Upon this variable diuersitie of the popes (one dissenting and repugning from another) rose among the Diuines and schoolemen in Vniuersities great matter of contention, as well in the Vniuersitie of Paris, as the Vniuersitie of Oxford about the begging friers. some holding one way, some another way. But especially fiue principall opinions be noted of learned men, who then disputing against the friers, were condemned for heretikes, and their assertions reproued.

Fiue diuers opinions of learned men in this age touching against the friers.

The first, was the opinion of them which defended, that the friers might not by the licence of the bishop of Rome and of the prelats, preach in parishes, and heare confessions. And of this opinion was Guliel. de sancto Amore, with his fellowes, who, as it is said, were condemned.

The second opinion.

The second opinion was this, that friers, although not by their owne authoritie, yet by priuiledge of the pope and of the bishop, might preach and heare confessions in parishes, but not not without licence of the parish priests. Of this opinion was Bernardus, gloseing vpon the canon, Omnis vtriusque sexus, & foresmentioned.

Bernardus super cap. Omnis vtriusque sexus.

The third opinion.

The third opinion was, that friers might preach and heare confessions without licence of the parish priests: but yet the said parishioners not withstanding were bound by the canon, Omnis vtriusque sexus, to repeate the same sinnes againe, if they had no other, to their owne proper curat: and of this opinion were many, as Godfridus de fontibus, Henricus de Gandauo, Ioannes Monachus cardin. Ioannes de Poliaco, which Ioannes de Poliaco, pope Iohn the 22. caused openly in Paris, to recant and retract.

Ioan. de Poliaco.

This Ioannes de Poliaco doctor of Diuinitie in Paris, being complained of by the friers for certaine articles or assertions, was sent for to the pope: where time and place being to him assigned, he in the audience of the pope and of fiue or six cardinals and other doctors, was straitly examined of his articles. To make the storie short, he at length submitting himself to to the authoritie of the terrible see of Rome: was caused to recant his assertions openly at Paris. His assertions which he did hold, were these.

John de Poliaco caused to recant by pope Iohn the 22.

The three assertions of Iohn de Poliaco against the friers.

His three assertions.

Wherof the first was, they which were confessed to friers, although hauing a generall licence to heare confessions; were bound to confesse againe their sins to their owne parish priest, by the constitution, Omnis vtriusque sexus, &c.

The second was, that the said constitution, Omnis vtriusque sexus, standing in his force, the pope could not make: but parishioners were bound once a yeare to confesse their sinnes to their priest. For the doing otherwise imporeth a contradiction in it selfe.

The third was, that the pope could not giue generall licence to heare confessions so, but that the parishioner so confessed was bound to reiterat the same confession made, vnto his owne curat. Which he proued by these places of the canon law: 25. quest. 1. Quæ ad perpetuam. Those things which be generall ordained for publike vtilitie, ought not to be altered by any change, &c. Item, the decrees of the sacred Canons, none ought to kepe more then the bishop apostolicall, &c. Ibidem. Item, to alter or to ordaine any thing against the decrees of the fathers, is not in the authoritie or power, no not of the apostolicall see: Ibidem.

25. q. 1. Quæ ad perpetuam. Contra statuta patrum condere vel mutare aliquid ecclesiis quidem festis potest auctoritas.

The fourth opinion.

The fourth opinion was, that the friers by the licence of the pope and of the bishops might lawfully heare confessions, and the people might be of them confessed and absolued. But yet notwithstanding, it was reason, conuenient, honest, and profitable, that once in the yeare they should be confessed to their curats (although being confessed before to the friers) because of the administration of sacraments, especially at Easter. Of which opinion was Gulielmus de monte Landuno. Henricus de Gandauo also held, not only to be conuenient, but also that they were bound so to do.

Gulielmus de monte Landuno. Henricus de Gandauo.

The fifth opinion was, that albeit the friers might at all times, and at Easter also, heare confessions as the curats did: yet it was better and more safe, at the time of Easter to confesse to the curats, then to the friers. And of this opinion was this our Armachanus, of whom we presently now intreat.

The fifth opinion.

And thus haue we, as in a briefe summe, opened vnto you, what was the matter of contention betweene the friers and the churchmen. What popes made with the friers: and what popes made against them. Moreouer, what learned men disputed against them in Paris, and other places, and what were their opinions.

The matter of contention about the friers, stood in foure points. First preaching without licence of curats. Secondly, in hearing confessions. Thirdly, in burying. Fourthly, in begging and taking of the people.

The learned men that disputed against the friers, sustained against the idle beggerly sects of friers, in whom the reader may well perceiue antichrist plainly raigning and fighting against the church: now remaineth, that as I haue before declared the trauels and troubles of diuers godly learned men in the church striuing against the said friers, continually from the time of Guliel. de Amore, hitherto: So now it remaineth, that for as much as this our Armachanus laboured and in the same cause sustained the like conflict with the same antichrist: we likewise collect and open his reasons and arguments hitherto in the consistorie and in the audience of the pope himselfe, wherewith he maintaineth the true doctrine and cause of the church against the pestiferous canker creeping in by these friers after subtill waies of hypocrisie, to corrupt the sincere simplicitie of Christs holy faith, & perfect Testament. The which reasons and arguments of his, with the whole processe of his doings, I thought good and expedient for the vtilitie of the church, more ample and largely to discourse and prosecute, for that I note in the sects, institutions, and doctrine of these friers, such subtill poison to lurke, more pernicious and hurtfull to the religion of Christ and soules of christians, then all men peraduenture do consider.

The protestation of Armachanus.

Thus Armachanus ioyning with the clergie of England, disputed and contended with the friers here of England, an. 1358, about a double matter. Wherof the one was concerning confession and other exchats which the friers intruded in parish churches against the curats, and publike pastors of churches. The other was concerning wilfull beggerie and pouertie, which the friers then take vpon them, not vpon any necessitie, being otherwise strong enough to worke for their liuing, but only vpon a wilfull and affected profession. For the which cause the friers appealed him by to the court of Rome. The occasion whereof thus stode.

It befell, that Armachanus vpon certaine businesse coming vp to London, found there certaine Doctors disputing and contending about the begging of Christ our Sauiour. Whereupon (he being greatly urged and requested oft times thereunto) at request, made seuen or eight sermons vnto the people at London, wherein he vttered nine conclusions. Wherof the first and principall conclusion was, touching the matter of the friers priuiledges, in hearing confessions. His conclusion was this.

First, that if a doubt or question be moued for hearing confessions, which of two places is rather to be chosen: The parish church is to be preferred before the church of the friers.

Secondly, being demanded whether is to be taken to heare the confession of the parishioners, the parson, or curat, or the frier) it is to be said, rather the parson or the curat.

Thirdly, that our Lord Jesus Christ in his humane conuersation was alwaies poore, but not that he loued pouertie, or did count to be poore.

Fourthly, that our Lord Jesus Christ did neuer beg, wilfully professing to be poore.

Fifthly, that our Lord Jesus Christ did neuer teach wilfullie to beg, or to profesle wilfull beggerie.

The first conclusion was, that Christ our Lord did contrarie, that men ought not wilfully or purposely without meere necessitie to beg.

Seuenthly, that there is neither wisdome nor holines, for any man to take vpon him wilfull beggerie, perpetually to be obserued.

The eighth, that it is not agreeing to the rule of the obseruants, or friers minorits, to obserue wilfull pouertie.

The last conclusion was, touching the Bull of pope Alexander the fourth, which condemned the libell of the maters of Paris: that the same Bull touched none of these seuen last conclusions.

Upon these nine conclusions premised, Armachanus began appealed, cited, and brought vp to the presence of the pope; began to proue the same his foresaid conclusions or assertions vnder protestation made, that his intention was not to affirme any thing contrarie to the christian faith, or to the catholike doctrine, or that should be preiudiciall or destructiue to the orders of the begging friers, such as were approued by holy church, or confirmed by the high bishops: But only his intention was, to haue the said orders reduced to the puritie of their first institution. Concerning which matter, he desired his reasons to be heard; which if they should be found weaker then the reasons of the friers, the punishment should be his. If otherwise, that then the friers iustly to be rewarded for their slanderous obtrectation and publike counterfeites, and intricate dealings both priuatlie and publikely wrought and fought against him: And so taking for his theme: Nolite iudicare secundum faciem, sed iustum iudicium iudicate, &c. That is: Iudge not after the outward face, but iudge true iudgement, &c. Iohn seuenth: he entreth to the probation of his conclusions: First beginning with the former conclusion, that the parish church was a place more fit and conuenient, for the confessions or burials of the parishioners to be vsed, then any other exempt church or place of the friers. Which he proued by three causes: First for the more sureuesse or certaintie to the conscience of the parishioners confessed. Secondly, for the

Iohn 7.

The first conclusion propounded.

Probation.

more vtilitie and profit of him. Thirdly, for the lesse inconuenience arising by confessions taken in parish churches, then in friers churches.

The first part of the first conclusion proued.

As touching the first, for the more assuredneslie and certainty, thus he argued vpon the place of Deut. 12. Into that place, which the Lord your God shall assigne of all your tribes, to place his name and dwell therein: thither shall you resort, to offer vp your oblations, tithes, &c. And in the same place God saith; See thou offer not thy sacrifice in euery place that liketh thee: but in that place alone which the Lord hath elect in one of the tribes; and thou shalt do in all things as I command thee.

Luke. 4. 5.

Also vpon the words of Luk. 4. and 5. which be these: Whosoeuer sinneth of ignorance, shall offer to the priest, and he shall pray for him, and he shall be forgiuen, &c. Vpon these places thus he argued: that for as much as the Sacraments of the church are to be frequented and vsed in no other place, but only in that, which by God himselfe peculiarly is assigned and commanded for the same: And seeing that elect place in the law representeth the parish churches: neither can it be proued that the friers church is the place prescribed of God, but only permitted by the bishops of Rome: hee concluded therefore, that parish churches for confessions and burials, were more sure and certaine to the conscience of parishioners, then the exempt places of the friers.

The first part of the first conclusion confirmed by another reason.

By another reason also he confirmed the same, for that the parish church commonly standeth free from the popes interdict, to doe not the churches of the friers. As which stand not so cleare, but that they are vnder suspition and doubt of the popes interdict: By the decretall. De sepulturis in fexto cap. Animarum periculis. In which Decretall, all such conuentu Animarum periculis. all churches and churchyards of friers be interdicted, which do induce any person or persons, either by oath or promisse made, to chuse their burying places in their churches, as commonlie the friers are reported to do. For else what parishioner would forsake his owne church and parish where his auncestors do lie, to be buried among the friers, if the friers did not induce them so to do?

The second part of the first conclusion confirmed.

Moreouer, for the second part, concerning the vtilitie of the place, that he confirmed doublelie. First, for that confession made within the parish church, hath a double merit of obedience, both for obeying the commandement of God in opening his confession: (Thus he speaketh according to the blindnesse of that time, for that auricular confession hath any commandement of God, cannot be proued:) and also in obeying the commandement of God in obserning the place by him appointed, the which second merit of obedience lacketh in the friers part. Secondly, he proued it to be greater vtilitie for a parishioner to confesse him in his parish church, then with the friers: Because commonly the number of chiefest people praying, is ten times more in parish churches. Whereby is to be thought, that each singuler person may better be helped through more prayers, then in the Oratories of the friers, &c.

Another confirmation of the second part of the first article.

Further, as touching the third part of the first conclusion or article he proued, that it had fewer incommodities to resort euerie man to his parish church then to the friers: for that both great vtilitie, and more certaintie (as hath been proued) did insue thereof: which two being taken away, (as muste needs, in resorting to the friers church) then two speciall commodities should be hindered, and so great incommodities thereof should follow. And thus much for the place of the friers.

The third part of the first conclusion proued.

Now to the second conclusion or article, touching the person of the frier, and of the ordinarie curat. If the question be, which of these two is to be preferred in the office of Ecclesiasticall administration: the opinion of Armachanus was, that the ordinarie curat was better then the extraordinarie frier, and that for the three foreslaid respects, to wit: for certaintie or assurance, for vtilitie, and for incommoditie to be auoided.

The second conclusion or article.

Three reasons as causes to be proued.

First, that it is more safe and sure for the parishioners to resort to their ordinarie or parish priest, hee argued by three reasons: first because the person of the lawfull ordinarie or priests is expressely of God commanded, where the person of the frier is not, and therefore is forbid. Secondly, because the parishioner may more trust to his ordinarie curat, as luke is more bound and obliged to prouide and to be carefull for him, then any other extraordinarie person. Thirdly, because in the person of the ordinarie curat, commonly there is no doubt of any interdict to bind him: whereas contrarie in the friers behalfe, there is good matter to doubt, whether he stand bound vnder the popes censure of excommunication or not, and that for diuers causes, as by the cap. Religiosi, in Clementinis de sepulturis. Where is decreed, That all such religious men, which hauing no benefices or cure of soules, presume to impropriat vnto them glebe land or other tithes due vnto churches, and not appertaining to them (by any manner of colour or fraudulent circumuention) do incurre the sentence of excommunication, ipso facto. Also by another cap. Religiosi, De priuilegijs, in Clement. Where it is said, that all such religious men are excommunicated De facto, whosoeuer do absolue any, against whom the sentence of excommunication hath been denounced by statute prouincial, or synodall: as it is commonly said, that the friers hearing mens confessions are accustomed to do, in losing them whom the censure of prelats or their officials haue bound. Whereof the said Armachanus bringeth forth example of his owne diocesse: For I (said he) in mine owne diocesse of Armachan, haue as good as two thousand vnder me, who by the censure of excommunication cuerie yeare, denounced against wilfull murtherers, common theeues, burners of mens houses, and such like malefactours, stand accursed: Of all which number notwithstanding, scarcely fourteene there be, which come to me or to any about me for their absolution. And yet all they receiue the Sacraments as other do, and all because they be absolued, or because they faine themselues to be absolued by none other then by friers: who in so doing, are proued to be vnder the danger of excommunication, both the friers, and also the parishioners, if they knowing thereof do consent to their errour.

Cap. Religiosi. De sepult. Clementi.

Also out of the said Clementines, by three other places in one chapter, hee proued the friers to bee excommunicat, to wit in the chapter Cupientes, De penis in Clement. In the which chapter: First, all such religious men are excommunicat, which in their Sermons presume to withdraw their hearers from their tithes paying, due vnto churches. Secondly, in the said chapter all such friers are suspended from preaching, and so are excommunicat, which within a certaine time did not make a concion to such as come to their confessions, in paying their tithes truely and duely to the church. Thirdlie, in the foresaid chapter also, all such religious persons be bound in excommunication, which induce men by any manner of meanes, either by bond, oath, or promise, to chuse their burials within their churches, or not to change the same, if they haue made anie such promise before. In all which three points, hee proued the friers to be culpable and excommunicate.

Cap. Cupientes de penali. Clementi.

The harmes that come to the world by the friers, declared.

The friers prohibited to be excommunicated by the popes law.

Moreouer, for the more sure way for the parishioners to resort to their appointed curats, then to the friers, hee argued thus: For that the poorely priestly curat being better acquainted with his owne parishioner then is a stranger, can better iudge of the nature and disposition of his disease, and minister to him due physicke of penance for the same, and also will bee more carefull in curing him.

Another reason that the parishioners may more safely goto his curat, then to the friers.

Example of the friers theft in Oxford.

Thus the first part of the second conclusion or article being proued and argued, Armachanus procedeth further to proue the second part: that it is better for the parishioners to leaue the friers, and to resort to their owne pastors. Which he proued by eight or nine reasons.

The second part of the second conclusion proued.

Friers hinderers of Vniuersities.

First, for that the ordinarie pastor, is properly appointed of God vnto that ministerie: whereas the frier is but only permitted of man thereunto.

Secondly, for that in resorting to the ordinarie of the parish, is a double reward of merit, whereas in comming to the friers there is but one.

Thirdly, because the ordinarie is more bound to his owne flocke, and is to be thought to be more tender and carefull ouer them, then a stranger.

Fourthly, because to resort to the person of his owne ordinarie, there is more assurance and certaintie (as is aboue declared) then to another.

30. thousand students in Oxforde in the time of Armachanus.

Fiftly, because (as Innocentius, cap. Si animarum, saith) the comming to the curat or pastor ordinarie, is more easie and light, both in the night and in necessitie.

Innocent cap. Si animarum.

The friers a great cause of decay of learning.

Sixtly, for so much as the parishioner must needs come to his curat at sometime, and especially being in necessitie; it is expedient and profitable, that his former life before were knowne to him, rather then to the other.

Seuenthly, for that (as the said Innocentius affirmeth) it striketh more shame of his sinne to the parishioner to be confessed to his curat whom he seeth euery day, then to a frier vnknowne.

Bookes not to be gotten but by the friers.

Eighthly, because it is more profitable, especially for them that liue in matrimonie, that he which heareth the confession of the one, should heare also the confession of the other. So that one hearing the confession of them both as a spirituall physitian taking of two cures in one bodie, may better know what spirituall counsell is to be ministred to the one, after he hath cured the other, &c.

Example what lacke of bookes commeth by the friers.

The friers guiltie in 3. faults. 1. Disobedience. 2. Auarice. 3. Pride.

These things thus proued before, then Armachanus consequently procedeth to the third part: Arguing, how that greater detriments and inconueniences doe ensue by confessions, burials and other Ecclesiasticall functions exercised by the friers, then by pastors and secular curats, seruing in parishes. About the which matter, the said Armachanus learnedly and worthily inferreth a long discourse, proouing and inferring how pernicious these orders of friers are to the whole state of the church: And what mischiefe commeth by the priuiledges of certaine popes, which haue priuiledged them to intermeddle in the office and function of ecclesiasticall ministers, to preach and to take almes, and tithes of the people, and impropriations from the church. All which his reasons and arguments to proue the same as he hath left them in writing, it would make a matter of a large booke.

The third part of the second conclusion proued.

Armachanus charged the friers with disobedience.

Notwithstanding, because it shall not be vnfruitfull both for the time present and the posteritie, to know the manifold detriments and discommodities receiued by these friers, and to know what great benefit God hath done for vs in vnburdening the church of this wretched generation: And especially because the booke of Armachanus is rare otherwise to bee found, intituled, Defensorium Curatorum: I haue briefly therefore contracted out of the same, certaine of his reasons, such as seemed most appertaining and most worthie of noting.

Defensorium Curatorum. Armachani.

And first, alleaging the authoritie of Innocent the fourth, he importeth foure inconueniences rising by the friers, which be these: Contempt of the people against their ordinaries, decreasing of deuotion, taking away of thinns from the people by confessing to the friers, retaining of oblations, such as the people are wont to giue at their confession and burials, and which by right belong to the parish churches.

Item, by the said priuiledges of the popes, granted to the friers, many other great enormities do rise. As first, because thereby, the true shepheards doe not know the faces of their flocke.

Cap. Dudum.

Item, by the occasion of these priuiledges giuen to the friers, great contention, and sometimes blouses rise betweene the friers and secular curats, about tithes, impropriations, and other annales.

Item, by the occasion of the foresaid priuiledges, diuers young men as well in Vniuersities as in their fathers houses, are allured craftily by the friers their confessors, to enter their orders: from thence afterward, they cannot get out though they would, to the great griefe of their parents, and no lesse repentance to the young men themselues. The example whereof, Armachanus in the said his trentise inferreth, of a certaine substantiall English man being with him at his Inne in Rome: who hauing a sonne at the Vniuersitie of Oxford, which was enticed by the friers to enter into their order, could by no meanes after release him out. But when his father and his mother would come vnto him, they could not bee suffered to speake with him, but vnder the friers cuckoldie. Whereas the scripture commandeth plainely, that who so stealeth a-ny man and selleth him (being thereof conuicted) shall bee put to death: Exod. 21. And for the same cause, the father was compelled to come vp to Rome to seeke remedie for his sonne. And thus, saith Armachanus, it may appeare what damage and detriments come by these friers vnto the common people.

Another proofe that the friers hinder the vniuersities.

And no lesse inconuenience and danger also by the said friers, risech to the clergie: for so much, as lay men seeing their children vnto to bee stollen from them in the Vniuersities by the friers, do refuse therefore to send them to their studies; rather willing to keepe them at home to their occupation, or to follow the plough, then so to bee circumuented and defeated of their sonnes at the Vniuersitie, as by daily experience (saith he) doth manifestlie appeare. For whereas in my time (saith Armachanus) there were in the Vniuersitie of Oxford 30000. Students: now are there not to be found 6000. The occasion of which so great decay, is to be ascribed none other cause, but to this circumuention onelie of the friers aboue mentioned.

Another proofe.

Moer and besides this, another inconuenience as great or greater, the said Armachanus inferred to procede by the friers though the decay of doctrine, and knowledge in all manner faculties and liberall sciences, which thus hee declared. For that these begging friers through their priuiledges obtained of the popes, to preach, to heare confessions, and to burie; and through their charters of inspeximus, did grow thereby to such great riches and possessions by their begging, craning, catching and intermeding with church matters, that no booke could come of any science, either of Diuinitie, Law, or Physicke, but they were both able and readie to buy it vp. So that euery conuent hauing a great librarie full stuffed and furnished with all sorts of bookes, and being so many conuents within the realme, and in euery conuent so many friers increasing daily more and more: by reason thereof, it came to passe, that very few bookes or none at all remaine for other students. Which by his owne experience hee thus testifieth, saying: that hee himselfe sent for vnto the Vniuersitie store of his owne priests or chaplains, who sending him word againe that they could neither finde a Bible, nor any other good profitable booke of diuinitie meet for their studie, therefore were minded to returne home to their countrie: and one of them, hee was sure, was returned by this time againe.

Another proofe.

Furthermore, as he hath proued hitherto, the friers to be hurtfull both to the laitie, and to the clergie: so proceeding farther, hee proueth them to bee hurtfull also to themselues. And that in three points, as incurring the vice of disobedience against God, against their owne rule: the vice of auarice: and the vice of pride. The probation of all which points he prosecuted in a long discourse.

Another proofe.

First (saith he) they are disobedient to the law of God: Thou shalt not couet thy neighbours house, ore, nor asse, nor any thing that is his: In so they procure the popes letters to preach in churches, and to take burials from churches. Which licence annexed withall to receiue the annales which rise of the same, which properly belongeth to the right of parish priests.

Item, they are disobedient to this rule of the gospell: So do to other, as thou wouldest haue done to thee.

Friers disobedient to the law of scripture.

Item, they be disobedient against their owne rule, which being founded vpon strait pouertie and beggerie, this licence obtained for them to require necessaries for their labors of the people, is repugning against the same foundation.

Item, they be disobedient to the rule of the scripture, which saith: Let no man take honor vnto him, except hee bee called, as Aaron: Also saith S. Paul, how shall they preach, vnlesse they be sent? And how obserue they this rule of obedience, who professing to keepe the perfection of the Gospell, yet contrarie to the Gospell, procure to themselues priuiledges to run before they be sent?

Item, to their owne rule they are disobedient: For where their chapter saith, that if any will take vpon them this order, and will come to our brethren; let our brethren first find them to the prouincials to bee examined of the catholicke faith and sacraments of the church, &c. Contrarie whereunto the friers haue procured a priuiledge, that not onelie the prouincials, but other inferiors also may take vnto them indifferentlie, whom they can catch: so farre without all examination, that almost at this day there is no notable house of friers, wherein is not either a whole, or halfe a count of lads and boyes vnder tenne yeare old, being circumuented, which neither can skill of the creed nor Sacraments.

Friers disobedient to their own profession.

Againe, the rule of Francisse saith, that his brethren Ministers or seruants must obserue not to preach in the Dioces of any bishop, without the consent of the bishop. And moreouer, the said Francisse in his testament saith: that if he had as much wisdome as Salomon, and found poore secular priests in the parishes where they dwell: yet he would not presume to preach without their will, and also would feare, loue, and honor them, and all other as his maisters, and so they be. Hactille. Against which rule, how the friers do disobay, how little they reuerence bishops or secular priests; what priuiledges, exemptions, and immunities they procure against them, the world may see and iudge.

Item, when none may be admitted to preach, or to heare confessions, vnlesse they be entred into orders, and seeing by the common law of the church, none must bee admitted into holy orders, except hee haue sufficient title of liuing and cloathing: the friers therefore hauing no such title (being wilfull beggers) doe disobay in both respects, that is, both in entring into such orders without conuenient title, and in exercising the office of preaching without such lawfull orders.

Moreouer, the foresaid Francisse in his testament commandeth thus: I command (saith he) firmely by vertue of obedience, to all and singuler my brethren wheresoeuer they be: that none of them presume to obtain in the court of Rome any letter or writing, either by himself or by any other means, neither for the church nor for any other place, nor vnder any colour of preaching, nor yet for the persecuting of their owne bodies, &c. Against which testament of Francisse, the Franciscanes in procuring their priuiledges from the bishop of Rome, haue incurred manifest disobedience, as all the world may see. Neither will this obiection serue them, because the pope hath dispensed with Francisse rule. For if the ordinance of Francisse, as he saith, came from God, (and so should God haue three testaments) how then can the pope repeale his precept, or dispence with his rule, when by the rule of the law, Par in parem non habet imperium?

Armachanus charged the friers with auarice.

Secondly, concerning the vice of auarice, manifestly it may be proued vpon them (saith Armachanus:) for els seeing so many charges belong to the office of a secular parish priest, as to minister the sacrament at Easter, to visite the sicke with extreme vnction, to baptise children, to wed, with such other, when in Lambeth as great deuotion: how then happeneth that these friers making no labor for these, onely procure to themselues priuiledges to preach in churches, to heare confessions, and to receiue licence to burie from parish churches, but because theres is lucre and gaine in these to be looked for, in the other is none?

Another proofe.

Which also may appeare by this: for other wise if it were for mere deuotion onely, that they procure licence to burie from parish churches, and to preach: why then haue they procured withall licence to take offerings, oblations and legacies for their funerals? And for their preaching, why haue they annexed also licence to require and take of the people necessaries for their labour, but only auarice is the cause thereof?

Another proofe.

Likewise for hearing of confessions, when all good men haue enough to know their owne faults, and nothing lift to heare the faults of other: it is probable to bee supposed by this their priuiledge of hearing all mens confessions, that they would neuer haue bin so desirous of procuring that priuiledge, were it not that these friers did seeke some auricelle, and gaine to hang vpon the same.

Another proofe.

Item, where the rule of frier Francisse forbiddeth them to companie with any women, to enter into Nunneries, to bee godfathers and gossips to men and women: how commeth it, that they contrarie to their rule, enter into the secret chambers of quenes and other women, and made to know the most secret counsels of their doings, but that auarice and commodite communibly haue so blinded their eies, and smered their hearts.

Armachanus charged with a friers envy vnde.

Thirdly, that the friers fall into the vice of pride and ambition, the said Armachanus prouued thus:

Ex libro Armachani cui titulus, Defensorium Curatorum.

Ego sicke or to pearce any high place in the church, is a point of pride and ambition. Chrysost. in opere perfecto: Nunquam sine ambitione desideratur primatus in Ecclesia.

The friers sicke and procure a high place in the church.

Ergo, the friers are proud and ambitious.

The minor he proueth: To haue the state of preaching and hearing confessions, is in the church a state of honor.

The friers sicke and haue procured the state of preaching and hearing confessions.

Ergo, The friers sicke and procure an high place in the church, &c.

The 3. conclusion by Armach.

Aristot. Ethic. lib. 2.

His third conclusion was, that the Lord Christ in his humane conuersation was alwaies poore, nor so that hee loued or desired pouertie for it selfe, &c. Wherein in this is to be noted, that Armachanus differed not from the friers in this that Christ was poore, and that hee loued pouertie: but herein stood the difference, in maner of louing, that is, whether he loued pouertie for it selfe, or not. Wherein the foresaid Armachanus vsed foure probations.

First, forsomuch as to bee poore, is nothing else but to bee miserable: and seeing no man coueteth to bee in miserie for it selfe: therefore he concluded, that Christ desired not pouertie for it selfe.

His secondreason was deriued out of Aristotle. Nothing (saith he) is to be loued for it selfe, but that from which (all commodities being seuered which follow thereupon) is voluntarilie sought and desired. But take from pouertie all respect of commodities following the same, it would bee sought neither of God nor man. Ergo, he concluded, Christ loued not pouertie for it selfe.

Thirdlie against: No effect of fame, said he, is to be loued for it selfe. But pouertie is the effect of fame. Ergo, pouertie was not loued of Christ for it selfe.

Fourthly, Item, no priuation of the thing that is good, is to be loued for it selfe. Pouertie is the priuation of the thing that is good, that is, of riches (for God himselfe is principalie rich:) Ergo, pouertie for it selfe was not loued of Christ.

The 4. conclusion of Armachanus against the friers.

The fourth conclusion was, that Christ our Lord and Sauiour did neuer beg wilfullie. Which he prooued by sundrie reasons.

1 First, for that Christ in so doing should breake the law, which saith: Thou shalt not couet thy neighbors house, his wife, his seruant, his mayd, his oxe, his asse, or any thing that is his: Exod. xx. Into the danger of which commandement, hee that beggeth voluntarily must needes incurre.

2 Item, if Christ had begged voluntarie he should haue committed against another commandement, which saith: There shall be no begger, no needie person among you, &c. Deut. 6.

3 Item, Christ in so doing should haue transgressed the emperours law, vnder which he would himselfe be subiect (as appeareth by giuing, and bidding tribute to bee giuen to Cesar) forasmuch as the same emperours law saith: There shall no valiant begger be suffered in the citie.

4 Item, if Christ had been a wilfull begger, hee had broke the law of louing his neighbour: whom he had vered, hauing no need. For whose without need asketh ouermuch of his neighbour, both put vere him, in such sort as he would not be vered himselfe. Which Christ would neuer doe.

5 Item, if Christ had begged wilfullie, hee had moued slander thereby to his owne gospell, which hee with miracles did confirme. For then they that said his miracle is in feeding 5000. in the wilderne, &c. Would haue thought much with themselues how that miracle had bin wrought, if he in feeding other, either could not, or would not feed himselfe.

6 Item, if Christ had begged wilfullie, then he had done that which himselfe condemneth by Paul: for so we read, 1. Tim. 6. That Paul condemneth them, which esteeme pietie to be gain and lucre. Which all they doe that vnder the colour of pietie, hunt or seke for gaine, when otherwise they need not.

7 Item, if Christ had begged wilfullie, he had offended in declaring an vntruth, in so doing. For he that knoweth in his mind, that he needeth not indeed that thing which in word he asketh of other, declareth in himselfe an vntruth, as who in word pretendeth to bee otherwise then he is in very deede; which Christ without doubt neuer did, nor would euer doe.

8 Item, if Christ had begged wilfullie, that is, hauing no true need thereunto: then had he appeared either to bee an hypocrite, seeming to bee that he was not, and to lacke when he did not: or else to be a true begger in very deed, not able to suffice his necessitie. For he is a true begger indeede, which being constrained by mere necessitie, is forced to aske of other, that which hee is not able to giue to himselfe. But neither these two agreeth in Christ.

9 Item, if Christ had begged wilfullie, then why did Peter rebuke the mother of S. Clement his disciple, finding her to stand among the beggers, whom hee thought to bee strong enough to labour with her handes for her liuing: if she in so doing had followed the example of Christ?

Matt. 5. Gala. 1.

10 Item, if Christ had begged wilfullie: And if the friers do rightlie define perfection of the Gospell by wilfull pouertie: then was Clement S. Peters successor to blame, which laboured so much to remoue away beggerie and pouertie from among all them, that were conuerted to the faith of Christ: and is specially for the same commended of the church.

Clements contrary vnto the friers.

11 Againe, why did the said Clement, writing to James bishop of Jerusalem, command so much to obay the doctrine and examples of the Apostles: who as hee theweth in that epistle, had no begger nor needie person amongst them, if christian perfection (by the friers philosophie) standeth in wilfull beggerie?

Act. 4. & 5. cap. 2.

12 Item, if Christ the high Priest had begged wilfullie, then did the holie church erre withinglie, which ordained that none without sufficient title of liuing and clothing, should bee admitted to holie orders. And moreouer, when it is said in the canonicall decrees, that the bishop or clerke that beggeth, bringeth shame vpon the whole order of the clergie.

13 Item, if Christ had wilfullie begged, then the examples of wilfull pouertie had pertained to the perfection of christian life, which is contrarie to the old law: which commaunded the priests (which liued then after the perfection of the law) to haue possessions and tithes, to keepe them from beggerie.

14 Item, if Christ did wilfullie begge, then beggery were a point of christian perfection. And so the church of God should erre, in admitting such patrimonies and donations giuen to the church, and so in taking from the prelats their perfection.

15 Again, that will these friers which put their perfection in begging, say to Sprlchildech; who without begging or wilfull pouertie, was the high Priest of God, and king of Salem, and prefigured the order and Priesthood of Christ?

16 And if beggerie be such a perfection of the Gospell (as the friers say) how commeth it, that the holy Ghost giuen to the Apostles, which should lead them into all truth, told them no word of this beggerly perfection, neither is there any word mentioned therof throughout the whole Testament of God?

17 Moreouer, where the prophet saith, I neuer did see the iust man forsaken, nor his seede goe begging their bread: how standeth this with the suffice of Christ, which was most perfectly iust, if he should be forsaken, or his seede goe begge their bread? And then how agreeth this with the abominable doctrine of friers Franciscan, which put their perfection in wilfull begging?

18 Finallie, doe we not read that Christ sent his disciples to preach without scrip or wallet, and bid them salute no man by the way? Meaning that they should begge nothing of no man? Did not the same Christ also labour with his handes, vnder Joseph? S. Paul likewise, did he not labour with his handes, rather then hee would burden the Church of the Corinthians? And where now is the doctrine of the friers, which putteth state of perfection in wilfull begging?

The 5. conclusion of Armachanus against the friers.

The fift conclusion of Armachanus against the friers was this: that Christ neuer taught any man wilfully to beg, which he prooued thus: It is written, Acts 1. Christ began to doe and to teach. If Christ therefore, which did neuer wilfullie begge himselfe, as hath been prooued, had taught men otherwise to doe; then his doing and teaching had not agreed together.

Item, if Christ which neuer begged himselfe wilfullie, had taught men this doctrine of wilfull begging contrarie to his owne doing; he had giuen suspition of his doctrine, and minished slander of the same, as hath been prooued in the fourth conclusion before.

Moreouer, in so teaching, he had taught contrarie to the emperours iust law, which expresly forbiddeth the same.

The 6. conclusion of Armachanus against the friers.

The sixth conclusion of Armachanus against the Friers was, that our Lord Jesus Christ teacheth vs, that we should not begge wilfullie, which hee prooueth by seuen or eight reasons.

First, where it is written, Luk. 14. When thou makest a feast call the poore, weake, lame, and blind; and thou shalt be blessed: for they haue not wherewith to reward thee againe.

To this also pertaineth the decree of the apostle, 2. Thes. 3. He that will not worke, let him not eate. Furthermore, the same Apostle addeth in the same place: For you haue vs for ensample, how we were burdenous to no man, neither did we eate our bread freele, but with labour and wearinesse, toiling both day and night, and all because we would not burthen you, &c.

Item, where wee reade in the scripture, the slothfull man reprehended, Prou. 6. Why sleepest thou O sluggard? thy pouertie and beggery is comming vpon thee like an armed man, &c. And againe in the same booke of Prouerbs: The slothfull man saith the scripture for cold would not go to the plough, therefore he shall begge in summer, and no man shall giue him, &c. Also in the said booke of Prouerbs, last chapter; the diligent labouring woman is commended, whose fingers are exercised about the rocke and spindle. And all these places make against the wilfull begging of sturdie friers.

5 Item, frier Francille their owne founder in his owne testament testament saith: And I haue laboured with mine owne handes, and will labour, and will that all my brethren shall labor and liue of their labour, whereby they may support themselues in an honest meane. And they that cannot worke, let them learne to worke, not for any couetousnesse to receiue for their labour, but for example of good works, and to auoid idlenesse. And when the price of their labour is not giuen them, let them resort to the Lords table, and aske their alms from doore to doore, &c. Thus much in his testament. And in his rule hee saith: Such brethren to whom the Lord hath giuen the gift to labour, let them labour faithfullie and deuoutlie, &c. Wherefore it is to be maruelled, how those friers with their wilfull begging, dare transgresse the rule and obedience of frier Francis their great grandfathers testament.

8. Item, if Christ at any time did begge or did lacke, it was more because hee would vse a miracle in his owne person, then because he would beggo wilfullie: as when hee sent Peter to the sea to find a groat in the fishes mouth. Which thing pet he thought rather to doe, then to beg the groat of the people, which he might some haue obtained.

7. Item, by diuers other his examples, hee seemeth to teach the same, as where he saith: The workman is worthie of his hire. Also, the workeman is worthie of his meate, Matth. 10. Luke 10. And when he spake to Zache, that hee would turne into his house. And so likewise in Bethanie and all other places he euer vsed rather to burden his friends then to beg of another, vnacquainted.

8. Item, with plaine precept thus hee sendeth forth his disciples, willing them not to go from house to house, Luke 10. So as friers vse now to goe. Many other Scriptures there be, which reproue begging: as where it is said: The fote of a fole is swift to the house of his neighbour, Eccle. 29. And in another place: My child (saith hee) see thou want not in the time of thy life; for better it is to die then to lacke: Eccles. 21.

9. Item, where Christ counselling the young man, bad him go and sell that he had and giue to the poore and follow him if hee would bee perfect: doth not there call him to wilfull begging, but called him to follow him, which did not beg wilfullie.

The seuenth conclusion of Armachanus against the friers.

The seuenth conclusion of Armachanus is: that no wise nor true holy man can take vpon him wilfull pouertie to bee obserued alwaies: which he prooueth by foure reasons.

First, that wilfull beggerie was reproued both by the doctrine of Christ and of the Apostles, as in the conclusion before hath been declared.

2. Item, a man in taking vpon him wilfull beggerie, in so doing should lead himselfe into temptation, which were against the Lords prayer. Forasmuch as Salomon, 30 Prouerb. 30. saith: O Lord, beggerie and great riches giue me not, but onely sufficiencie to liue vpon: lest if I haue too much, I bee driuen to denie thee, and say: who is the Lord. Again, if I haue too little, I be forced thereby to steale, and periure the name of my God. Wherefore saith Eccles. 27. For need many haue offended. And therefore they that chuse wilfull pouertie, take to them great occasion of temptation.

Wilfull beggerie not to be prooued.

3. Item, they that take wilfull pouertie vpon them when they need not, induce themselues voluntarily to breake the commandement of God: Thou shalt not couet thy neighbours house, &c. Againe, where it is commanded, there shall be no begger among you, &c.

4. Item, hee that taketh vpon him needlesse and wilfullie to beg, maketh himselfe vnapt to receiue holy orders, hauing (as is said) no sufficient title thereunto, according to the lawes of the church.

The eight conclusion of Armachanus against the friers.

The eight conclusion of this matter is: That it is not agreeing to the rule of the friers obserued, to obserue wilfull beggerie. Which saith he) may bee prooued; for that frier Francis, both in his rule, and in his Testament, being left to his Franciscans, both plainely preferre labour before begging.

Touching this booke of the masters of Paris condemned, loke pag. 360.

The ninth conclusion of Armachanus. Touching this booke of the masters of Paris condemned.

The last conclusion of this matter is: That the bull of pope Alexander the 4. which condemneth the booke of the masters of Paris, impugneth none of these conclusions premised. For the proofe thereof, he thus inferred.

Ex Clement.

Gaul. gest. anno.

Pope Nicolas the fifth reuiueth by the bull of pope Alexander the fourth.

1. First, that pope John the 24. in his constitution, beginning thus, Quia quorundam, affirmeth expresly, how pope Nicolas the 3. renoked and called backe the said bull of pope Alexander the 4. and all other writings of his: touching all such articles, which in the same foresaid constitution of this pope John hee contained and declared. Wherein also he declared, how strait the pouertie of the friers ought to bee, which they call wilfull pouertie.

2. Item, it is manifest and notorious to all men, how the said pope Nicolas the 3. in his declaration theweth, how the Friers both ought to labour with their handes; and how moreouer the said friers ought not to preach within the diocese of any bishop, where ouer they be resided. Which being so, the conclusion appeareth, that the bull of pope Alexander the fourth, as touching these articles, is void and of none effect. Besides the which articles, there is nothing else in the said bull of Alexander (that I remember) which impugneth any of these conclusions premised.

Many things (said he) I had beside these, both to obiect and to answere against to the same: and to confirme more

The end and conclusion of this oration of Armachanus before the pope. Ex defensorio curatorum.

Notes to be obserued in this former Oration of Armachanus.

Notes to be obserued.

BY this Oration of Armachanus the learned prelate, thus made before pope Innocent and his cardinals, diuers and sundry things there be for the vilitie of the Church worthy to be obserued. First, what troubles and vexations came to the church of Christ by these friers. Also what persecution followeth after by the meanes of them, against so many learned men and true seruants of Christ. Furthermore, what repugnance and contrarietie was among the popes, and how they could not agree among themselues about the friers. Fourthlie, what pestiferous doctrine, subuerting wlneere the testament of Iesus Christ. Fiftly, what decay of ministers in Christs church, as appareth, pag. 379. Sixtly, what robbing and circumuenting of mens children, as appareth, pag. 379. Seuenthly, what decay of Vniuersities, as appeareth by Oxford, pag. 379. Eighlie, what damage to learning and lacke of bookes to students came by these friers, as appeareth, pag. 379. Ninthly, to what pride vnder colour of fained humilitie; to what riches, vnder diffamed pouertie they grew vnto, here is to be seene. In so much that at length through their subtile and most dangerous hypocrisie they crept vp to be lords, archbishops, cardinals, and at last also Chancellors of realms, yea and of most secret counsell with kings and quecnes, as appeareth, pag. 379.

Contrarietie among the popes.

All these things well considered, now remaineth in the church to be marked: that forsomuch as these friers (with their new found testament of frier Francis) not being contented with the testament of God in his sonne Christ, began to spring the same time, when as Satan was prophesied to be let loose, by the order of the scriptures, whether therfore it is to be doubted, that these friers make vp the bodie of antichrist, which is prophesied to come in the church, or not: so much more to be doubted, because who so list to trie shall find, that of al other enemies of Christ, of whom some be maniseft, some be priuie, all bee together cruell: yet is there no such sort of enemies which more sleighly deceiueth the simple christian, or more deepely drowneth him in damnation, then doth this doctrine of the friers.

Whether the friers make vp the bodie of Antichrist or not.

The death of godly Armachanus.

But of this oration of Armachanus enough. Which (as appeareth) in what successe it had with the pope, by stop it is not certaine. By his workes declared, it appeareth, that the lord so wrought, that his enemies did not triumph ouer him. Notwithstanding, this by stop appeareth, that hee was seuen or eight yeres in banishment for the same matter, and there died in the same at Auinion; of whom a certaine cardinall, hearing of his death, openly protested, that the same day, a mightie pillar of Christs church was fallen.

The 5. conclusion of Armachanus against the friers.

After the death of Armachanus, the friers had contention likewise with the monks of Wenedias order about the same yere, 1360. and so remoued their cause both against the monks and against the Vniuersitie of Oxford, vnto the court of Rome; wherein, saith the author, they lacked another Richard. Ex Botonero. By this appeareth to be true, which is testified in the first tome of Wald. that long debate continued betweene the friers and the Vniuersitie of Oxford: Against whom first stood Robert Grosted bishop of Lincolne, aboue mentioned: Then Scuallus of Bosse: Afterward Ioannes Bachothorpe; and now this Armachanus, of whom here presently we intreate. And after him against John Wicklife, of whom (Christ willing) we will speake hereafter: Ex Waldens. Against this foresaid Armachanus wrote diuers friers, Roger Conway a Franciscan, John Heydlethame Carmelite, Galfridus Hardy frier Augustine. Also frier Engelbert a Dominican, in a booke intituled, Defensorium priuilegiorum, and diuers other. Credible heare of certaine old Irish Bibles translated long since into the Irish tongue; which if it be true, it is not other like but to bee the doing of this Armachanus. And thus much of this learned prelate and archbishop of Ireland, a man worthie for his christian zeale of immortall commendation.

After the death of this Innocent, next was poped in the sea of Rome, pope Vrbane the fifth, who by the fathers side was an Englishman. This Vrbane had been a long waiter in the court of Rome: and when he saw no promotion would light vpon him, complaining to a certain friend of his he made to him his mone, saying: That hee thought verily, if all the churches of the world should fall, yet none would fall in his mouth. The which friend after seeing him to be pope, and promised in his threefold crowne, commeth to him, and putting him in remembrance of his words to him before, saith: that where his holinesse had moned his fortune to him, that if all all the churches in the world would fall, none would fall vpon his head: Saith (saith he) God hath otherwise so disposed, that all the churches in the world are fallen vpon your head, &c.

This pope maintained and kindled great warres in Italy, sending Gabius his cardinall and legat, and after him Arbinus a Burgundian his legat and abbat with great puissance and much monie against sundrie cities in Italie: By whose meanes, the townes and cities which before had taken from the bishop of Rome were oppressed; also Bernabes and Galeatcus princes of Millaine banqueted. By whose example the people other bring to searth, submitted themselues to the church of Rome. And thus came vp that wicked church to her great possessions, which her patrons would needs father vpon Constantine the godly emperour.

Ex Tabel. Anno. 9. Ed. 3.

Shewes the church of Rome came by their great possessions.

In the time of this pope Vrbane the fifth, and in the second yere of his raigne, about the beginning of the yere of our Lord, 1364. I find a certaine sermon of one Nicolas Dorem, made before the pope and his cardinals on Thursdaie euen. In the which sermon, the learned man both worthilie rebuke the prelats and priests of his time, declaring their destruction not to bee farre off, by certaine signes taken of their wicked and corrupt life. All the sayings of the prophets spoken against the vices of the Iewes, he both aptly applie against the clergie of his time, comparing the church then present to the spirituall strumpet spoken of in the 16. of the prophet Ezechiel. And pronuncth in conclusion the clergie of the church then, to be so much worse then the old synagogue of the Iewes, by how much it is worse to sell the church and sacraments, then to suffer dones to be sold in the church. Saith also lesse iudgement also and learning he answereth to the old and false obiections of the papists: who albeit they be neuer so wicked, yet thinke themselues to be the church which the Lord cannot forsake. All which things to the intent they may the better appeare in his owne words, I haue thought good here to translate and exhibite the sermon as it was spoken before the pope.

Nicolaus Orem.

A copie of a sermon made before pope Vrbane, 5. the fourth Sunday in Aduent, 1364.
by Nicolas Orem.

A Sermon made before the pope. Esay 56. The world diuided into three sorts of men before the incarnation of Christ.

Iuxta est salus mea, vt veniat, & iustitia, &c. That is: My saluing health is neere at hand to come, and my righteousnes to be reuealed, &c. Esa. 56. After the sentence of S. Paul, Rom. 2. and in diuers other places, before the natiuitie of Christ, the whole world was diuided into two sorts of men, the Iewes and Gentiles. The Iewes, who waited for the opening of the doore of paradise, by the bloud of the Sauiour to come. The Gentiles, who yet sitting in darkenes were to be called to light, and to be iustified by faith, as is written, Rom. 5.

This saluation pertaining both to the Iew and Gentile, God promised before time to the fathers by the Prophets, to stir vp the desire thereof in their hearts the more: and to increase their firme hope and faith in the same. As first in Mich 6. the voice of the Lord crieth: Health and saluation shall be to all men which feare my name. And Esay 46. I will geue in Sion saluation, and in Ierusalem my glorie, &c. with diuers such other places like. And forsomuch as hope many times which is deferred, doth afflict the soule, and conceiueth wearinesse of long deferring: he therefore prophesying of the neerenes of the comming therof, saith moreouer, Esay 14. His time is neere at hand to come. Also Abacuc 2. He will come and will not tarrie: with many such other places moe. So then the holy fathers being in limbo, looked and hoped that he should bring out them that sate bound, and which in the house of prison sate in darkenesse, as is read Esay 42. Then the time drew on in which came the fulnesse of the Gentiles, and in which the Lord would declare the riches of this mystery being hidden from the world, and from generations: Col. 1. Wherefore the Lord in this text doth both certifie our fathers of the comming of our sauiour, and doth comfort them touching the neerenesse thereof, and also teacheth the iustification of the Gentiles by faith approching now neere at hand, according to the words of my text, Iuxta est salus mea, &c. Which words were fulfilled then, what time the Lord did manifest his saluation, and did reueale his righteousnesse in the sight of all Gentils. And is diuided into 3. parts. Of which the first speaketh of the neerenesse of his comming, where is said, Iuxta est salus, &c. The second concerneth the mysterie of the aduent of Christ and his incarnation, where he saith: Vt veniat, &c. Thirdly, is considered the feueritie of God, his terrible reuenging iudgement to be reuealed, where he saith: Vt reueletur, &c. which is to be expounded of his primitiue iustice: whereof speaketh Amos, the fifth, saying: And iudgement shall be reuealed like a floud, and righteousnesse like a strong streame. Wherefore for our contemplation let vs receiue with ioy the solemnities of his holy vigile, the word I say of God the father, that is Christ. To whom it is said, Esay 49. I haue giuen thee to bee a light to the Gentiles, and to bee my saluation, through the ends of the world. Againe, Esay 46. My saluation shall not slacke, &c.

Diuision.

1 Iuxta est.

2 Vt veniat.

3 Vt reueletur. Amos 5.

As touching the neerenes therof, it is in these daies opened to vs by the gospel, where we read in S. Matth. When the virgin Marie was espoused vnto Ioseph, before they did come together, she was found with child by the holy Ghost. By this it was euident to vnderstand, that our Sauiour ought shortly to proceed out of the chaste wombe of the virgine, according as the prophet did foretell, saying: Behold a virgine shall conceiue and bring forth a sonne, &c. For like as the grape when it waxeth great and full, is neere to the making of wine; and the flower whe it shooteth abroad, it hasteth to the fruit: so the saluation of the world in the swelling and growing of the virgins wombe, began to draw nigh to mankind. For then appeared the grace and benignitie of our sauiour, when his mother was found to haue in her wombe by the holy Ghost, as is declared in that as followeth by the Angell, saying: For that which is borne of her, is of the holy Ghost.

The seconde part of this sermon.

Touching the 2. part of that which is said, vt veniat: this may be applied to the contemplation of the mystery of Christ comming in the flesh. Whereof speaketh Aggeus the Prophet 2. He shall come, who is desired and looked for of all nations, &c. Albeit the same also may be applied to the second Aduent, spoken of the third of Esay: The Lord shal come to iudgement, &c. In memorial whereof, the 4. sunday was dedicate, in the old time of the fathers. And of this day of iudgement is written in the prophet Sophon. cap. 1. The day of the Lord is neere, great and mightie, it is approching at hand, & wondrous short, &c. And albeit not in it selfe, yet it may bee expounded in tribulations that goe before, as preambles vnto the same: as Greg saith: The last tribulation is preuented with many and sundrie tribulations going before, although the end of all be not yet.

The first part of his sermon.

Whereforе now comming to the 3. part of my sermon or theame, let vs see of those tribulations that goe before the last comming of Christ, if there be any such tribulation approching nigh at hand, whereof this last part of my theame may bee verified, where is said, vt reueletur, that my righteousnes shall be reuealed, to wit, the righteousnesse primitiue, that righteousnesse may bee brought, and the prophecie of Daniel fulfilled, Dan. 9. Concerning which matter, foure things here come in order to be declared.

1. Tertullian.

First concerning the reuealing of tribulation, according to that part of my theame, Vt reueletur, &c.

2. Vincent.

Secondly, concerning the neernesse of the tribulation comming, according to that part of my theame: Quia iuxta est, &c.

3 Vt veniat.

Thirdly, of the false opinions of some, vpon this part of my theame, Vt veniat, &c.

4. Salus.

Fourthly, what meanes and consultation we ought to take: Vt iuxta est salus.

The first part of the subdiuision.

As for the first, it is so notorious and so common in the scriptures that the church should suffer and abide tribulation, that I need not here to stand in alleaging any thing touching either the causes to be weighed, or the terme to be coniectured therof.

Two rules to be noted.

As concerning the which causes, I will giue 2. rules to be noted before, for the better opening of that to follow. The first rule is, that by the 2. kingdoms of the nation of Hebrues, which were in the old time, to wit, by the kingdome of Israel, whose head was Samaria, is signified in 9 prophets the erroneous synagog: And by the 2. kingdome of Iuda, of whose stocke came Christ, whose head metropolitane was Ierusalem, is signified the true church. And this rule is not mine, but is an authenticke glosse of S. Ierome, and also is the rule of Origene in the last Homilie vpon the old testament, and is approoued by the church.

The kingdome of Iuda signifieth the right church.

The second rule is, that by the broded house and fornication mentioned in the prophets, is signified simony, and abused dispensations, and promotions of persons vnworthie, for lucres sake, or else for any other partiall fauour, which be vnlawfull waies, by all lawes of the world, to come to office and honour. Merx dicitur nunquam a merendo, that is; for gaine or price is deriued of gaining: for the which gaine or price, that is sold which by nature ought not to be sold. Therefore, to giue any thing for respect of gaine or hire, which ought to be giuen freely for vertues sake, is a kind of spirituall corruption, and as a man would say, an whorish thing, whereof the prophet Esay complaineth speaking of Ierusalem, and saying: The citie which once was faithfull and full of iudgement, how is it now become an whorish citie? And in the manes Osee also the prophet, cap. 9. Ierusalem, thou hast fornicated and gone an whoring from thy God. Thou hast loued like an harlot, to get gaine in euery barne of corne. And in many other places of scripture, where fornication cannot be otherwise expounded.

The second rule.

Esay 1.

Osee 9.

These two rules thus premised, now let vs marke the scriptures, and according to the same iudge of the whole state of the church, both that is past, and that is to come: first interating of the causes of tribulation to come: secondlie of the vicinitie or time of the said tribulation to come.

Fiue causes of the church declared.

And first concerning the state of the church, and of causes of tribulation. Thus saith the Lord in the the prophet Ezechiel: 16. cap. speaking to the church vnder the name of Ierusalem: In the day of thy birth I came by thee, and saw thee trodden downe in thine owne bloud, &c. Here he speaketh of the time of the martyrdome of the church. Then it followeth: After this thou wast cleansed from thy bloud, that was growne vp, and waxen great: then washed I thee with water, I purged thy bloud from thee (speaking of ceasing of persecution) I annointed thee with oile, I gaue thee change of raiments, I girded thee thee with white silke, I decked thee with costly apparell, I put rings vpon thy fingers, a chain about thy neck, iuells vpon thy forehead, and earings vpon thine eares. Thus wast thou deckt with siluer and gold, and a beautifull crown set vpon thine head. Marueilous goodly wast thou & beautiful, euen a very queene wast thou: For thou wast excellent in my beautie, which I put vpon thee, saith the Lord God, &c. This prophecy or rather history speaketh of and declareth the prosperitie of the church.

2. The peace of the church.

3. The corruption of the church

And now heare the corruption and transgression of the church, for so it followeth: But thou hast put confidence in thine own beauty, and plaied the harlot, when thou hadst gotten thee a name. Thou hast committed whoredom with all that went by thee, and hast fulfilled their desires: yea thou hast taken thy garments of diuers colours and decked thine altars therewith, whereupon thou mightest fulfill thy whoredome of such a fashion as neuer was done, nor shall be. Which whoredome can in no wise be expounded for carnall, but spirituall whoredome. And therefore, see how liuely hee hath painted out the corruption and falling of the Church.

4. The correction of the church

And therefore followeth now the correction and punishment of the church. It followeth: Behold, I stretch out my hand ouer thee, and will diminish thy store of food, and deliuer thee ouer into the willes of the Philistines, and of such as hate thee: And they shall breake downe thy stues, and destroy thy brodel houses: (that is, the place wherein thou didst exercise this wickednesse) they shall strip thee out of thy clothes: All thy faire beautifull iewels shal they take from thee, and so let thee sit naked and bare, &c.

Ezech. 16.

Here is plainly to be seene what shal happen to the church, and followeth more in the said chapter: Thine eldest sister is Samaria, shee and her daughters vpon thy left hand: But the youngest sister that dwelleth on thy right hand is Sodoma with her daughters, whose sins were these: pride, fulnesse of meate, abundance and idlenesse, neither retched they their hand to the poore. And yet neither Sodoma thy sister with her daughters, hath done so after thy wils as thou and thy daughters: Neither hath Samaria (that is, the Synagogue) done halfe of thy sins, yea thou hast exceeded them in wickednesse. Take therefore and beare thine owne confusion, &c. Againe in the 23. chapter of Ezechiel: After the Prophet had described at large, the wickednes, corruption, and punishment of the Synagogue, turning to the church, he saith: And whē her sister saw this, she raged and was mad with lust, loue of riches, and following voluptuousnesse. Her fornication and whoredome she committed with princes and great lords, clothed with all manner of gorgeous apparell: so that her pappes were bruised, and her breists were maried; and then speaking of her punishment, saith: Then my heart forsooke her, like as my heart was gone from her sister also. And moreouer repeating againe the cause thereof, addeth: Thy wickednesse and thy fornications haue wrought thee all this; &c.

Ezech. 23.

The like we find also in Esay, Ieremy, Ezechiel, and in al the other prophets, who prophesying all together in one meaning, and almost in one maner of words; doe conclude with a full agreement and prophecie to come, that the church shall fall, and then be punished for her great excesses, & to be vtterly spoiled, except she repent of all her abominations. Whereof speaketh Osee in cha. 2. Let her put away her whordome out of her sight, and her adultery from her breits, left I strip her naked and set her euen as she came naked into the world (that is, in her primitiue pouerty:) So if she doe not it, it shall follow of her as in the prophet Nahum, chap. 3. For the multitude of the fornication of the faire & beautiful harlot, which is a mistris of witchcraft, yea and felleth the people through her whoredome, and the nations through her witchcraft. And it followeth vpon the same: Behold, I will vpon thee, saith the Lord of hosts, and wil pul thy clothes ouer thy head, that thy nakednesse shall appeare among the heathen, and thy shame among the kingdomes, &c.

Osee 2.

Nahum 3.

5. The reformation of the church.

Wherefore by these it is to be vnderstood, that vpon this church the primitiue iustice of God is to be reuealed hereafter. And thus much of the first of the foure members aboue foretouched.

Certaine notes and signes, that the reuelation of the church is worth neere.
1. Signe.
2. Thess. 2.

Except there come a defection first: how it is to be vnderstanded.

Now to the second member of my theme, Iuxta est: concerning the neerenes of time. Although it is not for vs to know the moments and articles of time: yet by certaine notes and signes peraduenture it may bee collected and gathered, that which I haue here to say. For the tractation wherof, first I ground my selfe vpon the saying of the apostle Paul, 2. Thes. 2. where he writeth: That vnlesse there come a defection first, &c. By the which defection, Ierome vltima quæst. ad inquisitiones Iannarij, gathereth and expoundeth allegorically, the desolation of the monarchy of Rome: Betweene the which desolation, and the persecution of the church by antichrist, hee putteth no meane space. And now what is the state of that common wealth, if it bee compared to the maiestie of that it hath been, iudge your selues. Another glosse there is that saith, how by that defection is meant; that from the church of Rome shall come a departing of some other Churches.

2. Signe of token.

The second note and marke is this, when the church shall be worse in manners then was the Synagogue: as appeareth by the ordinary glosse vpō the third of Ieremy, where it is written: The back-slider Israel, may seeme iust and righteous in comparison of sinful Iuda. That is, the Synagogue in comparison of the church of God. Wherefore writeth Origen, saying, Think that to be spoken of vs what the Lord saith in Ezech. 16. Thou had exceeded thy sister in thine iniquities. Wherefore now (to compare the one with the other,) First ye know how christ rebuked the Pharisies, who, as Ierome witnesseth, were then the clergie of the Iewes, of conetousnesse, for that they suffered dones to be sold in the temple of God. Secondly, for that they did honour God with their lippes and not with their hart, and because they said, but did not. Thirdly, hee rebuked them, for that they were hypocrites. To the first then, let vs see whether it be worse to sell both church and sacraments, then to suffer dones to bee sold in the temple, or not. The second, whereas the Pharisies were rebuked for honouring God with their lips, and not with their hearts; there be some, which neither honour God with heart, nor yet with lips: And which neither do well, nor yet say well, neither do they preach any word at all, but be dumbe dogs not able to barke, impudent and shamelesse dogs, that neuer haue enough, such pastors as haue no vnderstanding, declining and straying all in their own way, euery one giuen to couetousnes fro the highest to the lowest. And thirdly, as for hypocrisie there be also some, whose intolerable pride and malice is so manifest and notorious, kindled vp like a fire; that no cloake or shadow of hypocrisie can couer it, but are so past all shame, that it may bee well verified of them, which the prophet speaketh: Thou hast gotten thee the face of an harlot, thou wouldest not blush, &c.

3. Note or token.

The third signe and token of tribulation approching neere to the church, may well be taken of the too much vnequall proportion seene this day in the church. Where one is hungrie and starueth, another is drunke. By reason of which so great inequalitie, it cannot bee that the state of the church as it is now, can long indure. For like as in good harmony to make the musicke perfect is required a moderat and proportionat equality of voices, which if it do much exceed it taketh away al the sweet melodie: So according to the sentence of the Philosopher, by too much immoderate inequality or disparity of Citizens, the common wealth falleth to ruine. Contrary, where mediocrity, that is, where a meane inequality with some proportion is kept, that policie standeth firme and more sure to continue. Now among all the politicke regiments of the Gentiles, I thinke none more is to be found in histories, wherein is to bee seene so great and exceeding oddes, then in the policie of priests: Of whom some be so high, that they exceed all princes of the earth, some againe bee so base, that they are vnder all vassals, so that such a policie or common wealth, may well be called Oligarchia.

Oligarchie, is where a few beare all the sway, and all the rest be nothing worth.

This may we plainely see and learne in the bodie of man, to the which Plutarchus (writing to Thracinius) doth semblablie compare the common wealth. In the which bodie, if the sustenance receiued should ral run to one member, so that the member should bee too much exceedingly pampred, and all the other parts too much pined, that body could not long continue: So in the bodie of the wealth ecclesiasticall, if some who be the heads be so enormely ouergrowne in riches and dignitie, that the weaker members of the bodie be scant able to beare them vp, there is a great token of dissolution & ruine shortly. Wherupon commeth well in place the saying of the prophet Esay: Euery head is sicke, euery hart is full of sorrow: of the which heads it is also spoken in the prophet Amos chap. 6. Woe be to the secure and proude which say in Sion, and to such as think themselues so secure vpon the mount of Samaria, taking themselues as heads and rulers our other, &c. And moreouer in the said prophet Esay it followeth: From the top of the head to the sole of the foot there is no whole part in all the bodie, to wit, in the inferiors, because they are not able to liue for puertie: in the superiors, because for their excessiue riches, they are left from doing good. And it followeth in the same place: But al are wounds and botches and stripes. Behold here the danger comming, the wounds of discord and diuision, the botch or sore of rancor and enuie, the swelling stripe of rebellion and mischiefe.

4. Signe.

The 4. signe is the pride of prelats. Some there haue been which fondly haue disputed of the puertie of christ, and haue inueyed against the prelats, because they liue not in puertie of the saints. But this phantasie commeth of the ignorance of moral philosophie and diuinitie, and of the defect of naturall prudence: for that in all nations, and by common lawes, priests haue had and ought to haue wherewith to sustaine themselues more honestly then the vulgar fort, and prelates more honestly then the subiects. But yet hereby is not permitted to them their great horses, their troupes of horsemen, their superfluous pomp of their waiting men and great families, which facsilie can be maintained without pride, neither can be sustained with safe iustice, and many not without fighting and iniuries inconuenient: not much vnlike to that as Iustine the historian writeth of the Carthaginenses: The family (saith hee) of so great emperors was intollerable to such a free citie. In sensiblable wise, this great pride in the church of God (especiallie in these daies) doth inooue not so few to due reuerence, as many to indignation: and yet moe to those things aforesaid, which thinke no lesse but to doe sacrifice to God if they may robbe and spoile certaine fat priests and persons, namelie such as neither haue nobilitie of bloud, and lesse learning

Amos 4. ning to beare themselues vpon, but are liers, seruile and fraudulent, to whom the Lord speaketh by his prophet Amos fourth: Heare you fatted kine of Samaria, yee that doe poore men wrong, and oppresse the needie, the day shall come vpon you, &c.

5. Signe. Sap. 6. The fift signe is the tyrannie of the prelats and presidents, which as it is a violent thing, so it cannot be long lasting. For as Salomon saith, Sap. 16. For it was requisit that (without any excuse) destruction should come vpon those which exercised tyrannie. The property of a tyrant is to seeke the commodite not of his subiects, but only his will and profit. Such were the pastors that fed not the Lords flocke, but fed themselues: of whom and to whom speaketh the prophet Ezech. 34. Woe be vnto these pastors of Israel that fed themselues. Should not the shepheards feede the flockes? With many other threatnings against them in the said chapter. Woe be vnto them which reioyce at the transgressions of such whom it lieth in their power to condemne, neither doe they seeke what he is able to pay; to whom crieth Micheas the prophet, 3. chap. Yee hate the good and loue the euill, yee plucke off mens skinnes and the flesh, from the bones: ye eate the flesh of my people, and flay off their skinne: ye breake their bones, ye chop them in peeces as it were into a cauldron, and as flesh into the pot, &c. And therfore the foresaid Ezechiel pronounceth: Behold I will my selfe vpon the shepheards, and require my sheepe from their hands, and make them cease from feeding my sheepe, yea the shepheards shall feed themselues no more. for I will deliuer my sheepe out of their mouthes, so that they shall not deuour them any more.

The diuers tyrannie of prelats vsed in this realme. Ezech. 34. Micheas 3. Ezech. 34.

6. Signe. Ignorance of holy scripture. Hosea 4. Ier. 4. Ezech. 7. The sixt signe is in promoting of the vnworthy, and of neglecting them that be worthie. This, as Aristotle saith, is a great cause many times of the dissolution of common weales. And oftentimes it so happeneth in the warres of princes, that the contempt and small regarding of the valiant, and the exalting of others that be lesse worthie, ingendreth diuers kinds and kindlings of sedition. For by the reason partly of the same, partly of the other causes aboue recited; we haue read not only in bookes, but haue seene with our eies, diuers flourishing cities well neere subuerted. Whereas good men be not made of, but are vexed with sorrow and griefe by the euill; the contention at length brasteth out vpon the prince, as Hayino recyteth out of Origen. This hath alwaies been the peruerse incredulite of mans hard heart, that not onely in hearing, but also in seeing: yet will they not beleeue that other haue perished, vnlesse they also perish themselues.

Hosea. 7. Signe. Esay 5. The seuenth signe is the tribulation of outward policy and commotions of the people, which in a great part is now happened alreadie. And therefore as saith as Seneca saith: Men doe complaine commonly that euils onely come so fast: It is to be feared lest also the ecclesiasticall policie be afflicted not only outwardlie but also in it selfe. And so to be fulfilled in vs, that in Ieremy is prophesied cap. 4. Murther is cried vpon murther, and the whole land shall perish, and suddenly my tabernacles were destroyed, and my tents very quickly. And Ezec. 7. Wherfore I will bring cruell tyrants from among the heathen, to take their houses in possession, I will make the pompe of the proud to cease, and their sanctuaries shall be taken. One mischiefe and sorrow shall follow another, and one rumor shall come after another, then shall they seeke visions in vaine at their prophets, the law shal be gone from their priests, and wisdome from their elders, &c.

Ier. 4. Ezech. 7. The eight signe is the refusing of correction, neither wil they heare their faults told them, so that it happened to the princes and rulers of the church, as it is written in the prophet Zach. cap. 7. They stopped their eares that they would not heare; yea they made their hearts as an adamant stone, lest they should heare the law and words which the Lord of hosts sent in his holy spirit by the prophets aforetime. Also Esay witnessing after the same sort, cha. 30. saith: For it is an obstinat people, lying children and vnfaithfull children that will not heare the law of the Lord, which say to the prophets, meddle with nothing, and tell vs nothing that is true and right, but speake friendlie words to vs, &c. All this shal be verified when the prelats begin to hate them that tell them truth, and haue knowledge like vnto such of whom Amos speaketh, cap. 5. They beare him euill will that reproueth them openly, and who so telleth them the plaine truth, they abhor him. And therefore saith the Lord to the church of Ierusalem, Osee. Seeing thou hast refused vnderstanding, I haue refused thee also, that thou shalt no more be my priest. And for so much as thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children, and change their honour into shame. And so find it be like priest, like people. &c. And many other sayings there be in the prophets, speaking of the declining and casting downe of the priestly honour.

8. Signe. Refusing of correction to be taken of the elders. Esay 30. Zach. 7. Amos 5. Osee. 4.

Besides these foretold signes and tokens hitherto recited, there bee also diuers others: as the backsliding from righteousnes, the lacke of discreet and learned priests, promoting of children into the church with such other like. But these being already noted and marked, you may easily iudge and vnderstand, whether these times now present of ours be safe and cleare from tribulation to be looked for, and whether the word of the Lord be true according to my theame: Iuxta est iustitia mea vt reueleter, my righteousnesse is neere at hand to be reuealed, &c. And thus much of the second part.

Lacke of learned priests.

Now to the third part or member of my subdiuision, which is concerning the false and perillous opinions of some, vpon this word of my theame ve veniat, &c. Which opinions principally be 4. repugning all against the truth of the canonicall scripture.

The third part or member of the subdiuision.

The first opinion. The first is of such men, who hauing too much confidence in themselues, doe thinke and perswade with themselues, that the prelats bee the Church, which the Lord will alwaies keepe and neuer forsake, as hee hath promised in the persons of the apostles; Mathew 28. saying: And I will be with you to the end of the world, &c. But this is to be vnderstanded of faith, whereof Christ speaketh Luke 21. Haue prayed for thee, that thy faith shall not faile. Whereof wee read Eccle. 40. Faith shall stand for euer. &c. And albeit charitie waxe neuer so cold, yet faith notwithstanding, shal remaine in few, and in all distreiles of the world: of the which distreiles, our Sauiour doth prophecie in many places to come. And lest peraduenture some should thinke themselues to be safe from tribulation because they bee of the church, this opinion the Lord himselfe doth contrarie in Ieremy the 7: Trust not (saith he) in false lying words, saying, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord. And a little after, but you trust in words and lying counsels which deceiue you and do you no good.

The church where it is, and in whom it consisteth. Ecclesi. 40. Jonas chap. 3. Ierem. 26. Ierem. 7.

The second opinion is of them, which deserre time for this they will grant that the church shall abide trouble, but not so shortly: thinking thus with themselues, that these causes and tokens afore recited, haue been before at other times as well in the church. For both by Gregorie & Bernard holy doctors, in time past, the prelats haue been in like sort reprehended, both for their bribings, for their pompe and pride, for the promoting of persons and children vnfit vnto ecclesiasticall functions, and other vices moe, which haue raigned before this in the church of Godmore then now, and yet by God his grace, the church hath prospered and stood. Do ye not see, that if an house haue stood and continued ruinous a long season, it is neuer the more neere the fall thereby, but rather to be trusted the better? Moreouer, many times it commeth so to passe in realmes and kingdomes, that the posterite is punished for the sinnes of the predecessors. Whereof speaketh the booke of Lamentations the 5. chapter: Our fathers haue sinned, and are now gone, and we must beare their wickednesse, &c. Against this cogitation or opinion well doth the Lord answer by the prophet Ezechiel chapter 12. saying: Behold thou sonne of man the house of Israel saith in this maner: Tush, as for the vision that he hath seene, it will be many a day or it come to passe: It is far off yet, the thing that hee prophesieth. Therefore say vnto them, thus saith the Lord God: The words that I haue spoken shall bee deferred no longer, looke what I haue said, shall come to passe, saith the Lord, &c. Wee haue seene in our daies things to happen, which seemed before incredible. And the like hath been seene in other times also: as wee reade written in the booke of Lamentations chapter 4. The kings of the earth nor all the inhabitance of the world would not haue beleeued, that the enemie and aduersarie should haue come in at the gates of the citie, for the sinnes of her priests, and for the wickednesse of her elders that haue shed Innocents bloud within her, &c. by Hierusalem, as is said, is meant the church.

The second opinion. Lam. 5. Ezech. 12. Thren. 4. Esay 5.

The third opinion or error is very perillous and peruerse, of all such as say, veniat, let come that will come: Let vs conforme our selues to this world, and take our time with those Temporisers which say in the booke of wisdome, Sap. 2. Come let vs enioy our goods and pleasures that bee present, and let vs vse the creature as in youth quickly, &c. Such as these be, are in dangerous case, and be greatly preiudiciall to good men in the church: And if the heads and rulers of the church were so vile to haue any such detestable cogitations in them, there were no place in hell too deepe for them. This Church founded by the Apostles in Christ, consecrated with the bloud of so many Martyrs, enlarged and increased with the vertues and merits of so many Saints, and indued so richly with the deuotion of so many secular princes, and so long prospered hitherto: if it now should come into the hands of such persons, it should fall in great danger of ruine, and they for their negligence and wickednes well deserued of God to bee curfed: yea here also in this present world to incurre temporall tribulation and destruction, which they feare more: by the sentence of the Lord saying to them in the booke of the Prouerbs chap. 1. Al my counsels yee haue despised, and set my correction at nought. Therefore shall I also laugh in your destruction, when tribulation and anguish shall fall vpon you.

The third opinion or error. Sap. 2. Esay 30. Iosua 7. 1. Kings 25. Prou. cap. 1.

Fourthly, an other opinion or errour is of such as being vnfaithfull beleeue not any such thing to come. And this errour seemeth to haue no remedy, but that as other things and other kingdomes haue their ends and limits set vnto them, which they cannot ouerpasse: it must needs be, that such a dominatio and gouernment of the Church haue an end, by reason of the demerites and obstinacies of the gouernours prouoking and requiring the same: like as we read in the Prophet Ieremie cap. 8. There is no man that taketh repentance for his sinne, that will so much as say, wherefore haue I done this? But euery man runneth foorth still like a wild horse in a battell. And the

The fourth opinion or error. Esay 66. Psalme 71. Ierem. 8.

Ierem. 13. the prophet Ieremie in the 13. chapter of his prophecie. Like as the man of Inde may change his skinne, and the Cat of mountaine her spots, so may ye that be exercised in euill, do good. Whereunto also accordeth that which is written of the same phophet, chap. 17. speaking of Iuda signifying the church: The sinne of Iuda (saith he) is written in the table of your hearts, and graued so vpon the edges of your altars with a pen of iron, and with an adamant claw, which is as much to say, as indelible, or which cannot be raced out: as also Ezechiel speaking of the punishment, chapter 21. saith: I the Lord haue drawne out my sword out of the sheath, and cannot be reuoked. Notwithstanding, all these signifie no impossibilitie, but difficultie, because that wicked men are hardly conuerted: for otherwise the Scripture importeth no such inflexibilitie with God, but if conuersion come, he will forgiue. So we reade in the prophet Ionas, chapter 3. Who can tell? God may turne and repent, and cease from his fierce wrath that we perish not. And to the like effect saith the same Lord in Ieremie, chapter 26. Looke thou keepe not one word backe, if peraduenture they will harken and turne euery man from his wicked way, that I also may repent of the plague which I haue determined to bring vpon them, because of their wicked inuentions, &c. For the further proofe whereof, Niniuie we see conuerted, and remained vndestroyed, &c. Likewise the Lord also had reuealed destruction vnto Constantinople by sundrie signes and tokens, as Augustine in a certaine sermon doth declare. And thus for the third part or member of my diuision.

Ierem. 17. Ezech. 21.

Fourthly and lastly remaineth to declare, some wholesome concluding now vpon the causes preceding: That is, if by these causes and signes (heretofore declared) tribulation be prepared to fall vpon the church, then let vs humble our minds mildely and wisely. And if we so returne with heart and in deed vnto God, verily he shall receiue and helpe after an inestimable wise: and will surcease from scourging vs, as he promiseth by his prophet Ieremie 18. If that people against whom I haue thus deuised, conuert from their wickednesse, immediatly I will repent of the plague that I deuised to bring vpon them. Speaking here after the manner of men, &c. Now therefore, for so much as tribulation and affliction is so neere comming toward vs, yea lieth vpon vs already, let vs be the more diligent to call vpon God for mercie. For I thinke verily these many yeares there haue not been so many and so despiteful hearts and euill willers, stout, and of such a rebellious heart against the church of God, as be now adaies: neither bee they lacking that would worke all that they can against it, and louers of new-fanglenes: whose hearts the Lord happilie will turne, that they shall not hate his people, and worke deceit against his seruants, I meane against priests whom they haue now in little or no reputation at all: Albeit many yet there be through Gods grace, good and godly. But yet the furie of the Lord is not turned away, but stil his hand is stretched out. And vnlesse ye be conuerted, he shaketh his sword, he hath bent his bow, and prepared it readie. Yet the Lord standeth waiting, that he may haue mercie vpon you, Esay 30. And therefore as the greatnesse of feare ought to incite vs, so hope of saluation may allure vs to pray and call vpon the Lord, especially now toward this holy and sacrat time and solemnitie of Christs natiuitie: For that holy and continuall prayer without intermission is profitable, and the instant deuotion and vigilant deprecation of the iust man, is of great force. And if terrene kings in the day of celebration of their natiuitie, be wont to shew themselues more liberall and bountious, how much more ought we to hope well, that the heauenly king of nature most benigne, now at his natall and birth day, will not denie pardon and remission to such as rightly call vnto him?

Ierem. 18. Esay 5. Esay 30. Ier. 18.

And now therefore, as it is written in Iosue, chapter 7. Be you sanctified against to morrow, &c. And say vnto him as it is written in the first booke of Kings, chapter 25. Now let thy seruants I pray thee find fauour in thy sight, for wee come to thee in a good season. Moreouer, ye may find that ye aske, if that yee aske that which he brought in the day of his Natiuitie, that is, the peace of the church, not spiritual only, but also temporall, which the angelicall noise did sound, and experience the same time did proue, testified by T. Liuius, Plinius, and other heathen storie-writers, which all marueiled thereat, saying: that such an vniuersall peace as that, could not come on earth but by the gift of God. For so God did forepromise in the prophet Esay, chapter 66. Behold I wil let peace into Ierusalem like a water floud, &c. And in the Psalme 71. In his time righteousnesse shall flourish, yea and abundance of peace, &c.

Iosua 7. 1. Kings 25. Psalme 71.

Therefore now (O reuerend fathers in the Lord,) and you heere in this present assemblie, behold I say the day of life and saluation: Now is the opportune time to pray vnto God, that the same thing which he brought into the world at his birth, hee will grant in these daies to his church, that is, his peace. And like as Niniuie was subuerted, and ouerturned, not in members but in manners: so the same words of my theme, Iuxta est iustitia mea vt reueleter, may be verified in vs, not of the primitiue iustice, but of our sanctification by grace, so that: As to morrow is celebrated the natiuitie of our Sauiour, our righteousnesse may rise together with him, and his blessing may be vpon vs, which God hath promised, saying: My sauing health is neere at hand to come, &c. Whereof speaketh Esay the prophet, chapter 51. My sauing health shall endure for euer; &c. This health grant vnto vs the Father, Son and holy Ghost, Amen.

Esay 51.

This sermon was made by master Nicolas Orem before pope Vrbane and his cardinals vpon the euen of the Natiuitie of the Lord, being the fourth Sunday of Aduent, in the peare of our Lord 1364. and the second of his popedome.

In the 5. peare of this foresaid pope Vrbane, began first the order of the Iesuites. And vnto this time, which was about the peare of our Lord 1367. the offices here in England, as the lord chancellour, lord treasurer, and of the prime seale, were wont to be in the hands of the clergie. But about this peare through the motion of the Lords in the parliament, and partly (as witnesseth mine author) for hatred of the clergie, all the said offices were remoued from the clergie, to the lords temporall.

The order of Iesuites. Anno 1367. The chiefe officers of the realm translated from the clergie to the lords temporall.

After the death of pope Vrbane, next succeded pope Gregorie the 11. who among his other acts, first reduced againe the papacie out of France vnto Rome, which had from thence been absent, the space now of 70. yeares, being thereto moued (as Sabellicus recordeth) by the answere of a certaine bishop, whom as the pope sate standing by him asked, why he was so long from his charge and church at home, saying: not to be the part of a good pastor, to keepe him from his flocke so long. Whereunto the bishop answering againe, said: And you pour false being the chiefe bishop, who may and ought to bea spectacle to vs all; why are you from the place so long where your church doth lie? By the occasion whereof, the pope fought all meanes after that to remoue and to rid his court out of France againe to Rome, and so he did.

Pope Gregorie the 11. Anno 1370. The papacie reduced againe from France to Rome.

This Gregorie 11. in a certaine bull of his sent to the archbishop of Prage, maketh mention of one named Militzius a Bohemian, and saith in the same bull that this Militzius should hold opinion and teach, an. 1366. that antichrist was alreadie come. Also that the said Militzius had certaine congregations following him: and that in the same congregations were certaine harlots, who being conuerted from their wickednesse, were brought to a godly life. Which harlots being so conuerted, he vsed to say were to be preferred before all the holy virgins. And therefore commanded the archbishop to excommunicat and persecute the said Militzius, which in foretime had been a religious man of Prage, and after forsake his order, and gaue himselfe to preaching, and at length was by the foresaid archbishop imprisoned.

Militzius a speciall scholler of the truth of Christ reuiued by the pope. Ex bulla Gregorij 11.

Iacobus Misnensis a learned man and a writer in the time of John Hus, maketh mention of this Militzius, & calleth him a worthie and a famous preacher. Also reciteth many things out of his writings: in the which writtings this good Militzius thus declareth of himselfe: how he was moued and urged by the holy Ghost to search out by the sacred Scriptures, concerning the comming of antichrist. And that he was compelled by the same holy spirit at Rome publikely to preach, and also before the Inquisitor there to protest plainely, that the same great antichrist which is prophesied of in the holy Scriptures, was alreadie come. Moreouer his saying was, that the church through negligence of the pastors was desolat, did abound in temporall riches, but in spirituall riches to be emptie. Also that in the church of Christ were certaine Iools which destroyed Ierusalem and defaced the Temple, but hypocrite caused that these Iools could not be seene. Also that many there were which bernd Christ, because that knowing the truth, yet for feare of men they durst not confesse their conscience. &c. And thus much of good Militzius, liuing in the time of Gregorie, 11. and king Edward the third, an. 1370.

The comming of antichrist prophesied.

The which king of England holding a parliament in the third peare of this pope, sent his embassadors to him, desiring him: that he from thenceforth would abstaine from his reseruations of benefices vsed in the court of England. And that spirituall men within this realme promoted vnto bishoprikes might freely inioy their elections within the realme, and be confirmed by their Metropolitanes, according to the ancient custome of the realme. Wherefore vpon these and such other like, wherein the king and the realme thought themselues much grieued, he desired of the pope some remedie to be prouided, &c. Whereunto the pope returned a certaine answere againe vnto the king, requiring by his messengers to be certified againe of the kings mind concerning the same. But what answere it was, it is not in the store expressed, saue that the peare following, which was 1374. there was a tractation at Burges vpon certaine of the said articles betweene the king and the pope, which buhang two peares in suspense, & at length it was thus agreed betweene them: that the pope should no more vse his reseruations of benefices in England, and likewise the king should no more confer and giue benefices vpon the writ, Quare impedit, &c. But as touching the freedome of elections to be confirmed by the Metropolitan, mentioned in the peare before, thereof was nothing touched.

King Edward complaineth of the popes reseruation of benefices. The pope put from his reseruing of benefices in England. Quare impedit.

As touching these reseruations, prouisions, and collations, with the elections of the archbishops, bishops, beneficed men and other, wherewith the pope vexed this realme of England, as before you haue heard; the king by the consent of the lords and commons, in the 25. yeare of his raigne enacted: that according to a statute made in the 30. yeare of his grandfather Edward the first, wherein was made an act against the ranuenous pillage of the pope, through the same prouisions, reservations, and collations, &c. but not put in execution. By the which prouisions, the state of the realme decreased more and more, the kings royaltie and prerogatiue greatly obscured and diminished, innumerable treasure of the realme transported, aliens and strangers placed in the best and fattest bishoprikes, abbeyes, and benefices within the realme: And such, as either for their offices in Rome, as cardinalships and such like, could not be there resident, or if resident, yet better alway for causes inflnite, as partly haue been touched before: not only reuiued the said statute made by Edward the first his grandfather, but also inlarged the same. Adding thereunto more straite and sharpe penalties against the offenders therein, or in any part thereof, as exemption out of the kings protection, losse of all their lands, goods, and other possessions, and their bodies to be imprisoned at the kings pleasure: and further, whosoeuer was lawfully conuict, or otherwise for want of appearance by processe directed forth, were within the lapse of this statute or premunire (for so bare the name thereof) should suffer all and euerie such molestations and iniuries, as men exempted from the protection of the king. In so much, that whosoeuer had killed such men, had been in no more danger of law therefore, then for the killing of an outlaw. or one not worthie to liue in a common weale. Like unprofitable members were they then in that time, yea of ignorance esteemed in this common weale of England, as would offer themselues to the wilfull slauerie and seruile obedience of the pope: which thing in these daies, yea and that amongst no small soules, is counted more then Euangelicall holinesse. Hee that list to peruse the statute, and would see euery branch and article thereof at large discussed and handled, with the penalties therefore due: let him reade the statute of prouision and premunire, made in the 25. yeare of this kings daies. And let him reade in the statutes made in the parliaments holden the 27 yeare, and 28 yeare of his raigne: And under the same title of prouision and premunire shall find, the popes primatie and iurisdiction within this realme more mercifully touched, and much of his papall power restrained: In so much, that whosoeuer for any cause or controuersie in law, either spirituall or temporall, the same being determinable in any of the kings courts (as all matters were) whether they were personall or reall, citations or other; or should either appeale or consent to any appellation, to be made out of the realme to the pope or see of Rome; should incurre the said penalties and danger of premunire. Diuers other matters whereinthe pope is restrained of his slurped power, authoritie and iurisdiction within this the realme of England; are in the said titles and statutes expressed, and at large set forth, who euer list to peruse the same, which for breuities sake I omit, hasting to other matters.

The law of premunire.

The popes priuiledge here in England bished.

About this time, being the yeare of our Lord 1370, lined holy Briget, whom the church of Rome hath canonized not only for a saint, but also for a prophetesse: who notwithstanding in her booke of reuelations, which hath been oftentimes imprinted, was a great rebuker of the pope, and of the filth of his clergie, calling him a murtherer of soules, a spiller and a piller of the flocke of Christ: more abominable then Iewes, more cruell then Iudas, more iniust then Pilat, worse then Lucifer himselfe. The see of the pope shee prophesieth, shall be throwne downe into the deepe like a millstone. And that his assister shall burne with brimstone: Affirming, that the prelats, bishops, and priests, are the cause why the doctrine of Christ is neglected, and almost extinct. And that the clergie haue turned the ten commandements of God into two words, to wit, Da pecuniam, that is, Giue money. It were long and tedious to declare all that she against them writeth. Among the rest which I omit, let this suffice for all, where as the said Briget affirmeth in her reuelations, that when the holy Virgin should go to her Sonne, how Rome was a scuffull and fearfull field: yea, said he, but of bodies of the wicked. &c.

Rome a fearfull ground of Swords and cattle.

So this Briget I will leaue also Catharina Senensis, an holy virgin, which lined much about the same time, Anno 1379. Of whom writeth Antoninus part. historiæ 3. This Katharine hauing the spirit of prophecie, was wont much to complaine of the corrupt state of the church, namely of the prelats of the court of Rome, and of the pope: prophesying before of the great schisme, which then followed in the church of Rome, & dured to the councell of Constance, the space of fortie yeares: also of the great warres and tribulation, which insued vpon the same. And moreouer declared before and foretold, of this so excellent reformation for religion in the church now present. The words of Antoninus be these: After this virgin in her going to Rome, had told her brethren of the warres and tumults that should rise in the countries about Rome, after the schisme of the two popes: I then curious to know of things to come, and knowing that she vnderstood by reuelation what should happen, demanded of her: I pray you (good mother) said I, and what shall befall after these troubles in the church of God? And she said: By these tribulations and afflictions, after a secret maner vnknowne vnto man, God shall purge his holy church, and stir vp the spirit of his elect. And after these things shall follow such a reformation of the holy church of God, & such a renouation of holy pastors, that the only cogitation and remembrance thereof maketh my spirit to reioyce in the Lord. And as I haue oftentimes told you heretofore, the house which now is all deformed and ragged, shall be adorned and decked with most rich and precious ouches and brouches. And all the faithfull shall be glad and reioyce to see themselues so beautified with so holy shepheards. Yea and also the infidels then allured by the sweet sauour of Christ, shall returne to the catholike fold, and be conuerted to the true bishop and shepheard of their soules. Giue thankes therefore to God, for after this storme he will giue to his a great calme. And after she had thus spoken, shee staid, and said no more.

The prophecie of Catharine.

Note.

Besides these aforenamed, the Lord, which neuer ceaseth to worke in his church, stirred vp against the malignant church of Rome, the spirits of diuers other good and godly teachers, as Matthias Parisiensis, a Bohemian borne, who about the yeare of our Lord 1270. wrote a large booke of Antichrist, and puncht him already come, and noteth the pope to be the same. Which booke one Illiricus a writer in these our daies hath, and pyncheth to put it in print. In this booke he doth greatly inueigh against the wickednesse and filthinesse of the clergie, and against the neglecting of their dutie in gouerning the church. The Locusts mentioned in the Apocalypse, he saith, be the hypocrites raigning in the church. The workes of Antichrist, he saith, be these, the fables and inuentions of men raigning in the church: the Images and fained reliques that are worshipped euery where. Item, that men do worship euery one his proper saint and saiour besse Christ: so that euery man and citie almost hath his diuers and peculiar christ. Hee taught and affirmed moreouer, that godlinesse and true worship of God, are not bound to place, persons, or times, to be heard more in this place, then in another, at this time more then at another, &c. Hee argueth also against the cloisterers, which leauing the only and true Sauiour, set vp to themselues their Franciscans, their Dominickes and such other: and haue them for their sauiours, glorying and triumphing in them, and fainting many forged lies vpon them. Hee was greatly and much offended with monkes and friers, for neglecting or rather burying the word of Christ, and in stead of him, for celebrating and setting vp their owne rules and canons, affirming it to be much behouefull to true godlinesse, for that priests, monks and nuns do account themselues only spirituall, and all other to be lay and secular, attributing only to themselues the opinion of holinesse, and contemning other men, with all their politicke administration, and the office as prophane in comparison of their owne. He further writeth that Antichrist hath seduced all Vniuersities and Colledges of learned men, so that they teach no sincere doctrine, neither giue any light to the christians with their teaching. Finally, he forewarneth that it will come to passe, that God yet once againe will raise vp godly teachers, who being feruent in the spirit and zeale of Helias, shall discouer and reuile the errours of Antichrist, and Antichrist himselfe, openly to the whole world. This Matthias in the said booke of Antichrist alleageth the sayings and writings of the Vniuersitie of Paris, also the writings of Guliehmus de sancto Amore, and of Militzius afore noted.

About the same time, or shortly after, an. 1384. we reade also of Ioannes of Mountziger, Rector of the Vniuersitie of Vlme, who openly in the schooles in his Oration propounded that the bodie of Christ was not God, and therefore not to be worshipped as God, with that kind of worship called Latria, as the Sophister term it, meaning thereby the Sacrament not to be adored, which afterward he also defended by writing, affirming also that Christ in his resurrection take to him againe all his blood which in his passion he had shed. Meaning thereby to infer, that the blood of Christ which in many places is worshipped, neither can be called the blood of Christ, neither ought to be worshipped. But by and by he was resisted and withstood by the monkes and friers: who by this kind of idolatrie were greatly inriched, till at length the senat and councell of the citie was faine to take vp the matter betweene them.

Ioannes Mountziger rebuketh & gainsaid the pope.

Anno 1384.

Silus was archbishop of Thessalonica, and lined much about this time. He wrote a long worke against the Latines, that is, against such as take part and held with the church of Rome. His first booke being written in Greek, was after translated into Latin, and lately now into English, in this our time. In the first chapter of this booke, he taieth all the blame and fault of the dissension and schisme betweene the East and the West church vpon the pope. He affirmed that the pope only would command what him listed, were it neuer so contrarie to all the old and ancient canons. That he would heare and follow no mans aduice: that he would not permit any free councels to be assembled, &c. And that therefore it was not possible, that the controuersies betweene the Greeke church and Latine church, should be decided and determined.

Silus the archbishop of Thessalonica.

Henricus de Hassia.

In the second chapter of his booke, he purposedly maketh a very learned disputation. For first hee declareth that he no whit at all by Gods commandement, but only by humane law, hath any dignitie, more then hath other bishops: which dignitie dignitie, the councels, the fathers, and emperours haue granted vnto him. Neither did they grant the same for any other consideration more, or greater ordinance: then for that the same citie then had the imperie of all the whole world: and not at all for that that Peter euer was there, or not there.

Secondarily he declareth, that the same primacie or prerogatiue is not such and so great as he and his sycophants doe vsurpe vnto themselues. Also he refuteth the chiefest popelie opinions of the papists one after another. Hee declareth that the pope hath no dominion more then other patriarches haue, and that hee himselfe may erre as well as other mortall men: and that hee is subiect both to lawes and councels, as well as other bishops. That it belonged not to him, but to the emperour, to call generall councels: and that in ecclesiasticall causes he could establish and ordaine no more then all other bishops might. And lastly, that he getteth no more by Peters succession, then that he is a bishop as all other bishops after the apostles be, &c.

I cannot among other, following here the occasion of this matter offered, leaue out the memorie of Iacobus Misnensis, who also wrote of the comming of antichrist. In the same he maketh mention of a certaine learned man, whose name was Militzius, which Militzius (saith he) was a famous and worthie preacher in Praga. He lined about the yeare 1366, long before Husse, and before Wicklisse also. In the same his writings he declareth, how the same good man Militzius was by the holy Spirit of God incited, and vehemently moued to search out of the holy Scriptures the manner and comming of antichrist: and found that now in his time he was already come. And the same Iacobus saith, that the said Militzius was constrained by the Spirit of God to go vp to Rome, and there publikely to preach. And that afterward before the Inquisitour he affirmed the same. That the same mightie and great antichrist, the which the Scriptures made mention of, was already come.

Iacobus Misnensis and Militzius.

Militzius persecuted by the pope.

Hee affirmed also, that the church by the negligence of the pastors, should become desolate: and that iniquitie should abound, that is, by reason of Mammon, master of iniquitie. Also, he said that there were in the church of Christ dools, which should destroy Ierusalem, and make the temple desolate, but were cloked by hypocrisie. Further, that there be many which denie Christ, for that they keepe silence: neither do they heare Christ, whom all the world should know and confesse his veritie before men, which also wittingly do detaine the veritie and iustice of God.

There is also a certaine Bull of pope Gregorie 11. to the archbishop of Praga: wherein he is commanded to excommunicate and persecute Militzius and his auditours. The same Bull declareth, that he was once a Canon of Praga, but afterward he renounced his Canonship, and began to preach: who also for that he so vnmeasurably preached of antichrist to be already come: was of John archbishop of Praga put in prison, declaring what his errour was: To wit, how he had his companie or congregation to whom hee preached, and that amongst the same were certaine conuerted harlots, which had forsaken their euill life, and did liue godlie and well: which harlots he accustomed in his sermons to preferre before all the blessed virgins that neuer offended. Hee taught also openlie, that in the pope, cardinals, bishops, prelats, priests, and other religious men, was no truth, neither that they taught the way of truth, but that only hee, and such as held with him, taught the true way of saluation. His Pandill in some places is yet to be seene. Then alleageth vnto him certaine vncouenient articles, which notwithstanding I thinke, the aduersaries to depraue him withall, haue slanderously inuented against him. He had, as appeared by the foresaid Bull, verie manie of euery estate and condition, as well rich as poore that cleaued vnto him.

Militzius persecuted by the pope.

About the yeare of our Lord 1371, lined Henricus de Iota, whom Gerson doth much commend, and also his companion Henricus de Hassia, an excellent learned and famous man. An epistle of this Henricus de Hassia which he wrote to the bishop of Normacia, Iacobus Carsiensis inserted in his booke De correctoribus Christianorum. In the same epistle the author doth greatlie accuse the spirituall men of euery order yea and the most holie of all other the pope himselfe, of many and great vices. He said, that the ecclesiasticall gouernours in the primitiue church, were compared to the sunne shining in the day time, and the politicall gouernours, to the mone, shining in the night. But the spirituall men he said, that now are, do either shine in the day time, nor yet in the night time, but rather with their darknesse do obscure both the day and the night, that is, with their filthie liuing, ignorance, and impietie. He citeth also out of the prophecie of Hildegardis these words: Therfore doth the diuell in himselfe speake of you priests: Daintie banketts and feasts, wherein is all voluptuousnesse, do I find amongst these men: In so much that mine eyes, mine eares, my bellie, and my beines, be euen filled with the froth of them, and my bistls stand about with the riches of them, &c. Lastly, saith he, they exercise day more and more as Lucifer did, seeke to climbe higher and higher: till that euery day with him more and more, they fall deeper and deeper.

About the yeare of our Lord 1390, there were burned at Vlinga 36. citizens of Mogauntina, for the doctrine of Waldenses, as Walchius affirmeth: which opinion was nothing contrary to that they held before, wherin they affirmed the pope to be that great antichrist, which should come: Vnlesse peraduenture the pope seemed then to be more euidently conuicted of antichristianitie then at any other time before, he was reuealed to be.

For the like cause, many other besides these, are to be found in stories, which sustained the like persecutions by the pope, if leisure would serue to peruse all that might be searched. As where Masseus recordeth of diuers to the number of 140, which in the prouince of Narbone chose rather to suffer whatsoeuer grieuous punishment by fire, then to receiue the decreetals of the Romish church, contrarie to the vpright truth of the Scripture.

A briefe rehearsall of such as were put to death for hol. ding against the bishop of Rome before the time of Wicklife.

What should I here speake of the 24. which suffered at Paris. An. 1210? Also in the same author is testified that An. 1211 there were 400. vnder the name of heretiques burned, So. beheaded: prince Americus hanged, and the ladie of the castle Roned to death.

Moreouer in the chronicles of Houedon, and of other writers be recited a marueilous number, which in the countries of France were burned for heretiques. Of whom, some were called Publicans, some Catharits, some Paterines, and other by others names. What their assertions were, I find no certaine report worthie of credit.

In Tritenius is signified of one Eckhardus a Dominican frier, who not long before Wicklifes time, was condemned and suffered for hesie at Heydelberge, An. 1320. who as hee comes. And the same Iacobus saith, that the said Militzius was constrained by the Spirit of God to go vp to Rome, and there publikely to preach. And that afterward before the Inquisitour he affirmed the same. That the same mightie and great antichrist, the which the Scriptures made mention of, was already come.

Eckhardus a frier burned.

Of Albingenses because sufficient mention is made before, of whom a great number were burned about the time of king John, I passe them ouer.

Likewise I let passe the heremite, of whom John Waeon maketh relation, in his 2. Dist. quæst. 1. Who disputing in Paula church, affirmed that those Sacraments, which were then vsed in the church, were not instituted by Christ. An. 1306. Peradventure it was the same Raimundus, mentioned in the Flowre of histories, and is said to die in prison: for the time of them doth not much differ.

An Heremit disputing against the popes laies ordinance. Raimundus.

In Boetius, why the pope should so much commend a certaine king, because for one man, he had slaine 400, cutting away the genitals from the rest, I cannot iudge, except the cause were that, which the pope calleth heresie.

But to let these things ouerpasse that be uncertaine, because neither is it possible to comprehend all them which haue withstood the corruption of the popes see: neither haue we ante such sure testimonie left of their doings, credibly to stay vpon: We will now Christ willing, conuert our stole to things more certain and vndoubted: grounding vpon no light reports of feeble credit, nor vpon any fabulous legends without authoritie: but vpon the true and substantiall copies of the publike records of the realme, remaining yet to be seene vnder the kings most sure and faithfull custodie. Out of the which records, such matter appeareth against the popish church of Rome, and against his vsurped authoritie, such open standing and crying against the said see, and that not priuilie, but also in open parliament, in the daies of this king Edward the third: that neither will the Romish people of this our age easily thinke it to be true when they see it, neither yet shall they be able to denie the same, so cleare standeth the force of those records.

Ex Archiuis Regis Maiestatis.

Partiall dissimulation in our histories of the church of England.

He heard a little before, pag. 350. how John Stratford archbishop of Canturburie being sent for, and required by the king to come vnto him, refused so to do. What the cause was why he denied to come at the kings sending, is neither touched of Polydor Virgil, nor of any other monkish chronicler, writing of those acts and times. Whose part had been, faithfully to haue dispensed the simple truth of things done to their posteritie. But that which they dissemblingly and colourable haue concealed, contrarie to the true law of storie, the true cause thereof we haue found out by the true parliament roles, declaring the storie thus.

Ex anno 6. reg. Edon. 3. tit. 1.

King Edward the 3. in the 6. yeare of his raigne, hearing that Edward Baillol had proclaimed himselfe king of Scotland; required counsell of the whole estate, to wit, whether it were better for him to assaile Scotland, and to claime the dessing or demaines of the same: or else by making him peace to take his aduantage. And thereby to inioy the seruice, as other his ancestors before him had done. For this cause he summoned a parliament of all estates to meete at Yorke, about the beginning of December. Where the king was aduertised comming, that the comming of such as were warned thereunto. For the want of whose comming the parliament was reiourned till monday, and from thence to tuesday next insuing. But for so much as most of the states were absent, the assemblie required the continuance of the parliament, vntill the feast of S. Hillarie then insuing at Yorke, which was granted. And so a new summons was especially awarded to euerie person with special charge to attend, so that the affaires of the king and the realme might not be hindred, because of the debate betweene the archbiſhop of Canterburie and archbiſhop of Yorke, for the ſuperiour bearing of the croſſe.

The archbiſhop of Canterburie claimeth the croſſe to be borne before him in his owne prouince.

In concluſion, for all the kings ſummoning, none other of all the clergie came, but only the archbiſhop of Yorke, the biſhop of Lincolne, and of Carliſle, and abbats of Yorke and Selby. By the ſame was not only a looſe to the opportunitie to Scotland: but alſo an inſupportable charge to the whole eſtate by a new aſſemble. And thus much out of the records. Whereby thou mayeſt eaſily iudge (prudent reader) what is to be thought of theſe pope-holy catholike churchmen: being of the popes breed and ſetting vp, whom ſuch friuolous cauſes of contention ſtirre vp to ſuch diſquietneſſe, both among themſelues, and vnto ſuch diſobedience againſt their prince: ceaſe they who can. In concluſion, for all the ſtirre and ſtur, that the archbiſhop of Yorke and his complices made, yet could they not preuaile againſt the ſtrength of the realme, but were conſtrained to ſubmit themſelues to the kings order.

Moreouer, for as much as the ſaid archbiſhop of Yorke, and his complices, had ſtirred vp the people againſt the king, by ſuggeſting vnto them, that the king had taken away their libertie, and ſubiected them to bondage: it was ordained, that the ſaid archbiſhop ſhould make his purgation in the kings bench, and the biſhop of Lincolne in the common bench, and the biſhop of Carliſle in the exchequer.

It followeth moreouer in the ſame records, concerning the abuſing of the popes prouiſions: how that the commons find great default at prouiſions comming from Rome, whereby ſtrangers were enabled within this realme to inioy eccleſiaſticall dignities, and thew diuers inconueniences inſuing thereby, namely the decay of daily almes, the tranſporting of the treaſure to nourith the kings enemies, the diſcouering of the ſecrets of the realme, and the diſabling and impouerithing of the clerkes within this realme.

They alſo ſhew how the pope had in moſt couert wiſe granted to two new cardinals within this realme, (and namely to cardinall Peragot) aboue ten thouſand markes of yearely farme. They therefore required the king and nobles to find ſome remedie, for that they neuer could ne would any longer beare thoſe ſtrange oppreſſions, or elſe to helpe them to expell out of this realme the popes power by force.

Hereupon, the king, lords and commons, ſent for the act made at Carliſle, in the 25. yeare of king Edward the firſt, by on the like complaint: thereby forbidding, that anie thing ſhould be at, empted or brought into the realme, which ſhould tend to the blemiſhing of the kings prerogatiue, or to the preiudice of his lords or commons. And ſo at this time, the ſtatute called the act of prouiſion was made by common conſent, which generally forbiddeth the bringing in of any Bulles, or ſuch trinkets from the court of Rome, or the bring, inioying, or allowing of any ſuch bill, proceſſe, inſtrument, or ſuch ware, as thereby at large both appeare. Wherof ſufficiently is touched before, pag. 322.

The penaltie of which ſtatute afterward followed in the next parliament, An. Reg. Edw. 18. tit. 22. the which penaltie was this: the tranſgreſſors thereof to lie in perpetuall priſon, or to be baniſhed the land. And that all iuſtices of aſſize, goale deliuerie, and Oyer and determiner, may determine the ſame. Required withall, that the ſame act of prouiſion, ſhould continue for euer.

Item, that the ſaid 18. yeare of the raigne of king Edward, tit. 34. it was moreouer propounded: that if any archbiſhop or any perſon religious or other, do not preſent within 4. months ſome able clerke to any dignitie, where any perſon hath obtained from Rome any prouiſion, Bull, &c. but ſurceaſe the ſame: that then the king may preſent ſome able clerke.

Item, propounded in the ſaid parliament an. 18. reg. Ed. 3. tit. if any biſhop elect, ſhall refuſe to take any ſuch biſhoprikes other then by ſuch Bull: that then ſuch elect, ſhall not enter nor enioy his temporalties without his ſpeciall licence.

Also that the king ſhall diſpoſe all ſuch benefices and dignities of ſuch aliens his enemies, as remaine in the countrie of his enemies, and imploy the profits thereof to the defence of the realme.

Moreouer propounded, that commiſſioners be ſent to all the kings ports, to apprehend all ſuch perſons as ſhall bring in any ſuch inſtrument from Rome, and to bring them forthwith before the councell to anſwere thereto.

Propounded furthermore, that the deanrie of Yorke which is to be recouered by iudgement in the kings court, may be beſtowed vpon ſome able man within the realme, who will maintaine the ſame againſt him (meaning the cardinall) who holdeth the ſame by prouiſion from Rome, being the enemie to the king and to the realme) and that the profits may be imployed to the defence of the realme.

The kings anſwere. To all which petitions anſwere was made in forme following: It is agreed by the king, cauſes, baronſ, iuſtices, and other wiſe ment of the realme, that the petitions aforeſaid, be made in ſufficient forme of law, according to the petitions aforeſaid.

¶ Note in this anſwere of the king (good reader) that at the graunt hereof, the conſent of the biſhops is neither named, nor expreſſed, with the other lords of the parliament: and yet, the parliament ſtanteth in his full force, notwithſtanding.

Notes of the parliament holden in the 20. yeare of king Edward the 3.

TO paſſe further, in the 20. yeare of the kings raigne in the parliament holden the ſame yeare, it was propounded: that all alien monkes ſhould auoid the realme by the day of S. Michael, and that their liuings ſhould be diſpoſed, to yong Engliſh ſcholars. The liuing of theſe the king toke to his hands.

The liuings of Aliens giuen to Engliſh men. 20. Ed. 3. tit. 2.

Item, that the king may take the profits of all other ſtrangers liuings, as cardinals and others, during their liues. The profits of whom were alſo in the kings hands.

That ſuch aliens enemies, as be aduanced to liuings here in England (being in their owne countries, ſhomakers, tailers, or chamberlaines to cardinals) ſhould depart before Michaelmas, and their liuings diſpoſed to yong Engliſh ſcholars. The liuings alſo of theſe remained in the kings hands.

The liuings of Romes ſeruants giuen to Engliſh men. 20. Ed. 3. tit. 3.

The commons denied to pay any payment, to any cardinals lying in France, to entreat of warre or peace: which alſo was granted of the kings part as reaſonable.

Item, propounded and fully agreed, that the yearely aduancement of two thouſand markes (granted by the pope to two cardinals, out of the prouinces of Canturburie and Yorke) ſhould be reſtrained, and ſuch as ſhall purſue therefore to be out of the land.

Cardinals depriued of their liuings in England, fo. 34.

Likewiſe enacted and agreed, that no Engliſh man ſhould take any thing in farme of any alien religious, ne buy any of their goods, nor be of their councell, on paine of perpetuall impriſonment.

Enacted further, that no perſon ſhould bring into the realme to anie biſhop or other, anie Bull, or anie other letters from Rome, or from anie alien: vnleſſe he ſhew the ſame to the Chancellour or Warden of the Cinque ports, vpon loſſe of all he hath.

Finally, in the end of the ſaid parliament, the biſhops were commanded before the next conuocation, to certifie vnto the Chancerie the names of ſuch aliens, of their benefices, and the values of the ſame.

Notes of the 25. yeare of king Edward the third.

THe parliament of the 25. yeare, was begun the 6. day of Februarie, the 25. yeare of king Edward 3. In the which parliament, beſide other matters mor, was propounded: that remedie might be had againſt the popes reſeruations, by which breuiate and meanes the pope receiued the firſt fruits of all eccleſiaſticall dignities: A more conſumption to the realme, then all the kings wars.

Ex Archiep. Cant. reg. Ed. 3. The popes firſt fruits and reſeruations more hurtfull to the realme then all the kings wars, tit. 14.

Alſo the like remedie might be had againſt ſuch, as in the court of Rome preſume to vndoe anie iudgement giuen in the kings court, as if they enforced to vndo the lawes of the realme.

To breake of all appeales to Rome, tit. 14.

Whereunto it was anſwered, that there was ſufficient remedie prouided by law.

Notes of the 38. yeare of king Edward the third.

IN the parliament holden at Weſtminſter, the 38. yeare of Edward 3. in the tiuues of Hilarie (Simon biſhop of Elie being lord Thancellour) it was required by the kings owne mouth, and declared to the whole eſtates: how daily citations and falſe ſuggeſtions were made to the pope, for matters determinable in his courts within the realme, and for procuring prouiſions to eccleſiaſtical dignities, to the great defacing of the ancient lawes, to the ſpoiling of his realme, to the daily conueying away of the treaſure, to the waſting of eccleſiaſtical liuings, to the withdrawing of diuine ſeruice, almes, hoſpitalitie, and other acceptable workes, and to the daily increaſe of all miſchiefes: Wherefore, in perſon by his owne mouth, the king required the whole eſtate to prouide hereof due remedie.

To be noted ſmallie in this parliament of the 38. yeare, that the act of prouiſors, brought in this parliament, although in the printed copie, chap. 1. 2. 3. 4. doth agree with the record, in manner: yet in the ſaid records vnprinted, are moe biting words againſt the pope: a myſterie not to be knowne of all men.

Notes of the 40. yeare of king Edward the third.

IT followeth moreouer in the ſaid acts of king Edward the 3. and in the 40. yeare of his raigne, another parliament was called at Weſtminſter the 3. of May. an. 1366. the biſhop of Elie being lord Chancellour and ſpeaker. Who in the ſecond day of the ſaid aſſemblie in the preſence of the king, lords and commons, declared: how the day before, generally they vnderſtood the cauſe of this their aſſemblie, and now more particularly ſhould vnderſtand the ſame: ſpecially how that the king vnderſtood, that the popes for the homage which king Iohn made to the ſee of Rome for the realmes of England and Ireland, and for the tribute by him granted) meant by proces to cite the king to Rome, to anſwere thereto. Wherein, the king required their aduiſes what were beſt for him to do, if any ſuch thing were attempted. The biſhops by their ſelues required reſpite of anſwere, vntill the next day. So did the lords and commons of euerie of them by their ſelues.

Exan. reg. Ed. 3. tit. 7. vide lice.

The popes ſuit to ſend the king vp by proces.

The ſame next day, the whole eſtates reaſſembled together, and by common conſent enacted in effect following, viz. For as much as neither king Iohn, nor any other king, couldbring his realme and people in ſuch thraldome and ſubiection, but by common aſſent of parliament, the which was not done: and therefore done againſt his oth at his coronation (beſides many other cauſes): If therefore the pope ſhould attempt any thing againſt the king, by proceſſe or other matter indeed: That the king with all his ſubiects, ſhould with all their force and power reſiſt the ſame.

King Iohn could not without conſent of parliament be ſame tributarie to the pope, tit. 8.

Agreed by parliament, that the king by force ſhould reſiſt the pope.

Hereto moreouer is not to be omitted, how in the ſaid preſent parliament, the Vniuerſities of Oxford and Cambridge on the one ſide, and the friers of the foure orders mendicants in the ſaid Vniuerſities on the other ſide; made long complaints the one againſt the other, to the king in parliament, and in the end ſubmitted themſelues to the kings order.

Debate between the foure orders of friers and the two Vniuerſities Ex. tit. 10.

After which, the king vpon full digeſting of the whole matter (by aſſent of parliament) toke order: that as well the chancellor and ſcholars, as the friers of thoſe orders in the ſaid Vniuerſities; ſhould in all graces and other ſchoole exerciſes, vſe each other in friendly wiſe, without any rumor as before. That none of thoſe orders ſhould receiue any ſcholars into their ſaid orders, being vnder the age of 18. yeares.

That the ſaid friers ſhall take no aduantage, ie procure Bulls or other proceſſe from Rome, againſt the ſaid Vniuerſities, or proceed therein.

Theſe frers ſubiect to the kings order only in all their controuerſies, parliament tit. 12.

And that the king haue power to redreſſe all controuerſies, betweene them from thenceforth. And the offenders to be puniſhed at the pleaſure of the king, and of the counſell.

Notes of the fiftith yeare of king Edward the third.

Ex Archiepiſc. regiam aſſiſt. an. 50. Reg. Ed. 3. tit. 94.

IN proceſſe of the foreſaid acts and rolles, it followeth more, that in the 50. yeare of the raigne of king Edward the third, the yeare of our Lord 1376, another great parliament was aſſembled at Weſtminſter the 24. of Aprill: Where, ſir Iohn Lupuet being lord chancellor of England, a certaine long bill was put vp againſt the vſurpations of the pope, as being the cauſe of all the plagues, murrions, famine, and pouertie of the realme, ſo as thereby was not left the third perſon, or other commodities within the realme that lately was.

Againſt the vſurpation of the pope.

2 That the taxes paid to the pope of Rome for eccleſiaſticall dignities, do amount to fiue fold as much, as the taxe of all profits as appertaine to the king by the yeare of his whole realme: And that for ſome one biſhoprike or other dignitie, the pope by way of tranſlation and death, hath thre, foure, or fiue ſeuerall taxes.

The pope cauſe of all miſchiefes in England.

3 That the brokers of that ſinfull citie, for money promote many caitifes (being altogether vnlearned and vnworthie) to a thouſand markes liuing by yeare, where the learned and worthie can hardlie obtaine twentie markes, wher by learning decay eth.

The treaſure of the realme conueyed away by the popes meanes, tit. 97.

4 That aliens (enemies to this land) who neuer ſaid ne care not to ſee their pariſhioners, haue thoſe liuings wherewby they beſpite Gods ſeruice, and conuey away the treaſure, and are worſe then Iewes or Saracens.

5 Alſo it was put vp in the ſaid bill to be conſidered, that the lawes of the church, would ſuch liuings to be beſtowed for charitie only, without paying or paping.

6 That reaſon would that liuings giuen of deuotion, ſhould be beſtowed in hoſpitalitie.

7 That God had committed his ſheepe to the pope, to be paſtured, and not thone to deuoure.

8 That lay-patrons perceiuing the couetouſnes and thinnie of the pope, do thereby learne to ſell their benefices vnto beaſts, none otherwiſe then Chriſt was ſold to the Iewes.

The ſheepe giuen example to ſell benefices, fo. 99. Teſtimonie that the pope hath beene out of England, tit. 100.

9 That there is none ſo rich a prince in chriſtendome, that hath the fourth part of ſo much treaſure, as the pope hath out of this realme, for churches moſt ſinfully.

10 Duer and beſides in the ſaid bill, repeating againe the tendering zeale, for the honor of the church: was declared and particularly named, all the plagues which haue iuſtly fallen vpon this realme, for ſuffering the ſame church to be defaced, with declaration that it will daily increaſe without redreſſe.

Reformation of the Church of England deſired in the parliament, tit. 111.

11 Whereupon with much perſwaſion this was deſired, to helpe to redreſſe the ſame: and the rather for that, this was the yeare of Iubiley, the 50. yeare of the kings raigne, the yeare of ioy and gladneſſe, then the which there could be no greater.

12 The meanes how to begin this, was to write two letters to the pope: the one in Latine vnder the kings ſeale, the other in French vnder the ſeales of the nobles, imparting their particularities, and requiring redreſſe, of the which letter of the lords, the effect may be ſeene in a like letter mentioned before, pag. 352.

Aids made for money to be tranſported, tit. 103.

13 And for a further accompliſhment hereof, to enact, that no money were caried forth of the realme by letter of Lumbardie or otherwiſe, on paine of forfeiture and impriſonment, and to enact the articles hereafter enſuing.

14 The king hath heretofore by ſtatute prouided ſufficient remedie, and otherwiſe purſueth the ſame with the holy father the pope, and ſo minded to do from time to time, vntill he hath obtained as well for the matters before, as for the articles inſuing, being in a manner all one.

Againſt the popes lewde practiſes, and collections.

15 That the popes collector and other ſtrangers the kings enemies, and only liege ſubiects for Engliſh dignities, and diſcloſing of the ſecrets of the realme, may be touched.

The popes yeare rent collection what it is commonly worth, tit. 105.

16 That the ſame collector being alſo receiuer of the popes pence, keepeth a houſe in London with clerkes and officers thereto, as it were one of the kings ſolemne courts, tranſporting yearely to the pope, twentie thouſand markes, and moſt commonly more.

17 That cardinals and other aliens remaining at Rome, whereof one cardinall is deane of Yorke, another of Saliſburie, another of Lincolne, another archdeacon of Canterburie, another archdeacon of Durreſme, another archdeacon of Suffolke, another archdeacon of Yorke, another prebendarie of Thaune and Haſtington, another prebendarie of Yorke in the church of Yorke: haue diuers of the beſt dignities of England, and haue ſent ouer to them yearely yr. M. markes, ouer and aboue that which Engliſh bretheren lying there, haue.

The best dignities in England ſtand in the cardinals, tit. 106.

18 That the pope (to ranſome the Frenchmen the kings enimies, who defend Lumbardie from him) both alwaies at his pleaſure leuie a ſubſidie of the whole clergie of England.

The pope man taketh the kings enimies with the kinns money, tit. 107.

In which parliament, the biſhop of S. Dauids being lord chancellour, making a long oration, taking his theme out of S. Paul: Libenter ſuffertis inſipientes, &c. have therein their faithfull counsell.

This being declared by the bishop: sir Robert Ashton the kings chamberlaine, declaring that he was to moue them from the king, for the profit of the realme (the which words perchaunce lay not in the bishops mouth, for that it touched the pope) his Holynesse protesting first, that the king was readie to do all that ought to be done for the pope. But for that diuers disorpations were done by the pope to the king his crowne, and realme, as by particular bils in this parliament should be shewed, he required of them to haue redresse.

Against the vsurpations of the spiritualtie. 25. Ed. 3. 6.

In this present parliament petition was made by the commons, that all pensions of things from Rome, and their ministers, should be out of the kings protection.

Whereunto the king answered, that the pope had promised redresse, which if he did not, the lawes then should stand.

It was also in that parliament required, that euerie person of what sore soeuer, being professed of any religion, continuing the habit of fifteene yeares, may vpon the triall of the same in any of the kings courts, be in law vtterlie forebarred of all inheritance, albeit he haue dispensation from the pope. Against which dispensation, is the chiefe grudge. Whereunto the king and the lords answered, saying, that they would prouide.

By this Answere, that is, parliament, is meant, the state of the realme about the king. The popes Lawe of parliament, which now we commonly call parliament, determined by the kingdom. 7 H.

Item, in the said parliament was propounded, that the statute of premisions made at any time may be executed, and that remedie may be had against such cardinals as haue within the prouinces of Canturburie and Yorke, purchased reseruations, with the clause of Anneferri, to the value of twentie or thirtie thousand Scutes of gold against the popes collector: who was wont to be an English man, and now is a meere French, residing at London, and conueyeth yearely to the pope twentie thousand markes, or twentie thousand pounds, who this yere gathereth the first fruits what soeuer. Alleaging the meanes to meet with these reseruations and nouelties, as to commune all strangers to depart the realme during the warre that no Englishman to become their farmour, or to send to them any money without a speciall licence, on paine to be out of the kings protection. Whereunto was answered by the king, that the statutes and ordinances therefore made, should be obserued.

Ex Actis parliamentorum an. reg. Ed. regis 15. nu. 24.

In these rolles and records of such parliaments as were in this kings time continued, diuers other things are to be noted much woorthie to be marked, and not to be suppressed in silence. Wherein the reader may learne and vnderstand the state of the kings iurisdiction here within this realme, not to be brauled in those daies (although the pope then seemed to be in his chiefe ruffe) as afterward since in other kings daies was seene. As may appeare in the parliament of the 15. yeere of this king Edward the third, and in the 24. article of the said parliament: where it is to be read, that the kings officers and temporall iudges did then both punish vsurers, and impeached the officers of the church for bribe-taking and for taking money for temporall paine, probate of willes, solemnitie of mariage, &c. all the pretensed liberties of the popish church to the contrarie notwithstanding.

Punishment of the iudge & clerk for taking money in matters belonging to the temporall iudges.

Furthermore, in the parliament of the 25. yeare, appeareth, that the liberties of the clergie and their exemptions in claiming the deliuerance of men by their booke vnder the name of clerkes, stood then in little force, as appeared by one Hawkins a knight: who for imprisoning one of the kings seruants, till he made fine of twentie pound, was therefore conuented, notwithstanding the liberties of the clergie, which by his booke would haue saued him, but could not.

The like subiect in the 25. yeare of that king.

The like also appeared by iudgement giuen against a priest at Nottingham, for killing of his maister.

And likewise by hanging certaine monkes of Combe. Ex parliam. An. 25. Ed. 3.

Item, in the parliament of the 15. yeare, by apprehending of I. Stratford archbishop of Canturburie, and his arraignment: concerning which his arraignment, all things were committed to sir William of Ashby.

The arraignment of the archbishop of Canturburie. an. 15. Ed. 3. fol. 290.

Besides these truths and notes of the kings parliaments, wherein may appeare the toward proceedings of this king and of all his commons against the pretensed church of Rome: this is moreouer to be added to the commendation of the king, that in the volumes of the acts and rolles of the king aforesaid: That the said king Edward the third sent also John Wickliffe, reader then of Diuinitie learne in Oxford, with certaine other lords and ambassadors ouer into the parts of Italie, to treat with the popes legats concerning affaires betwixt the king and the pope with full commission: the tenor whereof here followeth expressed.

John Wickliffe sent with the kings Ambassadors beyond the Sea.

In English thus.

The king to all and singuler to whom these presents shall come, greeting. Know ye, that we reposing assured confidence in the fidelity and wisdome of the reuerend father Iohn bishop of Bangor, and other our louing and faithfull subiects, M. Iohn Wickliffe, reader of the Diuinitie lecture, M. Io. Gunter deane of Segebwen, and M. Simon Moulton doctor of the law, Sir William Burton knight, M. John Bellknap, and M. John Honington, haue directed them as our ambassadors and speciall commissioners to the parts beyond the seas. Giuing to the said our ambassadors and commissioners, to six or fiue of them, of whom I will that the said bishop shall be one, full power and authoritie, with commandement speciall, to treat and consult mildely and charitablie with the legats and ambassadors of the lord pope touching certaine affaires. Whereupon of late we sent heretofore the said bishop, and William Vghred monke of Dureme, and M. John Shepe to the see apostolicall: And hereof to make full relation of all things done and past in the said assemblie, that all such things which may tend to the honor of holy church and the aduancement of our crowne and this our realme, may by the assistance of God and the wisdome of the see apostolicall be brought to good effect, and accomplished accordingly. Witnesse our selues, &c. at London dated the 26. day of July in the 48. yeare of our raigne.

By the which it is to be noted, that good will the king then bare to the said Wickliffe, and what small regard he had to the sinfull see of Rome.

Of the which Iohn Wickliffe, because we are now approched to his time; remaineth consequently for our parte to entreat of, so as we haue heretofore done of other like valiant soudiers of Christs church before him.

John Wickliffe.

Here begin-neth the storie of Iohn Wickliffe.

AFter al these heretofore recited, by whom (as ye haue heard) it pleased the Lord sometyng to worke against the bishop of Rome, and to weaken the pernicious superstition of the friers: now remaineth consequently, following the course of yeares, orderly to enter into the stage and tractation of John Wickliffe our countriman, and other moe of his time and same countrie, whom the Lord (with the like zeale and power of spirit) raised vp here in England, to detect more fully and anuplie the poison of the popes doctrine, and false religion set vp by the friers. In whose opinions and assertions, albeit some blemishes perhaps may be noted: yet such blemishes they be which rather declare him to be a man that might erre, then which wilfully did fight against Christ our Sauiour, as the popes proceedings & the friers do. And what doctor or learned man hath been from the prime age of the church, so perfect, so absolutely sure, in whom no opinion hath sometime swarued simple? And yet be the faith articles of his, neither in number so many, nor yet so grosse in themselues and so cardinall, as those cardinall enemies of Christ perchance do giue them out to be; if his bookes which they abolished, were remaining to be conferred with those blemishes, which they haue wrested to the worst, as euill will neuer said the best.

The blemishes of Wickliffe made worse then they be.

This is certaine and cannot be denied, but that he being the publike reader of Diuinitie in the Vniuersitie of Oxford; was for the rude time wherein he liued, famously reputed for a great clerke, a deepe schoolman, and no lesse expert in all kind of philosophie. The which both not only appeare by his owne most famous and learned writings and monuments, but also by the confession of Walden his most cruell and bitter enemie. Who in a certaine epistle written vnto pope Martin the fift, saith that he was wonderfully astonished at his most strong arguments, with the places of authoritie which he had gathered, with the vehemencie and force of his reasons, &c. And thus much out of Walden. It appeareth by such as haue obserued the order and course of times, that this Wickliffe flourished about the yeare of our Lord 1371. Edward the third raigning in England: for thus we do find in the chronicles of Carton: In the yeare of our Lord 1371. (saith he) Edward the third, king of England, in his parliament, was against the popes clergie: he willingly harkened and gaue eare to the voices and tales of heretikes, with certaine of his counsell: conceiuing and following sinister opinions against the clergie. Wherefore (afterward) he tasted & suffered much aduersitie and trouble. And not long after, in the yeare of our Lord (saith he) 1372. he wrote vnto the bishop of Rome, that he should not by any meanes intermeddle any more within his kingdome, as touching the reseruation, or distribution of benefices: and that all such bishops as were vnder his dominion, should keep their former and ancient liberte, and be confirmed of their Metropolitanes, as hath been accustomed in times past, &c. Thus much writeth Carton. But as touching the iust number of the yeare and time, we will not be very curious or careful about, at this present. This is out of all doubt, that at what time all the world was in most deplorate and vile estate, and that the lamentable ignorance and darknesse of God his truth had ouershadowed the whole earth: this man stepped forth like a valiant champion, vnto whom it may iustly be applied that is spoken in the booke called Ecclesiasticus of one Simon the sonne of Onias: Euen as the morning star being in the middest of a cloud, and as the Moone being full in her course, and as the bright beames of the Sunne; so doth he shine and glister in the temple and church of God.

All good things defiled and hurted with sinystration.

Ex Carione.

Thus doth almighty God continually succor and help vs when all things are in despaire: being alwaies (according to the prophecie of the Psalme) a helper in time of need. The which thing neuer more plainly appeared, then in these latter dares and and extreame age of the church; when as the whole state and condition, not only of worldly things, but also of religion, was depraued and corrupted. That like as the disease named Lethargus among the physitions, euen so the state of religion amongst the diuines, was past all mans helpe and remedie. The onely name of Christ remained amongst christians, but his true and liuely doctrine was as farre vnknowne vnto the most part, as his name was common vnto all men. As touching faith, consolation, the end and vse of the law, the office of Christ, of our impotencie and weaknesse, of the holy Ghost, of the greatnesse and strength of sinne, of true works, of grace and free iustification by faith, of libertie of a christian man, wherein consisteth and resteth the summe and matter of our profession; there was no mention, nor any word almost spoken of Scripture, learning and diuinitie; was knowne but vnto a few, and that in the schooles onely, and there also turned and conuerted almost all into sophistrie. In stead of Peter and Paul, men occupied their time in studying Aquinas and Scotus, and the maister of sentences. The world leauing and forsaking the liuely power of Gods spirituall word and doctrine, was altogether led and blinded with outward ceremonies and humane traditions, wherein the whole scope, in a manner, of all christian perfection did consist and depend. In these was all the hope of obtaining saluation fullie stayed & herevnto all things were attributed. Insomuch, that scarcely any other thing was seene in the temples or churches, taught or spoken of in sermons, or finallie intended or gone about in their whole life, but only heaping vp of certaine shadowed ceremonies vpon ceremonies, neither was there any end of their heaping.

The description of Wickliffes time.

The people were taught to worship no other thing but that which they did see, and did see almost nothing which they did not worship.

The church being degenerated from the true apostolike institution aboue all measure (referring only the name of the apostolike church, but far from the truth thereof in very deed) did fall into all kind of extreame tyrannie, where as the pouertie and simplicitie of Christ was changed into cruelties and abomination of life. In stead of the apostolicke gifts and continuall labors and trauels, slothfulnes and ambition was crept in amongst the priests. Beside all this, there arose and sprung vp a thousand sects and fashions of strange religions, being the onely rote and well-head of all superstition. How great abuses and depriuations were crept into the sacraments, and what time they were compelled to worship similitudes and figures of things, for the very things themselues: and to adore such things as were instituted and ordained only for memorials. Finally, what thing was there, in the whole state of christian religion so sincere, so sound and pure, which was not defiled and spotted with some kind of superstition? Besides this, with how many bonds and snares of dailie new fangled ceremonies were the silie consciences of men redeemed by Christ to liberty, snared and snarled? Insomuch, that there could be no great difference almost perceiued betweene christianitie and Iewishnesse, saue only the name of Christ: so that the state and condition of the Iewes, might seeme somewhat more tolerable then ours. There was nothing sought for out of the true fountaines, but out of the turbie puddles of the Pharisians. The christian people were wholly carried away as it were by the noses, with mere decrees and constitutions of men, euen whither as pleased the bishops to lead them, and not as Christ will did direct them. All the whole world was filled and ouerwhelmed with errors and darknesse. And no great marueil; for why, the simple and vnlearned people being farre from all knowledge of the holy scripture, thought it sufficient enough for them, to know onlie these things which were deliuered them by their pastors and shepherds; and they on the other part taught in a manner nothing else, but such things as came forth of the court of Rome. Whereof the most part tended to the profit of their order, more then to the glorie of Christ.

The captaines of the church fauored as well as the inferiour sort.

The christian faith was esteemed or counted none other thing then, but that euerie man should know that Christ once suffered, that is to say, that all men should know and vnderstand that thing which the diuels themselues also knew. Hypocrisie was counted for wonderfull holinesse. All men were so addict vnto outward shewes, that euen they themselues which professed the most absolute and singular knowledge of the scriptures, scarsly did vnderstand or know any other thing. And this euidently did appeare, not onely in the common sort of doctors and teachers, but also in the very heads and captaines of the church: whose whole religion and holinesse consisted in a maner in the obseruing of daies, meats and garments, and such like rhetoricall circumstances, as of place, time, person, &c. Hereof sprang so many sorts and fashions of vestures and garments: so many differences of colours and meates: with so many pilgrimages to seuerall places, as though S. James at Compostella could doe that, which Christ could not doe at Canturburie: or else that God were not of like power and strength in euery place, or could not be found but being sought for by running and gadding hither and thither. Thus the holinesse of the whole yere was transported and put off vnto the lent season. No countrie or land was counted holy, but onelie Palestina, where Christ had walked himselfe with his corporall feet. Such was the blindnesse of that time, men did striue and fight for the crosse at Hierusalem, as it had been for the chiefe and onelie force and strength of our faith. It is a wonder to reade the monuments of the former times, to see and vnderstand what great troubles and calamities this crosse hath caused almost in euery christian commonwealth. For the Romish champions neuer ceased, by writing, admonishing, and counselling, yea and by quarrelling, to moue and stir vp princes minds to warre and battell, euen as though the faith and beleefe of the gospell, were of small force, or little effect without that wodden crosse. This was the cause of the expedition of the most noble prince king Rich. into Hierusalem. Who being taken in the same iournie, and deliuered vnto the emperour: could scarslie be ransomed home againe, for 30. M. marlies: pag. 225. In the same enterpise or iournie, Frederecus the emperour of Rome, a man of most excellent vertue, was much endamaged in the same iournie, an. 1179. And also Philip the king of France, scarsly returned home againe in safetie, not without great losses: so much did they esteeme the recouery of the holy citie and crosse.

Palestina where Christ had walked in the flesh. Palestina reuered holy for Christs walking there.

Richard king of England.

Frederecke the emperour of Rome.

Philip king of France.

Vpon this alone, all mens cies, mindes and deuotions, were so set and bent: as though either there were no other crosse but that, or that the crosse of Christ were in no other place but only at Hierusalem. Such was the blindnesse and superstition of those daies, which vnderstood or knew nothing but such as were outwardlie seene: whereas the profession of our religion standeth in much other higher matters and greater mysteries. What is the cause why that Vrbanus did so vere and torment himselfe? Because that Antioch with the holy crosse, was lost out of the hands of the christians. For so we doe find it in the chronicles, at what time as Ierusalem with Baldwine and the crosse of our Lord was taken, and vnder the power of the Sarsins; Celestinus tels the matter so grieuously, that for very sorow he died. In whose place succeded Lambertus which was called Gregorie the 8. by whose motion it was decreed by the cardinals, that (setting apart all riches and voluptuousnesse) they should preach the crosse of Christ, and by their powerie and humilitie first of all should take the crosse vpon them, and goe before others into the land of Ieruselem. These are the words of the historie; whereby it is euident vnto the vigilant reader, vnto what grossenesse the true knowledge of the spirituall doctrine of the gospell was degenerate and growne vnto in those daies: how great blindnesse and darknesse was in those daies, euen in the first principle, and supposicion of the bishop of Rome: as though the outward succession of Peter and the Apostles, had been of greater force and effect to vnitter. What doth it force in what place Peter did rule or not rule? It is much more to be regarded that euery man should labour and indue with all their indeuour to follow the life and confession of Peter: And that man seemeth vnto me to be the true successor of Peter, against whom the gates of hell shall not preuaile. For if that Peter in the gospel do beare the type and figure of the christian church (as all men in a maner doe affirme) what more foolish or vaine thing can there be, then through pryuat supposition, to restraine and to bind that vnto one man, which by the appointment of the Lord, is of it selfe free and open to so many?

Pope Urbanus. Lambert pope.

The knowledge of the Gospel grossely corrupted by the Romanists.

Thus in these so great and troublous times and horrible darknesse of ignorance, what time there stirred in a maner to be no one so little a sparke of pure doctrine left or remaining: this foresaid Wickliffe by Gods prouidence sprang and rose vp: through whom the Lord would first waken and raise vp against the world, which was ouermuch drowned and whelmed in the deepe streames of humane traditions. Thus you haue here the time of Wickliffes originall.

Wherein Wickliffe after he had now by a long time profession studied in the Vniuersitie of Oxford, and perceiuing the true doctrine of Christs gospell to be adulterate and defiled, with so many filthie inuentions of bishops, seas of monks, and darke errours: And that he after long debating and deliberating with himselfe (with many secret sighes, and bewailing in his mind the generall ignorance of the whole world) could no longer suffer or abide the same, but that he at the last determined with himselfe to helpe and to remedie such things as he saw to be euill and out of the way. But for so much as he saw that this dangerous medling, could not be attempted or stirred without great trouble, neither that these things which had been so long time with vse and custome rooted and grafted in mens minds, could bee suddenlie plucked vp or taken away, he thought with himselfe that this matter should be done by little and little. Wherefore he taking his originall at small occasions, thereby opened himselfe a way to meane to greater matters. And first he assailed his aduersaries in logicall and metaphysicall questions, disputing with them of the first forme and fashion of things, of the increase of time, and of the intelligible substance of a creature, with other such like sophemes of no great effect: but yet notwithstanding did not a little helpe and furnish him, which minded to dispute of greater matters. So in these matters first began Beningham (a Carmelite) to dispute and argue against John Wickliffe.

Wickliffe & Diuine in Oxford.

Thersitus vp of Wickliffe in troublous time.

By these originals, the way was made vnto greater points; so so that at the length he came to touch the matters of the Sacraments, and other abuses of the church. Touching which things this holy man take great paines, protesting (as they said) openlie in the schooles, that it was his chiefe and principall purpose and intent, to reuoke and call backe the church from her idolatrie to some better amendment, especially in the matter of the sacrament of the bodie and bloud of Christ. But this bile or sore could not bee touched without the great griefe and paine of the whole world. For first of all, the whole glut of monks and begging friers were set on a rage or madnesse, which (euen as hornets with their sharpe stings) did assaile this good man on euery side: fighting (as is said) for their altars, paunches and bellies. After them the priests, and then after them the archbishop took the matter in hand, being then S. Sudburie, who for the same cause deposed him of his benefice, which then he had in Oxford. Notwithstanding he being somewhat friended and supported by the king, as apeareth, continued and bare out the malice of the friers, and of the archbishop all this while of his first beginning, till about the yeare of our Lord, 1377. After which time now to prosecute the course of his troubles and conflict, first I must fetch about a little compasse, as requisite is, to inferre some mention of John of Gaunt duke of Lancaster the kings sonne, and lord Henrie Percie, which were his speciall maintainers.

As peares and time grew on, king Edward the third, which had raigned now about 51. peares, after the decease of prince Edward his sonne, who departed the yere before: was stricken in great age, and in such feblenesse withall, that hee was vnable though lacke of strength to gouerne the affaires of the realme. Wherefore a parliament being called the yere before his death, it was there put vp by the knights and other the burgesses of the parliament (because of the misgouernment of the realme by certaine gredie persons about the king, taking all to themselues, without seeing any iustice done) that 12. sage and discreet leeds, and peeres, such as were free from note of all auarice, should bee placed as tutours about the king, to haue the doing and disposing vnder him (for at one time, and in their absence fire at another) of all matters pertinent to the publike regiment. Here by the way I omit to speake of Alice Perris the wicked harlot, which (as the storie giueth) had bewitched the kings heart, and gouerned all, and late vpon causes her self through the diuelish help of a frier Dominicke: who by the duke of Lancaster was caused to be taken, and was conuicted, and should haue suffered for the same, had not the archb. of Cant. and the friers (more regarding the libertie of their church, then the punishing of vice) reclaimed him for their owne prisoner. This Alice Perris, notwithstanding she was banished by this parliament from the king, yet afterward she came againe, and like an impudent strumpet as she was, tooke all his rings vpon his fingers: and other iewels from him, and so fled away like an harlot. But this of her by the way.

Alice Perris the kings concubine.

The vnpoperie of an whore.

These 12. gouernors by the parliament aforesaid being appointed to haue the tuition of the king, and to attend to the publike affaires of the realme: remained for a certaine space about him, till afterward it fell out, that they being againe removed, all the regiment of the realme rest vnder the king, was committed to the duke of Lancaster the kings son. For as yet Richard the sonne of prince Edward lately departed, was very young and vnder age.

12. Gouernors assigned about the king.

This duke of Lancaster had in his heart of long time conceiued a certaine displeasure against the popish clergie: whether for corrupt and impure doctrine ioyned with like abominable excesse of life, or for what some other cause, it is not precisely expressed. Onely by storie the cause thereof may be gessed, to rise by William Wickam bishop of Winchester. The matter is this.

For whom. Matthew Paris.

The bishop of Winchester (as the saying went then) was reported to affirme, that the foresaid John of Gaunt duke of Lancaster, was not the sonne of king Edward, nor of the queene. Who being in trauell at Gaunt, had no sonne (as he said) but a daughter: which the same time by living soon of the mother in the bed, was there smothered. Whereupon, the queene fearing the kings displeasure, caused a certaine manchild of a woman of Flanders (borne the very same time) to be conueied and brought vnto her in stead of her daughter aforesaid. And so brought vp the child whom she bare not, who now is called duke of Lancaster. And this (said the bishop did the queene tell him, lying in extremities on her deathbed vnder seale of confession: charging him if the said duke should euer afpire to get the crowne, or if the kingdome by any meanes should fall vnto him, he then should manifest the same, and declare it to the world, that the said duke of Lancaster was no part of the kings bloud, but a false heire of the king. This slanderous report of the wicked bishop, as it fauoureth of a contumelious lie, so seemeth it to proceed of a subtill zeale toward the popes religion, meaning falshood. For that the foresaid duke by fauouring of Wickliffe, declared himselfe to be a professed enemie against the popes profession. Which thing was then not vnknowne, neither vnmarked of the prelats and bishops then in England. But the sequell of the storie thus followeth.

A warrant of the parliament against the Duke of Lancaster.

This slanderous villanie of the bishops report being blazed abroad, and comming to the dukes eare: he therewith being not a little discontended (as no maruell was, sought again by what meanes he could, to bee reuenged of this forenamed bishop. In conclusion, the duke hauing now all the gouernment of the realme vnder the king his father, in his owne hand; so pursued the bishop of Winchester, that by act of parliament he was condemned and deprined of all his temporall goods, which goods were alligned to prince Rich. of Burdeux, the next inheritour of the crowne after the king; and furthermore inhibited the said bishop not to approch nere to the court by 20. miles. Further, as touching this bishop, the storie thus proceedeth: Not long after in the yere of our Lord, 1377. a parliament was called by the meanes of the duke of Lancaster, vpon certaine causes and respects: in which parliament great request and sute was made by the clergie for the deliuerance of the bishop of Winchester. At length when a subsidie was asked in the kings name of the clergie, and request also made in the kings behalfe for spedie expedition to bee made for the dissoluing of the parliament, the archb. therefore accordingly consented the bishops for the tractation thereof. To whom the K. with great lamentation complained for lacke of their fellow and brother W. of Wint. Whole iniurie, said they, did derogate to the liberties of the whole church: And therefore denied to ioyne themselues in tractation of any such matters, before all the members together were united with the head: And (seeing the matter touched them all together in common, as well him as them) would not otherwise doe. And seemed moreouer to be moued against the archb. for that hee was not more stout in the cause, but suffered him so to be cited & put.

W. Wickham Bish. of Winch. deprined.

Bishops hoth together. Liberties of the Church a great matter.

W. of Wint. sent for to the conuocation.

The archb. although hauing sufficient cause to excuse himselfe, wherefore not to send for him (as also he did) because of the perils which might ensue thereof: yet being inforced and persuaded thereunto, by the vnpoitunitie of the bishops, directed downe his letters to the foresaid bishop of Wint. willing him to resort vnto the conuocation of the clergie. Who being glad to obay the same, was receiued with great ioy of the other bishops. And at length by the meanes of Alice Perris, the kings paramour aboue mentioned, (giuing to her a good quantitie of money) the said Winchester was restored to his owne temporalities againe.

Iohn Wickliffe sent for by the Duke of Lancaster.

As the bishops had thus sent for Winchester, the duke in the meane time had sent for John Wickliffe: who, as is said, was then the diuinitie reader in Oxford, and had contended in sundrie acts and disputations, contrary to the forme and teaching of the popes Church in many things: who also for the same had been deprined of his benefice, as hath been afore touched. The opinions which he began in Oxford, first in his lectures, and sermons to intreat of, and wherefore hee was deprined, were these: That the pope had no more power to excommunicate any man, then hath another. That if it bee giuen by any person to the pope to excommunicate, yet to absolue the same is as much in the power of another priest, as in his. Hee affirmed moreouer, that neither the king nor any temporall lord could giue any perpetuitie to the church, or to any ecclesiasticall person: for that when such ecclesiasticall persons doe sinne, habitualiter, continuing in the same still, the temporall powers ought and may meritoriously, take away from them, that before hath been bestowed vpon them. And that hee proued, to haue been practised before here in England by William Rufus. Which thing (said hee) if he did lawfully, why may not the same also be practised now? if he did it vnlawfully, then doth the church erre (saith hee) and doth vnlawfully in praying for him. But of his assertions more shall follow (Christ willing) hereafter. The storie whch ascribeth to him these assertions being taken out (as I take it) of the monasterie of S. Albone, addeth withall: that in his teaching and preaching hee was very eloquent, but a dissembler (saith he) and an hypocrite. Why he surmiseth him to bee an hypocrite, the cause was this:

Exhist. Monast. D. Albani ex accomodato D. Mach. Archiepisc. Cant.

Examples of W. Rufus.

First, because he resorted much to the orders of the begging friers, frequenting and extolling the perfection of their pouertie.

Secondly, because he and his fellowes busially accustomed in their preaching to goe barefoot, and in simple russet gownes.

Ex hist. Monasterij D. Albani.

By this I suppose, may sufficiently appeare to the indifferent, the nature and condition of Wickliffe, how farre it was from the ambition and pride, which in the slanderous penne of Polydore Virgil, reporting in his 19. book of him, that because he was not preferred to higher honors and dignities of the church (conceiuing therfore indignation against the clergy) became their mortall enemie. How true this was, he only knoweth that rightly shall iudge both the one and the other.

The slanderous penne of Polydor.

In the meane time, by other circumstances and parts of his life, we may also partly coniecture what is to be thought of the man. But howsoeuer it was in him either true or false: yet it had been Polydors part, either not so intemperately to haue abused his pen, or at least to haue shewed some greater authoritie and ground of that his report. For to follow nothing else but flying fame, for rashlie to defame a man whose life hee knoweth not, is not the part of a faithfull storie writer.

opinions and assertions abouerecited, with other moe, which are hereafter to bee brought in order; hee began also then somthing merelie to touch the matter of the sacrament, proouing that in the said sacrament, the accidences of bread remained not without the subiect, or substance: both by the holie scriptures, and also by the authozitie of the doctors, but specially by such as were most ancient. As for the latter writers, that is to say such as haue written vpon that argument vnder the thousand peres since Christs time, hee vtterly refused: saything, that after these yeares Satan was losed and set at liberty. And that since that time the life of man hath bin most subiect and in danger of errors: the simple and plaine truth to appeare and consist in the scriptures, wherevnto all humane traditions whatsoeuer they bee, must be referred, and specially such as are set forth and published now of late yeres. This was the cause why he refused the latter writers of decretals, leaning onelie to the scriptures and ancient doctors: most stoutly affirming out of them that in the sacrament of the bodie which is celebrate, with bread the accidence not to bee present without the substance. That is to say, that the bodie of Christ is not present without the bread, as the common sort of priests in those dates did preame. As for his arguments that they were, wee will shortly at more oppotunitie by Gods grace, declare them in another place. But herein the truth (as the Poet speaketh very truely) had gotten John Wickliffe great displeasure and hatred at many mens hands: and specially of the monks and richest sort of priests.

The latter writers of the church to be misconfirmed.

The accidences not to be in the sacrament with out the substance.

Albeit though the fauor and suppotation of the duke of Lancaster, and lord Henrie Percie, he perstifed hitherto in some meane quiet against their wolwish violence and cruelti: Till at last about the yeare of our Lord 1376. the bishops fell buying and inciting their archbishop Simon Sudburie, who before had deprined him, and afterwards prohibited him not to stir any more in these sorts of matters: had obtained by processe and order of citation to haue him brought before them. Whereunto both place and time for him to appeare after their vsuall forme was to him assigned.

The duke hauing intelligence that Wickliffe his client should come before the bishops, fearing that he being but one, was too weake against such a multitude: called to him out of the orders of friers, foure bachelers of diuinitie, out of euery order one, to ioyne them with Wickliffe also for more suretie. When the day was come assigned to the said Wickliffe to appeare, which day was thursday, the nineteenth of February: John Wickliffe accompanied with the foure friers aforesaid, and with them also the duke of Lancaster, and lord Henrie Percie, lord Marshall of England, the said lord Percie also going before them to make roome and way where with Wickliffe should come.

Thus Wickliffe (though the prouidence of God) being sufficientlie garded, was comming to the place where the bishops sate: whom by the way they animated and exhorted not to feare nor thinke a whit at the companie of the bishops there present, who were all vnlearned (said they) in respect of him. For to proceed the words of my foresaid author, who I follow in this narration: neither that he should dread the concourse of the people, whom they would themselues assist and defend, in such sort as he should take no harme. With these words, and with the assistance of the Nobles, Wickliffe in heart incouraged, approcheth to the church of S. Paul in London. Where a mainie preasse of people was gathered to heare what should be said and done. Such was there the frequencie and throng of the multitude, that the lords (for all the puissance of the high Marshal) vneth with great difficultie could get way through. Insomuch that the bishop of London (whose name was William Courtney) seeing the like that the lord Marshall kept in the church among the people, speaking to the lord Percie, said: that if he had knowne before what maistries he would haue kept in the church, he would haue stopped him out from coming there. At which words of the bishop, the duke disdaining not a little, answered to the bishop againe, and said: that he would keepe such maistrie there, though he said nay.

Striuing for the Lords to passe by the people.

The words of the bishop of London to the lord Percie.

At last, after much wrastling they pierced through and came to our Ladies chapell. Where the dukes and Barons were sitting together with the archbishops and other bishops. Before whom the foresaid John Wickliffe according to the manner, stood before them, to know what should be laid vnto him. To whom itell spake the lord Percie, bidding him to sit downe, saying: that he had many things to answer to, and therefore had need of some softer seat. But the bishop of London cast eftsoones into a fumish chafe with those words, said: he should not sit there. Neither was it, said he, according to law or reason, that he which was cited there to appeare to answere before his ordinarie, should sit downe during the time of his answer, but should stand. Vpon these words a fire began to heat and kindle betweene them. Insomuch that they began to rate and to reuile one the other, that the whole multitude there with disquieted, began to be set on a hurrey.

Wickliffe bid to sit downe before the bishops.

Wickliffe remoued by the bishop of London to sit downe.

Strife betweene the lord Marshall and bishop of London.

The people set in a hurrey.

Strife betweene the duke of Lancaster and bishop of London.

Then the duke taking the lord Percies part with hastie words began also to take vp the bishop. To whom the bishop againe nothing inferior in reprochfull checkes and rebukes did render and requite not only to him as good as hee brought: but also did so farre excell him, in this railing art of scolding, that to vse the words of mine author, Erubuit Dux quod non potuit prænulere litigio. i. that the duke blushed and was ashamed, because he could not ouerpasse the bishop in brawling and railing, and therefore fell to plaine threatning, menacing the bishop, that he would bring downe the pride not onelie of him, but also of all the prelacie of England. And speaking moreouer vnto him: Thou (said hee) knowest thy selfe to lying vpon thy parents, which shall not be able to helpe thee: They shall haue enough to doe to help themselues. For his parents were the earle and countesse of Deuonshire. To whom the bishop againe answered, that to bee bold to tell truth, his confidence was not in his parents, nor in any man else, but only in God in whom he trusted. Then the duke softly whispering in the eare of him next by him said that hee would rather plucke out the bishop by the haire of his head out of the church, then hee would take this at his hand. This was not spoken so secretlie, but that the Londoners ouerheard him. Whereupon being fet in a rage, they cried out, saying: that they would not suffer their bishop so contemptuouslie to be abused. But rather they would lose their liues, then that he should so be drawne out by the haire. Thus that councell being broken with scolding and brawling for that day, was dissolued before nine of the clocke. And the duke with the lord Percie went to the parliament: where the same day, before dinner a bill was put vp in the name of the king by the lord Thomas Mowbrey, and lord Henrie Percie, that the citie of London should no more be gouerned by a maior, but by a captaine, as in times before. And that the marshall of England should haue all the ado in taking the arrests within the said citie, as in other cities besides, with other petitions more, tending to the like derogation of the liberties of London. Which bill being read, standeth vp Iohn Philpot burgesse then for the citie, saying to them which read the bill, that that was neuer seene so before: and adding moreouer, that the maior would neuer suffer any such things, or other arrest to be brought into the citie, with more such words of like toutnesse.

The next day following, the Londoners assembled themselues in a councell, to consider among them vpon the bill for changing the maior, and about the office of the marshall, also concerning the liberties done the day before to their bishop.

Hastie counsell of the Londoners.

In which meane time they being but in long consultation of this matter, suddenly and vnawares entred in the place two certaine lords, whether to come to spie, or for what other cause the author leaueth it vncertaine, the one called lord Fitzwalter, the other lord Guy Brian. At the first comming in of them the vulgar sort was readie forthwith to flee vpon them as spies, had not they made their protestation with an oth, declaring that their comming in was for no harme toward them. And so were compelled by the citizens to sweare to the citie their truth and fidelitie, contrary to the which oth if they should rebell, they would bee contended to forfeit whatsoeuer goods and possessions they had within the citie.

This done, they began the lord Fitzwalter in this wise to perswade and exhort the citizens: first declaring how hee was bound and obliged to them and to their citie, not for the oth onlie now newly receiued, but of old and ancient good will from his great grandfathers time. Besides other diuers duties, for the which hee was chiefly bound to bee one of their principall fautors: forsomuch as whatsoeuer tended to their damage and detriment, redounded also no lesse vnto his owne, for which cause hee could not otherwise chuse, but that as he did vnderstand to be attempted against the publike priuiledges and liberties of the citie, hee must needs communicate the same to them. Who beleeue they with prestie circumspection doe occeure and prevent perils that may and are like to ensue, it would turne in the end to their no small incommoditie. And as there were many other things, which required their vigilant care and diligence, so one thing there was, which hee could in no wise but admonish them of: which was this, necessarie to be considered of them all, how the lord Marshall Henrie Percie in his place within himselfe had one inward and cudodie. whether with the knowledge, or without the knowledge of them. he could not tell: this he could tell, that the said L. Marshall was not allowed any such ward or prison in his house within the liberties of the citie. Which thing if it be not time to in time, the example thereof being suffered, would in time breed to such a preiudice vnto their customs and liberties, as they should not hereafter, when they would, redresse the iniurie thereof.

The bishop vnreasonable. The duke intreateth.

These words of the lord Fitzwalter were not so soone spoken, but they were as soone taken of the rash citizens, who in all hastie furie running to their armour and weapons, went incontinently to the house of the lord Percie, where breaking vp the gates, by violence they tooke out the prisoner, and burned the flocks wherein he sate, in the midst of London. Then was the lord Percie sought for: whom (saith the storie) they would doubtlesse haue slaine if they might haue found him. With their billes and iauelins, al corners and priuie chambers were searched, beds and hangings tome asunder. But the lord Percie, as God would) was then with K. Duke, whom one John Pyer the same day with great instance had desired to dinner.

The Londoners repent ſo to haue diſpleaſed the Duke of Lancaſter, and ſeek meanes to appeaſe the Duke.

A ſtorie of the Biſhop of Norwich.

The Londoners not finding him at home, and ſuppoſing that he was with the duke at Sauoy, in all haſte heate turned their power thither, running as faſt as they could to the Dukes houſe. Where alſo in like manner they were diſappointed of their cruell purpoſe. In the meane while as this was doing, commeth one of the dukes men running poſt haſt to the duke and to the lord Percie, declaring what was done. The duke being then at his oyſters, without any further tarrying, and alſo breaking both his ſtomes at the ſame for haſt, tooke boate with the lord Percie, and by water went to Kingſtone, where then the princeſſe with Richard the young prince did lie. Who there declared vnto the princeſſe all the whole matter, concerning the outrage of the Londoners as it was. To whom ſhe promiſed againe, ſuch an order to be taken in the matter, as ſhould be to his contentation. At what time the commons of London, thus as is ſaid, were about the dukes houſe at Sauoy, meeteth with them a certaine prieſt, who marrelling at the ſuddaine rage and concourſe, aſked what they ſought. To whom anſwer was giuen againe of ſome, that they ſought for the duke and lord marſhall, to haue of them the lord Peter de la Mare, whom they wrongfully had detained in priſon. To this the prieſt anſwered againe more boldlie then opportunelie: That Peter (ſaid he) is a falſe traitour to the king, and worthie long ſince to be hanged. At the hearing of theſe words, the furious people with a terrible ſhoute cried out vpon him, that he was a traitor and one that tooke the dukes part, and ſo falling vpon him with their weapons ſtrooke who might firſt ſtrike him. Who after they had wounded him very ſore, ſo being wounded they had him into priſo, where within few daies vpon the ſoreines of his wounde he died.

Neither would the rage of the people thus haue ceaſed, had not the biſhop of London leauing his dinner come to them at Sauoy, and putting them in remembrance of the bleſſed time (as they tearme it) of Lent, had perſwaded them to ceaſe and to be quiet.

The Londoners ſeeing that they could get no vantage againſt the duke, who was without their reach: to bewreake their anger they tooke his armes, which in moſt deſpitefull wiſe they hanged vp, in the open places of the citie in ſigne of reproch, as for a traitor. Inſomuch that when one of his gentlemen came through the citie with a plate containing the dukes armes, hanging by a lace about his necke, the citizens not abiding the ſight thereof, caſt him from his horſe, and pluckt his eſcutchin from him, and were about to worke the extremitie againſt him, had not the maior reſcued him out of their hands, and ſent him home ſafe vnto the duke his maſter. In ſuch hatred was then the duke among the vulgar people of London.

After this, the princeſſe vnderſtanding the harts and boale of the Londoners ſet againſt the foreſaid duke, ſent vnto London three knights, ſir Alured Lewer, ſir Simon Burle, and ſir Lewes Clifford, to entreat the citizens to bee reconciled with the duke. The Londoners anſwered: that they for the honor of the princeſſe, would obay and doe with all reuerence, what ſhe would require. But this they required and entreated the meſſengers to ſay to the duke, by word of mouth, that he ſhould ſuffer the biſhop of Wincheſter afore mentioned and alſo the lord Peter de la Mare, to come to their anſwer, and to be iudged by their peeres. Whereby either they might be quit if they were guiltleſſe: or otherwiſe if they be found culpable, they might receiue according to their deſertes after the lawes of the realme. What griefe and diſpleaſure the duke conceiued and retained in his mind hereof: Againe, what meanes and ſute the Londoners for their part made to the old King for their liberties: What rimes and ſongs in London were made againſt the duke: How the biſhops at the dukes requeſt were moued to excommunicate thoſe malitious diuiders: And moreouer, how the duke at laſt was reuenged of thoſe contumelies and iniuries: How hee cauſed them to be brought before the king: How ſharplie they were rebuked for their miſdemeanor, by the worthie oration of the lord Chamberlain, Robert Aſtanc, in the preſence of the king, archbiſhops, biſhops, with diuers other eſtates, the kings children, and other Nobilities of the Realme: in concluſion, how the Londoners were compelled to this at length, by the common aſſent & publik charges of ye city, to make a great taper of ware, which with the Dukes armes ſet vpon it, ſhould be brought with ſolemne proceſſion to the church of S. Paul, there to burne continually before the Image of our Ladie: And at laſt, how both the ſaid duke and the Londoners were reconciled together, in the beginning of the new king, with the kiſſe of peace, and the ſame reconcilement publikely denounced in the church of Weſtminſter, and what ioy was in the whole citie therof: Theſe becauſe they are impertinent and make to long a digreſſion from the matter of Wickliffe, I cut off with breuity, referring the Reader to other, hiſtories namely of Saint Albones, where they are to be found at large.

As theſe aforeſaid for breuitie ſake I paſſe ouer, ſo will I not be long, yet cannot omit that, which happened the ſame time and yere to the biſhop of Norwich, to the intent that this poſterite now may ſee, to what pride the clergie then of the Popes church was growne to. The ſame time as this broile was at London, the biſhop of Norwich a little after the time of Eaſter comming to the towne of Lennam, belonging to his lordſhip: being not contented with the old accuſtomed honour due vnto him, and vſed of his predeceſſours before in the ſame towne, required moreouer with a new and vnuſed kind of magnificence to be exalted: Inſomuch, that when he ſaw the chiefe Magiſtrate or Maior of that towne to goin the ſtreetes with his officer going before him, holding a certaine wand in his hand tipped at both ends with blacke horne, as the maner was: he reputing himſelfe to be lord of that towne (as hee was) and thinking to be higher then the higheſt, commanded the honour of that ſtaffe bue to the maior, to bee yelded and borne before his lordly perſonage. The maior or baliffe, with other the townſmen, courteouſlie anſwered to him againe, that they were right willing and contented with all their hearts to exhibite that reuerence vnto him, and would ſo doe, if he firſt of the king and counſell could obtaine that cuſtome, and if the ſame might bee induced after any peaceable map with the good wils of the commons and bodie of the towne: Otherwiſe, ſaid they, as the matter was dangerous, ſo they durſt not take in hand any ſuch new alteration of ancient cuſtomes and liberties, leſt the people (which is alwaies inclinable and prone to euill) do fall vpon them with ſtones, and driue them out of the towne. Wherefore kneeling on their knees before him, there humblie they beſought him that hee would require no ſuch thing of them: that he would ſaue his olone honor and their liues, who otherwiſe if he intended that way, were in great danger. But the biſhop youthfull and hautie, taking occaſion by their humbleneſſe, to ſmell the more in himſelfe, anſwered that hee would not be taught by their counſell, but that hee would haue it done, though all the commons (whom hee named Ribals) ſaid nay. Alſo rebuked the maior and his brethren for meeremks and baſtards, for ſo fearing the vulgar ſort of people.

The citizens perceiuing the wilfull ſtoutneſſe of the Biſhop, meekely anſwering againe, ſaid; they minded not to reſiſt him, but to let him doe therein what he thought good: onelie deſired him that hee would licence them to depart, and hold them excuſed for not waiting vpon him, and conducting him out of the towne with that reuerence which he required. For if they ſhould be ſeene in his companie, all the ſuſpition there of would be vpon them, and ſo ſhould they be all in danger, ſo much as their liues were worth. The biſhop not regarding their aduice and counſell, commanded one of his men to take the red boane before the maior, and to carry the ſame before him. Which being done, and perceiued of the commons; the biſhop after that maner went not farre, but the rude people running to ſhut the gates, came out with their bowes, ſome with clubs and ſtaues, ſome with other inſtruments, ſome with ſtones, and let driue at the biſhop and his men, as faſt as they might: in ſuch ſort, that both the biſhop and his horſe vnder him with moſt part of his men were hurt and wounded. And thus the glorious pride of this lollie prelate, ruffling in his new ſcepter, was receiued and welcomed there. That is, was ſo pelted with hattes and ſtaues, ſo wounded with arrowes and other inſtruments fit for ſuch a ſtormth, that the moſt part of his men, with his mace bearer, and all running away from him, the poore wounded biſhop was there left alone, not able to keepe his old power, which went about to plurpe a new power more then to him belonged. Thus as it is commonly true in all, ſo is it well exemplified here, which is commonlie ſaid, and as it is commonly ſeene, that pride will haue a fall, and power blurped will neuer ſtand. In like manner if the citizens of Rome, following the example of theſe Lennam men, as they haue the like cauſe, and greater to doe by the blurped power of their biſhop, would after the ſame ſaute handle the pope, and diſcepter him of his mace and regalitie, which nothing pertaineth to him; they in ſo doing both ſhould recouer their olwne liberties, with more honour at home, and alſo winne much more commendation abroad. Ex chron. mon. D. Albani.

This tragedy with all the parts thereof, being thus ended at Lennam, which was a little after Eaſter (as is ſaid) about the month of April, An. 1377. the ſame yere vpon the 12. day of the month of June next after, died the worthie and victorious prince king Edward the third, after hee had raigned 51. yeeres. A prince no more aged in yeeres then renowned for many ſingular and heroicall vertues, but principally noted and lauded for his ſingular mekeneſſe and clemencie toward his ſubiects and inferiors, ruling them by gentleneſſe and mercie, without all rigour or auſtere ſeueritie. Among other noble and royall ornaments of his nature, worthilie and copiouſlie ſet forth of many, thus hee is deſcribed of ſome, which may briefly ſuffice for the comprehenſion of all the reſt: Orphanis erat quaſi pater, afflictis compatiens, miſeris condolens, oppreſſos releuans, & cunctis indigentibus impendens auxilia opportuna. That is: To the Orphans hee was as a father, compatient to the afflicted, mourning with the miſerable, relieuing the oppreſſed, and to all them that wanted an helper in time of neede, &c. But chiefly aboue all other things, in this prince to bee commemorate in my mind, is this: that hee aboue all other kings of this realme, vnto the time

Anno 48 Edwardi tertij.

EDward by the grace of God king, &c. To the reuerend father in Chriſt N. By the ſame grace biſhop of L. greeting. Being willing vpon certaine cauſes to bee certified what and how many benefices aſwell archdeaconries and other dignities, as vicarages, parſonages, prebends and chapels, within your dioceſſe, be at this preſent in the hands of Italians and other ſtrangers, what they be, of what value, and how euery of the ſaid benefices be called by name: And how much euery of the ſame is worth by the yeere, not as by way of taxe or extent, but according to the true value of the ſame: likewiſe of the names of all and ſinguler ſuch ſtrangers being now incumbents or occupying the ſame and euery of them: moreouer the names of all them, whether Engliſhmen or ſtrangers, of what ſtate or condition ſoeuer they be, which haue the occupation or diſpoſition of any ſuch benefices with the fruits and profits of the ſame, in the behalfe or by the authority of any the aforeſaid ſtrangers by way of farme, or title or procuration, or by any other waies or meanes whatſoeuer, and how long they haue occupied or diſpoſed the ſame: and withall if any the ſaid ſtrangers be now reſidents vpon any benefices: wee command you, as heretofore commanded you, that you ſend vs a true certificat of al and ſinguler the premiſſes, into our high court of Chancerie vnder your ſeale diſtinctlie and openly, on this ſide the firſt of the Aſcenſion of our Lord next comming, without further delay: returning vnto vs this our writ vnder this. Witneſſe our ſelfe at Weſtminſter 10. day of April in the 48. yeere of our raigne of England, and ouer France the 35. yeere.

Wherby may appeare that it was high time for the king to ſeeke remedie herein, either by treatie with the pope or otherwiſe: conſidering ſo great a portion of the reuenues of his realme was by this meanes conueied away and conſumed either to the reliefe of his enemies, or maintenance of the Forrainers: amongſt which number, the cardinals of the court of Rome lacked not their ſhare. ## King Richard the second.

K. Richard 2.

AFter king Edward the third, succeeded his sonnes sonne, Richard the second, being yet but young, of the age of eleuen yeres: who in the same peer of his fathers decease with great pompe and solemnitie was crowned at Westminster, an. 1377. who following his fathers steppes, was no great disauaurer of the way and doctrine of Wickliffe: albeit at the first beginning, partly through the iniquitie of time, partly through the popes letters, he could not do th at hee would. Notwithstanding something he did in that behalfe, more perhaps then in the end he had thanke for of the papists, as more (by the grace of Christ) shall appeare. But as times do change, so changeth commonly the cause and state of man. The bishop now seeing the aged king to be taken away, during the time of whose old age all the gouernement of the realme depended vpon the duke of Lancaster: And now the said bishops against seeing the said duke, with the lord Percie, the lord marshall, to giue ouer their offices, and to remaine in their priuat houses without intermedling, thought now the time to serue them, to haue some vantage against John Wickliffe, who hitherto vnder the protection of the foresaid duke, and lord Marshall had some rest and quiet. Concerning the storie of which Wickliffe, I trust (gentle Reader) it is not out of thy memorie what went before pa. 393. how he being brought before the bishops, by the meanes of the duke and lord Henry Percie, the councell was interrupted, and brake before mine of the clocke. Vpon reason whereof, Wickliffe at that time escaped without any further trouble. Who notwithstanding being by the bishops forbid to deale in that doctrine any more, continued yet with his fellowes going barefoot, and in long frise gownes, preaching diligently vnto the people. Out of whose sermons these articles most chiefly at that time were collected.

The bishops take vantage at time.

That the holie Sacharill after the consecration, is not the very bodie of Christ, but figuratiuely.

The first article collected out of Wickliffes sermons.

That the church of Rome, is not the head of all churches more then any other church is: For that Peter hath any more power giuen of Christ, then any other Apostle hath.

Item, that the pope of Rome hath no more in the keies of the church, then hath any other within the order of priesthood.

Marsilius Patauinus, Ioan. de Gandauo, noted.

Item, if God be: the Lords temporall may lawfullie and meritoriouslie take away their temporalities from the churchmen offending, habituallter.

Item, if any temporall lord doe know the church so offending, he is bound vnder paine of damnation, to take the temporalities from the same.

Item, that the gospell is a rule sufficient of it selfe to rule the life of euery christian man here, without any other rule.

Item, that all other rules, vnder whose obseruances diuers religious persons be gouerned, doe adde no more perfection to the gospell, then doth the white colour to the wall.

Item, that neither the pope nor any other prelate of the church, ought to haue prisons wherein to punish transgressors.

Beside these articles, diuers other conclusions afterward were gathered out of his writings and preachings by the bishops of England, which they sent diligentlie to pope Gregorie at Rome: Where the said articles being read and perused, were condemned for heretical and erroneous by three and twentie cardinals.

The articles of John Wickliffe sent to the pope. Pope Gregory the xi.

In the meane time the archbishop of Canturburie, sending forth his citations, as is aforesaid, called before him the said John Wickliffe in the presence of the duke of Lancaster, and Lord Percie, who vpon the declaration of the popes letters made, bound him to silence, forbidding him not to entreat any more of those matters. But then though the disturbance of the bishop of London and the duke, and lord Percie, that matter was done dispatched, as hath been aboue recorded, pag. 392. And all this was done, in the daies and last yeere of K. Edward the third, and pope Gregorie the eleuenth.

Wickliffe called before the archbishop of Canturburie.

The next yeere following, which was the yeere of our Lord 1378. being the first yeere of king Richard the second, the said pope Gregorie taking his time, after the death of king Edward, sendeth his bull by the hands and meanes (peraduenture) of one master Edmund Stafford, directed vnto the Vniuersitie of Oxford, rebuking them sharplie, imperiouslie and like a pope, for suffering so long the doctrine of John Wickliffe to take root, and not plucking it vp with the crooked sickle of their catholike doctrine. Which Bull when it came to be exhibited vnto their hands, by the popes messenger aforesaid: the proctors and maisters of the Vniuersitie toyning together in consultation, stood long in doubt, deliberating whether to receiue the popes Bull with honour, or to refuse and reiect it with shame.

Edmund Stafford bringer of the popes Bull.

The maisters of Oxford doubt whether to receiue or reiect the popes Bull.

I cannot here but laugh in my mind to behold the authors of this storie whom I follow: what exclamations, what wondrings and maruels, they make at these Oxford men, for so doubting at a matter so plaine, so manifest of it selfe, (as they say) whether the popes Bull sent to them from Rome was to be receiued or contrarie. Which thing to our monkish writers seemed then such a prodigious wonder, that they with blushing cheekes are faine to cut off the matter in the middest with silence.

The copie of this wild bull, sent to them from the pope, was this.

Gregorie the bishop, the seruant of Gods seruants, to his welbeloued sonnes, the Chancellour and Vniuersitie of Oxford, in the diocesse of Lincolne, greeting, and apostolicall benediction.

The copie of the bull sent to Oxford.

WE are compelled not only to maruell, but also to lament that you, considering the apostolicall seate hath giuen vnto vnto your Vniuersity of Oxford so great fauour and priuiledge, and also for that you flow as in a large sea in the knowledge of the holy Scriptures, and ought to be champions & defenders of the ancient and catholike faith (without the which there is no saluation,) by your great negligence and sloth, will suffer wild cockle, not only to grow vp among the pure wheate of the florishing field of your Vniuersity, but also to waxe more strong and choke the corne. Neither haue ye any care (as wee are enformed) to extirpe and plucke the same vp by the rootes, to the great blemishing of your renoumed name, the perill of your soules, the contempt of the church of Rome, and to the great decay of the ancient faith. And further (which grieueth vs) the encrease of that filthie weed was more sharpely rebuked and iudged of in Rome then in England where it sprang. Wherfore let there be meanes sought by the helpe of the faithfull, to roote out the same. Grieuously it is come to our eares, that one John Wickliffe, parson of Lutterworth in Lincolne dioces, a professour of diuinitie (would God he were not rather a master of errours) is runne into a kind of detestable wickednesse, not only and openly publishing, but also vomiting out of the filthy dungeon of his breast, diuers professions, false and erroneous conclusions, and most wicked and damnable heresies. Whereby he might defile the faithfull sort, and bring them from the right path headlong into the way of perdition, ouerthrow the state of the church, and vtterly subuert the secular policie. Of which his mischieuous heresies, some seeme to agree (onely certaine names and tearmes changed) with the peruerse opinions, and vnlearned doctrine of Marsilius of Padua, and John of Gandune, of vnworthie memorie, whose bookes were vtterly abolished in the realme of England, by our predecessor of happie memorie Iohn 22. Which kingdome doth not only flourish in power, and abundance of faculties, but is much more glorious and shining in pureuesse of faith: Accustomed alwaies to bring forth men excellently learned in the true knowledge of the holy Scriptures, ripe in grauitie of manners, men notable in deuotion, and defenders of the catholike faith. Wherefore wee will and command you by our writing Apostolicall, in the name of your obedience, and vpon paine of priuation of our fauour, indulgences and priuiledges granted vnto your and your Vniuersitie, from the said see Apostolicall: that hereafter ye suffer not those pestilent heresies, that those subtill and false conclusions and propositions, misconstruing the right sense of faith and good workes (howsoeuer they terme it, or what curious implication of words soeuer they vse) any longer to be disputed of, or brought in question: Let it be not withstood at the first, and plucked vp by the roots, it might perhaps be too late hereafter to prepare medicines when a greater number is infected with the contagion. And further, that yee apprehend immediately or cause to be apprehended the said John Wickliffe, and deliuer him to be detained in the safe custodie of our welbeloued brethren, the archbishop of Canturburie, and the bishop of London, or either of them. And if you shall find any gainesayers, corrupted with the said doctrine (which God forbid) in your said Vniuersitie within your iurisdiction, that shall obstinately stand in the said errours: that then in like maner yee apprehend them, and commit them to safe custodie, and otherwise to doe in this case as is shall appertaine vnto you: So as by your carefull proceedings herein, your negligence past concerning the premisses, may now full, be supplied and recompensed with present diligence. Whereby you shall not onely purchase vnto you the fauour and beneuolence of the seat Apostolicall, but also great reward and merit of almightie God.

Here the wild bull striketh.

Wickliffe called before the archbishop of Canturburie.

Yeuen at Rome at S. Maries the greater, xj. Kalend. of Iune, and in the seuenth yeare of our consecration.

Besides this bull sent to the Vniuersitie of Oxford, the said pope Gregorie directed moreour his letters the same time to the archbishop of Canturbury Simon Subburie, to the bishop of London named William Courtney, with the conclusions of John Wickliffe therein inclosed, commanding them, by vertue of those his letters Apostolicall, and straitly enioyning them to cause the said John Wickliffe to be apprehended, and cast into prison: and that the king and the nobles of England should be admonished by them, not to giue any credit to the said John Wickliffe, or to his doctrine in any wise.

Simon Subburi archbishop of Cant. Wil. Courtney bishop of London.

Besides this bill or bull of the pope, sent vnto the archbishop of Canturbury and to the bishop of London, bearing the date, 11. Calend. Iun. and the 7. yeare of the reigne of the pope: I find moreouer in the said storie, two other letters of the pope concerning the same matter, but differing in forme, sent vnto the same bishops, and all bearing the same date both of the day, yeare, and moneth of the reigne of the said pope Gregory. Wherevpby it is to be supposed, that the pope either was very exquisite and solicitous about the matter, to haue Wickliffe to be apprehended, which wrote three diuers letters to one person, and all in one day, about one businesse: or else that hee did suspect the bearers thereof; the scruple whereof I leaue to the iudgement of the reader.

Three sundry letters of the pope to one person, about one matter.

Furthermore, besides these letters written to the Vniuersitie, and to the bishops, he directeth also another epistle bearing the same date vnto king Edward; as one of my stories saith, but as another saith, to K. Richard, which somdeth more nere to the truth, forasmuch as in the 7. yeare of pope Gregorie the xi. wh was the yeare of our Lord. 1378. king Edward was not aliue. The copie of his letters to the king here followeth.

The popes letter to king Richard against Iohn Wickliffe.

The copie of the Epistle sent by the bishop of Rome to Richard king of England, to persecute Iohn Wickliffe.

VNto his well beloued son in Christ, Richard the most noble king of England, health, &c.

The kingdome of England which the most highest hath put vnder your power and gouernance, being so famous and renoumed in valiancie and strength, so abundant and flowing in all kind of wealth and riches: but much more glorious, resplendent and shining through the brightnesse and cleerenesse of all godlinesse and faith, hath accustomed alwaies to bring forth men endued with the true knowledge and vnderstanding of the holy Scriptures, graue in yeares, feruent in deuotion, and defenders of the catholike faith: The which haue not onely directed and instructed their owne people through their wholesome doctrine and precepts into the true path of Gods commandements; but also as we haue heard by the report and information of many credible persons (to our great greefe and heare sorrow) that Iohn Wickliffe parson of Lutterworth, in the diocesse of Lincolne, professour of Diuinitie (I would to God hee were no author of heresie) to be fallen into such a detestable & abominable madnesse, that he hath propounded and set forth diuers and sindrie conclusions full of errours, and containing most manifest heresie, the which doe tend vtterly to subuert and ouerthrow the state of the whole church. Of the which, some of them (albeit vnder coloured phrase and speech) seeme to smell and sauor of peruerse opinions, and the foolish doctrine of condemned memorie of Marsilius of Padua, & Iohn of Gandano, whose bookes were by pope Iohn the 22. our predecessor, a man of a most happie memorie, reproued and condemned, &c.

The popes letter to king Richard against Iohn Wickliffe.

Hitherto gentle Reader, thou hast heard how Wickliffe was accused by the bishop. Now you shall also heare the popes mightie reasons and arguments, by the which hee did confute him, to the king. It followeth.

Therefore, forsomuch as our reuerend brethren the archbishop of Canturburie, and the bishop of London haue receiued a speciall commandement from vs by our authoritie, to apprehend and commit the forenamed John Wickliffe vnto prison, and to transport his confession vnto vs: if they shall seeme in the prosecution of this their businesse to lacke your fauor or helpe, we require and most earnestly desire your maiestie, euen as your most noble predecessors haue alwaies beene most earnest louers of the catholike faith (whose case or quarrell in this matter is chiefliе handled) that you would vouchsafe euen for the reuerence of God, and the faith aforesaid, and also of the apostolike seate, and of our person, that you will with your helpe and fauor, assist the said archbishop and all other that shall goe about to execute the said businesse. Whereby besides the praise of men, you shall obtaine a heauenly reward and great fauour and good will at our hand, and of the see aforesaid. Dated at Rome at S. Mary the greater, the 11. Kalend. of Iune, in the 7. yeare of our bishoprike, An. 1378.

Here is presuming, but no teaching.

The articles included in the popes letters which hee sent to the bishops and to the king against Wickliffe, were these as in order do follow.

The conclusions of Iohn Wickliffe, exhibited in the conuocation of certaine bishops at Lambeth.

Certaine conclusions of J. Wickliffe.

ALl the whole race of mankind here on earth besides Christ hath no power simplie, to ordaine that Peter and all his offspring should politickely rule ouer the world for euer.

2 God cannot giue to any man for him and his heires any ciuill dominion for euer.

3 All writings inuented by men, as touching perpetual heritage, are impossible.

4 Euery man being in grace iustifying, hath not onely right vnto the thing, but also for his time hath right indeed aboue all the good things of God.

5 A man cannot only ministratoriouslie giue any temporall or continuall gift, either as well to his naturall son, as to his son by imitation.

6 If God be, the temporall lords may lawfully and meretoriouslie take away the riches from the church when they doe offend habituallter.

7 We know that Christs vicar cannot, neither is able by his buls, neither by his owne will and consent, neither by the consent of his colledge, either make able or disable any man.

8 A man cannot be excommunicated to his hurt or vndoing, except he be first and principally excommunicate by himselfe.

9 No man ought, but in Gods cause alone, to excommunicat, suspend, or forbid, or otherwise to proceed to reuenge by any ecclesiasticall censure.

10 A curse or excōmunicatiō do not simply bind, but in case it be pronounced & giuen out against the aduersary of Gods law.

11 There is no power giuen by any example, either by Christ or by his apostle, to excommunicate any subiect, specially for denying of any temporalties, but rather contrariwise.

12 The disciples of Christ, haue no power to exact by any ciuill authoritie, temporalties by censures.

13 It is not possible by the absolute power of God, that if the pope or any other christian, doe pretend by any meanes to bind or to loose, that thereby he doth so bind and loose.

14 We ought to beleeue that the vicar of Christ, doth at such times only bind and loose, when as he worketh conformable by the lay and ordinance of Christ.

15 This ought vniuersally to bee beleeued, that euery priest rightly and duly ordered, according vnto the law of grace, hath power according to his vocation, whereby he may minister the sacraments, and consequently absolue any man confessing his fault, being contrite and penitent for the same.

16 It is lawfull for kings (in causes licensed by the law) to take away the temporalties from the spiritualitie, sinning habitualiter, that is, which continue in the custome of sin, and will not amend.

17 Whether they be temporall lords, or any other men whatsoeuer they be, which haue endowed any church with temporalties: it is lawfull for them to take away the same temporalties, as it were by way of medicine, for to auoide sin, notwithstanding any excommunication or other ecclesiasticall censure, forsomuch as they are not giuen but vnder a condition.

18 An ecclesiasticall minister, and also the bishop of Rome may lawfully be rebuked of his subiects, and for the profit of the church, be accused either of the clergie or of the laity.

These letters with the articles inclosed being thus receiued from the pope, the bishops tooke no little heart, thinking and fully determining with themselues and that in open profession before their prouinciall Councell, that all manner respects of feare or fauour set apart, no person neither high nor low should let them, neither would they be seduced by the intreatie of any man, nor by any threatnings or rewards, but that in this cause they would execute most sincerly & right iustice and equitie: yea albeit present danger of life should follow thereupon. Wit these so fierce braggs, and stout promises, with the subtill practises of these bishops, which thought them so sure before: the Lord against whom no determination of mans counsell can prouaile) by a small occasion, did lightly confound and ouerthrow. For the day of the examination being come; a certaine personage of the princes court, and yet of no great noble birth, named Lewes Clifford, entring in among the bishops; commanded them that they should not proceed with any diffinitiue sentence against John Wickliffe. With which words all they were so amazed and their combes so cut, that (as in the storie is mentioned) they became so mute and speechlesse, as men hauing not one word in their mouthes to answere. And thus by the wondrous worke of God his prouidence, escaped John Wickliffe the second time out of the bishops handes, and was by them cleerely dismissed vpon his declaration made of his articles, as anon shall follow.

Moreouer, here is not to be passed ouer, how at the same time, and in the said chapell of the archb. at Lambeth, where the bishops were sitting vpon John Wickliffe, the storie writing of the doing thereof, abdeth these words, saying: Non dico ciues tantum Londinenses, sed viles ipsius ciuitatis & inquidenter ingrere præsumpserant in eandem capellam, & verba facere pro eodem, & istud negotium impedire, consili, vt reor, de ipsorum præmissa negligentia prælatorum, &c. That is, I say not onely, that the Citizens of London, but also the vile abiects of the citie presumed to be so bold in the same chapell at Lambeth, where the bishops were sitting vpon J. Wickliffe; both to entreate for him, and also to let and stop the same matter, trusting, as I suppose, vpon the negligence which they saw before in the bishops, &c.

Ouer and beside, here is not to be forgotten, how the said John Wickliffe, the same time of his examination, offered and exhibited vnto the bishops, in writing, a protestation, with a declaration or exposition of his owne mind, vpon the said his articles, the effect whereof here followeth.

The protestation of John Wickliffe.

IF till I protest (as I haue often before done) that I doe mind and intend with my whole heart (by the grace of God) to be a true christian, and as long as breath shall remaine in me, to profesle and defend the law of Christ. And if it shall happen that through ignorance or otherwise, I shall faile therein; I desire mo Lord God of pardon and forgiuenesse. And now again as before also, I do reuoke and make retractation, meek humble submitting my selfe, vnder the correction of our holy mother the church. And forsomuch as the sentence of my faith, which I haue holden in the schooles and elsewhere, is reported euen by children, and moreouer, it is caried by children euen vnto Rome: therfore lest my deare beloued brethren should take any offence by me, I will set forth in writing the sentence and articles, for the which I am now accused and empeached: the which also euen vnto the death I will defend. As I beleeue all Christians ought to doe, and specially the bishop of Rome and all other priests and ministers of the Church. For I do vnderstand the conclusions after the sense and manner of speaking of the scriptures and holy doctors, the which I am readie to expounde: And if they shall be found contrarie vnto the faith, I am readie to reuoke and speedily to call them backe againe.

An exposition vpon the conclusions of Iohn Wickliffe, exhibited by him to the bishop.

ALL the race of mankind, here in earth beside Christ, hath no power simply to ordaine, that Peter, &c.

Exposition of John Wickliffe vpon his conclusions.

This conclusion of it selfe is euident, for as much as it is not in mans power to stop the comming of Christ to his finall iudgement, but he must needs come, according to the article of our creed, to iudge both the quicke and the dead. And then (as the scripture teacheth) shall surceasse all ciuill and politike rule here, I vnderstand the temporall and secular dominion, pertaining to men here dwelling in this mortall life. For so doe the Philosophers speake of ciuill dominion. And although the thing which is terminable and hath an end, is called sometimes perpetuall: yet because in holy scripture, and in the e of the Church, and in the bookes of Philosophers most commonly that is taken to be perpetuall, which hath no end of time hereafter to come: according to the which sense, the Church singeth Gloria patri, &c. sicut nunc & in perpetuū. I also after y same signification do take here this word (perpetually:) And so is this conclusion consonant to the principles of the Scripture, that it is not in mans power to obtaine the course and boūge of the Church, here perpetually to last.

2. God cannot giue to any man, &c.

Exposition of the second conclusion.

To the second conclusion I answere, vnderstanding ciuill dominion, as in the conclusion before. And so I hold, that God first by his ordinat power cannot giue to any person ciuill dominion here for euer: Secondly, by his absolute power it is not probable for him so to do. For so much as he cannot exercise this his power in perpetuall prison of this life, nor alwaies deserue the finall iustitude of his Church.

3. To the third conclusion. Many writings or charts inuented by men, as touching perpetuall heritage ciuill, be vapossible.

The bishops of the bishops ouerthrowne.

Wickliffe examined called before the bishops, Lewes Clifford.

The vertie of this conclusion is incident. For we must not canonize all maner of Charts, whatsoeuer, as catholicke, or vniuersall: for then it were not lawfull by any meanes to take away or sequester things giuen by Chart or charter, when any doth vniustly occupy the same. And so, if that Rand confirmed and ratified by the faith of the Church, great occasion thereby should be ministred to men so chartered, to trust to their temporal charts, and so might grow thereby much libertie and licence to sinne. For like as by what supposition, euery truth is necessary: so by the same supposition, euery false thing is possible, as it is plaine by the testimonie of the Scripture, and of holie doctors speaking of necessitie of things to come.

4. Euery man being in grace iustifying finally, hath not onelie right vnto the thing, but also for his time hath right indeed, ouer all the good things of God.

The vertie hereof is euident, by holy Scripture, Mat. 24. There verily promiseth to euery man entring into his ioy: te rity (saith he) I tell you, he shall set and place him ouer all the goods he hath. For the right and title belonging to the commu- nion of Saints, their countrie (he meaneth in the kingdom of heauen) Fundatur obiectiue super vniuersitatem bonorum dei: That is: hath his relation, as vnto his obiect, to all the goods and possession of God.

Note here he speaketh only of the right of things in the countrie to come, and not in this exile.

5. A man can but only ministratiouslie, giue any temporall dominion or gift perpetuall, as well to his owne naturall sonne, as to his sonne by imitation.

It is euident. For euery man ought to recognise himselfe in all his works and doings, as an humble seruant and minister of God. As the words of Scripture doe teach vs. Let a man so esteeme of vs as the ministers of Christ. Yea, so Christ himselfe did teach his chiefe Apostles to ministre; but in their countrie, the Saints shall giue vnto their fellow brethren the dominion of their goods, vt pater de suis corporibus & bonis eis inferioribus in natura, according to the words of Luk. 6. They shall giue you, and put into your bosoms a good measure and perfect, well filled and heaped vp, and running ouer.

6. If God be, temporal Lords may lawfully, and meritoriously take away the goods of fortune from the Church when they do offend, habitualiter.

This conclusion is correlative with the first article of our faith: I beleeue in God the father almightie, &c. Where I vnderstand this word, may in this conclusion after the maner of autentike Scripture, which saith and graunteth, that God is able of these stones to raise vp children to Abraham; for otherwise all Christian princes were heretikes. For this conclusion, thus standeth the reason: If God be, he is omnipotent: and if he be almightie, hee is able to command the Lords temporal so to dreand if he may so command, then may they lawfully so take away such goods, &c. And so by the vertue of the same principle, Christian princes haue practised the said sentence vpon the Churchmen heretofore, as did William Rufus, &c.

But

yout God forbid that any should beleeue hereby my intention to haue been, that secular lords may lawfully take away what goods soeuer and by what meanes soeuer, by their owne naked authoritie at their pleasure: but onely by the authoritie of the church may so doe, in cases and forme limited by the law.

7 We know that it is not possible that the vicar of Christ is able by his pure Bulles &c.

The power of all priests to bind God equall. Unde sacerdotalis non suscipit maius & minus. Potestas ordinis. Potestas regiminis.

This is manifest by the Catholike faith, forasmuch as the church doth fully beleeue that the abling of any man, ought first to proceed and come of God; wherefore, no man being Christ his vicar, hath any power in this matter, but onely as vicar in the name of the Lord so far forth as hee is enabled of the Lord, to notifie vnto the church whom God hath enabled. Wherefore if any man do any thing not as vicar in the name of the Lord, whom he ought to forethinke to be his author and head: it is a presumption of Lucifer, forsomuch as Christ by his apostle saith, 1. Cor. 3. All our abilitie or sufficiencie commeth of God. And so consequently, it commeth not purely by the ministery of his vicarship, that he is inabled, but the ableines or vnableneſſe of him being the vicar of Christ, commeth to him another way from aboue.

8 A man cannot be excommunicate to his hurt or vndoing, except he be excommunicate first and principally of himselfe.

It is euident, forasmuch as al such excommunication ought to proceed and begin originally of his owne sin which is damnified: Whereupon Augustin saith, De verbis Domini Sermone 51. Do not thou conculcate thy selfe, and man ouercommeth thee not. And moreouer the faith of the church doth teach, quòd nulla ei nocebit aduersitas, si nulla dominetur iniquitas: that is to say; No aduersitie shall hurt, if no iniquitie haue the vpper hand. And yet notwithstanding, euery excommunication for many causes is also to be feared, although that the excommunication of the church to the humble man being excommunicated, be not damnable but wholesome.

9 No man ought but in cases cause alone to excommunicate, suspend, &c.

It is cleare, forasmuch as euery ciuill cause is the cause of God, whose respect ought chiefly to be waighed and pondered. Yea the loue of the person excommunicate ought to surmount the zeale of reuengement, and the desire of all temporall goods whatsoeuer; for otherwise he that doth excommunicate, doth damnifie himselfe. To this 9 conclusion notwithstanding it is congruent, that a prelate may excommunicate in the cause also of man, so that his principall respect in so doing be had to the iniurie done to his God, as appeareth 13. quæst. 4. Inter querelas.

10 No curse or excommunication can bind simply, but in case it be giuen out against the aduersarie of Christs law.

And it appeareth thus, because that God doth bind simplie euery one that is bound, who cannot excommunicate but onely for transgression of his law. Wherunto it is consonant notwithstanding, that the censure of the church doth not bind simplie, but secondarilie in that case and respect, as it is denounced against the aduersaries of the members of the church.

11 There is no example of Christ, which giueth power to his disciples to excommunicate any subiect (especially for denying of any temporalties) but contrariwise.

Which is thus declared by the faith, whereby we beleeue that God is to be beloued aboue all things, and our neighbour and enemie are to be beloued aboue all temporall goods of this world necessarily: for the law of God cannot be contrarie vnto it selfe.

12 The disciples of Christ haue no power by any ciuill coaction, to exact temporall things by their censures.

This appeareth by the faith of the Scripture, Luke 23. Where Christ did forbid his apostles ciuilly to raigne or to beare any lordship. The kings (saith he) of the Gentiles beare rule ouer them, but you not so. And after this sense it is expounded of S. Bernard, of S. Chrysostome, and other holy men: which conclusion notwithstanding, yet may they exact temporall things by ecclesiasticall censures incidently, if case be that it appertaine to the reuengement of their God.

13 It is not possible by the absolute power of God, that if the pope or any other christian do pretend to bind or loose at their pleasure by what meanes soeuer, that thereby he doth so bind and loose.

The contrary of this conclusion will destroy the whole catholike faith, importing no lesse but him to be a blasphemer which so interpreth such absolute power of the Lord. And yet by this conclusion I intend not to derogate from the power of the pope, or of any other prelate of the church, but that he may by the vertue of the head to bind and loose. But do vnderstand the conditionall of this negatiue (to be impossible) after this sense, that it cannot bee that the pope or any other prelate of the church, can pretend by himselfe to bind or loose (how and after what maner he list himselfe) except in such sort, that hee doe indeed so bind and loose before God, as he doth pretend to doe.

14 We ought to beleeue, that the vicar of Christ doth at such times only bind and loose, when as he worketh conformable by the law, and ordinance of Christ, &c.

The reason thereof is this, because otherwise it is vntaine full for him so to do, except he should doe it in the vertue of that law, and so consequently, vnlesse it be conformable to the law and ordinance of Christ.

15 To this conclusion, this ought vniuersally to bee beleeued, that euery priest rightly and duely ordered, hath power according to his vocation, &c.

The reason hereof is this, because that the order of priesthood in his owne nature and substance, receiueth no such degrees, either of more or of lesse. And yet notwithstanding, the power of inferiour priests in these daies is vpon due consideration reserued, and sometimes againe in time of extreme necessitie released. And thus according to the doctors, a prelate hath a double power, to wit, the power of order, and the power of iurisdiction or regiment. And according to this second power, the prelats are in a higher maiestie, and regiment.

16 It is lawfull for princes and kings (in cases by the law limited) to withdraw temporall commodities from churchmen, abusing the same, habitualiter.

The reason thereof is plaine, for that temporall lords ought rather to leane to spirituall almes, which bringeth with it greater fruit, then to corporall almes the case so standing, that sometime it were necessarie worke of spirituall almes, to chastise such clerkes by taking from them their temporall liuings, which vse to abuse the same to the damnifying both of their soule and body. The case which the law doth limit in this matter, were the defect of correcting his spirituall head, or else for lacke of correcting the faith of the clerke which so offendeth, as appeareth, 16. q. 7. filijs. Dist. 40. cap. Si papa.

17 Whether they be temporall lords, or any other men whatsoeuer, which haue endued any church with temporalities, &c.

The truth thereof is euidently seene, for that nothing ought to stop a man from the principall workes of charitie necessarie, because in euery action and worke of man is to be vnderstood a prime condition necessarie of God his good will concurring withall, as it is in the ciuill law decr. Conradi cap 5. in fine collat. x. And yet God forbid, that by these words occasion should bee giuen to the lords temporall to take away the goods of fortune from the church.

18 An ecclesiasticall minister, yea the bishop of Rome may lawfully be rebuked of his subiects, and for the profit of the church be accused, either of the clergie, or of the laity.

The proofe of this is manifest hereby, because the said bishop of Rome is subiect to fall into the sinne against the holy Ghost, as may be supposed, fauing the sanctitude, humilitie and reuerence due to such a father. For so long as our brother is subiect vnto the infirmitie of falling, hee lieth vnder the law of brotherly correction. And when the whole colledge of cardinals may be slothfull in ministring due correction for the necessary prosperity of the church: it is apparant that the redue of the body of the church, which possible may stand most of lay men, may wholesomely correct the same, accuse and bring him to a better way. The possibility of this case is touched, Dist. 40. Si Papa. If the pope doe erre from the right faith, &c. For like as such a great fall ought not to bee supposed in the lord pope without manifest euidence: so againe, such an obstinacie ought not to be supposed in him, possible any to fallen, but that he should humblie receiue the wholesome medicine of his superiour, correcting him in the Lord. The practise of which conclusion also is testified in many chronicles. Farre be it from the church of Christ, that veritie should bee condemned which foundeth euill to transgressors and other slothfull persons, for then the whole faith of the Scripture were in a damnable case.

Thus John Wickliffe in giuing his exposition vnto his foresaid propositions and conclusions, as is aboue prefixed, through the fauour and diligence of the Londoners, either shifted off the bishops, or else satisfied them so, that for that time he was dismissed and set free clearely away, onely being charged and commanded by the said bishops, that hee should not teach or preach any such doctrine any more, for the offence of the laie people.

Thus this good man being escaped from the bishops with this charge aforesaid, yet notwithstanding ceased not to proceed in his godly purpose, labouring and profiting still in the church as he had begun.

Vnto whom also (as it happeneth by the prouidence of God) this was also a great helpe and stay, for that in the same yere, or in the beginning of the next yeare following, the foresaid pope Gregory xi. which was the first vp of all this trouble against him, turned vp his heeles and died. After whom ensued such a schisme in Rome, betweene two Popes, and other succeeding after them, one striuing against another; that the schisme thereof endured the space of xxxix. yeares, vntill the time of the councell of Constance.

The occasioner of which schisme first was pope Urban the 6. who in the first beginning of his popedome was so proud and insolent to his Cardinals, and other, as to Dukes, Princes, and Queenes, and so set to aduance his nephew and kinsmen, with iniuries to other princes, that the greatest number of his cardinals and courtiers by little and little shunde from him, and set vp an other French pope against him, named Clement, who reigned a xi. yeares. And after

As touching this pestilent and most miserable schisme, it would require heere another Iliade to comprehend in order all the circumstances and tragicall parts thereof, what trouble in the whole church, what parts taking in euery countrey, what apprehending and imprisoning of priests and prelats, taken by land and sea, what spedding of blood did follow thereof. Yoln Otho duke of Brunswicke and prince of Tarentum, was taken and murthered. Yoln Ioan Queene of Ierusalem and Sicil a his wife, who before had sent to pope Vrban, besides other gifts at his coronation, xl. ℔. Duckets in pure gold; after by the said Vrban was committed to prison, and in the same prison strangled. What cardinals were racked, and miserable without all mercy tormented on gibbets to death, what slaughter of men, what battels were fought betweene the two popes, whereof 5000. on the one side were slaine, besides the number of them which were taken prisoners. Of the beheading of fiue cardinals together after long torments, and how the bishop Aquilarensis, being suspected of pope Vrban, for not riding after with the pope, his horse being not good, was there slaine by the popes commandement, sending his souldiers vnto him, to slay him, and cut him in pieces. All which things, with other diuers moe acts of horrible cruelty, happening in the time of this abominable schisme, because they are abundantly discoursed at full by Theodoricke Niem, who was neere to the said pope Vrban, and present at all his doings: therefore as a thing needfull, I here pretermit, referring them who couet to be certified more amply herein, vnto the three bookes of the said Theodoricke aboue mentioned.

Was not here a holy agreement?

About the same time also, about 3. yeares after, there fell a cruell dissension in England, betweene the common people and the nobilitie, the which did not a little disturbe and trouble the common wealth. In this tumult Simon of Sudburie archbishop of Canturburie, was taken by the rusticall and rude people, and was beheaded. In whose place after, succeeded William Courtney, which was no lesse diligent then his predecessor had been before him, in doing his diligence to root out heresies. Notwithstanding, in the meane season Wicklifs sect increased priuilie, & daily grew to greater force, vntill the time that William Barton Viicechancellor of Oxford, about the yeare of our Lord 1380. had the whole rule of that Vniuersitie: who calling together 8. monasticall doctors, and 4. other, with the consent of the rest of his affinitie, putting the common seale of the Vniuersitie vnto certaine writings: he set forth an edict, declaring vnto euery man, and threatning them vnder a grieuous penaltie, that no man should be so hardie, hereafter to associat themselues with any of Wicklifes fautors or fauourers: and vnto Wicklife himselfe hee threatned the greater excommunication, and further imprisonment, and to all his fautors, vnlesse that they after three daies canonicall admonition or warning, or as they call it, peremptory, did repent and amend. The which thing when Wicklife perceiued, forsaking the pope and all the clergie, hee thought to appeale vnto the kings maiestie: but the duke of Lancaster comming betweene, forbad him that hee should not hereafter attempt or begin any such matters, but rather submit himselfe vnto the censure and iudgement of his ordinarie. Whereby Wicklife being beset with troubles and vexations, as it were in the midst of the waues, he was forced once againe to make confession of his doctrine: in the which his confession, to auoid the rigor of things, he answered as is aforesaid, making his declaration, and qualifying his assertions after such a sort, that he did mitigate and asswage the rigor of his enemies.

Anno 1382

The next yeare after, which was 1382. by the commandement of William archbishop of Canturbury, there was a conuocation holden at London, where as Iohn Wickliffe was also commanded to be present. But whether he there appeared personally or not, I find it not in story certainely affirmed. The mandate of the archbishop William Courtney sent abrode for the conuenting together of this councell, here followeth vnder written, truely copied out of his owne registers.

The mandate of the archb.

Ex Regist. Archiep. Cant. Courtney.

Memorandum, that where as well amongst the nobles as commons of this realme of England, there hath a certaine brute bin spread of diuers conclusions both erroneous, and also repugnant to the determination of the church, which tend to the subuersion of the whole church, and to our prouince of Canturburie, and also to the subuersion of the whole realme, being preached in diuers and sundrie places of our said prouince, generally, commonly, and publikely: We William by Gods permission archbishop of Canturburie, primate of all England, and legat of the see apostolicall, being minded to execute our office and dutie herein; haue conuocated or called together certain our fellow brethren and others a great many, as well Doctours and Bachelers of diuinitie, as doctors of the canon and ciuill law, and those whom we thought to bee the most famous men, skilfullest men, and men of soundest iudgement in religion, that were in all the realme, whose names here vnder ensue. And the same being (the 17. day of the moneth of May) in the yeare of our Lord 1382. in a certaine chamber within the territories of the priorie of the friers preachers of London before vs & our foresaid fellow brethren assembled, then & there personally present: After that sundrie conclusions (the tenor whereof here vnder ensueth) were openly proponed, and diligently and plainely read: Wee hartkened our foresaid fellow brethren, doctors, and bachelers, in the faith wherein they stood bound to our Lord Iesus Christ, and as they would answere before the high iudge in the day of iudgement, that they should speake their opinions touching the said conclusions, and what euery of them thinketh therein.

And at length, after good deliberation had vpon the premisses, the foresaid our brethren, the bishops, doctors and bachelers, reassembled before vs the 21. day of the same moneth in the foresaid chamber, the foresaid conclusions being againe and againe repeated and plainely read: by vs and by the common consents of vs all it remaineth published and declared, that some of the said conclusions are heretical, and othersome erroneous and contrarie to the determination of the church, as hereafter most manifestly shall appeare. And for as much as by sufficient information wee find and perceiue, that the said conclusions in many places of our said prouince, haue beene, as is said, both taught and preached: and that diuers other persons doe hold and maintaine the same, and be of heresie vehemently and notoriously suspected: we haue thought good as well generally as specially, to send out this processe vnder written.

13 That all such which doe leaue off preaching or hearing the word of God or preaching of the Gospell, for feare of excommunication: they are already excommunicated, and in the day of iudgement, shall be counted as traitors vnto God.

14 That it is lawfull for any man, either deacon or priest, to preach the word of God, without the authoritie or licence of the apostolike see or any other of his catholicks.

15 ¶ That so long as a man is in deadly sin, hee is neither bishop nor prelate in the church of God.

16 Also that the temporall lords, may according to their owne will and discretion, take away the temporall goods from the churchmen, whensoeuer they doe offend.

17 That tenths are pure almes, and that the parishioners may for the offence of their Curats, detaine and keepe them backe, and bestow them vpon others, at their owne will and pleasures.

¶ This article plainely maketh against the first article aboue.

18 Also, that all speciall prayers applied to any priuate or particular person, by any prelate or religious man: doe no more profit the same person, then generall or vniuersall prayers doe profit others, which be in like case or state vnto him.

19 Moreouer, in that any man hath entred into any priuate religion, whatsoeuer it be, hee is thereby made the more vnapt and vnable to obserue and keepe the commandements of God.

20 That holy men which haue instituted priuate religions, whatsoeuer they be (as well such as are indued and possessed, as also the order of begging friers, hauing no possessions) in so doing, haue grieuously offended.

21 That religious men, being in their priuat religions are not of the christian religion.

22 That friers are bounden to get their liuing by the labour of their hands, and not by begging.

23 That whosoeuer doth giue any almes vnto friers, or to any begging obseruant, is accursed or in danger thereof.

¶ The letter of the archbishop directed to the bishop of London, against Wickliffe and his adherents.

Letter of the archbishop of Cant. against Wicklife.

William by Gods permission archbishop of Canturburie, Metropolitane of all England, and of the apostolicall see legate: To our reuerend brother by the grace of God bishop of London, salutation. The prelats of the church ought to bee so much the more vigilant and attentiue about the charge of the Lords flocke committed vnto them: how much the more they shall vnderstand the Wolues being clothed in sheepes apparell, fraudulently to go about to worry & scatter the sheepe. Truely by the continuall crie and bruted fame (which it grieueth me to report) it is come to our knowledge, that although by the canonicall sanctions, no man being forbidden or not admitted, should either publikely or priuilie without the authority of the apostolicall see or bishop of that place, vsurpe or take vpon him the office of a preacher: Some not withstanding such as are the children of damnation, being vnder the vaile of blind ignorance, are brought into such doting mind, that they take vpon them to preach, and are not afraid to affirme and teach diuers and sundrie propositions and conclusions here vnder recited, both heretical, erroneous and false, condemned by the church of God, and repugnant to the decree of holy church, which tend to the subuerting of the whole state of the same, of our prouince of Canturburie, and destruction and weakning of the tranquillity of the same: and that as well in the churches, as in the streets, as also in many other prophane places of our said prouince, generally, commonly, and publikely, do preach the same, infecting very manie good christians, causing them lamentablie to wander out of the way, and from the catholike church, without which there is no saluation. Wee therefore considering, that so pernicious a mischiefe which may creepe amongst many, we ought not to suffer, and by dissimulation to passe ouer, which may with deadly contagion slay the soules of men, lest their blood be required at our hands: are willing so much as God will permit vs to doe, to extirpate the same. Wherefore, by the counsell and consent of many of our brethren and Suffragans, wee haue conuented diuers and sundrie doctors of Diuinitie, as also professors and other clerks of the canon and ciuill lawes, the best learned within the realme, and of the most soundest opinion and iudgement in the catholike faith, to giue their opinions and iudgements concerning the foresaid conclusions. But forasmuch as the said conclusions and assertions being in the presence of vs, and our fellow brethren and other conuocates, openly expounded, and diligently examined, and in the end found by common counsell and consent, as well of them as of vs, and so declared that some of those conclusions were heretical, and some of them erroneous, and repugnant to the determination of the church; as here vnder are described: Wee will and command your brotherhood, and by vertue of holy obedience straitly enioyne all and singuler our brethren, and suffraganes of our body and church of Canturburie, that with all speedie diligence you possibilie can, you likewise enioyne them (as we haue enioyned you) and euerie of them. And that euery one of them in their churches and other places of their citie and Dioceese, doe admonish and warne, and that you in your church and other churches of your citie and Dioces, doe admonish and warne, as we by the tenour of these presents, doe admonish and warne the first time, the second time and the third time: and yet more straitely doe warne, assigning for the first admonition one day, for the second admonition another day, and for the third admonition canonical and peremptory, another day: That no man from henceforth of what estate or condition soeuer, doe hold, preach, or defend the foresaid heresies and errours or any of them: nor that he admit to preach any one that is prohibited or not fear to preach, nor that he heare or hearken to the heresies or errours of him or any of them, or that he fauour or leane vnto him either publikely or priuily: but that immediately he shun him as he would auoide a serpent putting forth most pestiferous poison, vnder paine of the greater curse; the which wee command to be thundred against all and euery one which shall be disobedient in his behalfe, and not regarding these our monitions, after that those three daies be past which are assigned for the canonicall monition, and that their delay, fault or offence, committed require the same: That then according to the tenour of these writings, we command both by euery one of our fellow brethren and our suffragans in their cities and dioces, and by you in your city and diocesse (so much as belongeth both to you and them) that to the vttermost, both yee and they cause the same excommunicatiõs to be pronounced. And furthermore, wee will and command our foresaid fellow brethren, and all and singuler of you apart by your selues, to bee admonished, and by the aspersion of the blood of Iesus Christ we likewise admonish you: that according to the institution of the sacred canons, euery one of them in their cities and dioces, be a diligent inquisitor of this heretical prauitie: and that euery one of you also in your cities and dioces, bee the like inquisitor of the foresaid heretical prauitie: And that of such like presumptions they and you carefully and diligently inquire, and that both they and you (according to your duties and office in this behalfe) with effect do proceed against the same, to the honour and praise of his name that was crucified, and for the preseruation of the christian faith and religion.

Had ye called them by the truth, you should haue found them otherwise.

Bruta. Fulmina.

Be that killeth you shall thinke he doth God good seruice.

Be rather for the honor of your pope, and destruction of christian faith.

Here is not to be passed ouer, the greate miracle of Gods diuine admonition or warning: for when as the archbishop and Suffragans, with the other Doctors of Diuinitie, and lawyers with a great companie of babling friers, and religious persons were gathered together to consult, as touching Iohn Wickliffes bookes, and that whole sect: Then as they were gathered together at the gray friers in London, to begin their businesse, vpon saint Dunstans day after dinner, about two of the cloche, the very houre and instant that they should goe forward with their businesse; a wonderfull and terrible earthquake fell throughout all England: whereupon diuers of the suffragans being feared, by the strange and wonderful demonstration, doubting what it should meane, thought it good to leaue off from their determinate purpose. But the archbishop (as chiefe captaine of that armie, more rash and bold then wise) interpreting the chance which had happened, cleane contrarie to another meaning or purpose, did confirme and strengthen their hearts and minds, which were almost daunted with feare, roundly to proceede and goe forward in their attempted enterprise. Who then discoursing Wickliffes articles, not according vnto the sacred Canons of the holy Scripture, but vnto their owne priuate affections and traditions, pronounced and gaue sentence, that some of them were simple and plainely heretical, other some halfe erroneous, other irreligious, some seditious, & not consonant to the church of Rome.

An earthquake what time Wickliffe was examined. Ex Chron. mon. Alban.

Item, the twelfth day of June, in the yeare aforesaid, in the chamber of the friers preachers, the foresaid master Robert Rigges, Chancellor of the Vniuersitie of Oxford, and Thomas Wightwell professors of Diuinitie, being appointed the same day and place, by the foresaid reuerend father in God archbishop of Canturburie appeared before him, in the presence of the reuerend father in God, lord William, by the grace of God bishop of Windchester, and diuers others doctors and bachelars of Diuinitie and of the canon and ciuill law, whose names are before recited. And first the said Chancellor by the said lord archbishop of Canturburie, being examined what his opinion was touching the foresaid articles; publikely affirmed and declared, that certaine of those conclusions were heretical, and certaine erroneous, as the other doctors and clerks afore mentioned had declared. And then immediately next after him, the foresaid Thomas Wight-well in is examined, which vpon some of the conclusions at first somewhat staggered, but in the end being by the said archbishop diligently examined vpon the same, did affirme and repute the same to be hereticall and erroneous, as the foresaid Chancellor had done. Another Bachelar of Diuinitie also there was, named N. stammering also at some of those conclusions, but in the end affirmed that his opinion therein was, as was the iudgement of the foresaid Chancellor and the. as is aboue declared. Whereupon, the said lord archbishop of Canturburie, willing to let and hinder the perill of such heresies and errours: deliuered vnto the foresaid Chancellour, there being publikely read, his letters patents, to be executed, the tenour whereof in these words doth follow.

A letter of the Archb. of Cant. to the Chancellor of Oxford.

WIlliam by the grace of God archbishop of Canturburie, primate of all England, and legate of the apostolicall see: To our welbeloued sonne in Christ the Chancellor of the Vniuersitie of Oxford, within the diocesse of Lincolne, greeting, grace, and benediction. The prelats of the church, about the Lords flocke committed to their charge, ought so much to bee more vigilant as that they see the Wolfe clothed in sheepes attire, fraudulently goe about to worrie and scatter the sheepe. Doubtlesse, the common fame and brute is come vnto our eares, &c. Vt in mandato precedenti. Wee will therefore and command, straitly inioyning you, that in the church of our blessed Ladie in Oxford, vpon those daies in the which accustomable the sermon is made, as also in the schooles of the said Vniuersitie vpon those daies the Lectures bee read, yee publish and cause by others to bee published to the clergie and people, as well in their vulgar tongue, as in the Latine tongue, manifestly and plainely without any curious implication, the same hereticall and erroneous conclusions, so repugnant to the determination of holy church, as is aforesaid: to haue beene and be condemned, and which conclusions also we declare by these our letters to be vtterly condemned. And that furthermore you forbid, and canonically admonish, and cause to be admonished, as we by the tenour of these presents doe forbid and admonish you, once, twice, and thrice, and that peremptorilie: that noone hereafter hold, teach, preach, or defend the heresies and errours aboue said, or any of them, either in schoole or out of schoole by any sophisticall cauillation or otherwise: or that any admit to preach, heare, or hearken vnto Iohn Wickliffe, Nicolas Herford, Philip Reppingdon, canon regular, or John Ashton, or Laurence Redman, which bee vehemently and notoriously suspected of heresie, or else any other whatsoeuer, so suspected or defamed: or that either priuately or publikely, they either aide or fauour them or any of them, but that incontinently they shun and auoide the same as a Serpent which putteth forth most pestiferous poyson. And furthermore, wee suspend the said suspected persons from all scholasticall act, till such time as they shall purge themselues before vs in that behalfe: and that you denounce the same publikely, by vs to haue beene and be suspended; and that ye diligently and faithfully enquire of all their fautors and fauourers, and cause to be inquired throughout all the halles of the said Vniuersitie. And that when you shall haue intelligence of their names and persons, that yee compell all and euery of them to abiure their outrages by ecclesiastical censures and other paines canonicall whatsoeuer, vnder paine of the greater curse, the which against all and singuler the rebellious in this behalfe, and disobeying our monitions, wee pronounce: so that their fault, deceit, and offence in this behalfe, deserue the same (the said monition of ours being first sent) which in this behalfe wee esteeme and allow canonicall, that then and againe according to the effect of these our letters, &c. The absolution of all and singuler such, which shall incurre the sentence of this instrument by vs sent forth (which God forbid) we specially reserue vnto our selues: exhorting you the Chancellor by the aspersion of the blood of Iesus Christ, that to the vttermost of your power hereafter you doe your endeuour, that the clergie and people being subiect vnto you, if there bee which haue straied from the catholike faith by such errours, may be brought home againe, to the laud and honour of his name that was crucified, & preseruation of the true faith. And further our will is, that whatsoeuer you shall doe, in the premisses in manner and forme of our processe in this behalfe, to be had and done: that you for your part, when you shall bee required thereunto, plainely and distinctly doe certifie vs by your letters patents, hauing the tenour hereof.

Make sure worke.

The conclusions and articles here mentioned in this letter are aboue prefixed. Of which some were condemned for hereticall, some for erroneous.

After this, within few daies the foresaid archbishop Wil. Courtney, directed downe his letters of admonition to Robert Rigge commissarie of Oxford, for the repressing of this doctrine. Which yet notwithstanding both then, and yet to this day (God bee praised) doth remaine: the copie of his monition to the commissary here out of his owne Register followeth.

The monition of the archbishop, vnto the foresaid Chancellor.

IN Dei nomine. Amen. Whereas wee Wil. by the permission of God archbishop of Canturburie, lord primate of England and legate of the apostolicall see, by the consent of our suffragans, haue caused to be assembled together, diuerse clerkes both secular and regular of the Vniuersitie of Oxford, within our prouince of Canturbury & other catholike persons, to informe vs of and vpon certaine conclusions hereticall and erroneous, generally and commonly preached and published in diuers places of the said prouince of Canturburie, to the subuersion of the whole state of the church, and our said prouince: And also mature deliberation had vpon the same, by the common counsell of the said our suffragans and their conuocates, it was declared, that certaine of the said conclusions, to haue beene and be condemned, some for hereticall, and some for erroneous, and notoriously repugnant to the determination of the church, which we also our selues haue declared to be damnable: And haue vnderstood by credible information, and partly by experience, that thou Robert Rigge, Chancellor of the Vniuersity aforesaid, hast and doest incline partly to the foresaid damnable conclusions, whom also we in this part haue partly suspected, dost intend to molest these our clerks aboue specified, and others adhering vnto vs in this behalfe, as they ought to doe, through thy subtill and sophisticall imaginations, sundrie and manifold waies: therefore wee admonish thee M. Rob. Chancellor aforesaid, the first, second, and third time, and peremptorily: that thou doest not grieue, let, or molest, iudicially or extraiudicially, aperdy or priuilie, or cause to bee grieued, let, and molested, or procure directly or indirectly, by thy selfe or any other as much as in thee lyeth to be grieued, the foresaid clerks secular or regular, or such as fauour them, in the premisses, in their scholasticall acts, or in any other condition whatsoeuer: And that thou suffer none hereafter to teach, maintaine, preach, or defend any such heresies or errors in the said Vniuersitie, either within or without the schooles: Neither that thou do admit Iohn Wickliffe, Nicolas Herford, Philip Repingdon, John Ashton, or Laurence Redman, which are vehemently and notoriously suspected of heresie, or any other so suspected or defamed, vnto that office of preaching: but that thou denounce the said persons to be suspended, whom wee haue suspended from all scholasticall act, whilest they cleare their innocencie in this part before vs, vnder the paine of the greater curse, which we here in these writings denounce against thy person if thou shalt not obey those our admonitions, with effect, as thy crime, subtilty and offence in this behalfe shall require according to this our admonition premised, which we repute in this part for canonicall, as well then as now, and now as well as then, referring the absolution of this sentence excommunicatorie, if it happen to light vpon thee, (as God forbid) specially vnto our selues. Testified with the hands of the Iuters, aboue in the pag. 400. before specified.

Another letter of the archb. to the Commissary of Oxon.

The examination of Nicolas Herford, Philip Repingdon, and John Ashton.

THe 18. day of the moneth and yeare aforesaid, in the chamber of the preaching friers aforesaid mentioned, before the foresaid archbishop in the presence of diuers Doctors and Bachelars of diuinitie, and many lawyers both canon & ciuill, these names are vnder written: appeared M. Nic. Herford, Philip Repingdon, and John Ashton Bachelars of Diuinity. Who after a corporall oth taken to them their iudgement vpon the conclusions aforesaid, were examined seuerally each one by himselfe, before the archb. Who there required day and place to deliberate vpon the conclusions aforesaid, and to giue their answere vnto the same in writing. And also required to haue a copy of the said conclusions to be deliuered vnto them. The which copy, the said Nicolas and Philip (being openly read vnto them) receiued. Also the foresaid M. John Ashton likewise was examined, and iudicially admonished by the said archb. by vertue of his oth, that he setting aside all sophisticall words and subtilties, by fully and plainely would say his mind vpon the conclusions aforesaid. And being asked moreouer by the said archb. whether he would haue a further day to deliberate vpon his answeres, as the foresaid Nicolas and Philip had before: said expresly that he would not, but would answere presently to those conclusions, and so for finall answere said, as concerning all these conclusions (containing them all together) that his iudgement was in this behalfe to hold his peace. Wherfore the foresaid archbishop reputing the said John herein to be suspected, admonished him in forme of words as followeth: Wee admonish thee John Ashton, whom we repute to be defamed and notoriously suspected of heresie, the first, the second, and third time: that in our prouince of Canturbury hereafter, thou doe not preach publikely or priuately without our speciall licence, vnder paine of the greater curse, which wee denounce here by these presents against thy person, if thou obey not our monitions, for now as for then. And consequently, forasmuch as the said John being asked of the archb. confessed that he had heard before of the publication of the archb. Sparuate, wherein was inhibited y no person prohibited or not sent, should preach hereafter: the foresaid archbishop assigned to him friday next following, which was the 20. day of the same moneth, after dinner to appear before him, either at Lamberth, or in the same place: to say for himselfe, wherefore hee might not bee pronounced pronounced for an heretike, and for such a one to be denounced through his whole prouince. Also the said archbishop assigned to the foresaid Nicolas and Philip, the said day and place to answer peremptorily, and to say fully and plainly to the conclusions aforesaid, all sophistication of words and disputation set apart.

The names of the friers that sate vpon them.

Friers Preachers:

10. of June.

In the twentith day aforesaid of the said month of June, the pere and place aboue prefixed, before the foresaid archbishop, sitting in his tribunal seat, in the presence of diuers doctors of Diuinitie, and lawyers, both ciuill and canon; personally appeared master Nicolas Herford, and Philip Reppingdon, bachelars of Diuinitie, and John Ashton, master of Art. Where the foresaid Nicolas & Philip, being required by the said archbishop to answere, and say fully and plainly their iudgement vpon the conclusions prefixed, whereunto the said archbishop had assigned to the said Nicolas & Philip the same terme; did exhibit to the said archbishop there iudicially sitting, certain answers in writting contained, after the maner of indenture: the tenor thereof here vnder is contained, and after the same forme answered to the said conclusions. The tenor of which indenture containing the foresaid conclusions to them moued as afore, followeth in these words.

Herford and Reppingdon appeare.

The protestation of Nicolas, Philip, and Iohn, with their articles and answers to the same.

The protestation of Herford and Ashton, exhibited to the archbishop.

WE protest here as before, publikely in these presents, that we intend to be humble & faithfull children to the church and holy Scripture, and to obey in all things the determinations of the church. And if it shall chance vs at any time, which God forbid, to swarue from this our intention, we submit our selues humbly to the correction of our reuerend father, lord archbishop of Canturbury, and primate of all England and of all other which haue interest to correct such swarners. This protestation premised, thus we answer to the conclusions aforesaid.

Articles with the answers.

That the substance of materiall bread and wine remaineth in the sacrament of the altar after consecration.

After the sense contrary to the Decretall, beginning Firmiter credimus; we grant that it is heresie.

That the accidents doe not remaine without the subiect, after consecration of the sacrament.

After the sense contrary to that Decretall Cum Marthe, we grant that it is heresie.

That Christ is not in the sacrament, the selfe same truly and really in his owne corporall presence.

Although this conclusion as the words stand, sound to be probable and intelligible, yet in the sense contrary to the Decretall in Cle. Si dudum: we grant that it is heresie. And briefly concerning this whole matter of the sacrament of the altar, as touching also all other things, we professe that we will both in word and sense, hold with the holy Scripture, with the determination of the holy church, and sayings of the holy doctors.

Obstinatly to affirme that it hath no foundation in the Gospell, that Christ ordained the masse.

We grant that it is heresie.

That God ought to obey the diuell.

In this sense, that God in his own person or essence, ought to obey the diuell with the obedience of necessity.

We grant that it is heresie.

If a man be duly contrite, that all externall confession is to him superfluous and vnprofitable.

We grant that it is heresie.

If the pope be a reprobat and an euill man, and consequently a member of the the diuell, he hath no power ouer the faithfull of Christ, giuen to him of any, vnlesse it be of Cesar.

We grant that it is heresie.

That after pope Vrban the 6. none is to be received for pope, but that we ought to liue after the manner of the Grecians, vnder our owne lawes.

We grant that it is heresie.

To say, that it is against the holy Scripture for ecclesiasticall persons to haue temporall possessions.

If obstinacie be ioined withall, we grant that it is heresie.

That no prelat ought to excommunicat any man, vnlesse he know him before to be excommunicat of God.

We grant that it is an error. Vnderstanding this knowledge to meane an experimental knowledge: so that herewith may stand the decree of the church. 11. q. 3. Nemo Episco.

That hee which doth so excommunicat, is thereby an heretike or excommunicat.

After the sense agreeing with the other before, we grant to be an error.

That a prelat excommunicating a clerke, which appealeth to the king or counsell of the realme, in so doing, is a traitor to God, the king, and the realme.

We grant it is an error.

That they which leaue off to preach, or to heare the word of God and the Gospell preached, for the excommunication of men, are excommunicat, and in the day of iudgement shall be counted for traitors to God.

Vnderstanding this conclusion vniuersally so, as scripture and lawes doe vnderstand such indefinit propositions: wee grant it as an error.

To affirme that it is lawfull for any deacon or priest, to preach the word of God without the authority of the sea apostolike, or catholike bishop, or of any other whose authority he knoweth sufficient.

We grant it is an error.

To affirme that there is no ciuill lord, no bishop nor prelat while he is in mortall sinne, we grant it is an error.

That temporall lords may at their pleasure take away the temporall goods from churches, offending habituliter: wee grant it is an error, after this sense, that they may so take away temporall goods of the churches, without the rules limitted in the lawes of the church and kingdomes.

That the vulgar people may correct the lords offending at their pleasure: vnderstanding by this word may, that they may doe it by the law: we grant it is an error, because that subiects haue no power ouer their lords.

That tithes be pure almes, and that parishioners may for the offences of their curats, detaine the same, and bestow them to others at their pleasure: vnderstanding by this word may, as before, to may by the law: we grant it is an error.

That speciall prayers applied to any one person by priests or religious men, doe no more profit then the generall prayers, if there be no let by the may to make them vnlike: vnderstanding this conclusion vniuersally negatiuely, and vnderstanding by speciall prayers, the prayers made vpon speciall deuotion, and generall prayers of generall deuotion: then after this sense, no such speciall prayers applied to any one person, by special orators doe profit more specially the said person, then generall prayers doe, which are made of the same, and for the same persons; we grant it is an error.

Wee that giueth almes to the friers, or to any frier that preacheth, is excommunicat, both he that giueth, and he that taketh: vnderstanding this proposition vniuersally, or conditionally, as is aforesaid: we grant to be an error.

That who so entreth into any priuat religion whatsoeuer, is thereby made more vnapt and vnmeet to obey the commandements of God: we grant it is an error.

That such holy men as did institute any priuat religions whatsoeuer, as well of secular hauing possessions, as of friers hauing none, in so instituting, did sinne: vnderstanding this reduplicatiuely or vniuersally: we grant it is an error. After this sense, that what Saint soeuer did institute priuat religions, instituting the said religion vpon that consideration as they did, did sinne.

That religious men liuing in priuat religions, be not of the religion of Christ: vnderstanding the proposition vniuersally, as is aforesaid: we grant it is an error.

That friers are bound to get their liuings by the labour of their hands, and not by begging: vnderstanding this proposition vniuersally, as before: we grant it is an error.

These things haue we spoken reuerend father and lord, in all humility, vnder your gracious supportation and benigne correction, according to our abilities and slender capacities for this present (the honor of God, the veritie of our beliefe, and safe conscience in all points reserued;) more humbly yet beseeching you, that if any other thing there be, that seemeth meet vnto your excellencie and discretion to bee more or otherwise said and spoken, that your gracious fatherhod would vouchsafe to informe vs as children by the sacred Scriptures, by the determination of the church, or authorities of the holy doctors. And doubtlesse with ready wils, and obedient minds, we will consent and agree vnto your wholsome doctrine. Praying therefore please your fatherhod, right reuerend in God, according to the accustomed manner of your benignitie, fauorably to accept these our words and sayings, forasmuch as the foresaid conclusions were neuer by vs either in schooles affirmed, or els in sermons publikely preached.

Further examinations and proceedings against the foresaid Nicolas Herford, Philip Reppingdon, and John Ashton.

Further examinations against the said Nicolas, Philip, and Iohn, Nicolas Herford, Philip Reppingdon.

WHen at these answers were made vnto the said lord archb. of Canturburie, the said Nicolas and Philip, for that they answered not vnto the meaning and words of the first conclusion expresly; but contrary to the sense of the decretall Firmiter credimus, were there iudicially examined what their sense and meaning was: but they would not expres the same. Then was it it demanded of them according to the sense of the same conclusion declared on the behalfe of the said lord of Canturbury, whether the same materiall bread in numero, which before the consecration is laid vpon the altar, remaine in the proper substance and nature, after the consecration in the sacrament of the altar; and likewise of the wine? To this the said Nicolas and Philip answered, that for that time they could say no more therein, then that they had already answered, as is before alleaged in writing. And for that vnto the sense and words of the second conclusion they answered not fully and expressly, but in a sense contrary to the Decretall Cum Marthe, being asked what was the meaning, would not expresse the same: therefore it was demanded of them according to the sense of the same conclusion, declared in the behalfe of the said lord of Canturbury, whether those corporall accidences which formally were in the bread and wine before the consecration of them after the consecration were in the same bread and wine, or else were subiected in any other substance? To this they answered, that better to answer, then before in their writings they already had, for that time they could not. To the meaning also and words of the third conclusion, for that they answered not plainly and expressly, but in sense contrary to the Decretall in the Clementines Si dudum, being asked what was that sense and meaning, would not declare the same: Therefore it was then demanded of them, according to the sense of the same conclusion, declared on the behalfe of the said lord of Canturburie: Whether the same body of Christ, which was assumpted of the Virgin, be in the sacrament of the altar, secundum speciem, euen as he is really in carnall substance, proper essence and nature. To this they answered, that for that time they could say no more then that they had said, as before is specified in writing.

John Ashton examined. 20. Junij, an. 1382.

Furthermore, to the sense and text of the fifth conclusion, for that they answered not fully and expressly, being asked whether God ought any manner of obedience to the diuell or not: they said, yea, as the obedience of loue, because he loueth him, and punished him as he ought. And to proue that God ought to so obey the diuell they offered themselues to the fire.

To the 11. conclusion, for that they answered not expressly, being asked whether a prelat might excommunicat any man being in the state of grace: said, yea.

Vnto the 20. conclusion, for that they answered not fully, simply, and expressly, being demanded whether speciall or generall prayers did most profit, and were of greater force: they would not say but that speciall.

Vnto the last conclusion, for that they answered neither simply, nor expressly, and being demanded particularly, whether any seier were bound to get his liuing with his manuall labor, so that it might not bee lawfull for them to liue by begging: they would make no answer at all.

After that the foresaid lord archbishop of Canturbury demanded of all the foresaid doctors, what their iudgement was touching the answers that were made vpon all and singuler such conclusions. All which doctors and euery of them severally said: that there all the answers giuen vnto the first, second, third, and firth conclusions, as is before recited, were insufficient, heretical & subtill; and that all the answers made specially to the tenth, ninth, and last conclusions, as is aboue mentioned, were insufficient, erroneous, and peruerse. Whereupon the said lord archbishop of Canturburp, considering the said answers to be heretical, subtill, erroneous, and peruerse, accordingly as the said doctors (as is aforesaid) had weighed and considered; admonished the said Nicolas and Philip sufficiently vnder these forme of words.

The name of Christ being called vpon: we William by Gods permission, archbishop of Canturburp, metropolitan of all England, and legat of the Apostolike sea, and through all our prouince of Canturburp, inquisitor of all heretical prauitie; doe sufficiently and lawfully admonish and cite you Nicolas Herford, and Philip Reppington, professors of Diuinitie, hauing this day and place assigned you by your owne consent and due petition, peremptorily to answer and to say fully and plainly your opinions touching these conclusions, whereunto we doe refer you, all subtill, sophisticall, and logicall words set apart) being thereunto sworne, cited and commanded. Which thing to doe, without cause reasonable or any licence giuen thereunto, you neither haue bin willing, nor are willing, nay rather ye contemptuously refused to answere to some of those conclusions before vs iudicially, according to the effect of our monition, citation and commandement beforesaid. And for that ye haue answered vnto some of them heretically, and to other some erroneously, although not fully, we admonish and cite you one, twice, and thrice, and that peremptorily: that plainly and fully (all subtill, sophisticall and logicall words set apart) you and euery of you answer vnto the same conclusions, and vnto that feriie and meaning by vs limitted; vnder the paine that otherwise such conclusions deserue by you confessed, and that for the same conclusions, you ought to haue.

Which admonition being made and done, for that the foresaid Nicolas and Philip would make none other answer; the said lord archbishop of Canturburp concluded that businesse, prefixing and assigning vnto the foresaid Nicolas and Philip, eight daies space; that is to say, vntill the 27. day of the same month: and that then they should appeare before the said lord archbishop of Canturburp, wheresoeuer within the same his prouince of Canturburp he should fortune to be, to heare his decree that should be made in that behalfe. This done, the foresaid archbishop of Canturburp monished and cited lawfully and sufficiently, John Ashton vnder the tenor of these words following.

Admonition and citation of the archbishop against the accused.

Another day assigned for the examinatp to appeare.

In the name of God: We William by Gods permission, archbishop of Canturburp, primat of all England, legat of the sea Apostolicall, and through all our prouince of Canturburp of all heretical prauity chefe inquisitor: doe monish and cite thee, John Ashton, master of Art, and student in Diuinity, appearing before vs, iudicially to say and speake the plaine verite touching these conclusions, to the which we doe referre thee: and to the which we haue caused thee to sweare, laying thy hand vpon a booke: as being also otherwise by vs admonished and commanded, to hope this day and place by vs appointed, for the third time peremptorily, to propone such reasonable cause (if thou hast any) wherefore thou oughtest not to be pronounced an heretike. And sufficiently and lawfully we monish and cite thee, the first, second and third time, and that peremptorily, that thou fully and plainly (all subtill, sophisticall, and logicall words set apart,) doe answere vnto the same conclusions, vnder the paine that vnto such conclusions belong and on thy part confessed, and that thou for such conclusions oughtest to suffer. Which monition being thus premised, the said archbishop read the first conclusion, and of the said John inquired what was his opinion and meaning therein? and hereupon he said his mind concerning the foresaid monition. Then the foresaid John Ashton, being often required by the archbishop, that he would answere in the Latine tongue, to thole questions which were demanded of him, because of the lay people that stood about him; hee crying out in the English tongue, vttered friuolous and oppobrious contumelies to mone and excite the people against the said archbishop, as it should seeme. Neither did hee vnto the first conclusion, nor vnto any of these other conclusions, effectually and pertinently seeme to them to answere: but rather by subtilties and chists, saying oftentimes, and as expressly as Luke said, it was sufficient for him to beleeue as the holy church beleeued. Then the said archbishop examined him vpon the first conclusion touching the sacrament of the altar: whether that after the words of consecration, there remaineth materiall bread, particular bread, or vniuersall bread? He said the matter passed his vnderstanding, and therefore said, he would in that forme and manner answere, and otherwise not. But amongst other things, hee spake in derding wise vnto the said archbishop against this word Materiall, saying: you may put that in your purse, if you haue any. Whereupon the said archbishop, calling that an vntrue and foolish answere, as the rest of the doctors did (of whom mention was made before) rather for that he was a graduat in the Schooles, further proceed against the said John Ashton in this wise.

Proceile made by the archbishop against John Ashton.

John Ashton heretically reasoned.

The archbishop and his fellows bore the English tongue for the people.

The answer of Sym. Hilman.

Whether materiall bread remaine in the sacrament.

Sir. Herford and Mast. Reppington for not appearing, excommunicated.

And thou John Ashton monished & commanded by vs, as is aforesaid, after thine oth taken; without any reasonable cause or any other licence, neither wouldst thou, nor yet wilt, but refusedst, and yet doest cotemptuously, to answere vnto such conclusions before vs, iudicially according to our monition and commandement aforesaid; doe hold all such conclusions by thee confessed, and thee the foresaid John, with all thy said conclusions conuicted. And therefore we doe pronounce and declare by sentence giuing, that thou John Ashton, concerning those conclusions, which by vs with good deliberation of diuers prelats our suffragans, and also diuers and sundry professors of Diuinitie, and other wise men and learned in the law, according to the canonicall sanctions, being condemned and declared for an hertike and heretically, to haue been, and still is an heretike, and thy conclusions heretical. And as touching thy other conclusions, by vs heretofore counted erroneous, and for erroneous condemned: wee doe pronounce and declare sententially by these our writings, that both thou hast erred, and doest erre.

Excommunication pronounced by the archbishop.

Vpon the same 20. day of June, in the yere and place aboue recited, the foresaid lord of Canturburp being desirous, as he pretended, to be informed by Thomas Hilman, bachelar of Diuinity, there being present, and sometime fauoring the said master John Ashton, what his iudgement and opinion was touching the foresaid conclusions, prefixed and assigned vnto the said Thomas (for that time demanding the same deliberation and day) eight daies after, that is to say, the 28. of the said month, that he appeare before the archbishop of Canturburp, wheresoeuer within his said prouince of Canturburp, he should then happen to be, to declare plainly and fully what his iudgement and opinion was, touching the foresaid conclusions. 28 day of June an. 1381.

The Friday next following, that is to say, the 28. day of June, the foresaid S. Nicolas, Philip, and Thom. Hilman, appeared before the said archbishop, and lord Inquisitor of Canturburp, in the chapel of his manor of Otford, in the diocese of Canturburp, there sitting in his tribunall seat. To whom the said bishop of Canturburp saying: that for because at that time he had not the presence and assistance of the doctors in diuinity, and of the canon and ciuill law; he continued the said businesse touching the said Nicolas, Philip, and Thomas, in the same state wherein then it was, til Tuesday next & immediatly ensuing: that is to say, the first day of July, the yeere of the Lord aforesaid, and prefixed vnto the said Nicolas, Philip, and Thomas Hilman the same day to appeare before him, wheresoeuer within his prouince of Canturburp, he should then chance to be, to doe that which vpon the said 28. day, they were purposed to doe together or apart.

1. day of July, an. 1382.

Which 1. day being come, the foresaid archbishop in the chiefe house of his church at Canturburp, before the houre of 9. with the doctors, whose names are vnder contained and other clerks a great multitude; expected the foresaid Nicolas, Philip, and Thomas, long time, by the beadle calling them and lowking after them, who neuerthelesse appeared not before two of the clocke after dinner the same day, continuing the foresaid businesse in the prittine state till the same houre. At which houre, the foresaid archbishop of Canturburp hauing assistants, the doctors and clerks vnder recited, examined the foresaid master Thomas Hilman, then and there iudicially appearing, what his opinion was touching the foresaid conclusions: who at them and the meaning of them somewhat stammering, at last, to all and singuler the same conclusions then to him read and expounded, thus answered: I suppose and iudge all and singuler those conclusions lately condemned by my lord of Canturburp that now is, together with the counsell and consent of his clerks, to be heretical and erroneous, euen as the same my lord of Canturburp and other doctors of diuinitie, of the canon and ciuill law, by common consent and counsell haue supposed and thought. And that the same (being for heresies and errors as before is said condemned) doe as much as in mee is condemne; protesting that I will hold and affirme the contrary of those conclusions, and in the same faith liue and die. Then said the archbishop of Canturburp, then and there sitting as tribunall of Iudge, pronouncing the said masters, Nicolas and Philip, (long in court called before and tarried for, and yet not appearing) guilty of contumacie and disobedience: excommunicated them for the penalty of this their contumacie, in tenor of these words following.

12. day of July, an. 1382.

We William by the grace of God archbishop of Canturburp, Primat of England, Legat of the apostolicall sea, and through all our prouince of Canturburp, of all heretical prauitie chiefe inquisitor; doe pronounce master Nicolas Herford, and master Philip Reppington, professors of Diuinitie, hauing this day and place by our petition, appointed to appeare and decree in this businesse of heretical prauitie (being in court by our Bedle long called and taried for, and yet not appearing) to be stubborne and disobedient persons: and for the penalitie of this their contumacie, we doe excommunicat them and either of them by these presents.

The denouncing of the excommunication against Nicolas Herford, and Philip Reppington.

The 12. day of July, an. 1382. Excommunication to be denounced at Pauls crosse.

WIlliam by Gods permission archbishop of Canturburp, &c. To our beloued sonne in Christ, whosoeuer hee be, that this instant sunday shal preach at Pauls crosse in London, salutation, grace and blessing. Forasmuch as we prefixed a certaine competent day and place to master Nicolas Herford, and master Philip Reppington, Canon regular of the monastery of our Lady of Leicester, being doctors of Diuinitie, and of heretical prauitie vehemently suspected: After certaine answers not fully made, but impertinently and nothing to the purpose, as also heretically and erroneous: In diuers places of our said prouince commonly, generally, and publikely taught and preached, and therefore that they should iudicially appeare before vs, to doe and to receiue peremptorily in that behalfe, what thing soeuer the quality of that businesse should moue vs vnto: and that we haue so for their contumacie, in not appearing before vs at that day and place iudicially appointed, as right therein required: Wee by these presents command and commit vnto you, firmely inioining you, that when all the multitude of people shall be gathered together to heare your sermon, that in the day and place appointed, you publikely and solemnly denounce the foresaid Nicolas and Philip, holding vp a crosse, and lighting vp a candle, and then throwing downe the same vpon the ground, to haue been so and in such maner excommunicated, and still be.

Fare ye well. In our manor house at Lambeth, the 12. day of July, the yeere of our Lord, 1382. and first yeere of our translation.

The citation against the said Nicolas and Philip.

WIlliam by the grace of God, &c. To our welbeloued son M. Robert Rigge, Chancellor of the Vniuersitie of Oxford, salutation, &c. For as much as we haue prefixed a competent day and place to M. Nicolas Herford, and M. Philip Reppington, &c. as before: We straitly charge and command you, that you publikely and solemnly denounce in the church of our Lady, and in the schooles of the Vniuersity, the foresaid Nicolas and Philip, to haue bin by vs excommunicated, and still be. And that you further cite, or cause to be cited peremptorily, the foresaid Nicolas and Philip, that they & euery of them appeare before vs within 15. daies after the date of this citation, wheresoeuer we shall fortune vs, within our said prouince of Canturbury, then to be: To heare and see how we meane to proceed against them, and euery of them, concerning the foresaid heretical and erroneous conclusions, according to the forme of retroactions and quality of the businesse in this behalfe had and vsed. And that both of the day of the receit of this present citation, of the maner and forme thereof or if that you shall apprehend by personall citation the said Nicolas and Philip, or either of them, or whether they shall be absent and hide themselues, as of euery thing else, which in this behalfe you shall thinke meet to be done: that betweene this and the feast of S. Laurence, you cleerly certifie vs by your letters patents, containing the effect of these things.

Fare ye well. At our manor of Lambeth the 13. day of July, the yeere of our Lord 1382. and first yeere of our translation.

Against this blind excommunication of the said archbishop, the parties excommunicat commenced and exhibited their appeale vnto the bishop of Rome. Which appeale of theirs as insufficient, or rather to him vnpleasant, the said archbishop vterly reiected (as might oftentimes ouercommeth right) proceeding in his preconceiued excommunication against them, and writing moreouer his letters to him that should preach next at Pauls crosse, as is aforesaid, to denounce & to publish openly the said Nicolas Herford, and Philip Reppington to be excommunicat, for that not appearing at their terme assigned. Which was in the 13. day of the month of July.

The excommunication of Herford and Reppington denounced at Pauls crosse.

Which archbishop moreouer the said yere, month and day aforesaid, sent also another letter to S. Rigge, commissary of Otford, straitly inioining and charging him not onely to denounce the said sentence of excommunication, and to giue out publike citation against them, but also to make diligent search and inquisition through all Otford for them, to haue them apprehended and sent vp to him, personally before him to appeare at a certaine day prescribed for the same. Whereby may appeare how busie this bishop was in disquieting and persecuting these poore men, whom rather he should haue nourished and cherished as his brethren. But as his labor is paid, so his reward will follow, at what day the great archbishop of our soules shall iudicially appeare in his tribunall seat, to iudge both the quicke and the dead.

13. day of July, an. 1382.

The archbishop yet not contented with this, doth moreouer by all meanes possible, sollicite the king to ioine withall the power of his temporall sword, for that he well perceiued, that hitherto as yet the popish clergie had not authorite sufficient by ante publike law or statute of this land to proceede vnto death against any person what soeuer, in cafe of religion, but onely by the blinded tyranny and example of the court of Rome. Wherefore (gentle Reader) for thy better vnderstanding, the practise of the Romish prelats in seeking the kings helpe to further their bloudie purpose against the good saints of God. Which king being but young, and vnder yeeres of ripe iudgement, partly induced, or rather seduced by importune suite of the foresaid archbishop, partly also either for feare of the bishops (for kings cannot alwaies doe in their realmes what they will) or else perhaps inticed by some hope of subsidie to be gathered by the clergy, was content to adioine his priuate assent (such as it was) to the setting downe of an odiinance, which was indeed the very first law that is to be found made against religion and the professours thereof, bearing the name of an Act made in the parliament holden at Westminster, Anno 5. Rich. 2. Where among sundry other statutes there published, and yet remaining in the printed bookes of

Letters to burne any man for religion.

The king circumuented by the archbishop.

The first law to be found made by the clergy for burning the professours of religion.

An. 5. R. secundi.

of Statutes, this supposed statute is to be found, cap. 5. & vltimo, as followeth.

This statute was made by the clergy without the consent of the commons.

Item forsomuch as it is openly knowne that there be diuers euill persons within the realme, going from countie to countie, and from towne to towne, in certaine habits vnder dissimulation of great holinesse, and without the licence of the Ordinaries of the places, or other sufficient authoritie, preaching daily not onely in churches and churchyards, but also in markets, faires, and other open places where a great congregation of people is, diuers sermons containing heresies and notorious errors, to the great emblemishing of Christian faith and destruction of the lawes, and of the estate of holy church, to the great perill of the soules of the people, and of all the realme of England, as more plainly is found and sufficiently proued before the reuerend father in God the archbishop of Canturbury, and the bishops and other prelats, maisters of Diuinitie, and doctors of canon and of ciuill law, and a great part of the clergy of the said realme, specially assembled for this great cause; which persons doe also preach diuers matters of slander, to ingender discord and dissension betwixt diuers estates of the said realme, as well spirituall as temporall, in exciting of the people to the great perill of all the realme: which preachers cited or summoned before the Ordinaries of the places there to answer to that whereof they be impeached, they will not obey to their summons and commandements, nor care not for their monitions nor censures of the holy church, but expressly despise them. And moreouer, by their subtile and ingenious words, doe draw the people to heare their sermons, and doe maintaine them in their errors by strong hand, and by great routs: It is ordained and assented in this present parliament, that the kings commissions be made and directed to the Shiriffes and other ministers of our soueraigne Lord the king, or other sufficient persons learned, and according to the certifications of the prelats thereof to be made in the Chancery from time to time, to arrest all such preachers, and also their fautors, maintainers, and abetters, and to hold them in arrest and strong prison, till they will submit to them according to the law and reason of holy church. And the king willeth & commaundeth, that the Chancellor make such commissions at all times, that he by the prelats or any of them shall bee certified and thereof required, as is aforesaid.

Note: that this statute was repealed after, vpon the instance of the commons.

An examination of the foresaid supposed Statute, and of the inualidatie thereof.

WHich supposed Statute, for as much as it was the principall ground whereupon proceeded all the persecution of that time: it is therefore not impertinent to examin the same more particularly, wherein shall appeare, that as the same was fraudulently and vnduely deuised by the prelats onely; so was it in like manner most iniuriously and vnorderly executed by them. For immediatly vppon the publishing of this law, without further warrant either from the king or his counsell, commissions vnder the great seale of England were made in this forme. Richard by the grace of God, &c. vt pater act. pag. 541. Witnesse my selfe at Westminster the 26. day of June, in the sixth yeere of our raigne. Without more words of warrant vnder written, such as in like cases are both vsuall and requisite: Viz. per ipsum Regem: per Regem & concilium: or per breue de priuato Sigillo. All or any of which words being vtterly wanting in this place, as may bee seene in the kings records of that time: it must therefore be done either by warrant of this foresaid Statute, or else without any warrant at all. Whereupon it is to be noted, that whereas the said Statute appointed the commissions to bee directed to the Shiriffe, or other ministers of the kings, or to other sufficient persons learned for the arresting of such persons: the said commissions are directed to the archbishop and his Suffragans, being as it appeareth parties in the case, authorizing them further without either the words, or reasonable meaning of the said Statute, to impulon them in their owne houses, or where else pleased them.

No vsuall words of warrant affixed to this commission.

Besides also, what manner of law this was, by whom deuised, and by what authority the same was first made and established, iudge by that that followeth: viz.

In the Vtas of S. Michael, next following at a parliament summoned and holden at Westminster, the firth yeere of the said king, among sundry petitions made to the king by his commons, whereunto he assented, there is one in this forme, Article 52.

The petition of the commons for the repeale of the foresaid statute.

Item, prayen the commons, that whereas an Estatute was made the last parliament in these words: It is ordained in this present parliament, that commissions from the king be directed to the Shiriffes and other ministers of the king, or to other sufficient persons skilfull, and according to the certificats of the prelats thereof to be made vnto the chancery from time to time to arrest all such preachers, and their fautors, maintainers, and abetters. And them to detaine in strong prison, vntill they will submit themselues according to reason, and law of holy church. And the king willeth and commaundeth, that the Chancellor make such commissions at all times, as shall be by the prelats or any of them certified, and thereof required, as is aforesaid. The which was neuer agreed nor granted by the commons: but what soeuer was moued therein, was without their assent. That the said Statute be therefore disanulled. For it is not in any wise their meaning, that either themselues, or such as shall succeed them, shall be further inabled or bound by the prelats, then were their ancestors in former times, whereunto is answered, il plaist aa, Roy. r. the king is pleased.

The king reiecteth the petition.

Hereby notwithstanding the former vniust law of an. 5. was repealed, and the fraud of the framers thereof sufficiently discouered: yet such meanes was there made by the prelats, that this act of repeale was neuer published, nor euer sithence imprinted with the rest of the statutes of that parliament. Insomuch as the said repeale being concealed, like commissions and other processe were made from time to time, by vertue of the said bastard statute, as well burning all the raigne of this king, as euer sithence against the professors of religion, as shall hereafter by the grace of God appeare in the second peare of king Henry the 4. where the clergy pursued the like practise. And now againe to the story of our Oxford Diuines, and of the archbishop, to whom the king writeth his letters patents, first to the archbishop, then to the Vicechancellor of Oxford in forme as followeth.

The kings letters patents to the Archbishop.

The kings letter against the fauorers of Wickliffe.

RIchard by the grace of God king of England, and lord of Ireland: To all those to whom these present letters shall come, greeting. By the petition of the reuerend father in God, William archbishop of Canturbury, Primate of England, exhibited vnto vs; we right well vnderstand: That diuers and sundry conclusions, very contrary to wholsome doctrine, and redounding both to the subuersion of the catholike faith, the holy church, and his prouince of Canturbury, in diuers and sundry places of the same his prouince haue beene openly and publikely preached, although damnably preached. Of the which conclusions, some as heresies, othersome as errors haue been condemned; but not before good and mature deliberation first therein had and vsed, and by common counsell of the said archbishop, his suffragans, and many doctors in Diuinity, and other clerks, and learned men in the holy scriptures, were sententially and wholesomely declared. Whereupon the said archbishop hath made this supplication vnto vs: that both for the coertion and due castigation of such as shall henceforth of an obstinat mind preach or maintaine the foresaid conclusions, that wee would vouchsafe to put to the same and helping hand of our kingly power. We therefore moued by the zeale of the catholike faith, whereof we be and will be defenders, and vnwilling that any such heresies or errors should spring vp within the limits of our dominion: Giue and grant speciall license and authoritie by the tenor of these presents, vnto the foresaid archbishop, and to his suffragans, to arrest and imprison either in their owne prisons, or any other, all and euery such person and persons, as shall either priuily, or apertly preach and maintaine the foresaid conclusions, so condemned; and the same persons so imprisoned there at their pleasures to detaine, till such time as they shall repent them and amend them of such heretical prauities, or else shall be of such arrests by vs and our counsel otherwise determined and prouided. Further charging and commanding all and singuler our liegemen ministers and subiects, of what state and condition soeuer they be, vpon their fidelity and allegiance, wherein they stand bound to vs, that by no meanes they either fauor, counsell, or helpe the preachers, or else maintainers of the said conclusions so condemned, or their fauourers, vpon paine and forfeiture of all that euer they haue. But that they obey and humbly attend vpon the said archbishop, his suffragans and ministers; in the execution of these presents; so that due and manifest publication against the foresaid conclusions and their maintainers, without any perturbation may be done and executed, as for the defence of our realme and catholike faith shall be thought most meet and requisite. In witnes whereof, we haue caused these our letters patents to be made.

Witnesse our selfe at Westminster the 16. day of June, and 6. yeere of our raigne.

The 16. day of June, an. 1382.

The kings letters patents to the Vicech.ancellor.

Another letter of the king to the Vicechancellor.

THe king: To the Chancellor and the procurators of the Vniuersitie of Oxford which now be, or for the time being shall bee, greeting. Moued by the zeale of Christian faith, whereof wee be, and alwaies will be defenders, and for our soules health induced thereunto, hauing a great desire to represse, and by condigne punishment to restraine the impugners of the foresaid faith, which newly and wickedly goe about and presume to sow their naughty and peruerse doctrine, within our kingdome of England, and to preach and hold damnable conclusions, so notoriously repugnant and contrary to the same faith, to the peruerting of our subiects and people, as wee vnderstand. Before they any further proceed in their malicious malicious errors, or else infect others: We haue by these presents appointed you to bee inquisitor generall (all the chiefe diuines of the said Vniuersitie being your assistants) and the same likewise to be done of al and singuler the graduats, diuines and lawyers of the same Vniuersity. And if they shall know any which be of the iurisdiction of the said Vniuersitie of Oxford, which be probably of them to be suspected in the fauour, beleefe, or defence of any heresie or error, and specially of any of the conclusions publikely condemned by the reuerend father, William, archbishop of Canturbury, by the counsel of his clergie, or els of any other conclusion like vnto any of them in meaning, or in words: and that if henceforth you shall find any that shall beleeue, fauour, or defend any of the foresaid heresies or errors, or any other such like, or else which shall be so bold to receiue into their houses and inns, master John Wickliffe, M. Nic. Herford, M. Philip Reppingdon, or M. John Ashton, or any other noted by probable suspition of any the foresaid heresies, or errors, or any other like vnto them in meaning, or in word: Or that shall presume to communicate with any of them, or else to defend or fauour any of such fauorers, receiuers, communicants and defenders, within seuen daies after the same shall appeare and be manifest vnto you, to banish and expell them from the Vniuersitie and towne of Oxford, till such time as they shall declare their innocencie before the archbishop of Canturburie for the time being, by manifest purgation. So notwithstanding, that such as be compelled to purge themselues, you certifie vs and the said archbishop vnder your seales, from time to time within one moneth that they be such maner of men. Commanding furthermore, that through all the halles of the said Vniuersitie, ye cause diligentlie to be searched and inquired out one or more of the foresaid booke or tractation of the edition or compiling of the foresaid master John Wickliffe, or Nicholas Herford; and that when and where soeuer ye shall chance to find any such booke or tractation, yee cause the same to be arrested and taken, and vnto the foresaid archbishop within one moneth (without correction, corruption, or mutation, whatsoeuer) word for word, and sentence for sentence, to be brought and presented. And therefore wee straitly enioyne and command you, vpon your fidelitie and allegeance wherein ye stand bound vnto vs, and vpon paine of forfeiture of al and singuler your liberties and priuiledges of your said Vniuersitie, and of all that euer you haue besides: that you giue your diligent attendance vpon the premisses, and that well and faithfully you execute the same in manner and forme aforesaid. And that you obey the foresaid archbishop, and his lawfull and honest mandates, that he shall thinke good to direct vnto you in this behalfe, as it is meete ye should. And we giue in charge vnto the Vicechancellor and maior of Oxford for the time being, and to all and singuler our sheriffes, vnder sheriffes, bailiffes, and subiects, by these presents: that they aid, obey, and bee attendant vpon you in the execution of the premisses. In witnesse whereof, &c. Witnesse the king at Westminster, the 13. day of July, the sixth yeere of his raigne.

The 13. day of July, an. 1382.

Another charge later of king Richard sent to Oxford against Wickliffe and his fellowers. The effect of the kings letter briefly comprehended.

Besides these letters patents, the said young king moued by the vnquiet importunitie of the archbishop, sendeth moreouer another speciall letter to the Vicechancellor and proctors of the Vniuersitie of Oxford. Wherein vnder a pretended zeale of defence of Christian faith, he straitly and sharpely enioyneth and alligneth them (for the vtter abolishing of those conclusions and opintons) to make a generall inquisition through the whole Vniuersitie, as well for the parties aforesaid, John Wickliffe, Nicolas Herford, Philip Reppington, John Ashton, and such other, as also for all other whom they vnto or iudge to be suspected of that doctrine, or to be maintainers, receiuers, and defenders of the foresaid parties, or their conclusions any manner of way; to the intent, that they being so apprehended through their diligent search, may bee within seuen daies of their admonitions expulsed the vniuersitie, and cited vp to the archb. of Cant. before him to appeare, and to stand to their answers. Willing moreouer and commanding the said vicechancellor and proctors with other regents their assistors, that if any person or persons in any house, hall, or colledge, or in any other place shall be found to haue any of their bookes, or treatises compiled by the said John Wickliffe, Nicolas Herford, &c. they will cause without delay the said person or persons, with their bookes to be arrested and attached, and presented within one moneth, without correction, corruption, or mutation, to the foresaid archbishop, vpon their faith and allegeance, as they will auoid the forfeiture of all and singuler the liberties and priuiledges to the vniuersitie appertaining. And that they will be obedient to the archbishop aforesaid in the ordering hereof, and all other his iniunctions to bee obeied in all things lawfull and honest. Giuing moreouer in these our letters charge and commandement to the maior, bailifes, and other the inhabitants of Oxford, to be assistant and attendant vnto the foresaid vicechancellor and proctors, executing the execution of the premisses, bearing the date of the foureteenth day of July: which was the yeere of our Lord, 1382.

Matters incident of Robert Rigges, Vicechancellor of Oxford, Nicolas Herford, and Philip Repington, with others.

THe Vicechancellor the same time in Oxford was M. Robert Rigges. The two proctors were John Huntman, and Walter Dish, who then as far as they durst, fauored the cause of John Wickliffe and that side. Insomuch, that the same time and yeere, which was an. 1382. vpon certaine publike sermons should be appointed customarily at the feast of the Ascension, and of Corpus Christi, to be preached in the cloyster of S. Frideswide (now called Christs Church) before the people, by the vicechancellor aforesaid and the proctors (the doings thereof the vicechancellor aforesaid, and proctors had committed to Philip Repington and M. Her. to that M. Her. should preach on the Ascension day, and Repington vpo Corpus Christi day.) First Herford beginning was noted to defend John Wickliffe, openly to be a faithfull, godly and innocent man: for the which no small adoe with outcries was among the friers. This Herford, after he had long fauoured and maintained Wickliffes part, grew first in suspition amongst the enemies of the truth. For allbeit as he began somewhat liberally and freelie to pronounce and vtter any thing which tended to the defence of Wickliffe, by and by the Carmelites, and all the orders of religion were in his top, and laid not a few heresies vnto his charge, the which they had strained here and there out of his sermons, and had compiled together in a certaine forme, by the hands of certaine notaries, through the industrie and diligence of one Peter Stokes a Carmelite, a kind of people prone and ready to all kind of mischiefe, tyrants, debate, and dissention. After this the feast of Corpus Christi drew neere, vpon which day it was lowed for that Repington should preach. This man was a canon of Leicester, and had before taken his first degree vnto doctorship: who preaching the same time at Bodgates, for the same sermon he became first suspended, and hated of the Pharisaicall brode of the friers. But through the great and notable dexteritie of his wit, (which all men did behold and see in him) accompanied with like modestie and honestie: he did so ouercome, or at the least asswage this crueltie and persecution which was towards him, that shortly after by the consent of the whole fellowship, he was admitted doctor. Who as soone as he had taken it vpon him, by and by hee stepped forth in the schooles, and began immediatly to shew forth and vtter, that which hee had long hidden and dissembled. Protesting openly, that in all mozall matters, he would defend Wickliffe. But as touching the sacrament he would as yet hold his peace, vntill such time as the Lord shall otherwise illuminate the hearts and minds of the clergie.

Peter Stokes standerd bearer to the papists.

Repington first canon of Leicester, after bishop of Lincolne.

Repington commeth doctor.

Now the day of Corpus Christi aforesaid approching neere, when the friers vnderstood that this man should preach shortly, fearing lest hee would rub the galles of their religion, they conuented with the archbi. of Cant. that the same day a little before that Philip should preach; Wickliffes conclusions which were priuatly condemned, should be openly defamed in the presence of the whole vniuersitie. The doing of which matter was committed to Peter Stokes frier, standerd-bearer and chiefe champion of that side against Wickliffe.

There were also letters sent vnto the commissarie, that he should helpe and aide him in publishing of the same conclusions, as is before declared.

These things thus done and finished, Repingdon at the houre appointed proceded to his Sermon. In the which sermon mong many other things, he was reported to haue vttered these sayings, or to this effect.

Notes of the Sermon of Repington.

That the popes or bishops ought not to be recommended aboue temporall lords.

Also that in mozall matters he would defend master Wickliffe as a true catholike doctor.

Moreouer, that the duke of Lancaster was very earnestly affected and minded in this matter, and would that all such should be receiued vnder his protection: Besides many things no which touched the praise and defence of Wickliffe.

And finallie, in concluding his sermon, he dismist the people with this sentence: I will (said hee) in the speculatiue doctrine, as appertaining to the matter of the sacrament of the altar, keepe silence and hold my peace, vntill such time as God otherwise shall instruct and illuminate the hearts of the clergy.

The Author is deceiued.

When the sermon was done, Repington entred into S. Frideswides Church, accompanied with many of his friends: who, as the enemies surmised, were priuilie weaponed vnder their garments, if need had been. Frier Stokes the Carmelite aforesaid, suspecting all this to be against him, and being afraid of hurt, kept himselfe within the Sanctuarie of the church, not daring as then to put out his head. The Vicechancellor and Repington, friendly saluting one another in the Church porch, sent away the people, and so departed euery man home to his owne house. There was not a little toy through the whole vniuersitie for that Sermon: but in the meane time, the vnquiet and busie Carmelite, slept not his matter.

matter. For first by his letters hee declared the whole order of the matter vnto the archbishoppe, exaggerating the perils and dangers that he was in, requiring and desiring his helpe and aid, preterminting nothing, whereby to moue and stirre vp the archbishops minde, which of his owne nature was as hot as a toste, as they say, and ready enough to prosecute the matter of his owne accord, though no man had pricke him forward thereunto. Vnlikes all this (three daies after) with a fierce and bold courage, the said Frier breathing out threatnings and hercsies against them, took the way vnto the schooles, minding there to proue, that the pope and the bishops ought to be pnished for before the lords temporall. Whiles this frier was thus occupied in the schooles, hee was mocked and derided of all men, and shortly after hee was sent for by the archbishop to London: whom immediatly after, the vicechancellor and Wightwell followed vp, to purge and cleare themselues and their adherents from the accusations of this Frier Peter. At the length they being examined vpon Wicklisses conclusions that were condemned: they did all consent, that they were worthily condemned. The vicechancellor being afterward accused for the contempt of the archbishops letters, when as he perceiued no law, that no excuse would prevaile to auoid that danger, humbling himselfe vpon his knees, hee desired pardon. The which when he had now againe (as is aforesaid) albeit very hardly obtained: by the helpe of the bishoppe of Winchester, hee was sent alwap againe with certaine commandements, and suspensions of heresies. Then began the hatred on either part to newbat to appeare and shew and specially all men were offended, and in the tops of these Friers and religious men, vpon whom whatsoeuer trouble or mischiefe was raised vp, they did impute it as to the authors and causers of the same. Amongst whom there was one Henry Crompe, a man like Cilicrian, a well learned diuine, which afterward was accused by the bishops of heresie. Hee at that time was openly suspected by the Conuersary, because in his lectures he called the heretikes Lollards, from his acts (as they terme them) in the Schole. Then he comming by and by vp to London, made his complaint vnto the archbishop and to the kings counsell.

Whereupon he obtaining the letters of the king, and of his counsell, by the vertue thereof (returning againe to the Vniuersitie) was released and restored againe to his former state: the words of which letter here followeth vnder written.

The kings letter to the Vniuersitie of Oxford, concerning the processe of Henry Crompe.

THe king to the Vicechancellour and procurators of the Vniuersitie of Oxford, greeting. Whereas we of late vnderstanding by the grieuous complaint of Henry Crompe, monke, and regent in Diuinitie within the said Vniuersity, how that he, being offisted by the reuerend father in God the archbishop of Canturbury, and by other clerks and diuines in the citie of London, to proceed in the condemnation of certaine conclusions erroneous and heretical, hath been therefore molested by your: and that you through sinister suggestions of some adiutaries (pretending the peace of the said Vniuersity) to haue been broken by the said Henry in his last lecture: did therefore call him before you to appeare and answere: and for his not appearing, did therefore pronounce him as obstinat, and conuict of peace breaking: also haue suspended the said Henrie from his lectures, and all scholasticall acts. And whereas we by our writ, did call you vp for the same, to appeare and answere before our counsell vnto the premisses: so that all things being well tried and examined by the said counsell, it was found and determined, that all your processe against the said Henry, was void and of none effect, and commandement giuen, that the said Henry should be restored and admitted againe to his former lectures and scholasticall acts, and to his pristine state as you know. To the intent therefore that this decree aforesaid should be more duly executed of your part, we here by these presents straitly charge and command you, that you speedily reuoking againe all your processe against the said Henry in the Vniuersitie aforesaid, with all other that followed thereof; doe admit and cause to be restored againe the said Henry to his scholasticall acts, his accustomed lectures and pristine estate, without all delay according to the forme of the decree and determination aforesaid. Enioining you moreouer, and your commissaries or deputies, and your successors, and all other masters, regent and not regent, and other presidents, officers, ministers, and schollers of the Vniuersitie aforesaid, vpon your faith and allegiance you owe to vs, that you doe not impeach, molest or greue, or cause to be grieued (any manner of way, priuie or apert) the said Frier Henry for the causes premised, or Frier Peter Stokes Carmelite, for the occasion of his absence from the Vniuersity, or Frier Stephan Packington Carmelite, or any other religious or secular person fauoring them, vpon the occasion of any either word or deed whatsoeuer, concerning the doctrine of master John wicklife, Nicolas Herford, and Philip Reppingten, or the reproofe and condemnation of their heresies and errors, or the correction of their fauorers, but that you doe procure the peace, vnity, and quiet, within the said Vniuersity, and chiefly betweene the religious and secular persons: and that you with all diligence nourish, increase, & preserue the same to the vttermost of your strength. And that you in no case omit to doe it accordingly, vpon the forfaitures of all and singuler the liberties and priuiledges of the Vniuersity aforesaid. Witnesse my selfe at Westminster the 14. day of July.

Frier Crompe, Iohn Stokes, Stephan Packington, Carmelites, and Philip Reppington, secular priests.

Mention was made, as you heard a little before, how master Rigges Vicechancellor of Oxford, comming vp with master Brightwel to the archbishop of Canturbury, was there straitly examined of the conclusions of Wickliffe, where hee notwithstanding, through the help of the bishop of Winchester, obtained pardon, and was sent alwap againe with commandements and charges, to seek out all the fauorers of John Wickliffe. This commandement being receiued, Nicolas Herford, and Philip Reppington (being priuily warned by the said vicechancellor, in the meane season conueied them out of sight, and fled to the duke of Lancaster for succor and helpe: but the duke, whether for feare, or what cause else I cannot say, in the end forsake his poore and miserable clients.

Herford and Reppington fled to the duke of Lancaster.

In the meane time, while they were fled thus to the duke, great search and inquisition was made for them, to cite and to apprehend them wheresoeuer they might be found. Whereupon the archbishop of Canturbury William Courtney, directed out his letters first to the vicechancellor of Oxford, then to the bishop of London named Robert Baybroke; charging them not only to excommunicat the said Nicolas and Philip within their iurisdiction, and the said excommunication to be denounced likewise throughout all the diocesse of his suffragans: but also moreouer, that diligent search and watch should be laid for them, both in Oxford and in London, that they might bee apprehended: requiring moreouer, by them to be certified againe, what they had done in the premisses. And this was written the fourteenth day of July, anno 1382. Ex Regist.

Letters of the archbishop to the vicechancellor.

Letters of the archbishop to the bishop of London.

Robert Baybrok bishop of London.

The 14. day of July, an. 1382.

Vnto these letters receiued from the archbishop, diligent certificat was giuen accordingly, as well of the bishop of London his part, as also of the vicechancellor, the tenor whereof was this.

The letter certificatorie of the Vicechancellor to the archbishop.

TO the reuerend father in Christ, lord William, archbishop of Canturbury, primat of all England, and legat of the Apostolike sea: Robert Rigges professor of Diuinity, and vicechancellor of the Vniuersity of Oxford, greeting with due honour. Your letters bearing the date of the 14. of July I haue receiued: by the authority whereof I haue denounced, and caused to be denounced effectually, the foresaid Nicolas and Philip, to haue bin, and to be excommunicat publikely and solemnly in the church of S. Mary, and in the schooles, and to be cited also personally, if by any meanes they might be apprehended, according as you commanded. But after diligent search laid for them of my part, to haue them personally cited and apprehended, I could not finde neither the said M. Nicolas, nor M. Philip: who haue hid or conueied themselues, vnknowne to me, as here is well knowne. Whereof I thought here to giue signification to your Fatherhood. Sealed and testified with the seale of mine office. From Oxford the 25. of July.

The letter of Rob. Rigges vicechancellor of Oxford to the archbishop.

The 25. day of July, an. 1382.

In the meane time, Nicolas Herford and Reppington being repulsed of the duke, and destitute (as was said) of his supportation, whether they were sent, or of their owne accord went to the archbishop, it was vncertaine. This I finde in a letter of the foresaid archbishop, contained in his regster: that Reppington the 23. day of October the same yere 1382. was reconciled againe to the archbishop, and also by his generall letter was released, and admitted to his scholasticall acts in the Vniuersitie. And so was also John Ashton, of whom (Christ willing) more shall follow hereafter. Of Nicolas Herford all this while I finde no speciall relation.

Herford and Reppington repulsed from the duke of Lancaster.

The 23. day of October, Reppington reconciled by the archbishop.

John Ashton reconciled by the archbishop.

In the meane time, about the twenty three of the month of September the said yere, the king sent his mandate to the archbishop for collecting of a subsidie, and to haue a conuocation of the clergy summoned, against the next parliament, which should begin the eighteenth day of Nouember. The archbishop likewise on the fifteenth day of October, directed his letters monitory (as the manner is) to Robert Baybroke bishop of London, to giue the same admonition to all his suffragans, and other of the clergy within his prouince for the assembling of the conuocation aforesaid. All which done and executed, the parliament begunne, being holden at Orford the eighteenth day of Nouember, where the conuocation was kept in the monastery of Frideswide in Orford. In the which conuocation, the archbishop, with other bishops there sitting in their pontificalibus, declared two causes of that their present assembly, whereby (saith he) to represse heresies, which began newly in the realme to spring, and for correcting other excesses in the church. The other cause (said he) was to aid and support the king with some necessary subsidie of money to be gathered, which thus declared declared, the conuocation was continued till the day following, which was the 19. of Nouember.

The 19. day of Nouember, An. 1382.

At the said day and place, the archbishop with the other prelats assembling themselues as before: the archbishop after the vsed solemnitie, willed the procurators of the clergie, appointed to sit euery diocesse, to consult within themselues, in some conuenient seuerall place, what they thought for their parts touching the redresse of things, to bee notified and declared to him and to his brethren, &c.

Furthermore, forsomuch (saith he) as it is so noysed through all the realme, that there were certaine in the Vniuersitie of Oxford, which did hold and maintaine conclusions (as he calleth them) heretical and erroneous condemned by him, and by other lawyers and doctors of Diuinitie: he therefore assigned the bishops of Sarum, Hereford and Rochester, with William Rugge then vicechancellor of the Vniuersitie of Oxford, & beliue Robert Rigge (was then displaced) as also William Berton, and John Wodeleton doctors; giuing them his full authoritie with cursing and banning, to compell them to search and to enquire with all diligence and waies possible, ouer all and singuler whatsoeuer, either Doctors, Bachelors, or scholars of the said Vniuersitie, which did hold, teach, maintaine, and defend, in schooles or out of schooles, the said conclusions heretical (as he called them) or erroneous, and afterward to giue certificate truely and plainely touching the premisses. And thus so, that day the assemblie brake vp to the nert, and so to the nert, and the third being Monday, the 24. day of Nouember: Ex Regist. W. Courtney.

Rob. Rigge displaced from the Vicechancellorship. Inquisition made at Oxford.

The 24. day of Nouember, An. 1382.

On the which day, in the presence of the prelats and the clergie in the chapter house of S. Frideswide, came in Philip Reppington (otherwise called of the brethren afterward Rampington) who there abiured the conclusions and affertions aforesaid, in this forme of words as followeth.

In Dei nomine, Amen. I Philip Repington, canon of the house of Leicester, acknowledging one catholike and apostolike faith, doe curse and also abiure all heresie, namely these heresies and errors vnder written, condemned and reproued by the decrees canonicall, and by you most reuerend father, touching which hitherto I haue beene defamed: condemning moreouer and reproning both them and the authors of them, and do confesse the same to be catholically condemned: And sweare also by these holy Euangelists, which here I hold in my hand, and doe promise, neuer by any perswasions of men, nor by any way hereafter, to defend or hold as true, any of the said conclusions vnder written: but doe and will stand and abhere in all things, to the determination of the holy catholike church, and to yours, in this behalfe. Quer and besides, all such as stand contrarie to this faith, I do pronounce them with their doctrine and followers worthie of euerlasting curse. And if I my selfe shall presume at any time to hold or preach any thing contrarie to the premisses, I shall be content to abide the seueritie of the canons. Subscribed with mine owne hand, and with mine owne accord, Philip Reppington. And thus the said Rampington was discharged, who afterward was made bishop of Lincolne, and became at length the most bitter and extreme persecutor of this side, of all the other bishops within the realme, as in processe hereafter may appeare.

The abiuration of Philip Reppington.

Philip Rampington after his abiuration became a terrible persecutor.

After the abiuration of this Repington, immediatly was brought in John Ashton, student of Diuinitie; who being examined of those conclusions, and willed to say his mind, answered: that he was too simple and ignorant; and therefore would not, and could not answere any thing clerely or distinctly to those conclusions. Whereupon the archbishop assigned to him Doctor Th. Rugge the vicechancellor, & other diuines, such as he required himselfe, to be instructed in the mysterie of those conclusions against the after noone: who then appearing againe after dinner before the archbishop and the prelats, did in like sort and forme of words abiure as did Repington before.

A short time my lord, for a man in one place, noone to learne a faith against his conscience. The abiuration of John Ashton.

Of this John Ashton we read, that afterward by Thomas Arundell archbishop of Canturburie, hee was cited and condemned; but whether he died in prison, or was burned, we haue yet no certainetie to shew. This is certaine by the plaine words of the Chronicle of saint Albons, that when the archb. with his Doctors and clerks sat in examination vpon this said John Ashton in London: the Londoners brake open the doore of the conclaue, ipsumq; Archiepiscopum in ciuitate sedentem impediuerunt, cum processum fecissct contra Iohannem Ashton, &c. That is, and did let the archbishop himselfe sitting in the citie of London, when he would haue made processe against J. Ashton. An. 1382. And thus much of J. Ashton.

Ex chron. Mon. S. Albani. J. Ashton. The Londoners open the doore where the archbishop sate against J. Ashton.

As touching Nicolas Herford, during the time of this conuocation, he did not appeare; and therefore had the sentence of excommunication. Against which he put his appeale from the archbishop to the king and his counsell. The archb. would not admit it, but finding faults and flops caused him to bee apprehended and inclosed in prison. Notwithstanding through the will of God, and good meanes he escaped out of the prison, returning againe to his former exercise, and preaching as hee did before, albeit in as couert and secret maner as hee could.

M. Herford would not appeare. N. Herford appealeth from the archbishop. M. Herford casting prison. Herford escapeth out of prison.

Wherupon the archbishop thundring out his bulles of excommunication against him, sendeth to all pastors and ministers, willing them in all churches, and all festiuall daies, to diuulge the said his excommunication against him, to all men: Whereto he moreouer and sendeth speciall charge to all and singuler of the latie, to beware that their simplicitie be not deceiued by his doctrine, but that they like catholike children will auoide him, and cause him of all other to be auoided.

Furthermore, not contented with this, he addresseth also his letter vnto the king, requiring also the aide of his temporall sword to chop off his necke, whom he had alreadie cast downe. See and note Reader, the scraphicall charitie of these priestly prelats towards the poore redeemed flocke of Christ. And yet these be they which washing their hands with Pilate, sap and pretend: Nobis non licet interficere quenquam: It is not our part to kill any man. The copie of the letter written to the king is this.

The letter of the archbishop to the king.

TO the most excellent prince in Christ, &c. William, &c. greeting in him by whom kings doe reigne, and princes beare rule. Vnto your kingly celsitude by the tenour of these presents we intimate, that one master Nicolas Herford doctor of Diuinitie, for his manifest contumacie and offence in not appearing before vs being called at the day and place assigned, therfore is inwrapped in the sentence of the greater curse, publikelie by our ordinarie authoritie. And in the same sentence hath continued now fortie daies, and yet still continueth with indurate heart, wickedly contemning the keyes of the church, to the great perill both of his soule, and to the pernicious example of other. For somuch therefore, as the holy mother the church hath not to doe or to proceede any further in this matter; we humblie desire your kingly maiestie, to direct out your letters for the apprehending of the said excommunicate according to the custome of this realme of England, wholesomelie obserued and kept hitherto: to the intent, that such whom the feare of God doth not restraine from euill, the discipline of the secular arme may bridle and plucke backe from offending. Your princely celsitude the Lord long continue. From Lambeth the 15. of Ianuarie.

The cruell letter of the archb. against N. Herford to the king.

This is not to seeke against that which is lost by the rule of Scripture.

To this letter of the archbishop, might not the king (gentle Reader) thus answere againe, and answere well?

YOur letters with your complaint and requests in the same contained we haue receiued and well considered. For the accomplishing whereof, ye shall vnderstand, that as we are readilie bent to gratifie and satisfie your mind in this behalfe on the one side: so we must beware againe on the other, that our authoritie be not abused either to oppresse before we know, or to iudge before we haue tried. Wherefore forsomuch as you in your letters doe excite and sharpen the seuere discipline of our secular sword, against one Nicolas Herford, for his not appearing before you: and yet shewing in the said your letters no certaine cause to vs what you haue to charge him withall: we therefore following the example of Alexander Magnus, or rather the rule of equitie in opening both our eares indifferently, to heare as well the one part as the other, doe assigne both to him, whensoeuer he may be found, and to you when ye shall be called, a terme to appeare before vs. To the intent that the controuersie betweene you and him, standing vpon points of religion, being tried by the true touchstone of Gods holy word, due correction indifferentlie may be ministred according as the offence shall be found. In the meane time, this we cannot but something maruell at in your said letters; First, to see you men of the church and angels of peace, to be so desirous of blood. Secondlie, to consider you against so fierce in prosecuting the breach of your law, and yet so cold in pursuing the breach of the expresse law of God and his commandements. Thirdly, to behold the vnstable doublenesse in your proceedings, who pretending in your publike sentence, to become as intreaters for them to vs in the bowels of Iesus Christ, that we will withdraw from them the rigor of our seueritie, and yet in your letters you be they which most set vs on. If not appearing before you, be such a matter of contumacie in case of your law, that it is in no case to bee spared: what should then our princelie discipline haue done to men of your calling? Henrie Spenser bishop of Norwich, being at Canturburie, was sent for by our speciall commandement to come to our speech, denied to come, and yet we spared him. John Stratford archbishop your predecessor, being required of our progenitor king Edward the third to come to him at Yorke, would not appeare: by the occasion whereof, Scotland the same time was lost, and yet was he suffred. The like might be said of Robert Winchelsey in the daies of king Edward the first, and of Edmund archbishop of Canturburie, in the daies of king Henrie the third; Stephan Langton was sent for by king Iohn to come, he came not. The like contumacie was in Becket toward K. Henrie the 2. Also in Anselme toward king Henrie the first. All these for their not appearing before their princes, ye doe excuse, who notwithstanding might haue appeared without danger of life, this one man for not appearing before you, you thinke worthie of death: whose life you would haue condemned notwithstanding, if he had appeared. It is no reason if the Squirill climing to the tree from the Lions clawes would not appeare, being sent for to be deuoured; that the Eagle therefore should faile vpon him without any iust cause declared against the partie. Wherefore according to this and to that aforesaid, when he shall appeare, and you be called, and the cause iustly weighed, due execution shall be ministred.

Prosopeia. What the king might haue answered against.

Bishops of Cant. appeared not before their kings, and yet they were not persecuted.

And thus far concerning Nicolas Herford, and the other aforesaid. But all this meane while that became of I. Wickliffe it is not certainly knowne. Albeit so farre as may be gathered out of Walden, it appeareth that he was banished and driuen to exile. In the meane time it is not to be doubted, but he was alive during all this while, wherefoeuer he was, as by his letter may appeare, wherby he abiut this time wrote to pope Vrbane the 6. In the which letter he both purge himselfe, that being commanded to appeare before the pope at Rome, hee came not: declaring also in the same a briefe confession of his faith. The copy of which epistle here followeth.

The epistle of Iohn Wickliffe sent vnto pope Vrbane the 6. An. 1382.

The epistle of I. Wickliffe to pope Vrbane.

VErilie I doe reioyce to open and declare the faith which I doe hold vnto euery man: And specially vnto the bishop of Rome: the which forsomuch as I doe suppose to be sound and true, he will most willingly confirme my said faith, or if it bee erroneous amend the same.

First I suppose, that the Gospell of Christ, is the whole body of Gods law, and that Christ which did giue that same law himselfe, I beleeue him to be a very man, and in that point, to exceede the law of the Gospell, and all other parts of the Scripture. Againe, I doe giue and hold the bishop of Rome, forsomuch as he is the vicar of Christ here in earth, to be bound most of all other men vnto that law of the Gospell. For the greatnesse amongst Christs disciples, did not consist in worldly dignity or honours, but in the neere and exact following of Christ, in his life and maners: wherevpon I do gather out of the heart of the law of the Lord, that Christ for the time of his pilgrimage here, was a most poore man, abiecting and casting off all worldly rule and honour, as appeareth by the gospell of Mat. the 8. and the 2. Cor. 8. chap.

The true disciples of Christ seeke no honor.

Hereby I doe fully gather, that no faithfull man ought to follow, neither the pope himselfe, neither any of the holy men, but in such points, as he hath followed the Lord Iesus Christ. For Peter, and the soones of Zebedee by desiring worldly honour, contrarie to the following of Christs steps, did offend, and therefore in those errours, they are not to be followed.

Hereof I doe gather, as a counsell, that the pope ought to leaue vnto the secular power, all temporall dominion and rule, and thereunto effectually to moue and exhort his whole clergie, for so did Christ, and specially by his apostles. Wherfore if I haue erred in any of these points, I will most humblie submit my selfe vnto correction, euen by death if necessitie so require: And if I could labour according to my will, or desire in mine owne person, I would surely present my selfe before the bishop of Rome: but the Lord hath otherwise visited me to the contrarie, and hath taught me rather to obey God then men. Forsomuch then, as God hath giuen vnto our Pope, iust and true euangelicall instinctions, we ought to pray, that those motions be not extinguished by any subtile or craftie deuice.

And that the pope and cardinals be not moued to doe any thing, contrarie vnto the law of the Lord. Wherfore let vs pray vnto our God, that he will so stir vp our pope Vrbane the sixth as he began, that he with his clergie may follow the Lord Iesus Christ, in life and maners: and that they may teach the people effectually, and that they likewise may faithfully follow them in the same. And let vs specially pray, that our pope may be preserued from all maligne and euill counsell, as which doe know that euill and enuious men of his household would giue him. And seeing the Lord will not suffer vs to be tempted aboue our power, much lesse then will he require of any creature to doe that thing which they are not able, forsomuch, as that is the plaine condition and maner of Antichrist.

The popes practises to set in schismaticall times that he had no leisure to attend matters.

Thus much wrote Iohn Wickliffe vnto pope Urban. But this pope Vrbane, otherwise tearmed Turbanus, was so hote in his warres against Clement the French pope his aduersarie, that he had no leisure, and lesse list, to attend vnto Wickliffes matters. By the occasion of which schisme, God prouided for poore Wickliffe, that he was in some more rest and quietnesse. Concerning which schismaticall warres of these popes forasmuch as we haue here entred into the mention thereof, it shall not be impertinent from the order of our story, digressing a little from the matter of Iohn Wickliffe, to touch something of the tragicall doings of these two holy popes, striuing for the triple crowne: to the intent that the christian Reader iudgeing by their fruits and proceedings may see and vnderstand what difference is betweene these popes, and Christ and his apostles. For though in the storie of the Gospell it is read, that certaine of the disciples did striue which should be the greater; yet neither doe we reade that one of them tooke euer weapon against the other: and moreouer in the said storie of the Gospell it doth appeare, that they in so striuing as they did, were therefore sharpely rebuked of our Saiuour Christ, and were taught by him another lesson.

Difference betweene the apostles and the popes in striuing for preeminence.

About the beginning of the next yeare following, which was An. 1383. Pope Vrbane setting all his studie how to represse and conquer the contrarie pope his aduersarie, being then at Auinion, seeing all his other meanes to faile, and that his crotchets could not so well tooke to him the sword of Romulus, and set vpon him with open warre. And first deuising with himselfe whom hee might best chuse for his cheefe champion: thought none meeter for such affaires then Henry Spencer being then bishop of Norwich a yong and a stout prelate, more fitter for the camping cure, then for the peaceable church of Christ, as partly also might appeare before by his acts done at Lennam in striuing for the maiors mace, mentioned before, pag. 394. Vnto this bishop of Norwich, the pope had sent his buls about this time, to Scotiy wholoener would go with him into France, to destroy the Antipope, which named himselfe Clement, and to make warre against all those that tooke his part. Which buls, for that they gaue vnto him such great authoritie, he caused to be published, in the parliament house, and caused the copies of the same to be sent all about, and to bee set vp and fastned vpon all the church doores and monasterie gates, that all men might reade them. In the which buls their priuiledges were granted, the copie whereof here followeth.

Anno 1383. The popes rest to warre.

The priuiledges of Antichrist.

1 In primis, that the said bishop of Norwich may vse his sword against the Antipope, and all his adherents, fauorers and counsellors, and with violence put them to death.

2 Item that he hath full power to inquire of all and singuler such schismatiks, and to put them in prison: and to confiscate all their goods, moueable and immoueable.

3 Item, that he hath power and authoritie to depriue all lay men that are such schismatiks of all maner secular offices wh[at]soeuer, and to giue their offices to other fit and conuenient persons.

4 Item, that he may depriue all such clerks, and declare them to be schismatiks, and in this behalfe to giue and bestow their benefic. s either with cure or without cure, their dignities, parsonages or offices, to other persons more meet for the same.

5 Item, he hath power and authoritie ouer lay persons that are exempt and clerks both secular and regular, yea although they be friers mendicants, or masters and professors of other hostes or hospitals of S. Johns of Ierusalem, or saint Maries of Flanders, or professors of what order soeuer else.

6 Item, he hath power to dispence with what secular clerke soeuer, being benefited either with cure or without cure, and also with such as haue dignities, parsonages or offices, being regulers either exempt or not exempt, that euery one of them may be absent with him from their dignities and benefices, &c. vnder the clamard of the crosse, without licence of any of their prelats required, and yet to receiue and take the intire commodities of their benefices, as though they had been personally resident vpon the same.

7 Item, there is granted to al that passe the seas in this quarell, either at their owne expences or at the expenses of any other, full remission of their sinnes: and as large priuiledges are granted to all those that goe ouer the sea with him, as to any that pay their money, or go to fight for the holy land.

8 Also al such as with their proper goods and substance shall giue sufficient stipend to able souldiers, at the discretion of the foresaid lord bishop mustered, or by any other his deputie, although he himselfe be not personally at this businesse aforesaid: yet shall hee haue like remission and indulgence, as they which haue been personally with him in this expedition.

9 Item, all they are partakers of this remission, which shall giue any part of their goods to the said bishop to fight against the said schismatiks.

10 Item, if any shall chance to die in the iourney, that are souldiers vnder the said standard of the crosse, or else before the quarrell by some meanes be finished: shall fully and wholly receiue the said grace, and shall be partakers of the foresaid remission and indulgence.

11 Item, he hath power to excommunicate, suspend and interdict what persons soeuer be rebellious or disturbers of him in the execution of his power and authoritie committed vnto him, of what dignitie, state, degree, preeminence, order, place, or condition soeuer they shall be: whether they shall be either of regall, quaenly, or imperiall dignitie, or of what dignitie else soeuer either ecclesiasticall or mundane.

12 Item, he hath power and authoritie to compell and inforce what religious person soeuer, to appoint them and send them ouer sea, if it seeme good to him: yea although they be professors of the friers mendicants for the execution of the premisses.

The popes absolution by the bishop pronounced.

By the authoritie apostolicall to me in this behalfe committed, wee absolue thee A. B. from all thy sinnes confessed with thy mouth, and being contrite with thy heart, and wherof thou wouldest be confessed if they came vnto thy memorie: and we grant vnto thee, plenarie remission of all manner of sins, and we promise vnto thee thy part of the reward of all iust men, and of euerlasting saluation. And as many priuiledges as are granted to them that goe to fight for the holy land, wee grant vnto thee: and of all the prayers and benefits of the church, the vniuersall Synod, as also of the holy catholike church, we make thee partaker of.

Christs passion hath here no place.

This contagious or rather outragious bishop, armed thus with the popes authoritie, and prompt with his priuiledges, in the yeare aforesaid, 1383. about the time of Lent, came to the parliament, where great contention and combustion and almost no lesse schisme was about the voyage of this popish bishop in the parliament, then was betweene the popes themselues. In the which parliament many there were, which thought it not safe to commit the kings people and subiects, vnto a rude and vnskilfull priest. So great was the diuersitie of iudgements in that behalfe, that the voyage of the said bishop was protracted vnto the Saturday afore passion Sunday. In the which Sunday was sung the solemne antheme, Ecce crucem Domini, fugite partes aduersæ. That is, Behold the crosse of the Lord: flie away all you aduersaries. After which Sunday, the parties so agreed amongst themselues by common decree, that the bishop should set forward in his voyage, hauing to him giuen the fifteenth which was granted to the king in the parliament before. Which things thus concluded in the parliament, this warlike bishop preparing before all things in a readinesse set forward in his pope-holy iourney. Who about the moneth of May, being come to Canturburie, and there tarying for the wind, in the monasterie of saint Augustine, receiued a writ from the king that he should returne to the king, and to know further of his pleasure. The bishop fearing that if he turned againe to the king, his iourney should be staid, and so all his labour and preparance lost with great derision and shame vnto him: thought better to commit himselfe to fortune with that little armie he had, then by tarying to be made a ridicle to his aduersaries. Wherefore he sent word backe againe to the king, that he was now readie prepared, well forward on his iourney. And that it was not expedient now to protract the time for any kind of talke, which peraduenture should bee to no maner of purpose: and that it was more conuenient for him to haiken in his iourney to Gods glory, and also to the honour of the king. And thus he calling his men vnto him, entred forthwith the seas, and went to Calis: where he waiting a few daies for the rest of his armie, after the receite of them, take his iourney first to the towne of Grauenidge, which hee besieged so desperately, without any preparance of engins of warre or counsell, of politicke men skilfull in such affaires: that he seemed rather to fly vpon them, then to inuade them. At length through the superstition of our men, trusting vpon the popes absolution, he so hardily approched the walles and inuaded the enemies, that a great number of them were piteously slaine with shot and wild fire: till at the end (the inhabiters being oppressed and banquished) our men entred the towne with their bishop, where they at his commandement destroying both man, woman, and child, left not one aliue of all them, which remained in the whole towne. Sicque ciuitis beneficio factum, vt crucis hostes its deleremur, quòd vnus ex eis non remanst: that is, And so it came to passe by the vertue of the crosse, that our men croysed so preuailed against the enemies of the crosse, that not one of them remained aliue. Ex Chron. Mon. D. Albani.

O bloodines of Antichrist.

Ex Chron. Mon. D. Albani in vita Rich. 2.

From Grauenidge this warlike bishop set forward to Dunkirke, where not long after the Frenchmen meeting with him ioyned with them in battell: in which battell (if the storie be true) 12. thousand of the Frenchmen were slaine in the chase, and of our men but seuen onely missing. It would require a long tractation here to discourse all things done in these popishwarres. Also it would be no lesse ridiculous to view and behold the glorious temeritie of this new vpstart captaine. But certes, lamentable it is to see the pitifull slaughter and murther of Christs people, by the meanes of these pitifull popes, during these wars in France: As when the bishop comming from Dunkirke to the siege of Ypres, a great number of Englishmen there were lost, and much money consumed, and yet nothing done effectually, to the great shame and ignominie of the bishop. Againe, after the siege of Ypres (thus with shame broke vp) the said bishop proceeding with a small power, to fight with the French kings campe, contrarie to the counsell of his captaines, which counted him rash and vnskilfull in his attempt, was faine to breake companie with them, whereby part of the armie went vnto Burburgh, and the bishop with his part returned to Grauenidge, which both townes shortly after were besieged by the Frenchmen, to the great losse both of the Englith and French men. In fine, when the bishop could keepe Grauenidge no longer, the said bishop with his croysies, crossing the seas, came home againe as wise as he went. And thus making an end of this pontificall warre, we will returne againe from whence we digressed, to the storie and matter of Iohn Wickliffe.

Which John Wickliffe returning againe within short space, either from his banishment, or from some other place where he was secretly kept, repaired to his parish of Lutterworth, where he was parson, there quietly departing this mortall life, slept in peace in the Lord, in the beginning of the yeare 1384. vpon Siluesters day.

Here is to be noted the great prouidence of the Lord in this man, as in diuers other, whom the Lord so long preserued in such rages of so many enemies, from all their hands, euen to his old age. For so it appeareth by Thomas Walden, writing against him in his tomes entituled De Sacramentis contra Wicleum: that he was well aged before hee departed: by that which the foresaid Walden writeth of him in the Epilog. speaking of Wickliffe in these words: Ita vt cano placeret, quod iuueni complacebat, &c. That is: so that the same thing pleased him in his old age, which did please him being yong. Whereby it seemeth that Wickliffe liued till hee was an old man by this report. Such a Lord is God, that whom hee will haue kept, nothing can hurt.

Walden. 2. tom. de Sacram. manus.

This Wickliffe had written diuers and sundrie workes, the which in the yeare of our Lord 1410. were burnt at Oxford, the abbat of Shrewsburie being then commissarie, and sent to ouersee that matter. And not onely in England, but in Boheme likewise, the bookes of the said Wickliffe were set on fire, by one Subincus archbishop of Prage, who made diligent inquisition for the same, and burned them: The number of the volumes, which he is said to haue burned most excellently written, and richly adorned with bosses of gold, and rich couerings (as Eneas Siluius writeth) were aboue the number of two hundred.

The number of Wickliffes bookes came to 200. volumes. Eneas Siluius.

Iohannes Cocleus in his booke De historia Hussitarum, speaking of the bookes of Wickliffe, testifieth, that he wrote verie many bookes, sermons, and tractations. Moreouer, the said Cocleus speaking of himselfe, recordeth also: that there was a certaine bishop in England which wrote vnto him, declaring, that he had yet remaining in his custodie two huge and mighty tie volumes of Iohn Wickliffes workes, which for the quantitie thereof might seeme to be equall with the workes of saint Augustine. Hæc Cocleus.

The bookes of Wickliffe.

Amongst other of his treatises I my selfe also haue found out certaine, as de sensu & veritate scripturæ. Item, De Ecclesia. Item, De Euchristia confessio Wickleui: which I intend hereafter, the Lord so granting, to publish abroad.

As concerning certaine answeres of Iohn Wickliffe which he wrote to king Richard the 2. touching the right and title of the king, and of the pope: because they are but short, I thought here to annexe them. The effect whereof here followeth.

Iohn Wickliffes answere vnto king Richard the second, as touching the right and title of the king and the pope.

IT was demanded, whether the kingdome of England may lawfully in case of necessitie, for his owne defence, detaining and keepe backe the treasure of the kingdome, that it be not caried away to forren and strange nations, the pope himselfe bemanding and requiring the same vnder paine of censure, and by vertue of obedience.

Wickliffe setting apart the minds of learned men, what might be said in the matter, either by the canon law, or by the law of England or the ciuill law, it resteth (saith he) now only to perswade and proue the affirmatiue part of this doubt by the principles of Dyalls law. And first I proue it thus: Euery naturall body hath power giuen of God to resist against his contrarie, and to preserue it selfe in due estate, as Philosophers knew very well.

Insomuch, that bodies without life, are indued with such kind of power (as it is enident) vnto whom hardnesse is giuen to resist those things that would breake it, and coldnesse to withstand the heate that dissolueth it. Forsomuch then, as the kingdome of England (after the manner and phrase of the Scriptures) ought to bee one body, and the clergie with the communaltie, the members thereof, it seemeth that the same kingdome hath such power giuen it of God; and so much the more apparant, by how much the same body is more precious vnto God, adorned with vertue and knowledge. Forsomuch then as there is no power giuen of God vnto any creature, for any end or purpose, but that hee may lawfully vse the same to that end and purpose: it followeth that our kingdome may lawfully keep backe and detaine their treasure for the defence of it selfe, in what case soeuer necessitie do require the same.

Secondarilie, the same is proued by the law of the Gospell. For the pope cannot challenge the treasure of this kingdome, but vnder the title of almes, and consequently vnder the prætence of the workes of mercy, according to the rule of charity.

The reasons refuse to giue the almes of good men.

But in case aforesaid, the title of almes ought litterly to cease: Ergo, the right and title of challenging the treasure of our realme shall cease also in the prætupposed necessitie. Forsomuch as all charitie hath his beginning of himselfe, it were no worke of charitie, but of meere madnesse, to send away the treasures of the realme into forren nations, whereby the realme it selfe may fall into ruine, vnder the prætence of such charitie.

Charitie keth away the popes almes.

It appeareth also by this, that Christ the head of the church, whom all christian priests ought to follow, lined by the almes of deuout women, Luke 7. 8. He hungred and thirsted, hee was a stranger, and many other miseries he sustained, not only in his members, but also in his owne body, as the apostle witnesseth, Corin. 8. He was made poore for your sakes, that through his poucrtie, you might bee rich: whereby in the first endowing of the church, whatsoeuer hee were of the clergie that had any temporall possessions, hee had the same by reason of a perpetuall almes, as both writings and chronicles doe witnesse.

Gaze vpon the lyuing liues of Bernard.

Wherupon S. Bernard, declaring in his 2. booke to Eugenius, that he could not challenge any secular dominion by right of succession, as being the vicar of S. Peter, writeth thus: That if saint Iohn should speake vnto the pope himselfe, as Bernard doth vnto Eugenius, were it to be thought that he would take it patiently? But let it be so, that you doe challenge it vnto you, by some other waies or meanes; but truely by any right or title apostolicall, you cannot so doe. For how could hee giue vnto you that which hee had not himselfe? That which hee had hee gaue you, that is to say, care ouer the church: but did hee giue you any lordship or rule? Hearke what hee saith: Not bearing rule (saith he) as lords in the clergie, but behauing your selues as examples to the flocke. And because thou shalt not thinke it to be spoken onely in humilitie, and not in veritie, marke the word of the Lord himselfe in the Gospell: The kings of the people do rule ouer them, but you shall not doe so.

The pope must leaue his lordship of elle apostleship, for him else vnfeeble.

Here lordship and dominion is plainely forbidden to the apostles, and dareth thou then vsurpe the same? If thou wilt be a lord, thou shalt lose thine apostleship; or if thou wilt beeare apostle thou shalt lose thy lordship. For truely thou shalt depart from the one of them. If thou wilt haue both, thou shalt lose both, or else thinke thy selfe to be of that number, of whō God doth so greatly complaine, saying: They haue reigned, but not through me: They are become princes, and I haue not knowne it. Now if it doe suffice thee to rule with the Lord, thou hast thy glory, but not with God. But if wee will keepe that which is forbidden vs, let vs heare what is said: He that is the greatest amongst you (saith Christ) shall beee made as the least, and he which is the highest shall bee as the minister; and for example, set a child in the middest of them. So this then is the true forme and institution of the apostles trade: Lordship and rule is forbidden, ministration and seruice commanded.

The manner of the apostles.

By these words of this blessed man, whom the whole church doth reuerence and worship, it doth appeare that the pope hath not power to occupie the church goods as lord thereof, but as minister, and seruant, and procter for the poore. And would to God that the same proud and greedy desire of rule and lordship which this seate doth challenge vnto it, were not a preamble to prepare a way vnto Antichrist. For it is euident by the Gospell, that Christ though his powertie, humilitie, and suffering of iniurie, got vnto him the children of his kingdome.

How the pope ought to occupie the church goods.

The way to obteine the kingdome of Christ.

And moreouer, to farre as I remember, the same blessed man Bernard in his third Booke writeth also thus vnto Eugenius: I feare no other greater poison to happen vnto thee, then greedie desire of rule and dominion.

This Wicklieffe albeit in his life time had many grieuous enemies, yet was there none so cruell vnto him, as the clergie it selfe. Yet notwithstanding hee had many godfriends, men not only of the base and meanest sort, but also nobility, amongst whom these men are to bee numbred: Iohn Clenbon, Lewes Clifford, Richard Sturius, Thomas Latimer, William Nenill, John Montegew, who pluckt downe all the Images in his church. Besides all these, there was the earle of Salisburie, who for contempt in him noted towards the Sacrament, in carrying it home to his house, was excomned by Radulfe Stegont bishop of Salisburie, to make in Salisburie a crosse of stone, in which all the stone of the matter should bee written, and he euery Friday during his life to come to the crosse bare-foot, and bareheaded in his shirt, and there kneeling vpon his knees, to do penance for his fact. Ex Chron. Mon. D. Albani in vita Ric. 2.

J. Clenbon, Lewes Clifford, Richard Sturius, T. Latimer, W. Nenill, John Montegew. The earle of Salisburie.

The penance of the earle of Salisburie.

The Londoners at this time somewhat boldly trusting to the Maiors authoritie, who for that yeare was John of Northampton; tooke vpon them the office of the bishops, in punishing the vices (belonging to ciuill law) of such persons as they had found and apprehended in committing both fornication and adulterie. For first they put the women in the prison which amongst them then was named Dolium. And lastly bringing them into the market place, where euery man might behold them, and cutting off their golden lockes from their heads: they caused them to be caried about the streetes, with bagpipes and trumpets blowne before them, to the intent they might bee the better knowne and their companies auoided: according to the maner then of certaine shewes that were named Appellatores, (accusers or prachers of others that were guiltlesse) which were so serued. And with other such like opprobrious and reprochfull contumelies, did they serue the men also that were taken with them in committing the foresaid wickednesse and vices. Here the storie recordeth how the said Londoners were incouraged hereunto by Io. Wicklieffe and others that followed his doctrine to perpetrate this act, in the reproch of the prelats being of the clergie. For they said, that they did not so much abhor to see the great negligence of those to whom that charge belonged, but also their filthie auarice they did as much detest: which for greedinesse of money were choked with bribes, and winking at the penalties due to such persons by the lawes appointed, suffered such fornicators and incestuous persons fauourable to continue in their wickednes. They said furthermore, that they greatly feared, lest for such wickednesse perpetrated within the citie and so apparantly dissimulate, that God would take vengeance vpon them and destroy their citie. Wherefore they said, that they could doe no lesse then to purge the same: lest by the sufferance thereof, God would bring a plague vpon them, or destroy them with the sword, or cause the earth to swallow vp both them and their citie. Hæc ex Chron. Mon. D. Albani.

Ex Chron. Monast. D. Albani.

¶ This storie (gentle Reader) albeit the author thereof whom I follow, doth giue it out in reprochfull wise, to the great discommendation of the Londoners for so doing: yet I thought not to omit, but to commit the same to memorie, which seemeth to me rather to tend vnto the worthie commendation both of the Londoners that so did, and to the necessarie example of all other cities to follow the same. After these things thus declared, let vs now adioyne the testimoniall of the Vniuersitie of Oxford, of John Wicklieffe.

The publike testimonie giuen out by the Vniuersity of Oxford, touching the commendation of the great learning and good life of John Wicklieffe.

VNto all and singuler the children of our holy mother the church, to whom this present letter shall come; the vicechancellor of the Vniuersitie of Oxford, with the whole congregation of the masters, wish perpetuall health in the Lord. Forsomuch as it is not commonly seene, that the acts and monuments of valiant men, nor the praise and merits of good men should be passed ouer and hidden with perpetuall silence, but that true report and fame should continually spread abrode the same in strange and farre distant places, both for the witnesse of the same, and example of others: Forsomuch also as the prouident discretion of mans nature being recompensed with cruelty, hath deuised and ordained this buckler and defence, against such as doe blaspheme and slander other mens doings, that whensoeuer witnesse by word of mouth cannot be present, the pen by writing may supplie the same:

Ex tomo operum Ioan. Hussi. fol. vlt.

Hereupon it followeth, that the speciall good will and care which we bare vnto Io. Wickliffe, sometime child of this our Vniuersitie, and professour of Diuinitie; mouing and stirring our minds (as his manners and conditions required no lesse) with one mind, voice, and testimonie, wee doe witnesse, all his conditions and doings throughout his whole life, to haue been most sincere and commendable: whose honest maners and conditions, profound nesse of learning, and most redolent renoume and fame, wee desire the more earnestly to bee notified and knowne vnto all faithfull, for that we vnderstand the maturitie and ripenesse of his conuersation, his diligent labours and trauels to tend to the praise of God, the helpe and safegard of others, and the profit of the church.

Great learning ioyned with good life and godlinesse.

Wherefore we signifie vnto you by these presents, that his conuersation (euen from his youth vpwards, vnto the time of his death) was so praise worthie and honest, that neuer at any time was there any note or spot of suspition noysed of him. But in his answering, reading, preaching and determining, hee behaued himselfe laudably, and as a stout and valiant champion of the faith; vanquishing by the force of the Scriptures, all such who by their wilful beggery blasphemed and slandered Christs religion. Neither was this said doctor conuict of any heresie, either burned of our prelats after his buriall. God forbid that our prelats should haue condemned a man of such honestie, for an heretike: who amongst all the rest of the Vniuersitie, had written in Logicke, Philosophie, Diuinitie, Moralitie, and the speculatiue art without peere. The knowledge of which all and singuler things, wee doe desire to testifie and deliuer forth: to the intent, that the fame and renoume of this said doctor, may be the more euident and had in reputation, amongst them, vnto whose hands these present letters testimoniall shall come.

The bones of Wicklieffe were not yet commanded by the councell of Constance to be burned. Ex 2. tomo operū I. Hussi, fol. vlt.

In witnes wherof, we haue caused these our letters testimoniall to bee sealed with our common seale. Dated at Oxford in our congregation house, the 5. day of October, in the yeare of our Lord, 1406.

The testimonie and words of master John Hus, as touching M. John Wicklieffe.

The testimony and iudgement of John Hus concerning John Wicklieffe.

VVCrilie, as I do not beleue neither grant that M. J. Wicklieffe is an heretike: so do I not denie, but firmely hope that he is no heretike: Forsomuch as in all matters of doubt I ought as neere as I can, to chuse the best part. Wherfore I sware by truth, that M. J. Wicklieffe is one of the number of them which are saued. The words of Christ moue me thereunto, saying, Mat. 7. Doe ye not iudge, that yee bee not iudged: and Luke the 6. Doe not condemne, and ye shall not be condemned; and the words of the apostle, 1. Cor. 4. Doe yee not iudge before the Lord himselfe doe come, the which shall open those things that are hid in darkenesse to manifest the priuities of all harts.

Secondly, the loue and charitie which I ought to beare vnto my neighbor (louing him as my selfe) doth moue me thereunto, Luk. 10.

Thirdly, his good fame and report inuoketh me, the which he hath of the good priests, of the Vniuersitie of Oxford, and not of the wicked, and commonly of the vulgar sort; although not of the couetous, proud, and luxurious prelats.

Fourthly, his owne workes and writings doe stirre me thereunto, by the which he goeth about with his whole indeauor, to reduce all men vnto the law of Christ, and specially the clergie: that they should forsake the pompe and dominion of this world, and with the apostles leade the life of Christ.

Fifthly, his owne protestations, which he doth oftentimes vse in his sentences, often repeating the same, doe not a little moue me.

Sixthly, his earnest desire and affection which he had vnto the law of Christ, doth not a little allure me thereunto, disputing of the veritie thereof, the which cannot faile in any one iot or title. Whereupon hee made a booke of the veritie of the holy Scripture, approuing euen vnto the vttermost, the truth of Gods law.

Lib. de sensu & veritate scripturæ per I. Wicklewum.

Wherefore if were too foolish a consequent to say, that because the number of the prelats & clergie in England, France, and Bohemme doe count Iohn Wickliffe for an heretike, that therefore he is an heretike, &c. Like as the reason for burning of the bookes; for it is written in the first booke of Machabes, first chapter: that they did burne the bookes of the Lord, tearing them in peices, and whosoeuer was found to haue kept any bookes of the testament or will of the Lord, or the which obserued and kept the law of the Lord, they were by the kings commandement put to death. If then the burning of the bookes by wicked men did argue or proue the euilnes of these bookes, then was the law of God euill and naught.

True iudgement cannot be had vpon number and multitude.

Burning of bookes proueth not by and by an heretike.

So likewise the burning of S. Gregories bookes, and diuers other saints and good men, should argue and proue that they were euill and naughtie men. Whereupon as it doth not follow, that because the bishops, Scribes and Pharises, with the elders of the people, condemned Christ Iesus as an heretike, that therefore he is an heretike: So likewise doth it not follow, of any other man: The bishops, masters of Diuinitie, monks and prelats condemned this man as an heretike: Ergo hee is an heretike. For this consequent is reproued by John Chrysostome, which was twice condemned as an heretike by the bishops and the whole clergie. Likewise S. Gregorie in his bookes, was condemned by the cardinals.

A false consequent reproued by S. Chrysostome.

By like proofe also as they affirme M. John Wicklieffe to be an heretike; John D. of Lancaster (a man of worthie memorie and progenitor of Henrie king of England) should also be an heretike. For the said duke defended, fauoured and greatly loued M. John Wicklieffe: Ergo the said duke is or was an heretike: the consequent is good. The minor is well known vnto the Englishmen. The maior appeareth in the canon, where it is said, He which defendeth an heretike, &c.

John duke of Lancaster defender of John Wicklieff.

But these things set apart, I demand of the aduersarie, whether master John Wicklieffe be damned or euer no? If he say that he is damned because he is an heretike: I propound this vnto him, whether master John Wicklieffe inhibites heresies, held any false doctrine contrarie to the holy Scripture: If he doe affirme it, let him then shew what doctrine it is, and afterward declare that he held it obstinately: And hee shall find, that in his bookes hee alwaies wrote most commendable protestations against obstinacie and stiffenecchednesse. And by and by after, master John Stokes in his Intimation saith, that master John Wicklieffe in England, is counted for an heretike. This seemeth also false by the letter testimoniall of the Vniuersitie of Oxford: vnto the which there is more credit to bee giuen, then vnto him. And this shall suffice for this present.

J. Wicklieffe proued no heretike.

¶ Now as wee haue declared the testimony of the Vniuersitie of Oxford, and of John Hus, concerning the praise of John Wicklieffe: it followeth likewise, that wee set forth and expresse the contrary censure and iudgements of his enemies, blinded with malicious hatred and corrupt affections against him, especially of the popes councel gathered at Constance, proceeding first in condemning his bookes, then of his articles, and afterward burning of his bones. The copie of which their sentence giuen against him by that councell here followeth.

The councell of Constance against Iohn Wicklieffe.

The sentence giuen by the councell of Constance, in condemning the doctrine and 45. articles of John Wicklieffe.

The sentence of the councell of Constance against Iohn Wicklieffe.

THe most holy and sacred councell of Constance, making and representing the catholike church for the extirpation of this present schisme, and of all other errours and heresies, springing and growing vnder the shadow and pretence of the same, and for the reformation and amendment of the church, being lawfully congregate and gathered together in the holy Ghost, for the perpetuall memorie of the time to come.

We are taught by the acts and histories of the holy fathers, that the catholike faith, without the which, as the holy apostle saint Paul saith, it is impossible to please God, hath beene alwaies defended by the faithfull and spirituall soulders of the church, by the shield of faith, against the false worshippers of the same faith, or rather peruerte impugners: which through their proud curiositie will seeme to know more, and to loue lesse then they ought to bee, and for the desire of the glorie of the world, haue gone about oft times to ouerthrow the same. These kinds of warres and battels haue beene prefigured to vs before in those carnall warres of the Israelites against the Idolatrous people. For in those spirituall warres the holy catholike church, through the vertue and power of faith, being illustrate with the beames of the heauenly light, by the prouidence of God, and being holpen by the helpe and defence of the saints and holy men, hath alwaies continued immaculate, and (the darkenesse of errours, as her most cruell enemies, being put to flight) the hath most gloriously triumphed ouer all. But in these our daies, the old and vncleane enemie hath raised vp new contentions and brifes, that the elect of this world might bee knowne, whose prince and captaine in time past was one John Wicklieffe a false christian. Who during his life time, taught and sowed very obstinately many articles contrarie and against the christian religion, and the catholike faith. And the same John Wicklieffe wrote certaine bookes which he called a Dialogue, and a Trialogue, besides many other treatises and workes, the which he both wrote and taught, in the which hee wrote the aforesaid, and many other damnable and execrable articles: the which his bookes, for the publication and aduancement of his peruerse doctrine, hee did set forth openly for euery man to reade. Whereby beside many offences, great hurt and damage of soule, hath ensued in diuers regions and countries, but specially in the kingdomes of England and Boheme. Against whom the maisters and Doctors of the Vniuersities of Oxford and Prage, rising vp in the truth and veritie of God, according to the order of schooles, within a while after did reproue and condemne the said articles.

The dialogue and trialogue of J. Wicklieffe.

Moreouer, the most reuerend fathers the archbishops, and bishops, (for that time present) of Canturburie, Yorke, and Prage, legats of the apostolike see, in the kingdome of England and Boheme, did condemne the bookes of the said Wicklieffe to be burnt. And the said archbishop of Prage, commissarie of the apostolike see, did likewise in this behalfe determine and iudge. And moreouer he did forbid, that any of those bookes which did remaine vnburned, should bee hereafter any more read. And againe, these things being brought to the knowledge and vnderstanding of the apostolike see, and the generall councell: the bishop of Rome in his last councell, condemned the said bookes, treatises and volumes, commanding them to bee openly burned. Most straitly forbidding, that any men which should beare the name of Christ, should be so hardy either to keepe, reade, or expound any of the said bookes or treatises, volumes, or writs, or by any meanes to vse or occupie them: either else to alleage them openly or priuitie, but to their reproofe and infamie. And to the intent that this most dangerous and filthie doctrine should be vtterly wiped away out of the church, hee gaue commandement throughout all places; that the ordinaries should diligently enquire and seeke out by the apostolike authoritie and ecclesiasticall censure, for all such bookes, treatises, volumes, and workes. And the same so being found, to burne and consume them with fire: prouiding withall, that if there bee any such found, which will not obey the same; processe to bee made against them, as against the fauourers and maintainers of heresies. And this most holy Synod hath caused the said 45. Articles to be examined and oft times perused, by many most reuerend fathers of the church of Rome, cardinals, bishops, abbats, masters of Diuinitie and doctors of both lawes, besides a great number of other learned men: the which articles being so examined, it was found (as in truth it was no lesse) that many, yea and a great number of them to be notoriously for heretical reproued and condemned by the holy fathers; of other some not to be catholike, but erroneous: some full of offence and blasphemie: certaine of them offensiue vnto godly eares, and many of them to be rashfull and seditious. It is found also, that his bookes do containe many articles of like effect and qualitie, and that they doe induce and bring into the church, vnsound and vnwholesome doctrine, contrary vnto the faith and ordinance of the church. Wherfore in the name of our Lord Iesu Christ, this sacred Synod, ratifying & approuing the sentences & iudgements of the archbishops & councel of Rome: doe by this their decree and ordinance, perpetually for euermore condemne and reproue the said articles, and euerie one of them, his bookes which he intituled his Dialogue and Trialogue, and all other bookes of the same author, volumes, treatises and workes, by what name soeuer they be intituled: and called, the which wee will here to be sufficiently expressed and nalled, the which wee will here to be sufficiently expressed and nalled, the which wee will here to be sufficiently expressed and nalled Rud a gard Lord on the backe and he will winne. At Rome, &c. matters goeth well better hitting. Though they be vnlearned & wicked Christ will rule.

forbidding all and singular catholike persons vnder the paine of curse, that from henceforth they here not so hardie openly to preach, teach, or hold, or by any meanes to alleage the said articles or any of them, except (as is aforesaid) that it doe tend vnto the reproofe of them: commanding all those bookes, treatises, works and volumes aforesaid, to be openly burned, as it was decreed in the synod at Rome, as is afore expressed. For the execution whereof duely to be obserued and done, the said sacred Synod doth straitly charge and command the ordinaries of the places, diligently to attend and looke vnto the matter, according as it appertaineth vnto euery mans dutie by the canonicall lawes and ordinances.

What these articles were here condemned by this councell, collected out of all his workes, and exhibited to that said councell, to the number of 45. the copie of them following vnder written declareth.

Certaine other articles gathered out of Wickeliffes bookes by his aduersaries, to the number of 45. exhibited vp to the councell of Constance, after his death, and in the same councell condemned.

Other articles of Wickliff, to the number of 45 condemned by the councell of Constance.

BEsides the 24. articles aboue mentioned, there were other also gathered out of his bookes, to the number of 45. in all, which his malitious aduersaries peruersly collecting, and malitiously expounding, did exhibit vp to the councell of Constance: which for repeate all, though it be not here needfull, yet to recite certaine of them as they stand in that councell, it shall not be superfluous.

25 All such as be hired for temporall living to pray for other, offend and sinne of simonie.

26 The praier of the reprobate preuaileth no man.

27 Hallowing of churches, confirmation of children, the sacrament of orders be reserued to the pope and bishops onely, for the respect of temporall lucre.

28 Graduations, and doctorships in Universities and Colledges as they be vsed, conduce nothing to the church.

29 The excommunication of the pope and his prelats, is not to be feared, because it is the censure of Antichrist.

30 Such as found and build monasteries, do offend and sin, and all such as enter into the same be members of the diuell.

31 To enrich the clergie, is against the rule of Christ.

32 Siluester the pope, and Constantine the emperour were deceiued, in giuing and taking possessions into the church.

33 A deacon or priest may preach the word of God without the authoritie of the apostolike see.

34 Such as enter into order, or religion monasticall, are thereby vnable to keepe Gods commandements, and also to attaine to the kingdome of heauen, except they returne from the same.

35 The pope with all his clergie, hauing those great possessions as they haue, bee heretikes in so hauing, and the secular powers in so suffering them doe not well.

36 The church of Rome is the synagogue of Satan, neither is the pope immediatly the vicar of Christ, nor of the apostles.

37 The decretals of the pope doe apocryphally and seduce from the faith of Christ, and the clergie that studie them be fooles.

38 The emperour and secular lords be seduced, which so inrich the church with such ample possessions.

39 It is not necessarie to saluation to beleeue the church of Rome to be supreme head ouer all churches.

40 It is but fallie to beleeue the popes pardons.

41 All othes which be made for any contract or ciuill bargaine betwixt man and man, be vnlawfull.

Besides these articles to the number of 45. condemned (as is said) by the councell of Constance; other articles also I find diuerslie collected or rather wrested out of the bookes and writings of Wickliffe: some by William Woodford, some by Walden, by frier Dillington and other, whom they in their bookes haue impugned rather then confuted. In the number of whom, William Woodford especially findeth out these articles, and writeth against the same, to the number of 18. as here vnder follow.

Articles against Wickliffe by W. Woodford.

1 The bread remaineth in his owne substance, after the consecration thereof vpon the altar, and really not to bee bread still.

2 As Iohn was figuratiuely Helias, and not personally; so the bread figuratiuely is the body of Christ, and not naturally. And that without all doubt, this is a figuratiue speech, to say, This is my body, as to say, This Iohn is Helias.

3 In the decree, Ergo Berengarius, the court of Rome, hath determined, that the sacrament of the holy Eucharist, is naturally true bread.

4 They which do affirme, that the infants of the faithfull departing without the sacrament of baptisme, are not to bee saued, be presumptuous and fooles in so affirming.

5 The administration of the sacrament of confirmation, is not onely reserued to the bishops.

6 In the time of saint Paul, onely two orders of clerkes did suffice in the church: Priests, and deacons. Neither was there in the time of the apostles any distinction of popes, patriarkes, and archbishops, and bishops; but these the emperors pride did find it out.

7 Such as in times past, either for couetousnes of temporall lucre, or of hope of mutuall succour by binding, or for cause to excuse their lust, although they despaired of issue were married: were coupled together, not by true matrimonie.

8 The causes of impedyment, either for spirituall consanguinitie or for affinitie, be not founded in Scripture, but are onely ordinances of men.

9 These words, I will take thee to wife, are rather to bee taken in contract of matrimonie, then these words, I doe take thee to wife. And the contract with any partie by the words of the future tence, ought not to be sufficrate for the contract with any partie afterward made, by the words of the present time.

10 There be 12. disciples of Antichrist, popes, cardinals, patriarkes, archbishops, bishops, archdeacons, officials, deanes, monks, canons, friers, and pardoners.

11 In the booke of Numbers the 18. chapter, and in Ezechiel 44. chapter, it is commanded simplie, that neither the priests of Aaron, nor the Leuites should haue any part of inheritance with other tribes, but should liue meerely of tithes and oblations.

12 There is no greater heretike or Antichrist, then that clerke which teacheth, that it is lawfull for Priests and Leuites of the law of grace, to be indued with temporall possessions. And if there be any heretikes, apostataes, or blasphemers, these clerks be such.

13 It is not onely lawfull for the lords temporall to take away gods of fortune from the churchmen, sinning blinally: but also are bound so to do, vnder paine of eternall damnation.

14 Hee that is the more humble and more seruiceable to the church, and more enamored with the loue of Christ, he is in the church militant the greater and the more verie vicar of Christ.

15 If corporall vnction or anopling were a sacrament (as now it is fained to bee) Christ and his apostles would not haue left the substance thereof vntouched.

16 Vnto the true dominion secular, is required vertuous life of him that ruleth.

17 All things that happen, do come absolutely of necessitie.

18 Whatsoeuer the pope or his cardinals can deduce clearely out of the Scripture, that onely is to be beleeued, or to bee done at their monition: and whatsoeuer otherwise they do command is to be condemned as heretical.

Besides this W. Woodford afore mentioned, diuers other there were which wrote against these articles of Wickliffe aforesaid, maintaining the popes part, as seemeth for flatterie, rather then following any iust cause so to doe, or shewing forth any reason or learning in disproouing the same. Notwithstanding, on the contrarie part, some there were againe both learned and godly, which taking the part of Wickliffe, without all flatterie, defended the most of the said articles, openly in schooles and other places, as appeareth by the workes of Iohn Hus: like as in his publike determinations in the Universitie of Prage, stood in defence of the same against all his aduersaries. Apartly is here to bee seene in these tractations vnder following.

Tractatus fact. per Woodford contra tractatum Wicklefi.

¶ The publike defence of certaine articles of Iohn Wickliffe, in the first Act before the whole Vniuersitie of Prage, in Charles Colledge.

¶ The determination of Iohn Hus vpon the xiiij. Article of Wickliffe, as touching the preaching and hearing of the word of God, made in the yeare of our Lord 1412.

The whole Vniuersitie is against the iudgement of the Doctors which condemned the 45. articles.

FOrasmuch as to condemne the truth wittingly or without reasonable examination doth tend to great danger of saluation, as the Lord saith, Luke 6. Doe yee not condemne, and ye shall not be condemned: Therefore to auoide this great danger, the Universitie of Prage, and the whole communalrie thereof, the Rector, Maisters, Doctors, Bachelers and Students, in their generall assemblie, not agreeing to the condemnation pronounced by the Doctours in their councell house, requireth of the said Doctours a reasonable proofe of their condemnation, and that they should by Scripture, authoritie, or infallible reason, proue the falshood of euery those fiue and fortie articles. The which being once doone, the said Vniuersitie will agree to the said condemnation as iust: For the Vniuersitie doth well know, that as Augustine saith, in the end of his second booke of christian doctrine: That whatsoeuer a man doth learn besides holy Scriptures, if it be hurtfull, there it is condemned: If it bee profitable, there there it is found. And when a man hath found all things therein which he hath profitably learned elsewhere, hee shall much more abundantly finde those things which are found in no place else, but are learned in the marueilous depth, and marueilous profoundnesse of those most sacred Scriptures only.

Thus writeth Augustine. And Gregory in his three and twentith booke of Morals, saith thus; God in the holy Scripture hath comprehended whatsoeuer thing may happen vnto any man, and in the same hath, by the examples of those which are gone afore, taught them which are to come, how to reforme their liues. Whereby it appeareth, that euery of the fiue and forty articles, contained in it wholly the thing that is false and vntruth, the same is either plainly or darkly condemned in the holy Scriptures.

Gregor. moral lib. 23.

Excommunication.

Excommunication double.

Secondly, it followeth by the sentence and mind of this holy man, that if the condemnation of the fiue and forty articles be prostitable, the same is found in the holy scriptures. And where as against Saint Augustine writeth vnto Saint Hieronme, in his eighth epistle and the ninth Distinction: I (saith he) haue learned to attribute this honor and reuerence vnto those writers only which are called canonicall, that I dare affirme none of them to haue erred in their works or writings. As for all other writers, I doe so reade them, that although they abound with neuer so much holinesse, or excell in doctrine, I doe not by and by thinke it true, because they themselues doe so iudge: but if they can by other canonicall authors or probable reasons perswade me to proue that they doe not digresse from the truth.

Also the said Augustine in his booke De vnico Baptismo, lib. 2. saith thus: Who doth not know or vnderstand, the holy canonicall Scripture to bee contained in his owne bonds and limits, and the same to be preferred before all other letters and decrees of bishops &c. And a little after he hath the like saying: As for the letters of other bishops which haue bin written, or be written, (after the canon being confirmed) they may lawfully be reprehended and reproued, both by the word of them that be more skilfull in that matter, and also by the ancient authoritie of other bishops, or by the prudence and iudgment of such as be better learned, or more expert, or else by generall councels, if it so chance that they in any point haue erred and gone aliray from the sincere truth.

By these sayings of S. Austen and other like, &c. the Universitie of Prage hath concluded and determined, that they will not receiue the condemnation of the fiue and forty articles, made by the doctors in their councell house as iust and true, except they which condemned them, will proue their condemnation by the holy Scriptures and probable reasons vpon euery of the fiue and forty articles.

Wherefore for the due examination of the foresaid condemnation, whether it be effectuall or no, we will at this present take in hand the fourteenth article of the number of the fiue and fortie; which article is this:

The 14. article of I. Wickliffe.

The defence of this 14. article.

They which leaue off preaching and hearing of the word of God for feare of excommunication of men, are already excommunicat, and in the day of iudgement shall be counted the betraiers of Christ.

This article containeth, first that all priests omitting the preaching of the word of God for feare of the excommunication of men, they are already excommunicat.

Secondly, it containeth, that all such as doe omit the hearing of the word of God, for feare of excommunication, are already excommunicated.

Thirdly, that both these sorts of men in the day of iudgement, shall be counted traitors of Christ.

As concerning the first point, it is presupposed that the preaching of the word of God is commanded vnto the Apostles and their followers, as it appeareth in Matth. 10. where it is said: Iesus sent his twelue disciples, commanding them and saying, Go and preach, that the kingdome of heauen is at hand. Also in the last of Matthew, and the 10. of Luke. Wherevpon Peter the Apostle of Christ, acknowledging this precept and commandement for himselfe, and for the other Apostles and successors, in the tenth of the Acts, saith thus; He commanded vs to preach and testifie, that it is he which is ordained of God the iudge both of the quick and the dead. This commandement also the other Apostles did acknowledge, and specially the chosen vessell, pronouncing vnder a great threatning in the first Corinthians, 9. chap. Woe be vnto me if I doe not preach the Gospell. And pope Nicolas considering that great threatning in 43. Distinction, saith: The dispensation and distribution of the heauenly seed is commanded and inioined to vs: This to be vnto vs if we do not sow it abroad, or if we hold our peace. Which thing, when as the bestell of heauen did feare and cry out vpon, how much more ought all other inferiors to feare and dread the same? To the same purpose doth S. Gregory write in his pastorall in the distinction, Sit rector. It is also euident by many other doctors and holy men, as by S. Augustine, Hierome, Isidore, Bernard, whose words it were too long here to rehearse.

The preaching of the Gospell commanded of God.

Gregorius Dist. 44. cap. Sit rector.

August. lib. de doctr. christ. lib. 4.

The hearing of the word commanded by God.

As touching the second point, that the hearing of the word and law of God, is commanded vnto the people, it is euident both by the old and new law: for it is said in the 28. of the Prouerbs; He that turneth away his eare, and will not heare the law of God, his prayer shall be cursed. And our Sauiour rebuking the Scribes and Pharises, concludeth thus in the 8. of saint John, saying; He that is of God heareth Gods word: but forasmuch as you are not of God, therefore you heare not his word.

Thirdly, it is to be noted, that excommunication is a separation from the communion, the 11. Question 3. Nihil. & cap. Canonica. And 27. question, first, Vidua. 24. question 3. Cum sacerdos. And this excommunication is double, that is to say, either secret or manifest. The secret excommunication is, whereby a man is separated from the mysticall body of Christ, and so from God though sin, according vnto the 59. of Esay: Your iniquities haue made separation between your God and you. And with this excommunication doth the Apostle excommunicat euery man which doth not loue the Lord Iesu Christ; saying in the first Corinth. and last chapter; If any man doe not loue the Lord Iesu Christ, let him be accursed. The manifest and apert excommunication may bee diuided into a manifest excommunication by God: whereof it is spoken, Psal. 25. Go ye cursed, &c. And often times also in the law of God. Also into a manifest excommunication by men, whereby the prelat doth either iustly or iniustly cast out any man from the participation of the communion of the church. Whereof this shall suffice at this present.

Excommunication double.

The probation of the first part.

Then, as touching the first part of the article, it is thus argued, &c.

Whosoeuer forsaketh or leaueth the commandements of God vndone, they are excommunicate of God. But the priestes which leaue off the preaching of the word of God, for feare of the vniust excommunication of men, doe leaue the commandement of God vndone. Ergo, those priests which doe leaue off preaching the word of God, are excommunicated of God.

The first part of this article is true: The Maior appeareth by the Psalme: Turned bee they which doe decline and swarue from thy precepts. The Minor is euident by the first proposition, which proueth that the preaching of the word of God, is the commandement of God inioined vnto those priests and ministers. Whereupon the saying of our Sauiour, Mat. 15. is spoken vnto them: Wherefore doe you transgresse the commandements of God for your owne traditions? preaching the word of God for feare of vniust excommunication, and so dishonouring the Father Christ, and the mother the holy church.

It is thus confirmed: All they which do omit or let slip any matter of worke, principally and straitly inioined them of the Lord Iesus Christ, vnder the cloke and colour of grace, for feare of any excommunication of men, they are already excommunicat. But priests, and specially Curats, admonished by the spirit of God, leauing off the preaching of the word of God for feare of the excommunication of men, they omit and leaue off for feare of the same excommunication, a worke principally and straitly inioined vnto them of the Lord Iesus Christ, vnder the cloke and colour of grace: Ergo, priests, and specially curats, and such as be admonished and warned by the spirit of God, omitting the preaching of the word of God for feare of excommunication, are excommunicat. The consequence is well knowne. The Maior appeareth by the Psalme: Cursed be they which doe decline and goe away from thy commandements. The Minor is also euident against by the first supposition.

The Apostles did not obey any wicked inhibition.

Item, if the Apostles of Christ had left off the preaching of the word of God for feare of the excommunication of men, which the Lord did foretell vnto them in the 16. of S. Iohn, saying: They shal excommunicat you out of their synagogues: They had bin excommunicated of God. Ergo, by like euidence, the priests and ministers of Christ, being inspired with the same spirit to preach and declare the word of God, if they leaue it vndone for feare of the excommunication of men: They are already excommunicat. The consequent dependeth vpon a similitude. And the antecedent is euident: for if the Apostles had left off preaching for feare of excommunication, they had broken the commandements of God: And so consequently, had bin accursed. Wherefore they willing to obserue and keepe the commandements of God, and to put off the excommunication of men, said vnto the high Priests, Elders, and Scribes at Jerusalem, to Annas, Caiphas, to Iohn and Alexander, and all other of the kindred of the priests which were gathered together and commanded them that they should not preach nor teach in the name of Iesu: Is it be iust in the sight of God, that we should rather obey you then God, that iudge you. Act. 4. And in the 5. of the Acts, they said vnto them; We ought rather to obey God then man. Why this saying of the holy Ghost, it is concluded, that the priests and ministers of Christ, inspired by the holy Ghost to preach the word of God, ought rather obey the holy Ghost then those which shall prohibit and command them to the contrary, and to suffer the excommunication of men patiently. Wherevpon pope Anacletus spake very well in this, as it is written Distinction 43. xlij. We know (saith he) that many doe goe about to molest and trouble the doctors and teachers to this end, that they might vtterly bitterly destroy them, and fulfill their olwne proper lusts and desires: yet notwithstanding the said doctors, as much as in them lieth, ought not to depart or goe backe from their good doings and intent, knowing assuredly that blessed are they which suffer persecution for righteousnesse sake. Thus much writeth he. And the reuerend Bede (vpon these words: Yee shall finde an asse tied vp, and an hee fole with her, lose her and bring her vnto mee: and if any man say any thing vnto you, say ye that the Lord hath need of them, writeth thus. Here it is mystically commanded vnto the doctours and teachers, that if any aduersitie doe let or hinder, or any man doe prohibit or stop, that sinners cannot bee loosed from their bonds or snares, and be brought vnto the Lord, by the confession of their faith, that they notwithstanding should not leaue off preaching, but constantly and boldly affirme and say, that the Lord hath need of such, to edifie and build againe his church. For to doo the Apostles: so likewise ought all the humble and meeke ministers of Christ to doo. And Saint Hierom writing vnto Rusticus the bishop of Narbone saith thus: Let no bishop from henceforth be pitted vp or inflamed with the cruell of blacklish temptation, if the priests now and then doe exhort and teach the people, or preach openly in the churches; or as it is said, doo bleese the people. For vnto him which should denye vnto mee the doing hereof, I would say in this manner: Hee that will not that priests should doo those things which they are commanded by God, let him say that hee is greater and aboue Christ. By the which words Saint Hierom doth openly declare, that priests are commanded to exhort and teach the people, and to preach in the churches. Secondly, that a bishop denying or forbidding the same to be done, specially the priests as ministers being apt men thereunto, is crabbed aboue Christ. And therefore consequently, is not to be obeyed nor heard in his doings.

Hieronymus ad Rusticum.

Item, admit that the pope be an heretike, and teach perverse and contrary doctrine vnto the holy Scriptures, and that the bishop bee a catholike man vnto whom the pope giueth in commandement that hee shall not suffer no man to preach contrary to his opinion; as it happened in Pope Leo, and Saint Hillary the bishop: adding this also, that the bishop doe execute the popes commandement vnder paine of excommunication: this notwithstanding if the catholike priests learned in the law of God, doe leaue off preaching against the popes heresies, for feare of excommunication of men, they are already excommunicat. The which thing is euident, for so much as they are accursed through the consent of their silence, as Saint Iohn saith 11. Question 1. He that doth consent vnto sinners, or defendeth a sinner, hee shall be cursed both before God and man, and shall be punished with a most seuere rebuke; and in the 7. Question. 4. Omnis, it is said; Hee that doth neglect to amend that which hee may correct, committeth no lesse fault then hee which hab before offended: for not onely they which doe commit the offence, but also they which consent thereunto, are iudged partakers thereof. In like case, priests which doe not preach against the heresie which the pope teacheth, are dumbe dogs, not able to open their mouthes, or barke against the wolfe, which will kill the sheep of Jesus Christ: Ergo, how can it thee be otherwise, but they must needs be betrayers of the sheepe of their owne shepheard?

If the pope be an heretike, the godly bishop is bound to preach against him.

Item, let it be, that the bishop with the chiefe prelats be an aduiterer or otherwise an open offender, and that he together with his prelats doe command vnder paine of excommunication, that none be so hardy to preach against aduiterie, in such a case they which doe omit their dutie in preaching against aduiterie, for feare of excommunication of men, are already excommunicated of God: Ergo, the first part of the article is true. The Antecedent is proued; for our Sauiour in the eighth of Marke saith thus: He that acknowledgeth mee and my words in this wicked and aduiterous generation, the sonne of man shall also acknowledge and confesse him when hee shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels. Therefore hee that shall confesse Christ, and these words of Christ, Matth. 5. You haue heard that it was said to them in old time, Thou shalt not commit aduitery: But I say vnto you, that euery one which shall behold a woman to lust after her, he hath already committed aduitery with her in his heart: Hee, I say, that shall confesse these things before an aduiterous bishop with his chiefe prelats, he which perchance are the wicked and aduiterous generation, the sonne of man shall also acknowledge him, when he shall come in the glory of his Father, and so consequently is he blessed. Contrariwise, hee which for the feare of excommunication of men will not confesse Christ and his words, before the sinfull and aduiterous generation, is accursed. The consequent holdeth by the words of Christ, Luke 9. He that is ashamed of me and my words, him shall the Sonne of man bee ashamed of, when he shall come in his maiestie, and in the glory of his Father and his holy Angels, pronouncing that which is spoken Matth. 25. Verily, I say vnto you, I know you not; goe you cursed into euerlasting fire.

Albeit the chiefe prelats be aduiterers, yet ought they to preach against aduitery.

The example of Christ.

Also our Sauiour Jesu Christ, did not omit or leaue off the preaching of the kingdome of God, for any pretended excommunication of the Bishops, Scribes and Pharisies: so likewise his true and humble priests, ought not to omit their preaching for any pretensed excommunication of men: the consequent holdeth by the saying of Christ, John 15. Be ye mindfull of the words which I haue spoken vnto you, the seruant is not greater then his maister: If they haue persecuted me, they will persecute you also. The antecedent is apparant by the saying of Saint John in his 9. chapter. Euen now the Iewes had conspired, that whosoeuer did confesse him to bee Christ, should be excommunicat. And likewise John 7. Whether did any of the princes or rulers, or any of the Pharisies beleeue in him. But this people which knoweth not the law, are accursed.

Also the humble and iust ministers of God ought not vnder paine of sinne to cease from the fruitfull preaching of the law of God for any vniust excommunication, or vnlawfull commandement; and it is proued thus: the humble and iust ministers of Christ ought to obey their prelats, in such things as are not contrary to God; as all the holy doctors, and such as are learned in the law of God doe wholly with one consent affirme. And forsomuch as an vniust excommunication, and vnlawfull commandement, are against God, therefore the iust and true ministers of God, ought not to obey such vnlawfull excommunication and commandements, and consequently ought not to cease for them, from the fruitfull preaching of the Gospell of our Lord Jesus Christ; but ought boldly and gladly to preach the same. Forsomuch as the Lord doth comfort them in the 5. of Matth. saying thus: Blessed and happy are ye when as men doe curse you, and persecute you, and speake all kind of euill against you, making lies and flanders vpon you for my sake; reioice and be glad, for great is your reward in heauen.

The obedience of Christian priests toward their prelats.

Also euery minister hauing power giuen him from aboue, to preach the Gospell, he hath the same giuen vnto him for the edifying of the Church, and not for the destruction of the same.

The power of preaching to edification, ought not to cease.

And the Apostle saith 2. Cor. 10. But euery one leaning off the preaching of the Gospell, for feare of any pretensed excommunication of men, he should frustrate the power giuen him, for the edifying of the church. And therefore in so doing, should sinne against God and his church; and consequently, ought rather to preach, not to cease from preaching, for feare of any such excommunication, lest that he be excommunicat of our Lord Jesu Christ.

Item, set case that the pope doth command that there shall be no preaching in any place; then the ministers of Christ leaning off their preaching, for feare of the popes curse, are already excommunicated of God. It is euident, forsomuch as they haue neglected the commandement of God, for the commandement of men. And this case is possible: for by what reason the pope may command vnder paine of excommunication, that there shall bee no preaching in any place, neither in the parish churches, by the same reason, he may command that no man should preach in any place.

The preaching of the Gospell is not to be left off by all the popes prohibition.

The first part is euident by the prohibition of pope Alexander, who in his bull did prohibit to preach the word of God vnto the people in chapels, although the said chapels were confirmed by the priuiledge of the sea apostolike. The which bull, the lord Subincon archbishop of Prage, with his canons, obtained. By these aforesaid, the first part of the article is euident, which is this; that all priests omitting the preaching of the word of God, for feare of the excommunication of men, are already excommunicat.

The second part of the article.

The second part of the article is this, that all they which do omit the hearing of the word of God, for feare of the excommunication of men, are already excommunicat.

And it is proued thus; all such as neglect the commandements of God are excommunicat. But they which neglect the hearing of the word of God, for the excommunication of men, are they which neglect the commandements of God. Therefore they which omit the hearing of the word of God for the excommunication of men, are already excommunicat.

Seanes neede vnto saluation are not to be omitted.

The Maior is apparant by the 118. Psalme: Cursed bee they which decline from thy commandements. And the Minor is euident by the second supposition, which saith; that the hearing of the word of God is commanded vnto the people.

This is confirmed: all such as omit the necessary meane vnto saluation, are excommunicat: but such as omit the hearing of the word of God, for the excommunication by men, be such as do omit the necessary meane vnto saluation. Therefore in so doing, they are excommunicat. The consequent is plaine: the Maior is made euident by this: That al such as do omit the necessary meane vnto saluation, doe also neglect their saluation, and so are out of the way of saluation, and be excommunicated of God. The Minor appeareth hereby, that to heare the word of God, is the meane more necessary vnto saluation, as the Apostle doth proue in this 10. chapter to the Romans: How, saith he, shall they beleeue on him, whom they neuer heard of? And how shall they heare without a preacher? And by and by after, the Apostle inferreth vnto the purpose; That faith commeth by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

Item,

A man ought to doe nothing against his conscience.

Item, whatsoeuer is doone contrary vnto conscience, doth edifie vnto eternall damnation: as it is said, as touching the restitution of the spoiled goods, chap. Literas porro. But to omit the hearing of the word of God, for feare of excommunication of men, is a thing which is done against conscience. Therefore to omit the hearing of the word of God for excommunication, doth edifie vnto eternal damnation: and therefore consequently ought not to doe done, for feare of any excommunication. Wherefore a woman being iudged vnto a man, whom shee knoweth to bee within the degrees of consanguinitie, which God in law hath prohibited, ought not to obey that iudgement, lest that she offend against God; but meekely and patiently to sustaine the excommunication; as it appeareth in the chapter before alleaged. So likewise all true christians ought rather then to offend against God, meekly to suffer the excommunication of men, then to omit the hearing of the word of God. To this purpose also seemeth that which is spoken in the 11. quest. 3. He that feareth the omnipotent God, will not presume by any meanes to doo any thing contrary vnto the Gospel or Apostles, either contrary vnto the Prophets, or the institutions of the holy fathers. By these premisses, the second part of this article is manifest, that all such as doe omit the hearing of the word of God, for feare of excommunication of men, they are already excommunicated.

The priestes of the third part.

And forsomuch as all christians being of lawfull age, not repenting at the end, shall be counted in a manner as traitors of Christ in the day of iudgement, because that they were vnfaithfull seruants of Christ; therefore they which through feare omit the preaching and hearing of the word of God, for the excommunication of men, shall be counted as traitors of Christ, and shall render account thereof vnto the Lord. Wherevpon Chrysostome touching both those sorts in the 41. Homily, thelong vnto the Lord would haue some to be teachers, and other some to be disciples, saith thus: For vnto those which he would haue to be teachers, he speaketh thus by his Prophet Esay: Ye priests, speake in the hearts of the people, for if the priests doe not manifest all the truth vnto the people, they shall render account thereof at the day of iudgement: and likewise if the people doe not learne the truth, they shall also giue an account at the day of iudgement. It is also made more euident by him vpon the 10. of Matthew: Doe not feare them which kill the body, lest that through the feare of death, you doe not freely speake that which you haue heard, neither boldly preach that vnto all men, which you haue heard in your eares. So the heare, by alone it is euident, that not only he is a betrayer of the truth, which transgressing the truth doth openly speake lies in stead of the truth: but he also which doth not freely pronounce, or doth not freely defend the truth, which he ought boldly to defend, is also a traitor vnto the truth. For like as the priest is a debter to preach the truth which he hath heard of the Lord, euen so the lay man is bound to defend the truth, which he hath heard of the minister approued by the scriptures; which if he doe not, then is he a traitor vnto the truth. For if stedfast beleefe with the heart, prouaileth vnto righteousnesse; the confession which is made with the mouth, helpeth vnto saluation. Thus much writeth Chrysostome: who together with the people, meekly hearing the excommunication of the bishops, freely preached the truth, and the people heard him; and so by his word and his workes he freely taught the truth, lest he should be a traitor vnto the truth, and consequently be counted as a traitor vnto our Lord Jesu Christ in the day of iudgement. And thus the third part of the Article aforesaid is manifest.

Chrysostome, although he was excommunicat, yet he did preach.

The course of the word of God ought not to be stopped. Bernard.

The defension of the xv. article of John Wickliffe by John Hus.

The 15. article of Wickliffe.

It is lawfull for any deacon or priest, to preach the word of God without the authority of the Apostolike sea, or of his catholikes.

First, I vnderstand here by the authoritie of the apostolike sea, properly his speciall consent authorising. And likewise I vnderstand by authoritie of the bishop, a speciall consent of the bishop, authorising the said deacon or priest to preach.

The confirmation of the article.

Now as touching the truth of this article, I thus argue: Like as after matrimonie once complete, the man and wife may lawfully without any speciall licence of the pope or bishoppe, procreate carnall children: so likewise deacons or priests, by the motion of God through the Gospell of Jesu Christ, may lawfully without any speciall licence either of pope or bishop, generate spirituall children. Ergo, this article is true, and the antecedent is thus proued. For as it is an acceptable worke vnto God, for man and wife without the speciall licence of the pope or bishop to generate carnall children; so it is acceptable vnto him, that deacons or priests, by the motion of God through the Gospell of Jesu Christ, should lawfully generate spirituall children, without the speciall licence of the pope or of any other bishop: Ergo, the assumption is true.

Every man lawfully called of the church, ought to preach the word of God without the popes licence.

But if any man will deny this similitude, let him shew the diuersitie. Sea seeing it is vnsafe not to receiue, or to choke the seed of Gods word, then the carnall seed: so contrariwise, is it better to receiue and sow abroad that seed of the word of God, whereby children might be raised by vnto God, then to receiue or giue such seed, whereby carnall children may be gotten. Wherevpon our Sauiour in the 10. of Matthew saith thus: Whosoeuer doth not receiue you, neither heareth your words, wipe off the dust from your feet: verily I say vnto you, that in the day of iudgement, it shall be more better vnto the land of Sodome and Gomer then to that citie.

Also a deacon or priest being stirred by the spirit of Jesus Christ may preach the word of God without the speciall licence of the pope or bishoppe. Ergo, it is lawfull for him so to doe. The consequent is thus manifest; for so much as the spirit of God mouing the deacon or priest vnto the preaching of the Gospell, is of greater force then any prohibition of pope or bishop inuented by man: Ergo, according vnto the rule of the Apostles, they ought infallibly to bee obedient vnto the spirit of Christ, which doth so moue them therevnto, and rather to obey God then man: Act. 5. Also by like reason, as Heldad and Medad vpon whom the spirit of God did rest, did lawfullie prophecie without requiring any licence at Moyses hands, as it is written Numeri 11. By the same reason may the meeke minister of Christ, vpon whom the spirit of God doth rest, without the requiring of any licence, either of the pope or bishop, lawfully preach the word of God vnto the people. And would to God in this behalfe all prelats had the spirit of Moyses; for it is said, Numeri 11. That when as Heldad and Medad were prophecying in the tents, a child ran vnto Moyses, and told him, saying: Heldad and Medad doe prophecie in the tents, and by and by Josue the sonne of Nunne, the seruant of Moses, which he had chosen out amongst many, (said) my master Moses forbid them; and he said: Why enuiest thou for my sake? would God that all the people could prophecie, and that the Lord would giue them his spirit. O would to God the pope and bishops had the affections which this holy man the friend of God had. Then would he not prohibit the meeke deacons and ministers of Jesus Christ, to preach the Gospell of Jesus Christ. The like affection had the blessed man Gregory, which in his 22. booke of Morals, writing vpon these words of Job: And I haue afflicted the soule of his husbandmen: hee saith thus: The husbandmen of this earth are these, which being set in small authoritie, with as feruent desire as they can, and with as great labor as they may, doe worke by the preaching of grace, to the erudition of the holy church, the which husbandmen of this world not to affixe, is not to enuie their labors and doings: neither ought the ruler of the church, albeit he doe challenge vnto himselfe also the title of preaching, through enuie gainsay others which doe preach truly and profitably. For the godly mind of the pastor which seeketh not his owne glory amongst men, desireth to be holpen: the which thing also the faithfull preacher doth with, if it might by any meanes be brought to passe, that the truth which he alone cannot sufficiently expresse, all mens mouthes might declare.

God graunt that all the people may prophecie.

Wherefore, whenas Josua would haue reuiled the two which were prophecying in the host, why doest thou enuie (said he) for my sake? for he did not enuie that god in other which he himselfe had. Thus writeth S. Gregory.

Also the meeke ministers of Christ haue by a speciall gift of God, knowledge and mind to preach the Gospell; but neither is it lawfull for the pope or bishop, or any other man to let or hinder them, lest thereby they should let the word of God, that it haue not his free course. Ergo, this article is true; for the king doth not so much rule ouer the goods of his subiects, no not of his owne sonnes, but that they may giue almes to whom they will: much more the bishop hath not so great an charitie ouer the knowledge of the meeke minister, with his other gifts of God, but that he may freely vnder the title of spirituall almes freely preach the Gospell vnto the people. Ergo, forasmuch as it should seem strange, that a bishop should forbid any man to giue any corporall almes to the poore that are an hungred, much more strange and marueilous should it be, if that he should prohibit the spirituall minister of Christ to giue spirituall almes, by the preaching of the Gospell of the word of God.

Item, no catholike man ought to doubt, but that a man able for the purpose, is more bound to teach them which are ignorant, to counsell and comfort the weake in spirit, to correct such as are vnruly, to forgiue those that doe them wrong, then to doe any other worke of mercie: for so much then as he that hath sufficient, is bound vnder paine of damnation to giue corporall almes, as it appeareth Mat. 25. much more he which is able, is bound to doe spirituall almes. And this almes S. Bernard writing vnto Eugenius in his 3. booke, perceiued to be very necessary for the bishop of Rome, where as he saith thus; I feare no greater poison, nor greater sword or mischiefe will happen vnto thee, then this vnsatiable desire of dominion. With what face then can the faithfull minister withdraw or keepe backe the spirituall almes from the poore and any other, euen without the speciall licence of the pope or of the bishop; which licence through the farre distance from the pope, the ministers cannot so easily obtaine or come by: For all prohibition of any prelat being broken through necessitie, is not to bee blamed, 11. Quest. 3. Intercesse, and also in the chapter following.

Item, all authority of preaching giuen vnto deacons and priests in their consecration were but vaine, except that in case of necessity, without any speciall licence, they might preach the Gospell. Iris cuident, forsomuch as it is not lawfull for them to vse that authority by their auncestary, without a speciall licence. Ergo, it is giuen them in vaine. The consequent is cuident by the common saying of the Philosopher. That power is but vaine, whereof proceedeth no vse of action. But forsomuch as this article doth as it were depend vpon the article before passed, therefore this shall suffice, spoken thereof at this present.

Obiection. But against the affirmations of both these articles, this is obiected out of the 16. quest. 1. All faithfull people, and especialie all priests, deacons, and all others of the clergy, ought to take heed that they doe nothing without the licence of their bishop. It is also obiected out of the 5. booke of Decretals, Titulo de hæreticis cap. cum ex iniuncto. Where it is said, no man ought to vsurpe to himselfe, indifferently the office of preaching, forsomuch as the Apostle saith; How shall they preach, except they be sent? Whereas also Innocentius doth declare, that it is not sufficient for a man to say, that he is sent of God to preach, except he doe shew the same. As touching the first point, the Glosse doth sufficiently answer vpon this word, without licence; That is to be expounded, saith he, without general licence: the which is obtained and giuen, when as a bishop doth appoint any priest to gouerne the people. For there by (saith hee) it seemeth a bishop is thought to giue him generall power to minister vnto the people, and to rule the church. Thus much in the Glosse. And to the same end and purpose it is said in the 7. quest. 1. chapter. Episcopi, bishops or priests, if they come into the church of another bishop, for to visit the same, as it is said Glosse 1. in honore suo. Let them be receiued in their degree, and desired as well to preach the word, as to doe any other consecration or oblation. Secondly, it is to be noted, that which is very well spoken in the same place: No man ought to vsurpe vnto himselfe the office of preaching, as a thing indifferent. For to vsurpe, is vnlawfully to vse any thing: Ergo, the same deacon or priest, doth then vsurpe the office of preaching as indifferently, who liuing vitiously, contrary vnto the law of Christ; or being ignorant of the law of God, doth preach either for gaine, or vaineglorie, or liuing, either for his belly or daintie life, or for any vaine glorie: but he which doth liue according vnto the lawes of Christ, and being moued with the affection of sincere charitie, intending purely the honor of God, and the saluation of himselfe and his neighbors, doth preach no lies nor vaine tales, or other things not authorized, but only the law of Christ, and the minds of the holy doctors. And he that doth so preach, necessitie occasioning or meuing him thereunto, in case there be no pope or bishop, or in case perilous to withstand the preaching of heretikes or false preachers, he in so doing in the not vsurpe the office of preaching; and in such case there is no danger but he is sent of God. And this doth also answere vnto that, which is consequently said, that if any man will peraduenture craftily answere, that such preachers are inuisibly sent of God, although not visibly of men, whereas that inuisible sending of God is much more better then the visible sending of men: A man may reasonably answere thereunto, that forsomuch as that internall sending is secret, it is not sufficient for a man onely to say that he is sent of God, forsomuch as euery heretike may so say; but he ought to proue the same his inuisible calling, by the working of some miracle, or by some speciall testimony of the scripture.

Foure kinds of sending or calling. Here it is to bee noted, according to Saint Augustine in his 64. booke of quest. vnto Dosilus, that there are foure kinds of sending. The first is from God only, whereof we reade in Moses and other, which were inspired by God. And this kind of sending looseth from the danger of the statute: so that he whom the spirit of God hath inspired, this priest giuing thanks, may procede vnto a better life. Whereupon pope Vrban said 19. quest. 2. There be (said hee) two lawes, the one publike, the other priuat. The publike law is that which is confirmed in writing by the holy fathers, such as is the canon law, which is onely giuen for transgressions. As for example, it is decreed in the canons, that none of the clergy shall goe from one bishoprickie vnto another, without the letters commendatorie of his bishop; the which was ordained onely for offendors, that no infamed persons should be receiued of any bishop. For they were wont when they could not celebrate or doe their office vnder their owne bishoprickie, to goe vnto another: which now is forbidden by the lawes and precepts. The priuate law is that, which by the instruction of the holy Ghost, is written in the heart, as the Apostle speaketh, of manie, which haue the law of God written in their hearts. And in another place: Forsomuch as the Gentiles haue not the law of God, but naturally doe those things which are of the law, these are lawes vnto themselues. And afterward he saith, the priuat law is much more worthy then the publike law. For the spirit of God is a law: And they which are moued by the spirit of God, are led by the law of God. And who is he, that can worthily resist against the holy Ghost? Whosoeuer therefore is led by the spirit of God, albeit his bishop doe say him nay, let him goe freely by our authority, for the law is not appointed for the tall man: for where as the spirit of God is, there is libertie, and if we be led by the spirit of God, we are not vnder the law.

The bishop may appoint any priest to gouerne the people. For there by (saith hee) it seemeth a bishop is thought to giue him generall power to minister vnto the people, and to rule the church. Thus much in the Glosse. And to the same end and purpose it is said in the 7. quest. 1. chapter. Episcopi, bishops or priests, if they come into the church of another bishop, for to visit the same, as it is said Glosse 1. in honore suo. Let them be receiued in their degree, and desired as well to preach the word, as to doe any other consecration or oblation. Iob 24.

Behold hereof is affirmed, that the sending by God, though inspiration, is not bound vnder the bondage of the law, for that law is more worthy then the publike law. Secondly, that the law is made for transgressors and offenders, and not for the iust. Thirdly, that whosoeuer is led by the spirit of God, although his bishop stand against him, hee may proceed vnto a better life. Whereby it is cuident, that a deacon or priest, dispensed to preach, and being led by the spirit of God, he may freely preach the Gospell of Christ, without the spirituall licence of his bishop. It is cuident, forsomuch as it is good, that a deacon or priest doe liue well, and preach fruitfully. Ergo, he may proceed from idlenesse vnto the labor and office of preaching, and so vnto a better life.

But whereas it is said afore, that forsomuch as the inward sending or calling is secret, therefore it is not sufficient for a man, barely to affirme onely that he is sent of God, whereas euery heretike may so say; but it is necessary, that he doe confirme and proue his inuisible sending, by the working of some miracle, or by some speciall testimony of the Scripture: there is to bee noted, that there are two kinds of preachers: some true preachers of our Sauiour Christ; and others seducers of antichrist. The first sort following the master Christ, teach the people in truth. The other sort, being of a corrupt mind, and reprobate touching faith, resist against the veritie: and through couetousnesse, by their fained words doe make merchandise of the people. And these men doe giue, and shall giue miracles, as our Sauiour saith Matth. 24. There shall arise false Christs, and false Prophets, the which shall shew great signes and wonders, insomuch that euen the elect themselues, if it were by any meanes possible, should bee brought into error. And the Apostle in the 2. to the Thessal. 2. as touching their head antichrist, writeth thus: Whose comming shall be according to the operation of Satan, with all power and signes, false miracles, seducing vnto iniquitie those which doe perish, because they haue not receiued the charitie and loue of truth, that they might be saued: therefore will the Lord send vpon them the operation of error, that they shall giue credit vnto lies; that all such as haue not beleeued the truth, but consent vnto wickednesse, should be iudged. Behold how expressly our Sauiour by himselfe, and by his Apostle doth teach vs, how the disciples of antichrist with their head, should shine through their great signes and wonders. But the true disciples of Christ shall not so doe in the time of antichrist. For as Saint Ildor. saith in his first booke, 22. De summo bono: Before that antichrist shall appeare, all vertues and signes shall cease from the church, that he may the boldlier persecute the same, as an abiect. For this profit shall all miracles and signes cease vnder antichrist, that thereby the patience of the holy men might be knowne, and the lightnesse of the reprobat which are offended, may be opened, and also that the crueltie of the persecutors should be made more fierce. Thus writeth Saint Ildor. And Saint Gregory in his 24. booke of Morals saith: For why? by a terrible examination of Gods secret dispensation, shall all signes of vertue or power bee taken away from the holy church, before that the Leuiathan appeare in that most wicked and damnable man, whose shape he doth take vpon him. For prophecie is hidden, the gift of healing is taken away, the vertue of long abstinence is diminished, the words of doctrine are put to silence, and the wonderful works of miracles are extinguished: which things nothing can vtterly take away, but onely the dispensation of God. But this dispensation is not so openly and manifoldly declared as it hath been in times past: the which also is done by a marueilous dispensation, that through one onely thing, both Gods loue and iustice should be fulfilled. For a while the power of miracles being taken away, the holy church appeareth the more abiect and forsaken, and the reward of good men doth cease, which reuerenced the same for the hope of heauenly riches, and not for any present signes: and that the minds of euill men against the same, might the sooner be knowen, which neglect to follow the inuisible things, which the church doth promise, whiles they be led with visible signes.

Forsomuch then as the humilitie of the faithfull, as it were destitute of the multitude, and appearing of signes by the terrible working of Gods secret dispensation, wherein mercy is giuen vnto the good and iust, wrath heaped vpon the euill. Forsomuch then as it is truly said, that before this Leuiathan shall plainly and manifestly come, powrtie shall goe before his face; for before that time the riches of miracles shall be taken away from the faithfull. Then shall that ancient enemy (seth himselfe against them by open wonders: that as he is ercelled through signes and wonders, so shall he the more manly bee vanquished of the faithfull, without any signes or miracles. Also in his 16. booke vpon these words, which the blessed man Iob said: Who shall reprehend his way before him, or who shall call in his teeth, what he hath done, whilest hee did speake speake of the body of all euill, he suddenly conuerted his speech vnto the head of all the wicked; for he did see that toward the end of the world Satan should enter into man, whom the Scripture calleth antichrist, he shall be exalted with such pride, he shal rule with such power, he shal be exalted with such signes and wonders, vnder the pretence of holinesse, that his doing cannot be controlled of men, forsomuch as his signes and tokens are ioined with power and terror, and with a certaine shew of holinesse. Wherefore he saith; who shall controll his waies before him, what man is hee that dare once rebuke or checke him, whose looke or countenance is he afraid of? But notwithstanding, not onely Enoc and Elias, the which are brought as example for his probation, but also the elect doe argue and reprooue his way, whiles that they doe contemne, and by the force and power of their mind, resist his malice. But forsomuch as this thing is not done by their owne power and strength, but by Gods helpe and grace, therefore it is very well said; Who shall argue or reprooue his waies before him: who but only God? By whose helpe, the elect are aided and made able to resist.

The proofe of holinesse.

And a little after, vpon the same booke of Iob, Gregory saith, insomuch as holy men doe withstand his iniquity: It is not they themselues which doe so rebuke his waies, but it is he, through whose helpe they are strengthened. Also in his second booke he saith: Now the holy church doth not regard, but despise the signes and miracles of the heretikes, if they doe any: forsomuch as the church doth sufficiently vnderstand, that it is no kind of holinesse: for why? the praise of holinesse is not to make signes or wonders, but to loue euery man as himselfe, to think truly of the very true God, and to thinke better of thy neighbour then of thy selfe: for true vertue and holinesse consisteth in loue, and not in shewing of miracles. This the veritie declareth, saying: Hereby shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye loue one another: but he saith not, that hereby men shall know that ye are my disciples, because yee worke miracles; but contrariwise, if ye loue one another: declaring plainly thereby, that it is not miracles, but the meere charity and loue of God, which maketh vs the seruants of God. Wherefore the chiefe testimony of being Gods disciple, is to haue the gift of brotherly loue. This throughout doth S. Gregory write, and often times in other places he speaketh very much of miracles, how that they shall cease amongst the iust, and abound amongst the wicked.

Signes common and indifferent to the ministres of Christ and antichrist.

Also Chrysostome in his 5 tue and fiftith homily saith thus: It is a common and indifferent worke betweene the ministers of God and the ministers of the diuell, to call out diuels; but to confesse the truth and to worke righteousnesse, is the only work of the Saints and holy men: therefore whomsoeuer thou doest see casting out of diuels, if hee haue not the confession of the truth in his mouth, neither righteousnesse in his hands, he is not a man of God: but if thou doest see a man openly confessing and declaring the truth, and doing iustice, although he doe not cast out any diuels, yet is he the man of God. And it followeth: Let vs know, that like as the comming of Christ, before him, the Prophets, and with him the Apostles wrought miracles though the holy Ghost, for such as the thing is which is shewed, such sent and sauor will proceed from the same. He writeth also vpon the beginning of Matthew: The whole world did marueil and wonder at three things, that Christ rose againe after his death, that flesh ascended into heauen, and that he did conuert the whole world by his twelue Apostles. There are foure causes which wrought the same: that is to say, the contempt of riches or money; the despising of pompe and glory; the separation of themselues from all worldly occupation and businesse, and the patient suffering of torments. Thus much writeth Chrysostome also. Also S. Isidore in his first booke and twenty fiue chapter, De summo bono, writeth thus: Like as in the Apostles, the marueilous effect and power of works was much more commendable then the vertue of their signes: euen so now in the church is it much more better to liue well, then to worke any signes or miracles. And the cause why that the church of God doth not at this present worke miracles, as it did in the time of the Apostles, is this: that it was necessary at that time that the world should beleeue miracles, and now at this present euery faithfull beleeuer ought to shine with good works, for to this end were signes and miracles then outwardly wrought, that their faith thereby might be inwardly strengthened and stablished; for whatsoeuer faithfull man he be that seeketh to worke miracles, he seeketh vainglory to be praised of men, for it is written: Miracles are signes and tokens vnto the infidels and misbeleeuers, and not vnto the faithfull. Thus much writeth Isidore.

Why true miracles shal cease vnder Antichrist.

The cause why the church now worketh not miracles.

A great miracle to slone a man conuerting.

Item, Saint Augustine in his booke of confession saith thus: There is no greater miracle amongst men, then to loue our enemies. By these words of these holy men, a man may easily gather, that both in our daies and in the time to come, the disciples of antichrist both doe, and shall more flourish and shew themselues by strange signes and miracles, then the disciples of Christ, according to the saying of our Sauiour Iesu Christ: There shall rise vp amongst you false prophets, which shall worke strange miracles. Secondly, it is apparent, that they are greater and stranger miracles, to confesse the truth, and to doe iustice, then to worke any other kinde of miracle. Thirdly, it is gathered thereby, that whatsoeuer minister or deacon doth loue his enemies, contemneth riches, despiseth the glory of the world, and sleeth from all worldly troubles, meekly sustaineth and suffereth most terrible and cruell threatnings and strokes for the gospels sake, hee worketh miracles, hauing thereby a testimony and witnesse, that he is the true disciple of Iesu Christ. And it is cuident by the saying of our Sauiour Iesu Christ, Mat. 5. Let your good works so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorifie your father which is in heauen. And likewise Iohn 10. Trust vnto your good works. Whereupon S. Gregory in his first booke of Dialogues, writeth thus: The estimation of a true life, consisteth in the vertue of his works, and not in the shewing of signes. Whereby it is fourthly concluded, by that which is aforesaid, that it is a more effectuall testimony and witnesse for a priest or deacon, that he is sent of God to confesse the truth, and follow Christ in the forsaid vertues, then to call out diuels, or to doe any other miracles: as it is cuident by the saying of Chrysostome before alleaged; Whomsoeuer thou doest see to cast out diuels, if the confession or acknowledging of the truth be not in his mouth, neither righteousnesse nor iustice in his hands, he is not a man of God. This is also confirmed by the words of Christ, Mat. 7. Many shall say vnto me in that day: Lord, Lord, haue not we prophecied in thy name; haue not we cast out diuels in thy name; and haue not we also wrought many great wonders and miracles in thy name? Then I will answer and say vnto them: forsomuch as I haue not knowne you at any time, depart from me yee workers of iniquitie: And as touching the second part. Chrysostome saith: If you see a man confessing and preaching the truth, and working righteousnesse, although he doe not cast out diuels, he is a man of God.

The true marks of Christs ministers.

The testimony of a true priest.

Hereby it appeareth, that euery deacon, priest, or minister, confessing the truth, and working iustice, hath a perfect and sure testimony that he is sent of God, and that it is not necessary for him to approue this his sending by the working of any miracle, in stead of working righteousnesse, neither by any testimonial, the which should plainly declare him by name, that he was sent of the Lord to preach.

The first part appeareth manifest, by that which is already spoken, that all miracles in the time of antichrist shall cease in the elect.

The second part is also cuident, forsomuch as none of the present preachers, can shew by the scripture of the law of God, that he is specially named thereunto.

And likewise doe I also affirme and say, as touching all preachers which shall come hereafter, that they are not named by name. But let no man here obiect Enoc and Elias, which were ancient preachers, and prophecied by the holy spirit of God. And it is apparent, that like as it is not a cause sufficient to proue, that this priest or deacon is sent of God to preach, because he worketh miracles; so is it not a cause sufficient to proue, that he is not sent of God to preach, because he doth no miracles; but to confesse the truth, to worke righteousnesse, to contemne the world with the glory thereof, patiently to suffer rebukes, is a sufficient testimony for any priest or deacon, hauing knowledge of the law of God, freely to preach the Gospell of Iesus Christ, forsomuch as in such case he is sent of God. And this is the sending which the Apostle speaketh of in the 10. to the Romans: How should they preach, except they be sent? Whereupon the glosse of S. Augustine writeth thus: These things serue to set forth Gods grace, declaring that all our goodnesse is preuented of grace.

For he saith, beleefe commeth of hearing, hearing commeth of preaching, and preaching by the sending of God; so that all together vtterly commeth out of the fountaine of grace, and preaching truly commeth of sending. This hath the glosse: how shall they then preach, without they be sent of God? And this is cuident, that the first and principall sending is from God alone, as it is approued by Moyses.

The second sending is both from God and man, as by the example of Iosua and others, which were sent both by God and the rulers to preach.

The third is from man alone, the which is not founded in the law of God, but in mens traditions, which they rather esteeme.

The fourth sending, which hath but the name onely, is prayers to them, which of themselues vnworthily vsurpe the office of preaching, as those false Prophets of whom God speaketh in the 23. of Jeremy; I did not send them, and they ran: I spake not vnto them, and they prophecied: if they had continued in my counsels, and had declared my words vnto my people, I would haue conuerted them from their euill waies, and wicked imaginations. And our Sauiour speaketh of these prophets in Matthew, saying: There shall arise false prophets. And Peter his true vicar, in his second Epistle and second chapter, prophecying vnto the faithfull beleeuers in Christ, speaketh thus of them: There were amongst the people false prophets, as there shall be amongst you also masters of lies, through whom the truth shall be blasphemed and slandered. And that he might the better instruct the people to know them, them, he adiedh that they shall go about with fained words, for couetousnesse sake, to make merchandise of you.

The difference betweene the true and false Church and their markes.

Therefore euery faithfull man, diligently weighing these things in his mind, may now easily perceiue how great a number of false prophets there be, through whom the christian truth is blaspheined: and all couetous dealing is exercised: and these are they which freely preach lies. But the humble and true ministers of Christ, wherefore they doe appeare, by and by they are persecuted, whereby the prophecie of the Apostle is verified, which is written in the second Epistle to Timothy, the 3. All men, saith he, which desire to liue godly, shall suffer persecution: but the euill men and seducers shall proceede in their wickednesse, running hasty more and more into all kind of errors. The wicked haue now so much prevailed, that they doe preach lies, making heretikes of the faithfull christians, neither is there any man that dare prohibit them their lying, so that they doe not preach against the vices of the prelats. How then can you say, that antichrist is not exalted aboue all that which is called God, suppressing vnder the members of Christ in his office, soothsaying and flattering his members in lying: Therefore the true and faithfull disciples of Christ ought to stand ready girt about their loines, and shoes vpon their feete in defence of the Gospell, taking the sword in hand, which is the word of God: Ephes. 6. And to fight against the crafts of antichrist, who goeth about vtterly to extinguish the true preaching of the Gospel of our Lord Iesu Christ.

The ministers of antichrist do close vp the eies of their prelats.

¶ The second disputation in the Vniuersitie of Prage, vpon the seuenteenth Article of Iohn Wickliffe, most fruitfull to bee read; prouing by foure and twentie reasons out of the Scriptures, how that princes and lords temporall, haue lawfull authority and iurisdiction ouer the spiritualty and churchmen both in taking from them, and correcting their abuses, according to their doings and deserts.

TO the honor of almighty God, and of our Lord Iesu Christ, both for the trying out of truth, and the profit of holy mother the church, according to the congregation of our Vniuersitie of Prage, which auoiding alwaies to doe that shall be prejudiciall to the truth, hath deferred to giue their consent vnto the condemnation of the 45. Articles, wishing euen vnto this present, sufficient probation to be giuen of the condemnation of the said Articles, & particularly of euery one of them. Whereupon the said Vniuersitie doth alwaies require due proofe of the same, forsomuch as pope Damasus in his canon distinction 68. chap. Chorepiscopi, saith thus: That it is necessarie that whatsoeuer thing standeth not by due reason, should be rooted out. Whereby it appeareth, that the condemnation of the 45. Articles, if it stand not with proofe and sufficient demonstration for euery Article, it is necessary to be rooted out.

But if any man will obiect and say, that I require a reason of euery thing, is to derogat from Gods diuine power. Vnto this obiection maister William doth answer himselfe in his Philosophie, the first booke, almost at the end; where he intreating of the place, in Gen. 2. God made man of the slime of the earth, &c. hath these words: For in what point (saith we) are we contrary to the holy Scriptures, if wee seeke by reason to declare wherefore any thing is done, which is said in the Scriptures to be done? For if that a wise man should say that a thing is done, and doe not declare how it is done: and another man speaketh the very selfe same thing, and careth how it is done, what contrarietie is there? But forsomuch as they themselues know not the force of nature, to the intent that they might haue all men partakers with them of their ignorance, they would haue no man to inquire it out. But they would haue vs beleeue as ignorant people, neither to seeke any reason of our beliefe, that the prophecie might be fulfilled; Such as the people is, such shal be the priest. But we truly doe say, that in all things a reason is to be sought, if it may by any meanes bee found. But if that any man doe stay at any thing which the Scripture doth affirm, let him commit the same vnto faith, & vnto the holy Ghost. For Moses saith; If the lambe cannot be eaten, let it not be by and by consumed in the fire: but let him first call his neighbour which dwelleth next house vnto him; and if they also be not sufficient to eat the lambe, then let it be burned in the fire. So likewise, whenas we goe about to seeke any thing as touching the Godhead, and that we be not able of our selues to comprehend the same, let vs call our neighbour which dwelleth next house vnto vs: that is to say, let vs seeke out such a one as dwelleth in the same catholike faith with vs; and if then, neither we, neither yet hee be able to comprehend the same, let it then be burned with the fire of faith.

But these men, albeit they haue many neighbours dwelling neere vnto them, yet for very pride they will not call any man vnto them, chusing rather to continue still ignorant, then to ask anie question. And if they doe know any man to inquire for his neighbor in such case, by and by they cry out vpon him as an heretike: presuming more vpon their own heads, then hauing confidence in their wisdome. But I exhort you to giue no credit vnto their outward appearance, for already it is verified in them which the Satyrical Poet saith, No credit is to be giuē vnto the outward shew: for which of them all is it that doth not abound with most shamefull and detestable vices? And in another place he saith: They are very dainty of their speech, and haue great desire to keep silence. And thus much hath maister Wilhelmus. Let all such heare whom this parable doth touch: for I with the rest of the maisters, bachelors, and students of our Vniuersitie, considering how hard a matter the condemnation of the 45. articles of Wickliffe without reason, is, and how greeuous a thing it were, if we should thereunto cōsent, do call together my neighbors, the doctors of this Vniuersitie, & all others which would obiect any thing against the same, that we might presently finde out the reason of the condemnation of this article, concerning the taking away the temporalities from the clergy.

A protestation, layde by the giuing light vnto the reader, touching the proposition aduersaries to vnderstood, and abbrets, that the goods of the clergy are not directly to be taken away, but in case they doe abuse the same.

Notwithstanding I do professe that it is not my intent, like as it is not the meaning of the Vniuersity, to persuade that princes or secular lords should take away the goods from the clergy when they would, or how they would, and conuert them to what vse they list. But our whole intent is, diligently to search out whether this article, as touching the taking away of temporalities from the clergy, may haue in it any true sense, whereby it may be defended without reproofe. Wherefore this article being the 17. in the number of the 45. is propounded vnder this forme: The lords temporall may at their owne will & pleasure, take away the temporall goods from the clergy, if they do offend, and therein continue. It is thus proued: The kings of the old Testament tooke away the temporall goods at Gods commandement from the clergy: that is to say, from the priests offending. Therfore the kings also of the new Testament, at Gods commandement, may doe the like, whenas the priests of the new law doe offend. The consequent dependeth vpon a similitude. And the antecedent is euident. First, it is proued by Salomon in the 3. of the kings, 2. chap. Which Salomon deposed Abiathar the high priest, because he had taken part with Adonias the brother of Salomon, to make him king, without the aduice either of Dauid, or of Salomon himselfe, which ought to raigne; and set vp Sadoc the priest in the place of Abiathar, because he had not consented with Abiathar, vnto Adonias, as it is written in the 3. booke of Kings, 1. chapter: where it is said; Adonias the sonne of Agithe, exalted himselfe, saying; I will raigne, and made vnto himselfe chariots and horsemen, and fortie men which should run before him: neither did his father rebuke him at any time, saying, Wherefore hast thou done this? For he was very comely, being second sonne, next to Absolom, and his talke was with Ioab the sonne of Saruia and Abiathar the priest, which tooke part with Adonias. But Sadoc the priest, and Banaias the son of Ioiada, and Nathan the Prophet, and Semei, and Serethi, and Felethi, and all the power of Dauids host, were not on Adonias part.

Case of necessitie.

Dauid.

Elias and Elizeus.

The seuenteenth article proued by 24. argumenta.

The example of Christ paying of tribute. S. Ambrose.

This was the cause of the deposing of Abiathar, because he tooke part with Adonia, that he should be king against Salomon, the eldest son of king Dauid: wherefore it is written in the 3. booke, and 2. chap. of the kings: The king said vnto Abiathar the priest, go your waies vnto Anathoth thine owne field, for thou art a man of death; but this day I will not slay thee, because thou hast carried the arke of the Lord before my father Dauid, and didst labor in all things wherein my father labored. Then did Salomon cast out Abiathar, that hee should be no more the priest of the Lord, that the word of the Lord might be fulfilled which he spake vpon the house of Hely in Silo.

Behold the most prudent king Salomon, according to the wisdome which was giuen him of God, did exercise his power vpon the said priest, putting him out of his priesthood, and setting in his place Sadoc the priest. This was a greater matter then to take away the temporalities. If the in the law of Christ, which now raigneth ouer vs, a bishop should likewise rebell against the true heire of the kingdome, willing to set vp another for king, why should not the king or his heire haue power in like case, to take away the temporalities from him so offending?

2. Nabuchodonozor.

Item, it is also euident by the king Nabuchodonozor, which had power giuen him of God, to lead away the children of Israel, with their Priests and Leuites, into the captiuitie of Babylon: as it is written 4. booke of the Kings, 25. chapter.

2. Ioas.

Item, it is read in the 4. booke of Kings, and 12. chap. how that Ioas the most godly king of Iuda, according to the wisdome which God had granted him, took away all the consecrat vessels which Iosaphat, Ieram, and Ochosias, his fore-fathers kings of Iuda had consecrated, and those which he himselfe had offered, and all the treasure that could be found in the temple of the Lord, and in the kings palace, and sent it vnto Azahel king of Syria, and he departed from Ierusalem. Marke how this most holy king exercised his power, not onely in taking away the temporalities of the priests, but also those things which were consecrat in the temple of the Lord, to procure vnto the common wealth the benefit of peace.

4. Ezechias.

Item, in the 4. booke, and 18. chap. of the Kings, it is written, how that the holy king Ezechias took all the treasure that was found in the house of the Lord, and in the kings treasury, and brake brake downe the pillers of the temple of the Lord, and all the plates of gold which he himselfe had fastned thereupon, and gaue them vnto the king of the Assyrians, yet was he not rebuked of the Lord therefore, as he was for his other sinnes, as it appeareth in the second booke of Paralip. 32. chapter. For so much then as in time of necessitie, all things ought to be in common vnto christians, it followeth then that the secular lords in case of necessitie, and in many other common cases, may lawfully take away the moueable goods from the clergie, when they do offend.

10 S. Augustine.

Item, S. Augustine writeth; If thou sayest, what haue we to do with the emperour? But now as I said, wee speake of mans law. The Apostle would be obedient vnto kings, and honor them, saying, Reuerence your kings: and do not say, what haue I to doe with the king? What hast thou then to do with possessions? By the kings law thy possessions are possessed. Thou hast said, what haue I to do with the king? but do not say, what haue thy possessions to do with the king? For then hast thou renounced the lawes of men, whereby thou diddest possesse thy lands. Thus writeth S. Augustine in his 8. distinction, by whose words it is manifest, that the king hath power ouer the church goods, and consequently may take them away from the clergie, transgressing or offending.

11 Magistrates, keepers of both tables.

Item, in his 33. epistle vnto Boniface, he saith: What sober man will say vnto our kings, care not you in your kingdome, by whom the church of the Lord is maintained, or by whom it is oppressed; it pertaineth not vnto you, who will be either a religious man, or who will be a church robber? Vnto whom it may be thus answered: Doth it not pertaine vnto vs in our kingdome, who will either liue a chast life, or who will be an vnchast whoremonger? Behold, this holy man sheweth heere how that it is the dutie of kings, to punish such as are robbers of churches, and consequently the proud clergie when as they do offend.

The dutie of kings to punish the clergie.

Item, he writeth in the 33. queast. 7. si de rebus: The secular lords may lawfully take away the temporall goods from heretickes: and for so much that it is a case greatly possible that manie of the clergie are vsers of Simonie, and thereby heretikes; therefore the secular lords may very lawfully take away their temporalities from them. For what vnworthie thing is it, saith Saint Augustine, if the Catholikes do possesse according vnto the will of the Lord, those things which the heretikes held? For so much as this is the word of the Lord vnto all wicked men, Matth. 21. The kingdome of God shall be taken away from you, and giuen vnto a nation, which shall do the righteousnesse thereof: is it in vaine which is written in the 11. chapter of the booke of Wisdome? The iust shall eate the labours of the wicked.

Matth. 21.

Wisdome 11.

An obiection of the theefe of other mens goods.

And whereas it may be obiected as touching the desire of other mens goods; Saint Augustine answereth, that by that euidence the seuen nations, which did abuse the land of promise, and were driuen out from thence by the power of God, may obiect the same vnto the people of God, which inhabite the same. And the Iewes themselues, from whom, according vnto the word of the Lord, the kingdome is taken away and giuen vnto a people, which shall doe the workes of righteousnesse, may obiect the same vnto the church of Christ, as touching the desire of other mens goods; but Saint Augustines answere is thus:

Christ commaunded tribute to be paid vnto the emperour.

Wee, saith hee, do not desire another mans goods, for so much as they are ours by the commandement of him, by whom all things were made. By like euidence the clergie hauing offended, their temporall goods are made the goods of others, for the profit of the church. To this purpose also, according to Saint Augustine, scrueth the 14. question 4. Vnto a misbeleeuer, it is not a halfe-penie matter, but vnto the faithfull is a whole world of riches: shall we not then conuince all such to possesse another mans goods, which seemed to haue gathered great riches together, and know not how to vse them; for that truelie is not anothers, which is possessed by right, and that is lawfullie possessed, which is iustly possessed, and that is iustlie possessed, which is well possessed. Ergo, all that is euill possessed is another mans, and he doth ill possesse it, which doth euill vse it.

S. Augustine 14. question 4.

If then any of the clergie doe abuse the temporall goods, the temporall lords may at their owne pleasure, according vnto the rule of charitie, take away the said temporall goods from the clergie so transgressing. For then according to the allegation aforesaid, the clergie doth not iustly possesse those temporall goods, but the temporall lords proceeding according to the rule of charitie, do iustly possesse those temporalities, for so much as all things are the iust mans. 1. Corinth. 3. chapter. All things, saith the Apostle, are yours; whether it be Paul or Apollo, or Cephas, either the world, either life, or death, or things present, or things to come; for all things be yours, you be Christs, and Christ is Gods. Also 23. queast. 7. Quicunque, it is written: Iure diuino omnia sunt iusti rorum. The words of Saint Augustine in that place, ad Vincentium, bee these: Whosoeuer, saith hee, vpon the occasion of this law or ordinance of the emperour, doth molest or persecute you, not for loue of anie charitable correction, but onely for hatred and malice to doe you displeasure, I hold not with him in so doing.

1. Corinth. 3.

By Gods law, cuncta iusti rorum esse dicuntur.

And although there is nothing heere in this earth, that anie man may possesse assuredly, but either hee must hold it by Gods law, by which cuncta iustorum esse dicuntur: that is, all things be said to pertaine to the possession of the iust: or else by mans law, which standeth in the kings power to set and to ordaine, &c. Here by the words of Augustine alleaged, yee see all things belong to the possession of the iust, by Gods law.

13 The clergie subiect vnto the Emperour and Kings by reason of their possessions.

Item, for so much as the clergie by meanes of their possessions are in danger of the Emperor and King: it followeth, that if they doe offend, the Emperor or King may lawfullie take away their possessions from them. The consequent dependeth on this point, for so much as otherwise they were not in subiection vnder the Emperor or King: and the antecedent is manifest by the 11. question and 1. Parag. His ita respondetur. Where as it is specified in Latine thus: [His ita respondetur, Clerici ex officio Episcopo sunt suppositi, ex possessionibus prædiorum imperatori sunt obnoxij: ab Episcopo ordinantur, decimas, & primitias accipiunt; ab imperatore vero prædiorum possessiones in accipiuntur:] that is to say: The clergie by meanes of their office are vnder the Bishop, but by reason of their possessions they bee subiect vnto the Emperor: Of the Bishop they receiue vnction, tithes, and first fruites; of the Emperor, they receiue possessions. Thus then it is decreed by the Emperiall law, that liuelihoods should be possessed: whereby it appeareth, that the clergie by the possession of their liuelihoods are in danger of the Emperour: for him to take away from them, or to correct them according to their deseruings, and to haue the controlement of them, as it shall seeme good vnto him.

14 Vsire of Simonie are punished by the ciuill magistrate.

Item, the temporall Lords may take away the temporalities from such as vse Simonie, because they are heretickes. Ergo, this Article is true.

Pasce ecclesiam tuam, pro.vltimo capitulo.

The antecedent is manifest, for so much as the secular Lords may refuse such as vse Simony, and punish them except they doe repent. For by the decree of Pope Pasthasius in the first and last question it appeareth, that all such as vsed Simonie, were to be refused of all faithfull people, as chiefe and principall heretickes: and if they doe not repent after they be warned, they are also to be punished by the externe power. For all other faults and crimes, in comparison of Simonie, be counted but light, and seeme small offences.

The Laitie controllers of the Clergie.

Whereupon the glosse expounding the same text, saith, that by this word externe, is vnderstood the laitie, which haue power ouer the clergie, besides the Church, as in the 17. distinct. [Non licuit, & 23. quæst. 5. principes.] Whereby it is euident, that the temporall Lords may take away the temporall goods from the clergie when as they doe offend.

Gregorie writeth to the French Queene.

Item, Saint Gregorie in the Register vpon his 7. booke and 9. Chapter, writeth thus vnto the French Queene: For so much as it is written that righteousnesse helpeth the people, and sinne maketh them miserable: then is that kingdome counted stable, when as the offence which is knowne, is soone amended.

Wicked priests the destruction of the people.

Therefore, for so much as wicked priests are the cause of the ruine of the people, (for who shall take vpon him, to be intercessor for the sinnes of the people, if the Priest which ought to intreate for the same, haue committed greater offences?) and vnder your dominions the Priests doe liue wickedly and vnchastly: therefore that the offence of a few might not turne to the destruction of many, we ought earnestly to seeke the punishment of the same. And it followeth: If we doe command any person, we doe send him forth, with the consent of your authoritie, who together with other Priests, shall diligently seeke out, and according vnto Gods word correct and amend the same. Neither are these things to be dissimuled, the which we haue spoken of, for he that may correct any thing, and doth neglect the same, without all doubt he maketh himselfe partaker of the sinne or offence.

Therefore foresee vnto your owne soule, prouide for your nephews, and for such as you doe desire to raigne after you, prouide for your countrey, and with diligence prouide for the correction and punishment of that sinne, before our Creator doe stretch out his hand to strike.

And in his next Chapter he writeth vnto the French King: Whatsoeuer you doe vnderstand, to pertaine either vnto the honour and glory of our God, to the reuerence of the church, or to the honour of the priests, that doe you diligently cause to be decreed and in all points to be obserued. Wherefore once againe we doe mooue you, that you commaund a Synode to be congregate, and as we wrote lately vnto you, to cause all the carnall vices which raigneth amongst your Priests, and all the wickednesse and Simonie of your Bishops, which is most hard to be condemned and reproued; vtterly to be banished out of your kingdome, and that you will not suffer them to possesse any more substance vnder your dominion, then Gods commandement doth allow.

S. Gregorie to the french king.

Beholde how carefully blessed Gregory doth exhort the Queene and the King to punish the vices of the clergie, left through their negligence they should be partakers of the same: and how they ought to correct their subiects. For as it is conuenient to be circumspect and carefull against the outward enemies, euen so likewise ought they to be against the inward enemies of the soule. And like as in such warre against the outward enemies, it is lawfull to take away their goods, so long as they continue in their malice, so also is it lawfull to take away the goods of the clergie, being the inward enemie.

The consequent is prooued thus, for so much as the domesticall enemies are most hurtfull.

Item, it is thus argued: If God be, the temporal Lords may meritoriouslie and lawfully take away the temporall goods from the Clergie, if they doe offend. For this point let vs suppose that wee speake of power, as the true autentike Scripture doth speake, Matth. 3. 9. Gods able euen of these stones to raise vp children vnto Abraham.

Whereupon it is thus argued: For if God he, he is omnipotent, and if he so bee, hee may giue like power vnto the secular Lords. And so consequently they may meritoriouslie and lawfully vse the same power. But least that any man may obiect, that a proofe made by a strange thing is not sufficient, it is therefore declared how that the temporall Lords haue power to take away their almes bestowed vpon the church, the church abusing the same, as it shall be prooued hereafter. And first thus: It is lawfull for kings in cases limited by the law to take away the moueables from the Clergie when they do offend: it is thus proued; For the temporall Lords are most bound vnto the works of greatest mercie most easie for them, but in case possible, it should be greater almes, and easier temporall dominion, to take away their almes from such as build therwithal vnto eternall damnation, through the abuse therof, then to giue the said almes for any bodily reliefe. Ergo: the assumption is true.

Whereupon first this sentence of the law of Christ in the 2. Thes. 3. is noted, whereas the Apostle writeth thus: When we were amongst you, we declared this vnto you, that hee that would not worke should not eate. Wherefore the law of nature doth licence all such as haue the gouernance of kingdomes, to correct the abuse of the temporalities which would be the chiefe cause of the destruction of their kingdomes: whether the temporall Lords or any other had endowed the Church with those temporalities or not. It is lawfull for them in some case to take away the temporalities, as it were by way of physicke to withhold sinne, notwithstanding any excommunication, or other ecclesiasticall censures, for so much as they are not endowed, but only with condition thereunto annexed.

Hereby it appeareth, that the condition annexed to the endowing, or inriching of any church, is, that God should be honoured; the which condition if it once faile, the contrarie taking place, the title of the gift is lost: and consequently the Lord which gaue the almes ought to correct the offence. Excommunication ought not to let the fulfilling of iustice. Secondlie, according to the Canon law, 16. quest. 7. this sentence is noted, where it is thus spoken as touching the children, nephewes and the most honest of the kinred of him which hath builded or endowed any church: That it is lawfull for them to bee thus circumspect, that if they perceiue the priest do detraud any part of that which is bestowed, they should either gently admonish or warne him, or else complaine of him to the bishop, that he may be corrected. But if the bishop himselfe attempt to do the like, let them complaine of him to his Metropolitane: and if the Metropolitane doe the like, let them not deferre the time, to report it in the eares of the king. For so saith the canon, Let them not deferre to report it in the eares of the king. To what end I pray you, but that he should do correction? neither is it to be doubted, but that correction doth more appertaine vnto the king in this point for their goods, whereof he is chiefe Lord by a subtraction proportionall, according to the fault or offence.

Item, it is thus prooued: It is law full for the secular Lords by their power to doe correction vpon the clergy by some kind of fearefull discipline apertaining to their secular power. Ergo, by like reason it is law full for them by their power to doe such correction, by all kind of fearefull discipline pertaining vnto their secular power. For so much then as the taking of their temporalities is in kind of fearefull discipline pertaining vnto the secular power: it followeth that it is lawfull for them therby to doe such correction. And consequently it followeth that the antecedent is to be prooued. The consequent is euident: and the antecedent is prooued by Isidore 23. quæst. 5. Principes. Where it is thus written: There should bee no secular powers within the church, but only for this purpose, that whatsoeuer thing the priests or ministers cannot bring to passe by preachings or teachings, the secular powers may command the same by the terror & feare of discipline. For oftentimes the heauenlie kingdome is profited and holpen by the earthly kingdome, that they which are in the church, and doe any thing contrarie vnto faith and discipline, by the rigour of the princes may bee troden downe, and that the power of the rulers may lay that discipline vpon the necks of the proud and stifnecked, which the vtility and profit of the church cannot exercise or vse.

Item, all things that by power ought to worke or bring to any perfect end by the reasonable measuring of the meane thereto, it may lawfully vse by power, the subtraction or taking away of the excesse and the addition of the want of the meanes, according as shall bee conuenient or meete for the measure to be made. For so much then as the secular Lords ought by their power to prouide for the necessarie sustentation of the Christian Clergie by the reasonable measuring of their temporalities, which they are bounde to bestowe vpon the Christian clergie, it followeth that they may law fully by their power vse y taking away or putting vnto of those temporalties according Tenure and how the title of any gift is lost.

To be lawfull for the ciuill rulers to correct the clergie.

according as shall be conuenient for the performance of that reasonable matter.

Item, it is lawfull for the clergie, by their power to take away the sacraments of the church from the laity customably offending, for so much as it doth pertaine to the office of the christian ministers by their power to minister the same vnto the laie people. Wherefore, for so much as it doth pertaine vnto the office of the laitie, according vnto their power to minister, and giue temporalities to the clergie of Christ, as the Apostle saith, 1. Cor. 9. It followeth, that it is also lawfull for them by their power to take away the temporalities from the clergie, when they doe customablie sinne and offend.

Item, by like power may he which giueth a stipend or exhibition, withdraw and take away the same from the vnworthie labourers, as he hath power to giue the same vnto the worthie labourers: for so much then as temporalities of the clergie, are the stipends of the laytie; it followeth that the lay people may by as good authoritie take away againe the same from the clergy, which will not worthily labour, as they might by their power bestow the same vpon those, which would worthily labour, according to the saying of the Gospell, Matth. 21. The kingdome shall be taken away from you, and giuen vnto a people which shall bring forth the fruits thereof.

Item, it is also lawfull for the secular lords, by their power to chastise and punish the lay people when they do offend, by taking away of their temporalities, according to the exigent of their offence, for so much as the lay people are subiect vnder their dominion. Wherefore the clergie being also subiect vnder the dominion of the secular lords, as appeareth. Rom. 13. and many other places, it is euident that it is lawfull by their power to punish the clergie, by taking away of their temporalities, if their offence do so deserue.

Item, the true and easie direction of the clergie vnto the life of Christ and the Apostles, and most profitable vnto the laitie, that the clergie should not liue contrarie vnto Christs institution, seemeth to be the taking away of their almes, & those things which they had bestowed vpon them. And it is thus proued: That medicine is most apt to be laid vnto the sore, whereby the infirmitie might soonest be holpen, and were most agreeable vnto the patient. Such is the taking away of the temporalities: Ergo, this article is true. The minor is thus proued, for so much as by the abundance of temporalities the worme or serpent of pride is sprung vp, whereupon vnstable desire and lust is inflamed, and thereby proceedeth all kind of gluttonie and leacherie. It is euident in this point, for so much as the temporalities being once taken away, euery one of those sinnes is either vtterly taken away, or at the least diminished, by the contrarie vertue induced and brought in. It seemeth also most pertinent vnto the laitie, for so much as they ought not to lay violent hands vpon their ministers, or to abiect the priestly dignitie, neither to take away of the clergie in their open course. It seemeth also by the law of conscience, to pertaine vnto the lay people, for so much as euery man which worketh any worke of mercie, ought diligently to haue respect vnto the abilitie of them that he bestoweth his almes vpon, lest that by nourishing or helping loiterers, he be made partaker of his offence. Whereupon, if a priest do not minister of their spiritualties, as Hostiensis teacheth in his third booke, of their tithes, first fruits and oblations, that the people ought to take away the almes of their tithes from them.

23 Item, it is confirmed by the last chapter of the 17. question, out of the decree of rents appropriat vnto the church, quicunq. Whereas the case is put thus, that a certaine man hauing no children, neither hoping to haue any, gaue all his goods vnto the church, reseruing vnto himselfe the only vse and profits thereof: it hapned afterward that he had children, and the bishop restored againe his goods vnto him, hoping not for it. The bishop had it in his power, whether to render again or no, those things which were giuen him, but that was by the law of man, and not by the law of conscience. If then by the decree of the holy doctor S. Augustine in his sermon of the life of the clergie, Aurelius the bishop of Carthage had no power by Gods law to withhold that which is bestowed vpon the church for the necessitie of children, by the which law, the wanton, proud, and vnstable clergie being more then sufficiently possessed and inriched, do detaine and keepe backe the temporalities to the detriment and hurt of their owne state, and of the whole militant church, the secular patrons being thereby so impouerished, that they are compelled by penurie to rob and steale, to oppresse their tenants, to spoile and vndo others, and often times by verie necessitie are driuen to beggerie.

24 Item, suppose that a priest and minister, how grieuously soeuer he do offend, by what kind or signe of offence soeuer it bee, as it was in the bishop Iudas Iscarioth, of the religious Monke Sergius, of pope Leo the heretike, and manie other priests, of whom the Scripture and chronicles make mention, and daily experience doth teach vs the same: it is euident that as it is supposed, the priests in the kingdome of Boheme grieuouslie offending, it is the kings part, for so much as he is supreme head next vnder God, and lord of the kingdome of Boheme, to correct and punish those priests. And for so much as the gentlest correction, and punishment of such as be indurate in their malice, is the easting away of their temporall goods, it followeth, that it is lawfull for the king to take away temporalities. Wherefore it should seeme verie marueilous and strange, if that priests riding about, should spoile virgins, violently corrupt and defile honest matrons, if in such case it were not lawfull for them to take away their annours, weapons, horses, guns and swords from them. The like reason were it also, if they had vnlawfully conspired the death of the king, or that they would betray the king vnto his enemies.

Item, whatsoeuer any of the clergie doth require, or desire of the secular power, according vnto the law and ordinance of Christ, the secular power ought to performe and grant the same. But the clergie being letted by riches, ought to require helpe of the secular power, for the dispensation of the said riches. Ergo the secular power ought in such case by the law of Christ, to take vpon them the office or duty of getting, keeping, and distributing all such maner of riches. The minor is hereby proued, that no man ought to haue riches, but to that end, that they be helps, preferring and helping vnto the office which is appointed of God. Therefore in case that secular possession do hinder the clergie from their dutie, the secular power ought to take it away, for so did the Apostles, Act. 6. saying, It is not lawfull for vs to leaue the word of God vntaught, and to minister to tables.

And thus hitherto hath Iohn Hus prosecuted Wickliffes articles, with long arguments and reasons, the which were too long a trauell, neither agreeable for this place, to alleage all the whole order of his reasons and proofes, which he vsed in that disputation, aboue the number of twentie more, besides the testimonies of all the writers before recited, the which he alleageth out of the Scriptures, Decretals, S. Ambrose in his booke of offices, S. Augustine in his 5. booke and 5. quest. and also vnto Macedo, Isidore, the councell of Nice, Gregorie his 11. quest. Bernard vnto Eugenius in his third booke, and out of Lincolniensis 61. epistle, besides many other moe. The sum of all which testimonies tend vnto this end, that he might vtterlie take away all earthly rule and dominion from the clergie, and to bring them vnder the subiection and censure of kings and emperours, as it were within certaine bonds, the which is not only agreeable vnto equitie and Gods word, but also profitable for the clergie themselues. He teacheth it also to be necessarie, that they should rather be subiect vnder the secular power, then to be aboue them, because that else it were dangerous, left that they being intangled with such kind of busines, they should be an easier prey vnto Satan, and sooner trapped in his snares. And thereby it should come to passe that the gouernance and principalitie of all things being at the length brought into the hands of the clergie, the lawfull authoritie of kings and princes should not only be giuen ouer vnto them, but in a manner as it were grow out of vse: specially for so much as alreadie in certaine kingdomes and common wealthes, the Ecclesiasticall power is growne vnto such height, that not only in Boheme, but also almost throughout all the common wealthes, they do occupie the third, or at least the fourth part of the rents and reuenues. And last of all, he alleageth the example of Gregorie and of Mauritius, and afterward the prophecie of Hildegardis, writing in this maner:

Hildegardis.

As the ecclesiasticall ministers do willingly receiue reward and praise of kings and rulers for their good deeds: So also ought they when they do offend, willingly suffer and receiue punishment at their hands for their euill doings. The consequent holdeth thus: for so much as the punishment meekely and humblie receiued for his offence doth more profit a man, then his praise receiued for any good worke. Whereupon S. Gregorie writeth thus vnto Mauritius the emperour when he did persecute him, saying: I beleeue that you do please almightie God so much the better, in so cruelly afflicting me, which haue bin so euill a seruant vnto him. If then this holy Pope did so humblie and meekely, without any offence, suffer this affliction of the emperour, why should not any of the clergie, when they do offend, meekely sustaine punishment, at the kings or rulers hands, vnder whom he is bounden to be subiect? When as the true vicar of Christs faith, the 1. of Peter and 2. chapter, Be yee subiect vnto euery creature for Gods cause, whether it be vnto the king, as most excellent, or vnto the rulers, as men sent of God, for the punishing of the wicked, and to the praise of the good, for so is the good will of God.

Gregorius 2. Mauritium.

Whereupon pope Leo, leaning vnto this rule, submitted himselfe vnto Ludouicus the emperour, as it is written in the 2. quest. 7. vnder these words: If we haue done any thing incompetently, or that we haue not obserued the vpright path and way of equitie amongst subiects, we will amend the same, either by your owne iudgement, either else by the aduice or iudgement of those which you shal appoint for that purpose. For if we which ought to correct and punish other mens faults, do commit more grieuous our selues, we are not then the disciples of the truth (but as with sorow we speake it) we shall bee aboue all other, the masters of errour.

Pope Leo submitteth himselfe vnto the emperor Ludouicus.

And in the tenth distinction he writeth thus: As touching the obedience vnto the emperour, as concerning the precepts and commandements of our emperours, and our predecessours bishops (the which the Glosse nameth emperours, which are annoynted after the manner of bishops) to bee obserued and kept vnbroken, we do professe our selues by all meanes possible, as much as in vs lieth, or that we may and can by the helpe of God preserue and keepe them both now and euer. And if peraduenture any man do informe, or hereafter shall informe you otherwise, know you him assuredly, to be a lier and slanderer.

Qq. ij. kept

Marke how this deuout and holy pope, calling the emperors bishops, submitted himselfe according to the rule of S. Peter the Apostle vnder the obedience, and also punishment of the emperour. Wherefore then should not the clergie of the kingdome of Bohemie submit themselues vnder the obedience of their king, for Gods cause, for to be punished if they do offend, and not only submit themselues vnto the king, but also vnto the rulers, and not only vnto the rulers, but vnto euery other creature? For by how much they do so humble, and abase themselues in this world for Gods sake, so much the more shall they be exalted with him: but that is the let thereof, but only pride, whereby anti-christ doth exalt himselfe aboue the most humble and meeke Lord Iesus Christ?

The ensample of the clergie.

The proph. cie of Hildegardis.

Also it seemeth to appeare by that which is afore said vpon the taking away of the temporalities out of the prophecie of Hildegardis the virgin, the which he writeth in his bookes vnder Eugenius the pope in the councell of Treuerse, approued and allowed by many bishops of France, Italie, and Almanie, which were there present, where as also S. Bernard himselfe was present; the which virgin prophesying, spake in this manner. The kings and other rulers of the world, being stirred vp by the iust iudgement of God, shall set themselues against them, and runne vpon them: saying, We will not haue these men to raigne ouer vs with their rich houses, and great possessions, and other worldly riches, ouer the which we are ordained to be lords and rulers, and how is it meete or comely that those shaudlings with their stoles and chisils should haue more souldiers, or more or richer armour or artillerie then we? So is it not conuenient that one of the clergie should be a man of war, neither a souldier to be one of the clergie. Wherefore let vs take away from them, that which they do not iustly, but wrongfully possesse. And immediatly after the sayeth thus: The omnipotent father equallie diuided all things: that is to say, the heauens he gaue vnto the heauenly creatures, and the earth vnto the earthlie. And by this meanes was there a iust diuision made betweene the children of men, that the spiritualtie should haue such things as belong vnto them, and the secular people, such things as are meete and necessarie for them, so that neither of these two sorts should oppresse each other by violence, for God doth not command that the one sonne or child should haue both the cloke and the cote, and the other should go naked, but he willed that the one should haue the cloke, and the other the cote. Wherefore the secular sort ought to haue the cloke for the greatnesse of their worldly cares, and for their children, which dailie increase and multiply. The cote he giueth vnto the spiritualtie, that they should not lacke clothing, and that they should not possesse more then necessitie doth require. Wherefore we iudge and thinke it good that all these aforesaid be diuided by reason and equitie. And whereas the cloke and the cote are both sound, there the cloke be taken away, and giuen vnto the needie, that they do not perish for lacke of want. These aforesaid spake the virgin Hildegardis, plainly foreshewing the taking away of the temporalities from the clergy by the secular Lords, and shewing for what cause they shal be so taken away. And what minster of diuision shall be made of those things that are taken away, that they be not consumed, and spent vnprofitablie.

For so much as mention is heere made of Hildegardis, it shall not seeme impertinent, moued by the occasion hereof, to giue forth vnto the reader such things as we haue found in certaine old volumes, touching her prophecie of the commings of certaine false prophets, only meaning, as it seemeth, the begging friers, which sprang vp shortly after her time. The tenour whereof is this, word for word, as we find it written.

In those daies, there shall rise vp a people without vnderstanding, proud, couetous, vntrustie, and deceitfull, the which shall eat the sins of the people, holding a certaine order of foolish deuotion, vnder the fained cloke of beggerie, preferring themselues aboue all other, by their fained deuotion, arrogant vnderstanding, and pretended holines, walking without shamefulnes, or the feare of God, inuenting many new mischiefes, being strong and stout: but this order shall be accursed of all wise men, and faithfull christians; they shall cease from labour, and giue themselues ouer vnto idelenesse: chusing rather to liue through flatterie, then by begging. Moreouer, they shall together studie, how they may peruersly resist the teachers of the truth, and slay them together with the noble men: how to seduce and deceiue the nobilitie, for the necessitie of their liuing and pleasures of this world; for the diuell will graft in them foure principall vices: that is to say, flatterie, enuie, hypocrisie and slander. Flatterie, that they may haue large gifts giuen them. Enuie, when they see gifts giuen vnto other, and not vnto them. Hypocrisie, that by false dissimulation, they may please men. Detraction, that they may extoll and commend themselues, and backbite others, for the praise of men and seducing of the simple. Also they shall instantly preach without deuotion or example of the martyrs, and shall detract the secular princes, taking away the sacraments of the church from the true pastors, receiuing almes of the poore, diseased, and miserable, and also associating themselues with the common people, hauing familiarity with women, instructing them how they shall deceiue their husbands and friends by their flattering and deceitfull words, and rob their husbands to giue it vnto them: for they will take all these stollen and euill gotten, and say, giue it vnto vs, and we will pray for you, so that they being curious to hide other mens faults do vtterly forget their owne; and alas, they will receiue all things of rouers, pickers, spoilers, theeues and robbers, of sacrilegious persons, vsurers, and adulterers, heretikes, schismatikes, apostates, whores and bauds, ofnoble men, periurers, merchants, false iudges, souldiers, tyrants, princes, of such as liue contrarie to the law, and of many pertuerse and wicked men, following the persuasion of the diuell, the sweetnesse of sinne, a delicate and transitorie life, and fulnesse euen vnto eternal damnation. All these things shall manifestly appeare in them vnto all people, and they day by day, shall waxe more wicked and hard hearted; and when as their wickednesse and deceits shall be found out, then shall their gifts cease, and then shall they go about their houses hungrie, and as mad dogs looking downe vpon the earth, and drawing in their neckes as doues, that they might be satisfied with bread: then shall the people crie out vpon them: Woe be vnto you ye miserable children of sorow, the world hath seduced you, the diuell hath bridled your mouthes, your flesh is fraile, and your hearts without sauour, your minds haue been vnstedfast, and your eyes delighted in much vanitie and folly, your dainty bellies desire delicate meats; your feet swift to run vnto mischiefe. Remember when you were apparantly blessed, yet enuious, poore but rich, simple, mightie deuout flatterers, vnfaithfull betrayers, peruerse detracters, holy hypocrites, subuerters of the truth, couetous vpright, proud, vnshamefast, vnstedfast teachers, delicate martyrs, confessors for gaine, meeke slanderers, religious, couetous, humble, proud, pitifull, hard hearted liers, pleasant flatterers, peace makers, persecutors, oppressors of the poore, bringing in new sects newly inuented of your selues, mercifull, wicked, louers of the world, sellers of pardons, spoilers of benefices, vnprofitable orators, seditious conspirators, drunkards, desirers of honor, maintainers of mischiefe, robbers of the world, vnfaciable preachers, men pleasers, seducers of women, and sowers of discord: for Moyses the glorious prophet, spake verie well of you in his song: A people without counsell or vnderstanding: would to God they did know, vnderstand and foresee the end. You haue builded so high, and when you could ascend no higher, then did you fall; euen as Simon Magus, whom God ouerthrew, and did strike with a cruel plague; so you likewise through your false doctrin, naughtines, lies, detractions and wickednes, are come to ruine: and the people shall say vnto them, go ye teachers of wickednesse, subuerters of the truth, brethren of the Sunamitie, fathers of heresies, false apostles, which haue fained your selues to follow the life of the Apostles, and yet haue not fulfilled it in any part, sonnes of iniquitie, we will not follow the knowledge of your waies, for pride and presumption hath deceiued you, and insaciable concupiscence hath subuerted your erroneous nesse. And when as yet yee would ascend higher then was meete or comely for you, by the iust iudgement of God, you are fallen backe into perpetuall opprobrie and shame. This blessed Hildegardis whose prophecie this is, flourished about the yeare of our Lord 1046, as it is written in Martins chronicles.

The vnsound faith of the friers.

Also Hugo in his second booke of Sacraments, in the 2. part, 3. chap. and 7. faith: The laytie forsomuch as they intermeddle with earthlie matters necessarie vnto an earthly life, they are the least part of the bodie of Christ. And the clergie, for so much as they do dispose those things which pertaine vnto a spirituall life, are as it were the right side of the bodie of Christ. And afterward interpreting both these parts himselfe, he saith: A spirituall man ought to haue nothing, but such as pertaineth vnto God, vnto whom it is appointed to be sustained by the tithes and oblations which are offered vnto God: but vnto the christian and faithfull laytie, the possession of the earth is granted, and vnto the clergie the whole charge of spirituall matters is committed, as it was in the old Testament. And in his 7. chapter he declareth how that certaine things are giuen vnto the church of Christ, by the deuotion of the faithfull, the power and authoritie of the secular power reserued, lest there might happen anie confusion: For so much as God himselfe cannot allow an disordered thing. Whereupon oftentimes the worldly princes do grant the bare vse of the church, and oftentimes vse and power to exercise iustice, which the clergie cannot exercise by any Ecclesiastical Minister, or any other person of the clergie. Notwithstanding they may haue certaine lay-persons, ministers vnto that office. But in such sort, saith he, that they do acknowledge the power which they haue, to come from the secular prince or ruler, and that they do vnderstand their possessions can neuer be aliened away from the kings power, but (if that necessitie or reason so require) the same possessions in all such case of necessitie do owe him obeysance and seruice. For like as the kings power ought not to turne away the defence or safegard which hee oweth vnto other: so likewise the possessions obtained and possessed by the clergie, according to

to the dutie and homage which is due vnto the patronage of the kings power cannot by right be denied. Thus much writeth Hugo.

In the third act the same yeare, after the feast of S. Vitis, as touching Tithes, &c.

¶ Tithes are pure almes.

Almes. Eleemosyna.

VPon this article it is to be noted, that for so much as almes is a worke of mercie, as S. Augustine, Chrysostome, and others do ioyntly affirme, and that mercie (according to Lincolniensis mind) for the present is a loue or desire to helpe the miserable out of his miserie: and for so much as the miserie of man kind is double: that is to say, spirituall and bodily: the which is the want or taking away of the good, and the goods of man is either the goods of the soule or of the bodie: And the goods of the soule is double (that is to say: the lightning of the mind, and the vprightnes of affection) the miserie of the soule is also double, as the darknesse of ignorance, and a froward and wilful swarueing from the truth. And both the goods of the soule are wont to be comprehended vnder one title of name: that is to saie, wisdome; and both the miseries of the soule vnder the name of follie. Whereupon all the whole goodnes of the soule is wisdome, and all the whole miserie thereof is ignorance: the miseries of the bodie are, lack of meat, that is to say, hunger, and lacke of drinke, called thirst: and briefly, all miserie is the want of some thing which is desired. Also these are bodily miseries, nakednes, lacke of harbour, sicknesse, and imprisonment. All the miseries therefore being numbred together, are but one of the soule, the which is follie and lacke of wisdome, and fix of the bodie, the which the Lord in the 25. of Matthew doth plainely rehearse. There are also commonly appointed seuen bodily almes, that is to saie, to feed the hungrie, to giue drinke vnto the thirstie, to cloth the naked, to harbour the stranger or harbourlesse, to visit the sicke, and to burie the dead, the which all together are contained in these verses:

Two kinds of miseries. Two kinds of goodnesse.

Ignorance. Follie.

The miseries of the mind and bodie.

Visito, poto, cibo, redimo, tego, colligo, condo.

The which verse is thus Englished, word for word:

Visit the sicke, the hungrie feed,
Giue drinke to the thirstie, cloth the naked:
Burie the dead, the captiue redeeme,
The harbourlesse receiue to thy lodging.

What is almes.

There be also seuen other spirituall almes appointed, which are these: to teach the ignorant, to counsel him that is in doubt. To comfort him which is in heauines. To correct the offender. To forgiue him which hath offended against thee. To beare those which are grieuous. And to pray for all men: the which are also contained in these verses following:

Consule, castiga, solare, remitte, fer, ora.

The which verse is thus Englished, word for word:

Instruct the ignorant, the weake confirme,
Comfort the heauie heart, and correct sinne:
Forgiue the offender, beare with the rude,
Pray for all men both euill and good.

So that notwithstanding vnder the same, counsels and doctrine be comprehended. Thus writeth Thomas in the second part of the second quest. 32. article 2.

What almes is.

Secondly, it is to be noted, that in this present article our intent is only to intreat of bodilie almes, the which (as Thomas writeth in his 2. part. 2. quest. 32. artic. 1.) according vnto some mens minds is thus defined: Almes is a worke whereby any thing is giuen vnto the needie of compassion for Gods sake. And for so much as this definition serueth as well for the spirituall, as for the corporall almes: therefore to the purpose, almes is a worke, whereby any thing is giuen vnto the needie in body for compassion, and for Gods sake. Or that is giuen of compassion or pitie vnto the bodilie needie for Gods sake.

Whereupon it is manifest that almes, as S. Augustine and other holy men say, is a worke of mercie, as also to giue almes. As it appeareth by the name, for in the Greeke it is deriued from this word Elemonia, which is mercie: for as in the Latine, this word Miseratio, which signifieth pitie, is deriued of Misericordia, which is, mercie; so this word Elemosyna, which signifieth almes, is deriued of the Greeke word Elemonia, which is to say, mercie, and of the word Sina, which is to say, commandement, as it were a commandement of mercie, or otherwise of this word Elemonia. By this letter I, which is to say, God, and this word Sina, which is, commandement: As if it were said, the commandement of God, as Ianuensis in his booke intituled Catholicon affirmeth.

Tithes.

For our sauiour doth command in the 11. of Luke, to giue almes, saying, Giue almes, and behold all things are cleane vnto you: left that in this point there may be any equiuocation, it is supposed presently, that the almes giuen of men, is a corporall almes giuen simply vnder the name of almes. Secondly, it is to be noted, that Tithes in this effect are the tenth part of goods of fortune, giuen by a man simplie vnder the name of almes for Gods sake.

These things being thus noted and supposed, the article is thus proued. Euerie gift of fortune, or temporall gift simplie giuen vnder the name of almes, is almes: But some tithes are the gift of fortune, or temporall gift vnder the name of almes. Therfore some tithes are almes. This consequent is manifest of it selfe. The maior appeareth by the first suppofition: And the minor by the second.

Item, euerie gift giuen by a man euen of loue, to relieue and helpe the miserable out of his miserie, is an almes. The tenth part of the goods of fortune giuen by a man, simplie vnder the name of almes, for Gods sake, is giuen by the same man euen of loue, to helpe the miserable out of his miserie: Therefore the tenth part of the goods of fortune being giuen by any man simplie vnder the name of almes for Gods sake, is almes. The consequent is manifest. The maior appeareth by this, that euery such gift is either a spiritual or bodily almes. The minor is meeth hereby true, for so much as many holy men haue giuen, and do giue, euen for loue to relieue the miserable out of his miserie. Neither is it to be doubted, but that such kind of riches are almes. For S. Augustine vpon these words of the Lord in the Gospell writeth thus: Woe be vnto you Pharisies which do tithe mint and anise: If they cannot be clensed without they beleeue in him, he which doth clense his heart through faith, to what purpose is it, that he faith, giue almes, and behold, all things are cleane vnto you? Let vs giue eare, and peraduenture he doth expound it himselfe. They did take out the tenth part of all their fruits, and gaue it for almes; the which any christian man doth not willingly. Then they mocked him, when he spake these words to them, as vnto men which would doe no almes. This the Lord foreknowing, said: Woe be vnto you Pharisies, which tithe mint and rue, and all kind of herbes; and passe ouer the iudgement and charitie of God; for this it is to do almes, if thou doest vnderstand it, begin with thy selfe: For how canst thou be mercifull vnto another, which art vnmercifull vnto thy selfe? This writeth S. Augustine, in plainly saying that tithes are almes.

S. Augustine proueth tithes to be pure almes.

August. in Enchirid.

Also in his Enchiridion 76. chap. vpon these words of Luke in the 11. chapter: Notwithstanding that which is more then sufficient, giue in almes, and all things shall be cleane vnto you, he saith thus: When he had rebuked them that they washed themselues outwardly, and inwardly were full of iniquitie and abomination, admonishing them, what, and how a man ought first to bestow almes vpon himselfe, and first to clense himselfe inwardly, he saith: That which doth remaine, giue in almes, and behold all things are cleane vnto you. Afterward, that he might the better declare what he had giuen them warning of, and what they neglected to do, that they should not adge him ignorant of their almes, he saith, Woe be vnto you Pharisees as though he should say, I verily gaue you warning that you should giue such almes, whereby all things might be cleane vnto you; but woe be vnto you which doe tithe mint, rue, and all kind of herbes, for I do know these your almes, that you should not thinke with your selues that you had giuen me warning therof, and neglect and passe ouer the iudgement and charitie of God, by the which almes ye might be clensed from all your inward filthinesse. And your bodies also which you do wash should be cleane. For all these things both inward, and also outward, as it is said in another place, clense that which is within, and the outward things shall be also cleane.

But lest that he should seeme to refuse those almes which are giuen of the fruits of the earth, he said, you ought to haue done these things: That is to say, the indigement and loue of God, and not to neglect the same. That is to say, the almes of the fruit of the earth. This writeth S. Augustine, expresly calling the tithes almes.

Also Chrysostome vpon the same words in the 11. of Luke, That which remaineth giue in almes, he saith thus: Whereas it was spoken of the Iewish kind of clensing, it is wholly passed. But for so much as tithes is a certaine almes, and the time was not yet expresly come to kill the sacrifices of the Law, for this cause he saith, ye ought to do these things, and not to omit the other. And S. Thomas alleageth him in his glosse vpon S. Luke. And Chrysostome himselfe doth touch two points. First, that tithes is almes. Secondly, that tithes are in a maner lawfull, for so much as the gift thereof vnto the priests did not cease in the time of Christ.

Chrysostomus in 11. Luc.

Also Augustine in a certaine Sermon of giuing almes, saith thus, What is to say, Giue almes: and behold all things are cleane vnto you? Let vs giue eare, and peraduenture he doth expound it himselfe. When he had spoken these words, without doubt they thought within themselues, who did giue almes, and how they did giue it. They tithed all that they had, and tooke out the tenth part of all their fruits, and gaue it for almes: the which no christian lightlie doth so. Marke what the Iewes did, they tithed not only their wheat, but their wine and oyle, and not that only, but also vile things, for the commandement of the Lord, as commin, rue, and anise, of the which they tooke the tenth part, and gaue it for almes. I thinke therefore, for so much as they called vnto their minds, and thought with themselues, that our Lord Christ spake in vaine vnto them that they did no almes, when as they knew their own works, that they tithed the smallest, and worst of all their fruits, and gaue almes thereof: they mocked him amongst themselues, because he did speake in such sort vnto them, as vnto men that did no almes. The which the Lord foreseeing, by and by, added notwithstanding: Wo be vnto you Scribes, Pharisies and hypocrites, which tithe your mint, cummin, and rue, and all kind of herbs: that you may know, I do vnderstand your almes. Truly, these are your tithes. These are your almes: you tithe out the least and worst of all your fruits, and haue left the waighty matters of the law vndone. Heere S. Augustine often expounded, that tithes are almes: Also he writeth the like in his book of homilies in his 6. homilie.

Item, for the proofe of this article that tithes are pure almes it is thus argued. For this proposition, Tithes are pure almes, is indefinite, taking the truth for many of his particularities. It is most certaine that it is not damnable, but most catholike, that God is something, the which being false in all particulars, it is only true for that alone which doth surmount all kind, Ergo, by like reason this particular is true, tenths are pure almes: For it is thus proued. These tenths of a good lay-man being wholly distributed by a faithfull minister vnto a needie lay-man, according to a good intent, how can they be but pure almes, yea, and more pure then any almes giuen by any of the clergie being a fornicator? The whole antecedent I suppose as possible, and doubtfull vnto the condemners, if it be true.

Item, it is also thus proued: These tithes, and all other goods of fortune, are pure almes in respect of God. For so much as euerie man, emperour and king, is a begger of God. As S. Augustine doth oftentimes affirme, and consequentlie if he do receiue fruitfully any such goodnes at the hand of God, the same is pure almes in respect of God: neither is there any faithfull man that will denie the same, but that it is simplie followeth that the same is pure almes before God, Ergo it is pure almes.

It is also thus argued: All tithes are by themselues, and euerie part of them almes: neither is there any reason contrarie vnto this, that they are almes. Ergo, they are pure almes. For they are by no other meanes or reason, then almes, if they be altogether themselues almes: For so much as it followeth, if they bee by any other meanes or otherwise them almes, then they are otherwise then some almes, and for so much as they themselues are some almes, it followeth, that they are otherwise then they are indeed; the which is false.

Sustenance and clothing giuen to the Apostles, was almes, ergo alms tithes.

But now to passe beyond the bounds of Logicke, it is to be demanded, whether before the church was indowed, or that sustenance and clothing were giuen vnto the Apostles, there was any pure almes, or that they were giuen by any other meanes by bond of debt, amongst men. And for so much as the reason is not to be fained, but that they were pure almes, so afterward the custome of the same thing according vnto like reason doth not alter the kind of the reason. For so might beggers challenge by custome beyond the puritie of almes, the temporalities which they do beg. Neither doth debt vtterly exclude the puritie of almes before God: for euery man duely giuing almes, doth as he ought to do: as euery man duly receiuing his almes, ought so to receiue it as according to Gods will. And simplie to establish any humane title, vpon the continuance of anie such almes, it is altogether contrarie vnto the reason of almes. Therefore they do continually obserue, and keepe the reason of the puritie of almes, which they had from the beginning, when as the bond conditioned, doth not destroy the puritie thereof: wherefore there is no cause why it should be denied that tithes are pure almes, except that the proud should be marueilously extolled, contrarie to the humilitie of Christ. For they do challenge by the title of their lacke or want so to be pleased for their tithes. For so might the begging frier, by the continuance of his daily begging challenge according vnto the like quantitie or circumstance. But it is no argument, that if the curat doe performe his corporall ministerie, that he ought therefore to challenge tithes by any ciuill title, because that as well on the behalfe of him, which giueth the tithe, as also in the behalfe of the curat, euerie such ministerie ought freelie to be giuen, and not by any ciuill exchange. For so much as it is not required, but that rather the comparison of such exchanges are reprehensant, for so much as also a man freely giueth any almes, except he do looke for the dutie of recompence, by the law of conscience.

Item, all temporall goods bestowed vpon the clergie, by the lay people vnder condition, as the goods of the church, are the almes of them which giue it: it is proued thus, for so much as all those goods are the goods of the poore, as it appeareth by manie sayings of holy men and by the lawes.

The clergie beggers.

But they were not the goods of the poore, after they were meere feodarie goods, but only by the meane of the worke of mercie, whereby they were bestowed vpon the poore: Ergo, they were pure almes. The consequent dependeth vpon the definition of pure almes.

Item, all things changed to the vse and power of another, either by ciuill exchange or Euangelicall is changed. But the church goods are so changed by one of these ministeries. But the Euangelicall exchange is not to be fained, because it is not done, either by buying or selling, or any other ciuil exchange. Therefore there doth not remaine, but only a pure gift, for hope of a heauenlie reward, the which is mercie, and so pure almes. And it seemeth to follow consequently, that all the clergie receiuing such almes, are not onlie in respect of God, as all other men, but in respect of men, beggers. For they would not so instantly require those almes except they had need of them: neither ought we to be asshamed thereof, or to be proud beggers: for so much as Christ touching his humanitie became a begger for vs, because he declared his need vnto his Father, saying, &c.

Item, when anie king, prince, knight, citizen, or any other man doth giue vnto the clergie, or to any priest for his stipend, he giueth the same vnto the church of God, and to the priuate partie, as a perpetuall almes, that he should attend to his vocation, preaching, praying and studying. But this kind of giuing doth not suffice to ground any secular dominion amongst the clergie, it followeth that the bare vse remaineth in them, or the secular vse without any secular power.

The maior appeareth hereby, for so much as otherwise almes should not be a worke of mercie. Whereby it may also appeare, that tenths are pure almes giuen to the church, to the vse of the poore.

Tithes are to be distributed in foure parts of goods.

And hereupon the holy men do say that tenths are the tributes of the needie soules. Whereupon S. Augustine in a Sermon made vpon the restoring of tiths saith: The giuing of tuths, most deare brethren, are the tributes of the poore soules, therefore pay your tribute vnto the poore. And by and by after hee saith; Therefore who desireth either to get any reward, or to haue any remission of sinnes, by giuing of his tenthes, let him studie to giue almes euen of the ninth part: so that whatsoeuer shall remaine more then a competent liuing, and decent clothing: that it be not reserued for riot, but that it be laid vp in the heauenly treasurie, by giuing it in almes to the poore. For whatsoeuer God doth giue vnto vs more then we haue need of; he doth not giue it vs specially for our selues: but doth send it vs to be bestowed vpon others by our hands: if we do not giue it, we inuade another mans possessions.

Thus much writeth S. Augustine, and is repeated in the 16. question, 1. Decimæ.

Also S. Ierome in an epistle, and it is put in the 16. question, and 2. chap. Quicquid. Whatsoeuer the clergie hath, it is the goods of the poore.

Also S. Augustine in his 33. epistle vnto Boniface, and it is alleaged in the first question and 12.

Also in the 23. question 7. If we do possesse any thing priuatly, the which doth suffice vs, they are not ours, but the goods of the poore, whose stewards we are, except we do challenge to our selues a propertie by some damnable vsurpation. The glosse vpon that part of the 23. question 7. saith: The prelats are but only the stewards of the church goods, and not Lords thereof.

S. Ambrose also vpon this saying of the Gospell, Luke the 16. Giue account of your bailiffeship, or stewardship: Hereby then do we learne, that they are not Lords, but rather stewards and bailiffes of other mens substance.

And S. Ierome, writing to Nepotianus saith: How can they be of the clergie? which are commanded to contemne and despise their owne substance, and to take away from a friend, it is theft, to deceiue the church it is sacrilege, and to take away that which should be giuen vnto the poore.

The clergie are stewards of the church goods, and not lords thereof.

And S. Bernard in his sermon vpon these words (Simon Peter said vnto Iesus, chap. 17.) said: Trulie the goods of the church, are the patrimonie of the poore: And whatsoeuer thing the ministers and stewards of the same, not Lords or possessors, do take vnto themselues more then sufficient for a competent liuing, the same is taken away from the poore, by a sacrilegious crueltie.

And Eusebius in his treatise vpon the pilgrimage of S. Ierome writeth thus: If thou doest possesse a garment, or anie other thing more then extreame necessitie doth require, and doest not helpe the needie, thou art a theefe and a robber. Wherefore dearely beloued children, let vs be stewards of our temporalities, and not possessors.

Isidorus de summo bono.

And Isidore in his treatise De summo bono, chap. 42. saith: Let the bishop know that he is the seruant of the people, and not Lord ouer them.

Also in the 5. booke of decretals, extra. de donationibus, sub authoritate Alexandri tertij, episcopi Parisiensis; he saith: We beleeue that it is not vnknowne vnto your brotherhood, that a bishop, and euerie other prelat is but a steward of the church goods, and not lord thereof. By these sayings of these holy men it is euidentlie declared, that not only tithes, but also all other substance which the clergie hath by gift of worke of mercie, are pure almes, which after the necessitie of the clergie once satisfied, ought to be transported vnto the poore.

Secondly it is declared how that the clergie are not lords and possessours of those goods, but ministers and stewards thereof.

Thirdly it is shewed, that if the clergie do abuse the same, they are theeues, robbers, and sacrilegious persons, and except they doe repent, by the iust iudgement of God they are to bee condemned.

AND thus hitherto I may peraduenture seeme to haue made sufficient long recitall out of Iohn Hus, but to notwithstanding that the commoditie of those things, may abundantlie recompence the prolixitie thereof. Wherefore if I shall seeme vnto any man in the rehearsall of this disputation to haue passed heere farre the bounds of the historie: let him thinke thus of me, that at what time I take in hand to write write of these ecclesiasticall matters, I could not omit these things which were so straitly toyned with the cause of the church.

Neither that I did make more account of the historie which I had taken in hand then of the common vtilitie, whereunto I had chiefe respect. There were besides these certaine other articles: Whereupon the said Iohn Hus had heerie wiselie and learnedly disputed, but these shall suffice vs for this present. And for the residue wee will passe them ouer, to the intent we may the more speedily returne whereas our storie left, declaring what cruelties they vsed not onely against the bookes and articles of Iohn Wicliffe, but also in burning his bodie and bones, commanding them to be taken vp 41. yeeres after he was buried, as appeareth by the decree of the said Synode, the same whereof, wee thought hereunto to annex as followeth.

The order and maner of taking vp the body of Iohn Wickisse, and burning his bones 41. yeeres after his death.

❧ The Decree of the Synode of Constance, touching the taking vp of the bodie and bones of Iohn Wicklisse to be burned, 41. yeeres after he was buried in his owne parish at Lutterworth.

The decree of the councell for the burning of Wicliffes dead bones.

Ex Actis concilij Constant.

FOrsomuch as by the authoritie of the sentence and decree of the councell of Rome, and by the commandement of the church & the apostolicall see after due delayes being giuen, they proceeded vnto the condemnation of the said Iohn Wicklisse, and his memorie: hauing first made proclamation, and giuen commandement to call forth whosoeuer would defend the said Wicklisse, or his memorie (if there were any such;) but there did none appeare, which would either defend him or his memorie. And moreouer, witnesses being examined by commissioners appointed by pope Iohn and his councell, vpon the impenitence and finall obstinacie and stubbornesse of the said Iohn Wicklisse, referring that which is to be referred, as in such businesses the order of law requireth; & his impenitencie & obstinacie euen vnto his end, being sufficiently proued by euident signs and tokens, and also by lawfull witnesses of credit, was lawfullie giuen thereunto. Wherefore at the instance of the fiskeward of the treasurie, proclamation being made to heare and vnderstand the sentence against this day: the sacred Synod declareth, determineth, and giueth sentence, that the said Iohn Wicklisse was a notorious obstinat heretike, and that he died in his heresie, cursing and condemning both him and his memorie.

This Synod also decreeth and ordaineth, that the body and bones of the said Iohn Wicklisse, if it might be discerned and knowne from the bodies of other faithfull people, to bee taken out of the ground, and thrown away farre from the buriall of any church, according vnto the canon lawes and decrees. Which determination and sentence definitiue being read and pronounced, the lord president, and the foresaid presidents of the 4. nations being demanded and asked whether it did please them or no? They all answered (and first Hostiensis the president, and after him the other presidents of the nations) that it pleased them very well, and so they allowed and confirmed all the premisses, &c.

¶ What Heraclitus would not laugh, or what Democritus would not weepe, to see these so sage and reuerend Catoes, to occupie their heades to take vp a pore mans bodie, so long dead and buried before, by the space of 41. yeeres? and yet peraduenture were not able to find his right bones, but tooke vp some other bodie, and so of a catholicke made an hereticke. Albeit, herein Wicklisse had some cause to giue them thanks that they would at least spare him so long till he was dead, and also to giue him so long respite after his death, 41. yeeres to rest in his sepulchre before they vngraued him, and turned him from earth to ashes: which ashes also, they tooke and threw into the riuer. And so was he resolued into three elements, earth, fire, and water, thinking thereby vtterly to extinct and abolish both the name and doctrine of Wicklisse for euer. Not much vnlike to the example of the old Pharisies and sepulcher-knights, which when they had brought the Lord vnto the graue, thought to make him sure neuer to rise againe. But these and all other must know, that as there is no counsell against the Lord: so there is no keeping downe of veritie, but it will spring and come out of dust and ashes, as appeared right well in this man. For though they digged vp his bodie, burnt his bones, and drowned his ashes: yet the word of God and truth of his doctrine with the fruit and successe thereof they could not burne, which yet to this day for the most part of his articles doe remaine. Notwithstanding, the transitorie bodie and bones of the man was thus consumed and dispersed, as by this picture here aboue set forth to thine eies (gentle Reader) may appeare.

These things thus finished and accomplished, which pertain to the storie and time of Wicklisse: let vs now (by the supportation of the Lord) proceed to intreate and write of the rest, which either in his time or after his time, springing out of the same Vniuersitie, and raised vp (as ye would say) out of his ashes were partakers of the same persecution. Of whom speaketh Thomas Walden in his booke, De sacramentis & sacramentalibus, cap. 52. Where he saith, that after Wicklisse many suffered most cruell death, and many no doubt of late realme.

Ex Th. Walden. lib. de sacramentis.

To this catalogue also pertaineth (mentioned in ancient writers) Laurence Redman maister of Arte, Dauid Sautre diuine, Iohn Archwarby vicar, as they call him, of S. Marie Church at Oxford, William Taylor, Walter Brute, Richard Gruthurd, Iohn Scut, and Philip Norice: whych which being excommunicated by pope Eugenius the fourth, in the yere of our Lord, 1446. appealed vnto a generall or oecumenical councell.

Peter Paine. Peter Paine, who flying from Oxford vnto Boheme, did stoutlie contend against the Sophisters, as touching both kinds of the sacrament of the last supper. Who afterward among the rest of the Orators was one of the 14. that was sent vnto the councell at Basill: whereas by the space of three daies, he disputed vpon the 4. article, which was as touching the ciuill dominion of the clergie, Anno 1438. Also the Lord Cobham. Lord Cobham, &c. with diuers others besides whose names are mentioned in the kings writ sent to the shiriffe of Southhampton, which writ of the king followeth in this tenor: Rex vicecomiti Northamptonie salutem, &c. For somuch as John Attyate of Chepingwarden, John Warryner, Rio. Beriond, &c. bee Recettours and fautors of heretikes, and especially of John Woodward priest, publikely defamed and condemned of heresie, will not be intimided by the censures of the church, as the reuerend father John bishop of Lincolne hath certified vs: We therefore willing to withstand all defenders and fautors of such heresies, do will and command a liwell the forenamed, as namelp the foresaid John Woodward to bee apprehended, straitly charging the same to bee emprisoned by their bodies or otherwise punished as shall seeme good to the Justices, vntil they and euery of them shall submit themselues to the obedience of the foresaid bishop in this behalfe according lie. Wherof faile you not vnder paine of an hundred pound. Witnesse our selues: Beuen at our Manor of Langley the eight day of March, the 12. yere of our raigne.

To these aboue rehearsed and other fauourers of Wickliffe, within this our countrie of England, wee may adde also the Bohemians: for somuch as the propagation of the said doctrine of Wickliffe, in that countrie also take rote, comming from England to Boheme, by this occasion as in storie here followeth.

The occasion how the doctrin of Wickliffe came to Bohemia. There chanced at that time a certaine student of the countrie of Bohemia to be at Oxford, one of a wealthie house and also of a noble stocke. Who returning home from the Vniuersitie of Oxford, to the Vniuersitie of Prage: carried with him certaine bookes of Wickliffe, De realibus Vniuersalibus, De ciuili iure, & diuino, De ecclesia, De quæstionibus variis contra clerum, &c. It chanced the same time, a certaine noble man in the citie of Prage, had founded and builded a great church of Matthias & Matthew, which church was called Bethleem: giuing to it great landes, and finding in it two preachers euery day, to preach holie day and working day to the people. Of the which two preachers, this John Hus was one, a man of great knowledge, of a pregnant wit, and excellentlie fauoured for his worthie life and right them. This John Hus hauing familiaritie with this young man in reading and perusing these bookes of Wickliffe, took such pleasure and fruit in reading thereof, that not only he began to defend this author openlie in the schooles, but also in his sermons: commending him for a good man, an holy man, and heauenlie man, wishing himselfe when he should die, to be there placed with: reas the soule of Wickliffe should be. And thus for the spreading of Wickliffes doctrine enough.

Hus loued to be mery, saieth, celebrans. The great affection of John Hus to John Wickliffe.

And thus much briefelie concerning the fauorers and adherents of John Wickliffe in generall. Now particularlie and in order let vs by Christs grace) prosecute the stories and persecutions of the said parties afore mentioned, as the course of their times shall require. First beginning with the valiant champions William Swinderby, and Walter Brute.

The historie of William Swinderby.

§ Anno § 1389 § Ex Registro Episcopi Herefordens. Wil. Swinderby first examined. Presumers of Wil. Swinderby 2. Friers. Fryer Vincels, Slaton.

In the yere 1389. William Swinderby priest within the diocesse of Lincolne, being accused and detected vpon certaine opinions, was presented before John bishop of Lincolne, and examined vpon certaine articles in the church of Lincolne, after the same and order of the popes law, according to their vsuall rite obserued, his denouncers were these: frier Frisby obseruant, frier Vincely Augustine: and Thomas Slarton Dominican. The articles wherewith they charged him, although in some of words as they put them vp, might seeme something strange here to be recited: yet to the intent that all men may see the spitefull malice of these spider friers, in sucking all things to poison, and in forging that is not true, as in processe (Christ willing) hereafter shall better appeare by his answers, I thought good here to notifie the same.

That men may aske their debts by charitie, but in no manner for debt to impeison any man: and that pee so impeisoning is accursed.

That if parishioners doe know their Curate to be a lechour incontinent, and an euill man, they ought to withdraw from him their tithes, or else they be fautors of his sinnes.

That tithes purelie be almose, and in case that curats bee euill men, the same may lawfullie be conferred to other men.

That for an euillcurate to curse his fuget for withholding of tithes, is nothing else, but to take with extortion wickedlie and vndulie from them their monie.

That no prelat may curse a man, except hee know before that he is cursed of God.

That euery priest may absolue any sinner being contrite, and is bound (notwithstanding the inhibition of the bishop) to preach the Gospell vnto the people.

That a priest taking any annuall pension vpon couenant, is in so doing a simonache and accursed.

That any priest being in deadlie sinne, if hee giue himselfe to consecrate the bodie of the Lord, hee committeth idolatrie rather then doth consecrate.

That no priest entreth into any house, but to euill intreate the wife, the daughter or maid. And therefore hee admonished the good man of the house, to take heed what priest he let into his house.

Another conclusion falslie to him obiected: That a childe is not truelie baptised, if the priest that baptiseth, or the godfather or godmother be in deadlie sinne.

Item, that no man liuing against the law of God is a priest, how euer he were ordained priest of any bishop.

These Articles or conclusions vntruelie collected, were as cruellie exhibited against him by the friers in the bishop of Lincolnes court. The which articles although he neuer preached, taught or at any time defended, as appeareth more in the processe following: yet the friers with their witnesses standing forth against him, declared him to bee conuict: bringing also their wood with them to the token to burne him, and vowsh not leane him, before hee made them promise and sware for feare of death neuer to hold them, teach them, nor preach them priuilie, nor apertlie vnder paine of relapse: and that he should goe to certaine churches to reuoke the foresaid conclusions, which hee neuer affirmed. As first in the church of Lincolne, then in S. Margarets church of Leicester. Also in S. Martines Church in Leicester, and in our Ladies churches at Newarke: and in other Parish Churches also, of Melton Mowbray, of Halowghton, Harebarugh, and Lenthburgh. Which penance, being to him enioyned, hee did obediently accomplish: with this forme of reuocation, which they bound him vnto, vnder these words.

Wil. Swinderby compelled by the Friers to abiure articles, which he neuer taught.

The reuocation of William Swinderby, whereunto he was forced by the friers.

I William Swinderby priest, although vnworthie, of the dioces of Lincolne, acknowledging one true catholike, and apostolike faith of the holy church of Rome, do abiure all hereſie and errour repugning to the determination of the holy mother church, whereof I haue been hitherto infamed, namely the conclusions and articles aboue prefixed, and euery one of them to me iudicially obiected, by the commissarie of the reuerend father in Christ and Lord, Lord John by the grace of God bishop of Lincolne: and doe reuoke the same, and euery one of them, some as hereticall, some as erroneous and false, and doe affirme and beleeue them to be so, and hereafter wil neuer teach, preach, or affirme publikely or priuily the same. Neither will make any sermon within the diocesse of Lincolne, but asking first and obtaining the licence of the foresaid reuerend father and lord the bishop of Lincolne. Contrarie to the which, if I shall presume hereafter, to say or doe, to hold or preach: I shall be content to abide the seueritie of the Canon, as I haue iudicially by the necessitie of the law, sworne, and doe sweare, &c.

The forced abiuration of Wil. Swinderby.

Thus haue you the conclusions and articles of this good man, falslie obiected to him by the malicious and lying friers: and also the retractation, whereunto they by force compelled him: whereby it may likewise be conteatured, what credite is to be giuen to the articles and conclusions which these cauilling friers wrestling all things to the worst, haue obiected and imputed both to Wickliffe and all other of that sort, whom they so falslie doe infame. So slanderouslie doe belie, and so maliciouslie doe persecute. After these things thus done and wrought in the diocesse of Lincolne: it to befell, the said Wil. Swinderby to remoue to the diocesse and countie of Hereford. Where he was as much or more molested by the friers againe, and by John Trefnant Bishop of Herford, as by the processe and storie here ensuing set out at large out of their owne registers may appeare.

Here followeth the processe of John Trefnant, Bishop of Herford, had against the aforesaid William Swinderby in the cause of hereticall prauitie, as the popish heretickes call it.

The storie of the B. of Hereford against Wil. Swinderby. The flourishing inuocation of Gods name.

The glorious name of the Prince of peace, and his counsell (whose counsell our no man is, and whose prouidence in his disposition is neuer deceiued) being inuocated: To all and singular beleeuers of Christ, which shall see or heare this our processe vnderwritten: John by the sufferance of God Bishop of Hereford: greeting, and peaceable charitie in the Lord. Forasmuch as God the creator of all things, the keeper of Justice, the louer of right, and the hater of malice, beholding from the high throne of his prouidence the sonnes of men, now through the fall of their first father, prone and declining to dishonest and filthie and detestable mischieues, and to keepe vnder their malice (which wicked transgression did first gender) hath appointed diuers presidents of the world stablished in sundry degrees, by whom and their circumspect prouidence, mans audacitie audacitie should bee restrained, innocencie should bee nourished amongst the good, and terrour should bee stricken into the wicked not to deceiue: also that their power to hurt, and their insolencie should bee bridled in all places. And whereas amongst many kinds of cares which come to our thoughts, by the dutie of the office committed vnto vs, wee are specialie bound to ertend our strength chiefly that the catholike faith may prosper in our times, and hereticall prauitie may be rooted from out of the borders of the faithfull: we therefore being excited through the information of many credible and faithfull christians of our diocelle, to root out pestiferous plants, as sheepe diseased with an incurable sickneſſe, going about to infect the whole and sound flocke, are by the care of the shepheard to bee removed from the flocke, that is to say, Preachers, or more truely execrable offenders of the new sect, vulgarlie called Lollards, which vnder a certaine cloked sheiw of holinesse, running abroad through diuers places of our diocelle, and endeauoring to cut asunder the Lords vnsowed coate, that is to say, to rent the vnitie of the holie church, and of the Catholike faith, and also to teare in peeces with their tempestuous blasts the power of S. Peter, that is to say, to weaken the strength of the ecclesiasticall states and degrees, and the determination of the same holy church, haue wickedly presumed and doe presume from day to day to speake, to teach, to maintaine (and that which is more horrible to bee vttered) to preach openlie many things hereticall, blasphemies, schismes, and slanderous defamings, euen quite contrarie to the sacred Canons and decrees of the holy fathers, so that they know not to direct their pathes in the waies of righteousnes & truth, in that, that they expound to the people the holy scripture, as the letter soundeth, after a Judaicall text, otherwise then the holy ghost will needs haue it: whereas the words vttered from their proper significations, and appeare to bring in by gelling new meanings: whereas the words muſt not bee iudged by the sense that they make, but by the sense whereby they be made, where as the constructions is not bound to the Donates rules: whereas faith is far placed from the capacitie of reason: But they labour by their pernicious doctrines and teachings publike and priuie, to boile out the poison of schismes betweene the clergy and the people. We to encounter against such kind of preachers, nay rather deceiuers, and horrible seducers amongst the people, aduancing and rowsing vp our selues in Gods behalfe, as our holy mother church, with the spirituall sword, which may strike them vtterly, and wound them medicinablie, for their health and welfare: and namelie William Swinderby priest (so pretending himselfe to bee) as a teacher of such kind of pernicious doctrine, and an horrible seducer amongst the people: to whom personallie appearing before vs on the wednesday, to writ the 14. of the month of June, in the parish church of Kington of our diocelle, in the yeere of our Lord, 1391. he being vehementlie defamed to vs of hereſie, schisme, and his peruerse doctrines both manifeſt and priuie: twee therefore haue caused many cases and articles concerning the catholike faith to be minifred vnto him, that hee shuld answer to the same at a day and place for him meet and conuenient, of his owne choice and freewill: that is to say, on the seuenday, being the last of the same moneth of June, neere following, assigned to him, at the church of Wodenhame of the same our diocelle. Of which cases and articles exhibited vnto vs, by many of Christs faithfull people, * zealous followers of the catholike faith, to make information to our office (which cases and articles also were by vs administred, as is before said, to the same William Swinderby) the tenor thereof followeth, and is thus.

*Such as were in Queene Wickliffes daies, as John Beard, J. Bates, Mebin Bagot, and other like mutherers.

The denunciation of the promoters to the Bp. of Hereford.

¶ Reuerend father and high lord, lord John, by Gods sufferance bishop of Hereford: It is lamentablie declared vnto your reuerend fatherhod on the behalfe of Christs faithfull people, your deuout children of your diocs of Hereford, that notwithstanding the misbeleefe of very many lollards, which haue to long a time sprung vp here in your diocelle, there is nowlie come a certaine chyld of wickednes, named William Swinderby: who by his horrible perſuasions and mischieuous endeuours, and also by his open preachings and priuate teachings, doth peruert as much as in him is the whole ecclesiasticall state, and sterreth vp with all his possible power, schisme betweene the clergie and the people. And that your reuerend fatherhood may be the more fullie informed, who and what manner of man the same William Swinderby is: there bee proposed and exhibited hereafter to the same your fatherhoode on the behalfe of the same faithfull people of Christ, against the same William Swinderby, cases and articles. Which if the same William shall denie, then shall the same cases and articles nolt euidently be proued against him by credible witnesse worthie of beleefe, and by other lawfull waies and sentences, to the end that those being vnued, the same fatherhood of yours, may doe and ordaine therein, as to your pastorall office belongeth.

Would God both they and all men did beware of that leauen.

Inter articles laid against Wil. Swinderby

In primis, the same William Swinderby pretending himselfe priest, was openlie and publikelie conuicted of certaine articles and conclusions being erroneous, schismaticall, and hereticall, preached by him at diuers places and times before a multitude of faithfull christian people. And the same articles and conclusions did he by force of law reuoke and abiure, some as hereticall, and some as erroneous and false: auouching and beleeuing them for such, as that from thenceforth hee would neuer preach, teach, or affirme openlie or priuilie any of the same conclusions. And if by preaching or auouching hee should presume to doe the contrarie; that then hee should bee subiect to the seueritie of the Canons, accordingly as hee did take a corporall oth, iudicially vpon the holy Gospels.

2 Also the conclusions, which by the same William were first openlie taught and preached, and afterwards abiured and reuoked, as is aforesaid; are contained before in the processe of the bishop of Lincolne, euen as they be there written and by word. And for the cases and articles, they were consequentlie exhibited by the forenamed faithfull christian people against the said Swinderby, together with the conclusions before said, and hereafter written: of which cases and articles, the tenour hereof ensueth.

3 Item, the said William, contrarie to the former reuocation and abiuration, not conuerting to repentance, but peruerted from ill to worse, and giuen vp to a reprobate sense, came into your diocelle, where, he running about in sundrie places hath presumed to preach or rather to peruert and to teach of his owne rathnes many hereticall, erroneous, blasphemous, and other slanderous things contrarie and repugnant to the sacred Canons and the determination of the holie catholicke church. What those things were, at what place and what time, it shall hereafter more particularly be declared.

Item, the same William, notwithstanding your commandements and admonitions sealed with your seale, and to all the Curats of your diocelle directed: containing amongst other things, that no person of what state, degree, or condition soeuer he were, should presume to preach or to teach, or elle expound the holy scriptures to the people, either in hallowed or prophane places, within your diocelle, without sufficient authoritie, by any maner of pretence that could be sought, as in the same your letters monitorie and of inhibition (the tenour whereof hereafter ensueth) is more largely contained: which letters the same William did receiue into his hands, and did read them word by word in the towne of Monemouth of your diocelle, in the yeere of our lord, 1390. to that these your letters and the contents thereof came to the true and vndoubted knowledge of the same William: yet notwithstanding hath the same William presumed in diuers places and times to preach within the same your diocelle, after and against your commandement aforesaid. The tenour of the same letters before mentioned followeth, and is this.

The letter inauthorie of the B. of Hereford inhibiting to preach without his licence.

John by the sufferance of God bishop of Hereford, to the deane and chapter of our church of Hereford, and to all and singuler abbats, priors, prouosts, deanes rurall, parsons and vicars of monasteries, priories, churches, colledges and parishes, and to other hauing cure of soules within the citie and dioces of Hereford, and to all and euery other being within the same citie and diocelle, greeting, grace, and blessing. Forasmuch as the golden laurell of teaching doctorall, is not from aboue indifferently euery mans gift: neither is the office of preaching granted, saue to such as are called, and especiallie by the church admitted thereunto: we doe admonish and require you all and singuler clerks aforesaid, and doe straitly enioyne you all in the vertue of holie obedience, that you nor any of you doe admit any man to preach or to teach the catholike faith, sauing such as the same office of preaching shall by the authoritie apostolicall, or elle your bishop bee specially committed vnto: but that as much as in you shall lie, you doe by word and deed, labour to let those that would attempt the contrarie. And you lords, ladies, knights, barons, esquires, and all and singuler persons, of what estate, degree, preheminence, or condition soeuer ye be, remaining within the citie and diocelle of Hereford, wee doe beseech and exhort in our Lord, that following the words of our Sauiour, you beware of the leauen of the Pharisies.

Item, according to the saying of the Apostle, be not yee caried away with diuers and strange doctrines: and that in the meane while (as saith the Apostle) you be not removed from the sense of the holy ancient fathers, left that any man by any meanes should seduce you; but you agreeing together in one minde, see that you honour God with one mouth. But if any man to whom that thing is not specialie (as is aforesaid) committed, shall attempt to instruct, or in this your life to direct you into the catholike faith, do ye denie to giue them audience, and refuse you to be present at their assemblies, and shun ye their teachings, because they be wicked and peruerse. And as for vs, we will not omit to proceed according to the sacred canons and precepts of the holy fathers, against such as doe the contrarie. Dated at London in the house of our habitation vnder our seale, the last day saue one of December, in the yeere of our Lord, 1389. and of our consecration the first.

5 Item, the same William in his preaching to the people, on Monday being the first of August, in the yeere of our Lord 1390. in the parish of Whitwicke of your diocelle, did hold and affirme, that no prelate of the world of what estate, preheminence

That is proued vnder titles Eccliastes.

Bread he remaineth in substance.

archemincre or degree soeuer hee were of, hauing cure and charge of soules, he being in deadly sinne, and hearing the confession of any vnder his hand in giuing him absolution, doth nothing: As who neither doth lose him from his sin, nor in receiuing or excommunicating him for his demerits doth bind him by his sentence, except the prelat shall be free himselfe from deadly sinne, as S. Peter was, to whom our Lord gaue power to bind and loose.

6 Item, the same William in many places said and affirmed in the presence of many faithfull christian people, that after the sacramentall words vttered by the priest hauing the purpose to consecrate; there is not made the very bodie of Christ in the sacrament of the altar.

7 Item, that accidents cannot bee in the sacrament of the altar without a subiect: and that there remaineth materiall bread there to such as be partakers communicant with the bodie of Christ, in the same sacrament.

8 Item, that a priest being in deadly sinne, cannot bee able by the strength of the sacramentall words, to make the bodie of Christ, or bring to perfection any other sacrament of the church, neither yet to minister it to the members of the church.

9 Item, that all priests are of like power in all things, notwithstanding that some of them, in this world are of higher and greater honour, degree, or preheminence.

10 Item, that onlie contrition putteth away sinne, if so bee that a man shall be dulie contrite: and that, all auricular and outward confession is superfluous, and not requisit of necessitie to saluation.

11 Item, inferiour curats haue not their power of binding and losing immediatly from the pope or bishop, but immediatlie from Christ. And therefore, neither can the pope nor bishop remoke to themselues such kind of power, when they see time and place at their lust and pleasure.

12 Item, that the pope cannot grant such kind of annuall and perrie pardons, because there shal not be so many perces to the day of iudgement, as are in the popes bulles of pardons contained. Whereby it followeth, that the pardons are not of such like value as they speake of, and are prised to bee.

13 Item, it is not in the popes power to grant vnto any person penitent, forgiuenesse of the punishment or of the fault.

14 Item, that person that giueth his almes to any, which in his iudgement it is not in necessitie, doth sin in so giuing it.

15 Item, that it stands not in the power of any prelat, of what religion soeuer hee be of, priuatelie to giue letters for the benefit of his order, neither doth such benefit granted, profit them to the saluation of their soule, to whom they bee granted.

16 Item, that the same William hauing full of his owne saluation, hath many and oftentimes come into a certaine desert wood, called Dernalwood, of your diocelle, and there in a certaine chapell not hallowed, or rather in a prophane cottage; hath in contempt of the keies, presumed of his owne rashnesse to celebrate, nay rather to prophanate.

17 Item, the same William hath also presumed to doe such things in a certaine prophane chapell, being situate in the parish of Newton nigh to the towne of Leuttwarden, of the same your diocelle.

VPon Friday being the last of the month of June, in the yeere aboue said, about 6. of the clocke, in the said parish church of Bodenhone, hath the said William Swinderby personallie appeared before vs. And he willing to satisfie the terme to him assigned, as before specified, hath read out, word by word, before all the multitude of faithfull christian people, many answers made and placed by the same William (in a certaine paper booke of the sheet folded into foure parts) to the said articles, and the same answers for sufficient hath hee already to vs exhibited, auouching them to be agreeable to the law of Christ. Which thing being done, the same William (without any mee with him) did depart from our presence, because that we, at the instance of certaine noble personages, had promised to the same William free accesse, that is to wit, on that day for the exhibiting of those answers, and also free departing without perfixing of any terme, or without citation, or else any other offence or harme in bodie or in goods.

As for the tenour of the same answers, exhibited vnto them by the same William, as is before specified; wee haue here rather annexed word for word, and in the same old language, vsed at that time, when it was exhibited. And followeth in these words.

The protestation of William Swinderby, with his answers to the articles by the promoters laid against him, to the bishop of Herford, taken out of the Registers in the same old English, wherein he wrote it.

The protestation of William Swinderby, with his answers.

IN the name of God, amen. I William Swinderby priest vnworthy, couenting and purposing wholly with all my hart to be a true christian man, with open confession knowledging mine owne defaults and wrivise deds: making openlie this protestation, cleping God to record here before our worshipfull bishop Iohn, through the sufferance of God bishop of Herford, with witnesse of all this people: that it is not mine intent any thing to say or affirme, to maintaine or to defend that is contrarie to holy writ, against the beleefe of holie Church, or that should offend the holie determination of Christs Church, or the true sentences of holy doctors. And if I haue here before through mine vnconning, been vnadvised, or by euill counsell bin deceiued, or any thing said, preached, holden, maintained or taught contrarie to the law of God: whatlie and fullie for that time for now and euer with full will I reuoke it and withdraw it, as enerich christen man should: Praying and beseching ech christen man, to whom this writing shall come to, that gif I ought erre (as God forbid that I doe) or euer erred in any point, contrarie to holie writ, that it bee had and holden of them, as for thing nought said. And all the trothes that I haue said according with the law of God, that may maintaine them, and stand by them for life or death to Gods worship, as a true christen man should, submitting mee meklie to the correction of our bishop that here is, or of any other christen man, after Christes lawes and holy writ; it will euer readie to be amended: and with this protestation I giu and answer to these conclusions and articles that here followen after, the which bene put to mee to answere to.

The first is this: that I William of Swinderby pretending (hee saith) my selfe a priest, was iudiciallie convented of certaine articles, and conclusions of erro, falle, schismaticke and hereselie, by mee in diuers places and times preached (hee saith) before multitudes of true christen men: and the same articles and conclusions by mee of law reuoked and forsworne same as heresies, and some as errors and falle: and sith I affirmed and beleeued them to bee. And that none of them from that time forth I should preach, teach, or affirme, openlie or priuilie, in that I should make no sermon to the people, ne preach but by lawfull leaue asked and gotten. And if I would presume in doing or affirming the contrarie, then to the seueritie of the law, I should bee burnt, as by mede of the law I wrote.

To this I say, witnessing God that is in heauen, to my wit and vnderstanding, that I neuer preached, held, ne taught these conclusions and articles, the which falslie of friers were put vpon mee, and of lecherous priests to the bishop of Lincolne. For I was ordained by processe * per said, of their law, by the bishop and his commissaries, to as I granted them to bring into question of 13. priests of good fame. And so I did, with a letter, and 12. seales thereby, from the Maior of Leicester, and from true Burgesses and 20. men to witnesse with me, as the duke of Lancaster knew and heard, the earle of Darby, and other many great men that were that time in the towne, that I neuer said them, taught them, ne preached them. But when I should haue made my purgation, there flooden forth fiue friers or moe, that some of them neuer saw mee before, ne heard me, and these lecherous priests openly knowne, some living in their lecherie. rr. were (men sayden) or more, as by their chilter was openlie knowne. Some of these they alleaden, denunciations, and some weren sworn comprobations, that weren there falslie forsworne, they saing busslie and crying with many another frier, with great instance to giue the doome vpon me, to burne me, and boughten die wood before, as men tolden in that towne: and these sleighis, and swearing, and manie giuing, as men sayden, with fauour of the bishop (by what law I wot not, but sothly not by Gods law) they saiden they held me as conuicted, and might not haue forth my purgation. So as I sithy forsoke them, and neuer granted y I said them. Ouer this they made me sweare, neuer to hold them, teach them, ne preach them, priuilie ne apertie: and that I would goe to certaine churches to reuoke the conclusions that I neuer said, in slaunder of my selfe, by great instance of the friers. And so for dred of death and for slesshis counsell that I had, I assented, and so I did. And also they maden me to sweare, that I should not preach (by instance of the friers) within that diocelle, without licence asked and granted; and neuer sithen I did. And now the same conclusions bene rehearsed to me againe: whether by friers counsell I will not deme, God wot, but in slander of me it is: and therefore I will answer now (with Gods helpe) to the conclusions. Of the which the first is this.

* Perhaps, that is, before said.

* Perhaps, that the letter of the maior of Leicester and burgesses with 12. seales.

The chastitie of vowaries to be noted.

1. Obiection.

1. Conclusion.

Answer. Vow debt is to be purified.

2. Conclusion.

Answer.

That men owen aften their debts by charitie, but in no manner for debt to prison any man: and that hee so empriloning, is accursed.

So I said not: but thus I haue said, and yet say with protestation put before, that who so pursues his brother with malice, prisoneth him cruellie for debt without mercie, that same would pay it if he might; he sinneth against Christes teaching, Estote misericordes, sicut pater vester misericors est.

The second conclusion, that falle friers and lecherous priests putten vpon me was this: that if the parochiens know her Curate to bene a lechour, incontinent, and an euill man; they owen to withdraw from him tithe, and else they bene sautes of his sinnes.

Thus I said not, but on this wise, and yet I say with protestation cation put before: that if it be knowne openly to the people, that parsons or curates come to her benefice by simonie, and liuen in notorie fornication, and done not their office and her duties to her parochiens by good ensample of holy life, in true preaching, liuing and residence, warding away from his cure, occupied in secular office: he owes nought to haue of the parochiens, tithes, ne offerings, ne honowes, not to hold him for her curate, ny honowes, nor to geuen him tithes, tell they bin guiltie to God of consent and maintaining of her open sinne. Nemo militans deo, implicat se negotijs seculatibus. 1. q. 1. ca. quisquis per pecuniam, & dist. 80. cap. Si quis.

3. Conclusion.

The third conclusion was this, that friers and priests putten vpon me, that tithes purely bene almesses: And in case that curates bene euill men, they nolwen lesuille bee giuen to other men, by temporall lords, and other temporalties been done away from men of the church, actuallie and openlie trespassing.

Answere.

Thus I said not in these termes: but thus I say with protestation made before: that it were medefull and leefull to secular lords by way of charitie, and power giuen to him of God, in default of prelats that amend not by Gods law, cursed curates that openly misuen the goods of holy church, that ben poore mens goods and cullomable against the law of God: the which poore men, Lords ben holden to maintaine and defend, to take away and withdraw from such curates, poore mens goods, the which they wrongfully holden in helpe of the poore, and their owne willfull offerings, and their bodilie almesdeeds, and giue them to such that duly serue God in the church, and beene medie in vpbearing of the charge that prelats should don doe, and done it not. Alter alterius onera portate, & sic adimplebitis legem Christi. And as anenst taking away of temporalities, I say thus with protestation made before: that it is leefull to kings, princes, dukes, and lords of the world to take away fro popes, cardinals, fro bishops and prelates, possessions in the church, their temporalties, and their almes that they haue giuen them, vpon condition they thoulden serue God the better, when they berelie sene that their giuing and their taking bene contrarie to the law of God to Christs liuing and his Apostles: and namely in that, that they taken vpon them (that thoulden bee next followers of Christ and his Apostles in pouerelle and meknesse) to be secular lords: against the teaching of Christ and S. Peter, Luk. xxii. Reges gentium. Et 1. Pet. 5. Neque dominantes in clero. And namely when such temporalties maken them the more proud, both in heart and in array, then they thoulden bene else, more in strife and debate against peace and charity, and in euill ensample to the world more to bee occupied in worldly businesse. Omnem solicitudinem projicientes in eum. And thirdwes them from the seruice of God, from edifying of Christs Church, in empouerishing and making lesse the state and the power of kings, princes, dukes, and lords that God hath set them in: in wrongfull oppression of commons fo vnmightifulnesse of realmes. For Paul saith to men of the church (whose loze, prelats shoulden soueraignly followen) Habentes victum & vestitum, his contenti simus.

4. Conclusion.

The fourth conclusion is this, that friers and priests putten vpon me falslie, that an euill curate cursing his Soget for withholding of tithes, is naught else, but to take with exaction wickednie and vndulie money from them.

Lecturre. Here may you see the falshood of the papists gathering articles against good men, when they neither said nor meant.

Thus said I not: but thus I said, and yet doe with protestation made before: that an euill curate cursing his parochiens, vnmightie to pay their tithing, with vengeance without pitie, for his singuler worldlie winning against charitie, and not for hed of their soules, there he is hold by his power reasonablie to helpe his nedie parochiens, and doth nought of the goods of the church: wickedly and vndulie bee withholds from them, that which is due to them by the law of God. Dimittite, & dimittetur vobis: date, & dabitur vobis: vetum mihi vindicam, & ego retribuam, dicit dominus.

5. Conclusion.

Lecturre.

*Against.

The fifth conclusion is this, that friers and priests falslie putten vpon me: that no man may curse any man, but if he were wete him cursed of God, ne the comners with him remen not into sentence of curling in any manner.

Thus said I not: but thus I said, and say with protestation put before: that no man ought to curse any man, but for charity and with charitie. Omnia vestra cum charitate fiant. And sikerly I say, that no wrongfull curling of pope or any prelate in earth, binds anenst God, but when they wrongfullie and wittinglie curlen men, for that men will not doe their singuler will, vnreasonable bidding, with highnes of heart and crueltie (standing patience and charity in them that they curlen wrongfully) he is bleffed of almightie God, as they themselfe bene cursed: Matth. 5. Beati estis cum maledixerint homines, &c, Et in Psalmo: Maledicentilli, & tu bene dices. Et Augustinus, xi. q. 3. cap. illud.

6. Conclusion.

*Holden, that is bound. Editor.

The sixth conclusion is this, that friers and priests putten vpon me falslie: that ech priest may assoile him that sinneth, contrition had: and notwithstanding forbiddings of the bishop, is holden to preach to the people the Gospell.

Thus I said not: but thus I said, and yet say with protestation made before: that ech true priest may counsell sinneful men, that they wen to him her sinnes, after the wit and cunning that God has given him, to turne fro sinne to vertuous life. And as touching preaching of the Gospell, I say, that no bishop owes to let a true priest, that God has given grace, wit, and cunning to do that office: for both priests and deacons, that God has ordained deacons and priests, ben holden by power given him of God to preach to the people the Gospell, and namely and soinely, popes, bishops, prelates, and curates: For this is due to the people and parochiens, for to haue an alsle of hem, and they duely and freely owen to done it: Matth. 5. Luke 5. Ite, ecce ego mitto vos. Et Marc. 16. Euntes in mundum vniuersum. Et Matth. 5. Euntes autem prædicate. Et dist. 21. ca. In nouo testamento. Et Isidor. de summo bono. 44. 7. Conclusion.

Answere.

The vij. conclusion is this, that falle friers and priests putten vpon me falslie, saying that I beleeue falsly as my self saies: that yche priest being in deadly sinne, yef he put him to make Christs bodie, rather he does idolatrie then makes it.

8. Conclusion.

Answere.

Thus said I not: but thus I said, and yet say with protestation put before: that priest that puts himselfe presumptuouslie and vnworthily in deadly sinne, wittinglie to ministr and to receiue that holy Sacrament, and so receods bit curselly and damnable, he receines his doome. Qui manducat & bibit indigne, iudicium sibi manducat & bibit: 1. Corin. 11.

9. Conclusion.

Answere.

Their. conclusion is this, that friers and priests falslie putten vpon mee: that no priests entres into any house but euill for to treate the wise, the daughter, or the wench: and therefore they sayden, that I prayed the people that their husbands should beware, that they suffer no priest to enter into her house.

And if I had said thus, then I had prayed against my selfe, for I come oft into mens houles: But thus I said, and yet I doe, praying christian men to beware that they nourish not maintaine no lecherous priest in their sinnes: for there bee where (as men well knowne) they ben maintained in many places, continuing homely with her women. And yche man there saine they paine therfoze a certaine to the bishops almes. Et ideo ait Isido. 11. q. 4. Qui consentit peccantibus & defendit alium delinquentem, maledictus erit apud deum & homines.

10. Conclusion.

Answere.

The x. conclusion is this, that friers and priests putten vpon me falslie: that a child is not verelie baptised, if the priest that baptiseth, the godfather, or the godmother, bene in deadly sinne.

God wot in heauen they said full false: but thus I said, and yet I say: that the prayers that an euill priest praies (living in lecherie or other deadly sinne) ouer the child when it shall be hollowed, ben not acceptable to God as ben the prayers of a good priest. And the better and cleaner the priest is, the godfather, and the godmother; the more gracious the God will heare him, if all they ben not greatest nor most rich in the world. Vnde gg. xiij. q. vij. cap. in grauibus. Cum is qui displicet ad intercedendum peccator admittitur, irati animus proculdubio ad deteriora prouocatur.

11. Conclusion.

Answere.

The xi. conclusion is this, that friers and priests putten vpon me falslie: that no man living against the law of God is a priest, how euer he were ordained priest of any bishop.

Certes this is falle, for I said neuer thus in this termes: but thus I said, and thus I say with a protestation put before: that what euery pope, or cardinall, bishop or priest, or any prelate of the Church comes to his state or dignitie by simonie, and in simonie occupies that office, and holy churches goods: I say that hee is a theefe, and that by the doome of God, and comes but to steale and kill: Joh. 10. Furnon venit nisi vt furetur, & macter, & perdat. And furthermore I say, that what pope, cardinall, bishop, prelate, or priest, in manner of living, or teaching, or lawes making contrarie to Christes living and his lawes, or any other ground put in ruling of the church of Christ, but by Christ and his lawes: is very Antichrist, aduerlarie to Jesus Christ and his Apostles. Aliud fundamentum nemo potest ponere, præter id quod positum est, quod est Christus. Et patet 1. q. 3. c. Si quis. Et 1. q. 6. c. Ego autem. Quicunque.

There we detect no exception who was Antichrist.

But this worshipfull father bishop of Hereford, that here is, faies thus in his writing: that I William of Swinderby, notwithstanding the forsaid reuocation and abiuration (not setting at heart, but from euill to woze, he saie, peruerted so his his diocey) hee saies I come running about by diuers places: and by mine owne fellie he saies that I haue presumed to preach many heresies, errours, blasphemies, sclaunders, and other diffames, and to holy canons and determination of holy Church contrarie and repugnant: which where and when within forth more specialie it shall be shewed, that yee bee false enformed, that I haue presumed in diuers places in your diocese to preach heresies, errors, blasphemies, sclaunders and other diffames. And sir, all the countrie knowes whether this be sooth or not: for sir I presume not, sithen it is the office of a priest, by the law of Christ, to preach the gospell: ne nought I find it for presumption, but for the charge that I haue of God by priesthood (if all I be be worthie) and to the worship of God, and helpe of Christen soules, freely without gathering of her goods for my preaching. If I erred in this, I will bee amended. And sir, touching your mandement that ye sended to me, there was sent none. And sir, I made neuer yet disobedience vnto you, ne to your ministers: and yet all I had, me owes more to obeyche to God then to you, in that that ye bidden contrarie to Christs bidding. And sir as ye saine, that I had no mind of my helle, it is too lightly demed: for God wot for helle I did it, of more then in your bidding. For God wot for helle I did it, of mine and of the people, and that I was in my mind. But sir, it semes me that ye charge not by euidence of the punishing so greatly the breaking of Gods helles, as ye done of your owne. And sir, if it be your will, in default that the people wanted, you to teach hem (and her curats did not) by the desire of the people that weren hungrie and thirstie after Gods word, ich me to beare vp others charge as Gods law bids: I preached not for disobedience to you: but sir in fulfilling of the obedience that Gods law bids me doe, in erecting of my selfe to you of that ye blame me of, in open shewing to holy church, with the protestation that I first made, I answere thus to the articles that ye haue put to me.

1. Article. Anno 1390

The first is this, that I William of Swinderby, the Monday the first of August, the yere of our Lord, 1390. preaching to the people in the Church of Whitney of your diocese, held and affirmed (as ye saine) that no prelate of the world, of what state or degree that he be, hauing cure of soules, being in deadly sinne, and hearing confession of his suget, does nought in assoiling him, ne he assoiles him not of his sinne: and also in amending his suget openlie sinning and him for his deserts cursing, his sentence binds not, but if that prelate be as cleane out of deadly sinne as was saint Peter, to whom our Lord gaue power of binding and vnbinding.

Note here how the vnquiet is falsifie to what good intens sayings and articles.

Answere. I neuer thought this ne spake this, ne heard it to the time that I sain it written in our bokes: and that will witnesse the Lord of the toune that has the same sermon written, and many gentiles and other that hearden me that day. But thus I said, and thus I say with protestation put before: that there is no man, pope, ne bishop, prelate ne curate, that binds sothlie, verdie and ghostly, but in affirmyd as his binding or vnbinding accords with the lores of hem that God gaue to Peter. And as S. Gregories saies, that power han they only, that hold together the enlampe of the Apostles with here teaching. Illi soli in hac carne positi ligandi atque soluendi potestatem habent, sicut sancti Apostoli qui eorum exempla simul cum doctrina tenent: gg. li. quarto sententiarum.

The popes binding halw fast it accordeth.

Greg. lib. 4. sent.

2. Article. And what if he had said it?

Answer.

The second article that is put vpon mee, is this: that I should haue said, preached, and affirmed in many places before many true men of Christ: that after the Sacramentall words said of the priest, hauing intention of consecration: That in the Sacrament of Gods bodie, is not very Gods bodie.

This said I neuer God wote, and true men that haue heard mee.

3. Article.

The third article is this, that our bishop put vpon me; that I should haue said in many places, and affirmed, that accidents mowe not be in the sacrament of the aultar without subiect, and that materiall bread leues not there with Gods bodie in the sacrament.

Answere. This conclusion I haue not holden, ne taught, ne preached, for I haue not medled me of that matter, my wit sufficeth not thereto. But here I tell my beleefe with protestation put before: that the sacrament of the aultar made by vertue of hea wenlie words, that Christ himselfe said in the Cene, when he made this sacrament, that it is bread and Christs bodie, so as Christ himselfe saies in the gospell, and S. Paul saies, and as Doctors in the common law haue determined to this sentence. Mat. 26. Mar. 14. Luk. 22. Pa. 1. Cor. 10. & 11. de con. distinct. 2. panis: & de consecr. dist. 2. Corpus. Io. 6. verus panis.

Bread and Christs body in the Sacrament.

4. Article.

The fourth article is this, that our bishop accuseth me of, that I should haue preached about and said: that a priest being in deadlie sinne, may not by the strength of the Sacramentall words make Gods bodie, or none other Sacrament of the church, either performe to minister them to members of the same.

Answere. The wickednes of the priest hindereth no Sacrament.

Thus I neuer said, thought it, preached it, ne taught it, for well I wot, the wickednesse of a priest may appaire no verie Sacrament: but the wickednesse of the priests appaires himselfen, and all that boldnesse and crample of his sinne causen the people to lolnen the worse against Gods law. Vnde Greg. Et si sacerdos in peccatis fuerit, totus populus ad peccandum conuertitur.

The 5. article is this, that our bishop puts vnto me: that all priests ben of euen power in al things, notwithstanding that some of this world bene of higher dignitie or more pulling in highnesse of degree. 5. Article.

Certes no man would say thus as I suppole, no more did I, ne neuer heard it that I wot of: But this I say with protestation made before: that what priest liues most holilie next following the law of God, he is most lower of God, and most profitable to the church. I men speaken of worldlie power and lordships and worldlys, with other vices that raignen therein, what priest that desires and has most per cost (in what degree so he be) he is most Antechrist of all the priests that ben in earth. Vnde Augustinus sed Valerium scribens ait: Nihil est in hac vita, & maxime hoc tempore facilius & leuius, & hominibus accepta bilius, Episcopi, presbyteri, aut decani officijs: sedi sperfunctione aut adulatorie, nihil apud Deum miserabilius aut tristius & damnabilius. Answere. Comparitie of priests. Aug. ad Valentinian.

The sixth article is this, that only contrition does away sin, if a man be duly contrite: and all outward confession by word is superfluous and not requiret of need of health. 6. Article.

This confession said I neuer that I know of. But thus I say with protestation put before; that very contrition of heart, that is neuer without charitie and grace, does away all sinnes before done of that man that is verilie contrite. And all true confession made by mouth outward to a lwise priest, and a good, profiteth much to man, and it is needfull and pleasing that men shewe their life to such, trusting full to Gods mercie, and that he forgiues thy sinne. Vnde August. de confe. distinct. 4. Nemo tollit peccata mundi nisi solus Christus, qui est agnus tollens peccata mundi. Answere. Confession. God forgiueth sinne. Aug. de confe. dist.

The 7. Article is this, that I should say that lower curats haue not here power of binding and assoiling, by meane of pope and bishop, but of Christ without monp. And therefore neither pope ne bishop may reuoke such maner power for time and place at her will. 7. Article.

Thus said I not, but * not for thy it semes me thus, that no man should grant any thing after his owne will, ghostlie, ne bodilie. But euerich man should be well aduist, that hee grant nothing but if it be the will of God that hee so grant it. And it is no doubt that ne God grants * by meane persons, as does Antichrist to torment Christs people. Vnde & Ioh. 19. ait Pilatus, Nescis quia potestatem habeo dimittere te? Et Christus: Non haberes potestatem aduersum me vllam, nisi esset tibi datum desuper. Answere. * Not for thy, that is, notwithstanding. * Some thing here lacked in the copie.

The 8. Article that our bishop puts me to, is this, that I should say that the pope may not grant such maner indulgence of peeres, for there shall not bee so many peeres vnto the day of doome, as bene contained in his bulls, or in the popes indulgences: whereof it follows that indulgences been not so much worth as they semen and bene preached. 8. Article.

This article I said not thus: but I say, that the pope may grant indulgences written in his letter of peeres, all so farre forth that he may grant him in Gods law, so farre to grant, and farther not: peeres may he grant no mo then God hath set. If indulgence ben forgiuenesse of sinne, I wot well all onelie God forgiues sinne. If it bee releasing of paines in purgatorie ordeinet of God, if God haue ordein him releasle so many, or ordeined that he should release so many, he may then release him: if it be in his owne disposing to release whom him likes, and how much, then he may destroy purgatorie and let none come there and release his owne paine, as charities wots. So it seemes he may be liker to be saued, if himselfe lift. I fany goe to purgatorie, then it seemes he full failes charity. If bulls ben the indulgence that men bringen from the Court, then ben they not so much worth, as they coltea there: for lightly they might be lost, drenched, or biend, or a rat might eaten them: his indulgence then were lost. Therefore sir haue me excuse, I know not these termes: teach me these termes by Gods law, and truly I will learne hem. Answer. Against pardons.

The 9. Article is this, that I should haue said: that it is not in the popes power to grant to any man (doing penance) remission from paine, ne from blame. 9. Article.

Leand I am, but this article said I not thus leaudly: But thus I say, that sithen it is onelie due to God to giue and to grant plenarie remission from paines and from blame: that what euer he be, pope or other, that presumptuoulie misakes vpon him that power that is onely due to God: in that (in as much as in him is) he makes himselfe Christ, and blaspheme th in God, as Lucifer did, when he said: Ascendam, & ero similis altissimo. Further I say, if the pope hold men of armes, in maintaining his temporalties and lordship to benge him on hem that gilten and offenden him, and geues remission to fight and to slay hem that contrarien hem, as men sayden hee did by the bishop of Norwich, not putting his sword into his heath, as God commanded Peter, Mitte, &c. he is Antichristus; for he does contrarie to p commandements of Jesus, that bad Peter forgiue to his brother seuentie sithe seuen sithe. Si peccauerit in me frater meus, quoties dimittā ei? Septies? &c. Et Christus: non dico tibi septies, sed septuagesies septies. The popes priests a blasphemer. *Not for thy, that is, notwithstanding. Of this Henrie Spencer bishop of Norwich did the yere 1382. Greg. Regist. lib. 10.

The

10. Article. The 10. article is this, that our bishop puts to me, that I should haue said: that a man geuing his almes to anie man after his dome (not hauing need) sinnes, in so giuing.

Answere. This article soothlie I said not in these termes: But of this matter I haue spoken, and will with protestation made before on this wise: that it is needfull to give almes to ich man that asketh it bodily or ghostlie, but not to giue to ich shamelesse begger, strong and mightie of bodie, to get his liflode lecherlull and will not, and in that degree so he be, men owen not to giue it to such a one, that bee vnreasonable and herth, so if he giue it to him wittinglie, he sinnes as fautor of his dilenes. Vnde Sap. 12. Si beneficeris, scito cui beneficeris, & erit gloria in bonis tuis multa.

Of the meteneth of begging freers.

11. Article. The 11 article is this, that is put to me, that I should haue said, that it is not in the power of anie prelate of what euer priuate religion, to grant letters of the good dedes of her order, ne such benefices grauntet profits not to hele of soules to hem that they ben grauntet to.

Answere. I said neuer thus in these termes: but thus I say with protestation, that prelates of priuate religion mowen graunt, letters of the good dedes of her order: But the ghostly mede that comes of good dedes, they mow not grant, for that is onelie proprie to God. And if they blinde the people in misbeleefe for her worldlie winning, wittinglie beheeting hem of her owne graunt ghostly medes in heauen by her letters and her seale (uncertaine, who shall be damned) but make the people bolder to sinne by trust of her praiers: bit is none heal to the soules, but harmes to that one and to that other. For God shall yeld to echone after here werks. Ipse reddet vnicuique secundum opera sua.

Good dedes of the other profit nothing.

12. Article. The 12. article is this: that our bishop puts to me, that I many times and oft haue come (he saies) to a desert wood, cleped Derwallwode of his Diocese: and there in a chappell not hallowed, but accurset * Thephearde his halke, by mine owne follie he saies haue presumed to sing (but rather to curse) in contempt of the rules.

Of thecrycote.

Answere. Hereto I say, that this is falsly put vpon me of hem that told you this. For it is a chappell where a priest sings certaine daies in the yeare, with great solemnitie: and certes I neuer song therin seth I was borne into this world.

The accusers proued with a lie.

13. Article. The 13. article is this, that I should also presume to sing in an vnhallower chappell, that stonds in the parke of Newton, besides the towne of Leyntwardy of this same Diocese.

Another lie. Answere. 14 Article. Truely I wot not where the place stonds.

The 14 article is this, that I should say that no man owes to sweare for anie thing, but simply without oth to affirme or to denie, and if he sweare he sinnes.

Answere. This article said I not that I haue mind of, in this maner: But oft I haue said and yet will, that men should not sweare by anie creature by the law of God, and that no man should sweare in idel, as wolnigh all the people vseth, and therefore me thinkes it is no neede to comfort the people in sweating. For from the old vnto the yong, and namely men of holie Church, beten his hell, and few bishops purtuen hem therefore.

Soliweare by no creature.

15. Article. The 15. article is this, that I should haue taught to true men of Christ, that on no maner they should worship the Image of him that was done on the crosse, or the Image of the blessed mayd his mother, or of other Saints into honour and worship of the same ordeinet in y mind of them. And oft sithes the worshipper of such image, he has repioued, saying and strongue affirming, that churchmen sinnen and done Idolatrie. 15. Article.

Answere. This conclusion haue I not said in these termes. But this I say with protestation, that God commaundes in his lawe in diuers places: Exod. 20. Leuit. 19. & 26. Deut. 5. & 7. Tobiæ 1. Baruc. 6. 2. ad Corin 10. Esay 45. Iere. 2. 6. 8. & 10. 22. & vltimo, Sapient. 13. & 14. & 15. Mac. 5. & Threnorum 4. & postremo that men should not worshippen grauen Images that ben werkes of mens hands: And also he bids that men should not make to hem grauen Images in likenesse of the things that ben in heauen, to that end to worshippen hem: sethen neither God ne Christ by his manhood gaue neuer commandement to make these Images, ne expresse counsell, ne his Apostles in all his lawe, ne to worship such that bene made. But well I wote, that by mens owne relation that haue misbeleeue in hem, that many men sinnen in maumetrie worshipping such dead Images: * Not for thy, to tho men bene I nogge good to whom they haue bene but talendars, a through the sight of hem they knowen the better and worshippen oft God and his Saints. And for such men they done harme that setten her hope and trust in hem or done any worship to hem against Gods law and his heft. Vnde ait Gregorius in Registro libro 10. in Epistola ad Serenum Episcopū: Si quis imagines facere voluerit, minimè prohibe: adorare omnino prohibe. Sed hoc solicitè fraternitas tua admoneat, vt ex visione rei gestæ, ardorem compunctionis percipiant, vt in adoratione tocius trinitatis prosternantur. Images not to be worshipped. *Not for thy, that is, notwithstanding. Greg. Regist. lib. 10.

These conclusions, points, and articles that I haue vnder protestation, in this booke affirmed: I will stand by hem, and maintaine hem (with the grace of almighty God) to the time that the contrarie be proued buelie by Gods law. And this protestation I make for my faith & my beliefe as I did at the beginning: that whensoeuer this worshipfull or any other christen man shewes me beraily by Gods lawe the contrarie of this, I will holy forsake hem, and take me to the verray trouth and better vnderstanding of wiser men, readie to be amended by the law of Jesu Christ, and be a true christen man and faithfull some of holy church: And of these I beseech you all beare witnesse where ye commen.

IOhn by Gods permission bishop of Hereford, to his deare sonnes our deane of Leamster, to the parsons of Croft, Almaly, and Whitney, and also to the vicars of Ky: ngton, Lardersley, Wiggemore, and Monmouth Clifford, and of S. Johns aultar in our cathedrall church of Hereford, and to the reft of the deanes, parsons, vicars, chaplcines, parish priests, and to other, whosoeuer in any place are appointed through our citie and dioces of Hereford: sendeth greeting, grace, and benediction.

We bid and commaund, charging you straitly, in the vertue of holy obedience, that you cite or cause to bee cited peremptorily (and vnder the paine of excommunication) William Swinderby, pretending himselfe to be a priest: That he appeare before vs, or our Commissarie the 20. day of this present moneth of July, at North Lodebury, within our dioces, with the continuance of the dayes following in the same place also to be affigned vnto him if it be expedient, till such things as haue bene and shalbe laid against him be fully discussed, to answere more at large to certaine positions and articles, touching the catholike faith, and the holy mother churches determination, that haue been exhibited and minisired vnto the said William. And to see and heare also many things that haue openly in iudgement before vs, and a great number of faithful christians by him bene euen in writing confessed, to be condemned as hereticall, falle, schismaticall and erroneous. And to see and heare positions and articles denied by the said William, to be proued by faithfull witnesses and other lawfull crials against the said William. And to receiue for his false, hereticall, erroneous and schismaticall doctrine that iustice shall appoint, or els to shewe causes why the premisses should not be done.

And if the said William lieth priuily, or els cannot be so cited in his proper person: we will that in your churches when most people shall then come together to diuine seruice, you openly with a loud voice, and that may be vnderstanded, cause the said William peremptorily to be cited vnto the premisses, certifying the same William, that whether hee shall appeare the day and place appointed or no, wee notwithstanding will proceede vnto the premisses against the said William according to the canonicall decrees by forme of law, in the absence or contumacie of the said William notwithstanding. We will moreouer if the said William shal appeate at the said day and place, as is aforesaid, before vs, friendly heare him, and honestly, and fauourably, as farre as we may with Gods leaue, deale with him: granting free licence to come and to go for his naturall liberrie without any hurt either in bodie or goodes. And see that you fully certifie vs of the things that you or any of you shall doe about the execution of this our commandement, and that by your letters patents signed with your seale aurenticall, giuing also faithfully to the said William or to his lawfull Procter, if he require it, a copie of this our present commandement.

The first sitting against William Swinderby. Anno 1391

On Thursday, the 11. of Julie, in the peare of the Lord aforesaid: We in the parish Church of North Lideburie afore said, about 6. of the clocke, sitting in iudgement, after that it was reported vnto vs how the aforesaid William was personallie taken and lawfullie cited: Caused the same William and there appeare in iudgement to be called out, to do, heare & receiue such things, where to he was afore cited, and to do otherwise that shuld inflice thonld perswade. And the said William appeared neither by himselfe, nor by procter: but onely by a seruant (whose name we know not) he sent a certaine schedule of paper, made like an indenture vnto vs to excuse him. After which schedule seen, read and with right deliberation waighed, and in any wise not withstanding, we adiudged the said William, after he was often called, and long euen to the due houre taried for, and by no meanes appearing, worthily for his obstinacie, & for his stubbornnesse, assigned vnto him the 29. date of Julie in y church of Paulley, to appeare before vs with the foresaide saueguarde, to answere more fully to such articles and other wise to heare, receiue, and doe as bifore is noted.

Mr. s. The

The second dayes act.

The second sitting against William Swinderby.

Upon Saturday being the 29. of Julie, and in the yeare of the Lord aforesaid, we John by Gods permission the foze reuerend bishop in the church of Pontefburie, of our Diocez, at fire of the clocke, or thereabout, sitting in iudgement; made the said William of Swinderby to be openlie called, that (as was to him appointed and assigned) he should appeare before vs, to answere to the foresaid articles more fully, and to declare the said articles as the darknesse of his answeres did worthilie require. And that the said William being called, and long for a due time looked for, did make no meanes to appeare: and so we pronounced him to be obstinat, and for his obstinatenesse (to ouercome his malice, and of our exceeding fauour) thought good to appoint, and did appoint the 8. of August, then next following, at Cleobury Mortemere of the same our diocez, vnto the said William for the same thing.

The third daies act.

The third sitting against William Swinderby.

Upon Tuesday, the 8. of August, the yeare aforesaid, I John by Gods permission Bishop of Herefoid aforesaid, in the church of Cleobury Mortemere, about fire of the clocke, sitting in iudgement, caused foresaid William Swinderby, to be called manie times openlie, to doe and receiue about the premisses, according to the appointment of the same daie that iustice should aduise; which William did not appeare at all. Wherevpon, we after that the said William was called, and often proclaimed, and long looked for, but not appearing at all, did iudge him worthilie (as of right apperteined) obstinate: and for his obstinatenesse assigned him the 16. day of the same moneth of August next following, in the parish Church of Whithorne of the same our diocez, to bring forth, or to see brought forth, all lawes, muniments, and other kindes of proofes, and to see all witnesses brought forth, admitted and sworn, by whom and which things we intend to proue the foresaid articles, or at leastwise some of the same.

The fourth dayes act.

The fourth sitting against William Swinderby.

Upon Wednesday the 16. day of the moneth of August the yeare aforesaid, we John the bishop in the parish church of Whithorne aforesaid of our diocez, sitting in iudgement, caused the said William Swinderby oftentimes to be called: who (as is aforesaid) appeared not at all: whom after that he was so called, proclaimed and long looked for, and yet by no meanes appearing, we pronounced to be obstinate. We recited also by certaine faithfull christians, and zealous men for the catholicke faith of our diocez a certaine proces made and had at another time against the same William, before the reuerend father in God and Lord, Lord John by the grace of God, Bishop of Lincolne, confirmed by the hanging on of the seale of the same reuerend father, the Lord Bishop of Lincolne. The tenor whereof word for word is contained before. And these faithfull christians moreouer against the obstinatenesse of the said William Swinderby brought forth discreete men, M. William Lewes, parson of the parish Church of Bruneriie, and also Edmund Materdon, parish Chaplaine of the Chapell of S. and Roger Newton, and Hugh Shepperd, lay men of the diocez of Lincolne, asking instantlie that they might be receiued for witnesses, to proue some of the foresaid articles, whom against the obstinatenesse of the said William Swinderby, we thought good to receiue and did receiue, and their oathes to the holy Gospels of God, being layd hands on corporally in our hand. And did diligently examine them in proper person seuerallie in forme of law: whose sayings and depositions are afterward brought in, and at the instance of the same faithfull christians, we assigned the second day of September then next following to the said William Swinderby, to sale and alledge against the said processe, witnesses, and their sayings, in the said church of Whithorne: decreeing that a copie should be made for him of these things that were brought forth, and of the depositions of the witnesses.

Of this processe mention is made before pag. 428

Here we faile in our copy, till the Register come to our hands againe.

by the doze, but wendith vpon an other halfe, hee is a night theefe and a day theefe. And there he telleth, how he that sieth from the flocke, is not the shepheard but an hired man, and it pertaineth not to him of the sheepe.

7. Conclusion.

☞ To the second conclusion that he taleth is errour as here, that toucheth taking away of the temporalities and of Lordships of priests that bene euill liuers.

Declaration.

I say, me seemeth that the conclusion is true, and is this: that it were needefull and lefull to secular Lordes by way of charity, and by power giuen to them of God, in default of Prelates that amend naught by Gods lawe: Curses curates that openlie misuse the goods of the holy church, that ben poore mens goods: and cullomably ayens the law of God, the which poore men, Lordes ben holden to maintaine and defend) to take awaie and to deale from such curates, poore mens goods in helpe of the poore, and their owne willfull offerings, and their bodily almes deedes of worldly goods, and giue them to such as bielie seruen God in the church: and ben readie in vpbearing of the charge that prelates shoulden doe, and done it not. And as auences taking away of temporalities: I say thus, that it is lefull to kings, to princes, to dukes, and to lords of the world to take away from popes, from cardinals, from bishops, prelates, and possessioners in the church, their temporalties, and their almes that they haue giuen them vpon condition, that they shoulden serue God the better: when they wexily serue that their giuing and taking bene contrarie to the law of God, contrarie to Christes liuing, and his Apostles, and namely in that they taken vppon them, that they shoulden be nere followers of Christ and his apostles, in poornesse and meeknesse, to be secular lords against the teaching of Christ and of Saint Peter. Cruelie me seemeth that all christen men and namelie Priestes shoulden take keepe, that their doing were according with the law of God, either the old law, either the new. The Priestes of the olde law weren forbidden, to haue lordships among their brethren: for God said, that he would be their part and their heritage. And Christ that was the highest Priest of the new Testament forsooke worldlie lordship, and was here in fourme of a seruant, and forbad his priests such lordships, and said. Reges gentium dominantur eorum, &c. vos autem non sic. That is: the kings of the heathen, beare dominion and rule, &c. But you shall not do so. And as Saint Peter saith: Neque dominantes in clero, &c. Not bearing rule and dominion of the clergie, &c. So it seemeth me, that it is against both lawes of God, that they haue such lordships, and that their title to such lordships is not full good: And so it seemeth me, that if they haue bene herto of euill liuing, it is no great perill to take away from them, such lordships, but rather meedfull, if the taking abate were in charitie, and not for singular couetousnesse ne enuie. And I suppose that if riers, that bene bounden to their saudders, haue in powerlie, would breake their rule and take worldlie lordships: might not men lawfullie take from them such Lordships, and make them to liue in peuertie as their rule would? And forsooth it seemeth me, that Priestes oughten also well to keepe Chiftes rule, as friers oweu to keepe the rule of their founder. Jeremie witnesseth, how God commended Rachabs children, for they would not breake their fadders bidding in drinking of wine. And yet Jeremie profered them wine to drinke. And so I trowe, that God would commend his Priests, if they wouldden forsake worldlie lordships, and holden them as apseth with licfot, and with clothing: and liuke them to fast about their heritage of heauen. And God saith, Numer. 18. In terra eorum nihil possidebitis, nec tenebitis partem inter eos: Ego pars & hæreditas vestra in medio filiorum Israel, &c. Et Deut. 18. Non habebitis sacerdotes & Leuitæ & omnes qui de eadem tribu estis, partem & hæreditatem cum reliquo Israel, quia sacrificia Domini & oblationes eius comedent, & nihil accipient de possessione fratrum suorum. Dominus enim ipse hæreditas ipsorum, sicut locutus est illis. Et Lucæ 14. Sic ergo omnis ex vobis, qui non renunciauerit omnibus quæ possidet, non potest meus esse discipulus. That is: You shall haue no inheritance in their land, nor haue no part amongst them: I will be your part and inheritance amongst the children of Israel, &c. Deut. 18. The Priests and Leuites, and all that bee of the same tribe shall haue no part nor inheritance with the rest of Israel: because they shall eate the sacrifices of the Lord and his obiations, and they shall take nothing of the possession of their brethren. The Lord himselfe is their possessions, as he spake vnto them. And the 14. chapter of Luke: Sucn is euery one of you, which forsaketh not all that he possesseth, cannot be my disciple. And Jerome in his 14. Epistle hath the like words. And Bernard in his 20. Boke to Eugenius the Pope. And also Hugo in his Boke De Sacramentis, the second part of his second boke the 7. chapter. And also in the 12. q. first chapter, Duo sunt, and in the chapter Clericus. And againe, Bernard in his boke De sermone de Apostolis, vpon this place: Ecce nos reliquimus omnia: Behold we leaue all, &c. Chrysostome vpon the Gospell of S. Matth. &c.

Euery gift giuen vpon condition is fruitlesse vpon the breach of euery such condition.

3. Conclusion.

☞ The third conclusion toucheth the matter of preaching of Priests, withouten leaue of Bishops, and is this, that such true Priests may counsell sinfull men; that theiven to them their sinnes, after the wit and cunning that God hath given, to turne hem from sinne to vertuous life, and as touching preaching of the Gospell.

Declaration.

I say that no Bishop oweth to let a true Priest, that God hath giuen grace, wit and cunning to doe that office. For both Priests and Deacons that God hath ordained Deacons or Priests bene holden by power geuen to them of God, to preach to the people the Gospell: and namely, and somerelie popes, bishops, prelates and curates: for this is due to the people and the parishiers, to haue it and aske it. And hereto seemeth me, that Christ said generally to his Disciples: Ite & prædicate Euangelium omni creaturæ, Goe and preach the Gospell to all creatures, as well as he said, Ite & baptizate omnes gentes, Goe and baptise all nations, that also as well longeth preaching thing to priests without leaue of a bishop, as both baptising; & then why may he not preach Gods word withouten a bishops leaue? And sithen Christ bod his Priests preach, who should forbidden them preach? The Apostles were forbidden of a bishop at Jerusalem, to speake more of the name of Jesus; but Peter said: Si iustum est in conspectu Dei, vos potius audire quam Dominum, iudicate. That is, whether it be iust in the sight of God to heare and obey you before the Lord; be your selues iudges. A bishop may not let a priest of giuing bodnise alwes in his diocesse: much more may he not let the doing of spiritual almes in his diocesse by Gods law. A priest may say his Dattins withouten the bishops leaue: for the pope that is aboue the bishop, hath charged priests therewith: And me thinketh that Chists bidding should be all so much of charge as the popes. If the Pope may take from the Friers to make them obey Saint Francis rule, may not the Emperour take from the Pope to cause him keepe Christs rule?

The fourth conclusion.

☞ The fourth conclusion toucheth the Sacrament of the altar, and is this:

Declaration.

That wholly I beleue that the sacrament of the altar made by vertue of heauenly words, is bread and Christs bodie: so as Christ himselfe saith in the Gospell, and as Saint Paul saith, and as Doctors in the common law haue determined: To this sentence John 6. Moses hath not giuen you bread from heauen, but my Father will giue you bread from heauen. He is the true bread that came downe from heauen, and giueth life vnto the world. My Father giueth vnto you bread in deed: the verie true bread of God is that, which came downe from heauen and giueth life vnto the world. I am the bread of life: The bread which I will giue is my flesh. And in the canon of the Masse, Panem sanctum vitæ æternæ, the holie bread of life. And Cointhians the tenth chapter and first epistle: The bread which we breake, is it not the communicating of the bodie of the Lord? Let a man proue himselfe, and so eat of that bread, &c. And Canon De consecratione, distinction 2. vnder the authozitie of Hilarius the pope: Corpus Christi quod sumitur de altari, &c. And Augustine in the foresaid distinction: That which is seene, is bread, &c. That which faith requireth, is bread and is the bodie of Chsill. And in the foresaid distinction, cap. Omnia quæcunque, &c. Bp these things bene faces it is manifestly declared, that that bread and this, be not two, but one bread and one flesh. Note the words for that he saith, the bread and flesh. And the author, De diuinis officiis, and also Augustine in his boke De remedijs pœnitentiæ: Why prepareste thou thy teeth? &c. And Ambrose, De Sacramentis: de consecratione, dist. 2. Reuera mirabile est, &c. This meate which you receiue, and this bread of one which descended from heauen, doth minister the substance of eternall life, and whosoeuer shall eat the same shall not die euerlastingly, and is the bodie of Chsill. Note how he saith, and is the bodie of Chsill.

The seuenth conclusion.

Declaration.

☞ The seuenth point speaketh of the pope, and is this: Sith it is only due to God, as I haue said before, to geue and to grant plener remission, from paine, and from blame: that whatsoeuer he be pope or other that presumptuously misfaketh vpon him the power that only is due to God, in that, in as much as in him is, he maketh himselfe euen with Christ, and blasphemeth God, as Lucifer did, when he said: Ascendam, & ero similis altissimo: That is, I will ascend, and be like the highest, &c.

The pope maketh himselfe euen with Christ.

For that I say, if the pope hold men of armes in maintaining of his temporall lordship, to benge him on them that gilten and offenden him, and geueth remission to fight and to slay them, that contrarien him, as men sayden he did by the bishop of Herwich, not putting his sword in his heath, as God commanded to Peter: he is Antichsit. For he doth the contrarie of the commandement of Jesus Christ, that bad Peter seignen to his brother seuentie sithe seuen sithe. Well I find in the Gospell, that when Christ sent his disciples to Samaria, the Samaritans would not receiuen them. And some of them bidden Christ, that he should make a fire come downe from heauen, to destroy the citie. And he blamed them and said: Nescitis cuius spiritus estis: Filius hominis non venit animas perdere, sed saluare. That is, ye know not of what spirit ye are: The Sonne of man is not come downe to destroy, but to saue the liues and soules of men, &c. If Christ come to saue men, and not to slea them: who that doth the reuers hereof, is against Christ, and then he is Antichsit. Christ had Peter in his sword in his heath, and said: Omnes qui gladium acceperint, gladio peribunt. That is: All which take the sword, shall perish with the sword. And I cannot find that Peter dieu out his sword after that time, but suffered as Christ said: Cum senueris, alius cinget te, & ducet quò tu non vis. That is, when thou shalt wax old, another shall gird thee and lead thee whither thou wilt not. And therefore said Peter, Christ suffered for vs, leauing vs example that we should follow his steps. And Paul saith, Not defending your selues, but giue place to anger: leaue reuenging to me, and I shall reward them, &c. And therefore he seemeth to me, that it is much against Christs loze, that his vicar should be a fighter, sithen that he mate be a shepheard, that should go before his sheepe, and let them come after him, and not with swords to driue them away from him. For as Christ saith, a good shepheard shall put his life for his sheepe. And zit all that Christ had two swords then that he was taken of the Jewes, he said himselfe, it was for that the Scriptures mote zit be fulfilled: Quoniam cum iniquis deputatus est: that is, he was reputed among the wicked, and not to figure two swords, that men sayen the pope hath to gouerne with the church. And sithen I see such doings of the pope, and many other that ac-ordeined not with Christs lore, ne his living: And when I reade diuers Scriptures of holy writte, I am sonie astonied whether they shoulden be vnderstanded of him, or of any other. And I pray you for Godes loue tell me the soth. Christ saith: Manie shall come in my name, saying: I am Christ, and shall deduce manie, &c. Christ I wot well is as much to say, as he that is annointed, and two annointings there weren in the law, one of kings, another of priests. And Christ was both king and priest, and so the pope saith that he is. And if all that haue bene enuerours of Rome, and other heathen kings haue bene Antichrists, they come not in Christs name. But who so commeth in Christs name, and fairest him Christs friend, and he be pitilie his enemie, he may lightlie beguile manie. Saint Paul saith: before there commeth a defection first and the sonne of perdition shall be reuealed, which is the aduersarie, and is extolled aboue all that is named God, or which is worshipped: so that he shall sit in the temple of God, shewing himselfe as God. And it followeth in the same place: And now ye know what holdeth till he be reuealed in his time, for he worketh already the mysterie of iniquitie. Only he that holdeth, let him hold till he come abroad, and then that wicked one shall be reuealed, whom the Lord Iesus shall slay with the spirit of his mouth, &c. And Saint John saith in the Apocalyps: I saw another beast ascending out of the earth, and two hornes like to the lambe. He spake like the dragon, and had the power of the first beast. Manie such authorities astonieth me of sithes: And therefore I praie you for the loue of God, to tell me what they meane.

The sentence.

THe which schedule afore mentioned, wish the contents thereof diligently of vs perused, we considering the diseases which be not easily cured with gentle remedie, must haue harder plasters. Considering moreouer these his articles with his answeres to the same, and to other articles also lastly against him produced, first mature deliberation had before vpon the whole matter, with the foresaid maisters and doctors of diuinitie, and as well secular as regular, to a great number, observing in the same all things to be observed in this behalfe, haue giuen sentence against the said William in forme as followeth.

The sentence gone against him.

The name of Christ being inuocated, we Iohn by the permission of God, bishop of Hereford, sitting in tribunall seat, hauing God before our eies, weighing and considering the articles by the foresaid faithfull christians put vp against the said Swinderby, pretending himselfe to be priest, with his answeres vpon the same, Actis & Actitatis before vs in the cause of hereticall peruersitie, with mature deliberation had before in this behalfe, with maisters and doctors of diuinitie, and also of other faculties, with their counsell and consent: Do pronounce, decree, and declare the said William to haue bene and to be an heretike, schismatike, and a false informer of the people, and such as is to be anoided of faithfull christians. Wherefore we admonish, vnder the paine of the law, all and singuler christians, of what sexe, state or condition so ever they be, straitlie charging: that neither they nor any of them within our diocesse, or any other, do beleeue, receiue, defend, or fauour the said William, till he shall deserue fully to be reconciled to the bosome againe of holy church.

The appeale of William Swinderby from this sentence of the bishop prefixed, vnto the king and his counsell.

The appeale of William Swinderby from the sentence of the bishop to the king and his counsell.

IN nomine patris, & filij, & spiritus sancti, Amen. I William Swinderby priest, knowledge openly to all men, that I was before the bishop of Hereford, the third day of October, and before many other good clerkes, to answere to certaine conclusions of the faith that I was accused of. And mine answere was this, that if the bishop or any man couthe shein me by Gods law, that my conclusions or my answeres were errour or heresie, I would be amended, and openly reuoke them before all the people. I knowes in any of my conclusions, but sayden sligly with word, that there was errours in them, and bidden me subiect me to the bishop, and put me into his grace and reuoke mine errour, and shewed me nought by Gods law ne reason, ne proued which they weren. And for I would not knowledge me guiltie, so as I knew no errour in them, of which I should be guiltie, therefore the bishop sate in dome in mine absence, and demned me an heretike, a schismatike, and a teacher of errours, and denounced me accursed, that I come not to correction of the church. And therefore for this vnrightfull iudgement, I appeale to the kings Iustices for many other causes.

* Something is left out here in the copie.

The causes why he appealed to the kings court.

One cause is, for the kings court, in such matter is aboue the bishops court: For after that the bishop has accursed, he may no feare by his law, but then mote he seek succour of the kings law, and by a writte of Significauit, put a man in prison.

The second cause is, for in cause of heresie there liggeth iudgement of death, and that dome may not be giuen without the kings Iustices. For the bishop will say: Nobis non licet inferficere quenquam: That is, It is not lawfull for vs to kill a nie man: as they saiden to Pilat, when Christ should be demed. And so: I thinke that no Iustice will giue sodainly and vntrue dome, as the bishop did, and therefore openly I appeale to hem, and send my conclusions to the knights of the Parliament, to be shewed to the lords, and to be taken to the Iustices, to be well assist or that they giuen dome.

The third cause is, for it was a false dome: for no man is an heretike, but he, that maisterfully defends his error or heresie, and stiffely maintaines it. And mine answere has bene alway conditionall, as the people openly knowes, for euer I say, and yet say, and alway will: that if they cannen shein me by Gods law that I haue erret, I will gladly bene amended, and reuoke mine errours, and so I am no heretike, ne neuermore in Gods grace will ben en no wise.

What is an heretike.

The fourth cause is: For the bishops law, that they demne men by, is full of errours and heresies, contrarie to the truth of Christs lore of the Gospell.

The bishops law of condemnation full of heresies and errours.

For there as Christs law bids vs loue our enemies, the popes law giues vs leaue to hate them and to slay them, and grants men pardon to werren against heathen men, and slay hem. And there as Christs law teach vs to be mercifull, the bishops law teaches to be wretchfull. For death is the greatest wretch that men moiwen done on him that guiltie is.

There as Christs law teaches vs, to bleslen him that discaren vs, and to pray for him: the popes law teacheth vs to curse them, and in their great sentence that they giuen, they presume to daunne hem to hell that they curssen. And this is a foule heresie of blasphemie: there as Christs law bids vs be patient, the popes law inditties vs to swoords, that wherewith he smiteth the sheep of the church. And he has made lords and kings to sweare to defend him and his church.

There as Christs law forbiddeth vs lechery, the popes law inditties the abominable whoredome of common women, and the bishops in some place haue a great tribute or rent of whoredome.

The contraire betweene the pope and Christ.

There as Christs law bids to minister spirituall things freely to the people: the pope with his law sels for money, after the quantitie of the gift, as pardons, orders, blessing, and Sacraments, and prayers, and heresies, and preaching to the people, as it is knowne amonght them.

There as Christs law teaches peace: the pope with his law astailes men for money to gouer the people, priests, and other to sight for his cause.

There as Christs law forbids sweating: the popes law inditteth sweating, and compels men thereto.

Whereas Christs law teacheth his priests to be pore, the pope with his law, inditties and maintaines priests to bee lords.

And yet the fifth cause is, for the popes law that bishops demen men by, is the same vnrightfull law that Christ was demet by of the bishops, with the Scribes and with the Pharisies. For right as at that time they gauen more credens to the two false witnesses that witnessed against Christ, then they creden to all the people that witnesseden to his true preaching and his miracles: so the bishops of the popes law geuen more leuer by their law to two heretikes and apostates, or two comen women that woulden witnessleden against a man in the cause of heresie, than to thousands of people that were true and good. And for the pope is this Antichrist, & his law contrarie to Christ his law, fully I forsake this law, and so I red all christen men. For thus by another point of this law, they mighten compell much of this law to: For whom they can by this law present a man an heretike: his goods shulen be forfet from him and from his heires, and so might they lightly haue two or three false witnesses to record an heresie against what true man so hem liked. Therefore me thinkes, that what soeuer that I am a christen man I may lawfull appeale from a false dome of the law, to be rightcously demet by the trouth of Gods law. And if this appeale will not serue, I appeale openly to my Lord Iesu Christ that shall deme all the world, for he, I wot well, will not share for no man to deme a trouth. And therefore I praie God almightie with Dauid in the Sauter booke, Deus iudicium tuum regi da, & iustitiam tuam filio regis: iudicare populum tuum in iustitia & pauperes tuos in iudicio. That is, O God giue thy iudgement to the king, and thy iustice to the kings sonne: to iudge thy people in iustice, and thy powre ones in iudgement, &c.

A letter sent to the nobles and burgesses of the parliament, by master William Swinderby.

A fruitfull letter to the lords and burgesses of the parliament.

IEsu that art both God and man, helpe thy people that louen thy law, and make knowen through thy grace thy teaching to all christen men. Deare firs, so as we seen by many tokens that this world drawes to an end, and all that euer haue bene forth brought of Adams kind into this world shulen come to gedeer at domesday rich and poore, ichone to geue accompt and receiue after his deeds, ioy or paynen for euermore: Therefore make we our werkes good, ye while that God of mercie abides, and be ye stable and true to God, and ye shulen see his helpe

Psalm. 119. Louit. 16.

helpe about you. Confitantes estote & videbitis auxilium Domini super vos: This land is full of ghostly cowards, in ghostlie battell few dare stand. But Christ that comforter of al that falleth (to that his heart brast for our loue) against the fiend the doughtie duke comforteth vs thus: Estote fortes in bello, &c. Be ye strong in battel, he saies, and fight ye with the old adder. State in fide, viriliter agite, &c. Wake ye and pray ye, stond yee in beleeue, doe yee manly and bee yee comforter, and let all your things be done with charitie: For S. Paul bids thus in his epistle, that saw the priuities of God in heauen: Euigilate satis, &c. Awake ye that been righteous men, be ye stable and vnmoueable: Awake yee quickly and sleepe nought, and stond now strongly for Gods law. For S. John in the Apocalypse saies, blessed be hee that awakes: for nought to sleepers but to wakers God has behite the crowne of life. For the houre is now as Paul saith to vs, from sleepe for to rise, for he that earely awakes to me, he shall find me, saith Christ himselfen. This waking ghostly is good liuing out of sinne: this sleepe betokens that which cowardeth a mans heart from ghostly comfort, and to stand in the same thorough a deceiueable sleepe is this that lets a man of the blisse of heauen: the fiend makes men bold in sin, and ferd to do worship to God: death is a likening to a theefe that priuie stealeth vpon a man that now is rich, and full of weale, anon he makes him a needie wretch: therefore said God by S. John in the Apocalyps in this wife, Be thou waking, for if thou wake nought, I shall come to thee as a theefe, and thou shalt not wit what houre. And if the husbandman (saies Christ) wist what houre the theefe should come, he would wake and suffer him not to vndermine his house. Saint Peter therefore warneth and saith, wake and be ye ware, suffer ye no man (he saies) as a theefe, but willinglie for Gods loue, for it is time (as Peter saies) that dome begin from the house of God. Yee bene the bodie of Christ (saieth Poul) that needs must suffer with the head, or else your bodies bene but dead and departed from Christ that is the head. And therefore curset be he (saies Poul) that loues not Iesu Christ. And who it is that loues him, Christ himselfe tels in a spell, he that has my hests, and keepes them, he it is that loues me. Cursed he be therefore (saies Poul) that doth Christs workes deceiueable. Be ye not therefore (saies Poul) ashamed of the true witnesse of Iesu Christ, for Christ our God saies in his Gospell, he that shames me and my words, him shall mans sonne ashame when he shall come for to set in the siege of his Maiesty. And each man, he saies, that knowes me and my words before men, in this sinfull generation and whorish, mans sonne shall knowledge him before my father, saies Christ himselfe, when he shall come with his Angels in the glorie of his father. Sith ye therefore bene christen men, that is to say, Christes men, shew in deed that ye been such as ye daren shew you the kings men, for his had bene, as Peter saies, better not to haue knowen the way of trouth, then after the knowing thereof to bee conuerted backward there from. Wee knowen Christ, that is trought, we sain all through our beliefe, if we turne from him for dred, truly we deny the troth. And therefore sith our time is short, how short no man knowes but God, do we the good that we may to Gods worship, when wee haue time. Bee true (saies God) to the death, and you shall haue the crowne of life. And thinke on Iudas Machabeus, that was Gods true knight, that comforted heartily Gods true people, to be the followers of his law. And geue ye, he said, your liues for the Testament of your fathers. And ye shullen win, he said, great ioy, and a name for euermore. Was not Abraham, he said, in temptation founden true, and was * areckted vnto him euermore to righteousnes: Ioseph in time of his anguish hee kept truly Gods hest, he was made by Gods prouidence lord of Egypt, for his trouth. Phinees our fadure louing, he saith, the zeale of God tooke the testament of euerlasting Priesthood. Iosue for he fulfillee the word of God was domes man in Israel. Caleph that witnessed in the church, he tooke therefore the heritage, he saith. Dauid in his mercie he gate the siege of the kingdome in worlds: Holy for that he loued the zeale of Gods law, was taken vp into heuen. Ananie, Azarie, and Misael, hee saies, weren deliuered thoore through true beliefe out of the hoat flame of fire. True Daniel in his simplenes was deliuered from the lions mouth. Bethinke ye therefore, he saies, by generation and generation, and thou shalt neuer find that he failed that man that truly trusted in him. And therefore dread you nought, he saies, of the words of a sinfull man: his glorie is, he saies, but wormes and tords: he is to day, he saith, ymade hie, to morrow he saies he is not founden, for he is turned, he saies, into his earth againe, and the mind of him is perisher. Sonnes therefore, he saies, be ye comforters, and die manly in the law: for when ye han done that that God commands you to do, ye shullen be glorious in him. And Dauid the king saies also on this wise in the Psalter booke: blessed be they (Lord) that keepen thy law, in worlds of worlds they shall praise thee. And in Leuiticus saies God thus, gif that ye wenden in mine hests and keepen my commandements, and done hem, I shall bring forth their fruit, and trees shall be fulfilled with apples. And ye shullen eat your bread in fulnesse, yee shoulen dwell in your land without drede, I shall giue peace in your coastes, ye shall sleepe and no man shall disseyse. Euill beasts I shall done away from you, and sword shall not passe your termes, ye shulne pursue your enemies, and they shal fall before you, fifte of yours shulne pursue an hundreth of heren, an hundret of yours, a thousand of theirs: your enemies, he saith, shullen fall through sword, and your sute. I shall, he saies, behold you and make you to wax, and ye shall be multiplied: And I shal strengthen with you my couenant, ye shall eat the aldest, and the new shull come in thereon. And ye shulne cast forth the old: I shall dwell in the midst of you. And I shall wend amonges you, and shall be your God, and ye shulne be my people. If that ye heare me not, ne done nought all my hests but dispisen my law and my domes, and that yee done not tho things that of me bene ordenet, and breaken my commandements and my couenant: I shall do these things to you. I shall visit you surely in nede and brenning, which shall dimme your eghenen, and shall waste your liues about nought. Ye shulne sow your sede, for his shall be deuourer of enemies, I shal put my face against you, and ye shall fall before your enemies. And ye shullen be vnderlings to them that han hatet you, ye shal flee, no man pursuing. And if ye will not be buxome to me, I shall adde thereunto thornes and feuenfold blame. And I shall all to brast the hardnes of you, I shall geue the heauen aboue you as iron, and the earth as brasse. About nought shall your labour be, for the earth shall bring you forth no fruit, ne tree shall geue none apples to you. If that ye wenden against me, and will not heare me, I shall adde hereto, feuenfold wounds for your sins. I shall send amonges you beasts of the field that shall deuour you and your beasts, I shall bring you into a field, and waies shulne be desart. And if that ye will not receiue lore, but wenden against me, I will also wenden against you, and I shall smite you feuen sithes for your sinnes. I shall lead in vpon you, sword, venger of my couenant: and vpon the fleen into cities, I shall send pestilence in the middest of you. So that ten women shall bake their bread in one furnace, and yeld them againe by waight, and ye shall eat, and be not fillet. If that ye heare me not by these things, but wenden against me, I shall wend in against you in a contrarie woodnesse, and blame you with seuen plagues for your sins, so that they shoulen eat the flesh of your sonnes and of your daughters. And insomuch my soule shall loth you, that I shall bring your cities into wildernesse, and your sanctuaries I shall make desart, ne I shall not ouer that receiue sweet oder of your mouth. And I shall disperkle your land, and enemies shullen maruell thereon, when they shulen inhabit it, I shall disperkel you among Heathen, and draw my sword after you. These vengeances and many mo, God said should fall on them that breake his bidding, and dispiseth his lawes, and his domes. Than sith Christ become man, and bought vs with his heart blood, and has bowed vs so great loue, and giuen vs an easie law, of the best that euer might be made, and to bring vs to the ioy of heauen, and we dispise it and louen it nought: what vengeance will be taken hereon, so long as he has suffered vs, and so mercifully abidden, when he shall come that righteous iudge in the clouds to deme this world? Therefore turne we vs to him, and leaue sinne that he hates, and ouer all things maintaine his law that he confirmed with his death. For other lawes that men had made, should be demed at that day by the iust law of Christ, and the maker that them made, and then we wonne this long life and that ioy that Paul speaketh of, that eye ne see nor, ne eare heard not, ne into mans heart ascended not, the blisse and ioy that God hath ordained to them that louen him and his lawes.

The faithfull counsell of Christian Swinderby.

Deare worshipfull firs in this world I beseech you for Christs loue, as ye that I trew louen Gods law and trouth (that in these daies is greatly borne abacke) that they wollon vouchsafe these things that I send you written to Gods worship, to let them be shewed in the Parliament as your wits can best conceiue, to most worship to our God, and to shewing of the trouth and amending of holy church. My conclusions and mine appeale and other true matters of Gods law (gif any man can find therin error, falsenes, or default, prouer by the law of Christ clearely to christen mens knowledge) I shall reuoke my wrong conceit, and by Gods law be amended: euer readie to hold with Gods law openly and priuily with Gods grace, and nothing to hold, teach, or maintaine that is contrarie to his law.

¶ Of this procelle, answeres, and condemnation of this worthie Priest and true seruant of Christ, William Swinderby, you haue heard. What afterward became vpon him, I haue not certaulie to say or affirme, whether he in prison died, or whether he escaped their hands, or whether he was burned, there is no certaine relation made. This remaineth out of doubt, that during the time of king Richard the second no great harme was done vnto him. Which was to the yere 1401. at what time king Richard being wrongfullie deposed, Henrie the fourth inuaded the kingdome of England. About the beginning of whose raigne we reade of a certaine Parliament holden at London, mentioned also of Thomas Walden (as is aboue specified) in which Parliament it was decreed: that whosoeuer shewed themselues to be fauourers of Wicklifes they should be apprehended, who at that time were called Lollards, and if so be they did obstinately persenere in that doctrine, they should be deliuered ouer vnto the bishop of the diocelle, and from him should be committed to the correction of the secular Magistrate. This law (saith the storie) brought a certaine Priest vnto punishment the same yere, who was burned in Smithfield in the presence of a great number. This we haue drawen out of a peece of an old storie: and it is most certaine that there such a priest was burned for the affirmation of the true faith, but it doth not appeare by the storie, what the priests name was. Notwithstanding by diuers coniectures it appeareth vnto me that his name was Swinderby that was forced to recant before by the bishop of Lincolne. Whereby that is to be coniectured by the premisses, let other men iudge what they thinke. I haue nothing hereof expressly to affirme. This is plaine for all men to iudge (which haue heere sene and read his storie) that if he were burned, then the bishops, friers and priests, which were the causes thereof, haue a great thing to answere to the Lord, when he shall come to iudge the quicke and the dead, & seculum per ignem.

The storie and processe against Walter Brute.

The storie of Walter Brute a Sutton.

AFter the storie of William Swinderby, I thought god and conuenient, next to adioyne the acts and doings of Walter Brute his fellow and companion, being a lay man, and learned: brought vp as it seemeth in the Vniuersitie of Oxford, being there also graduat. The tractation of whose discourse as it is something long, so therein may appeare diuers things worthy to be read and considered.

First, the mightie operation of Gods Spirit in him, his ripe knowledge, modest simplicitie, his valiant constancie, his learned tractations and manifold conflicts sustained against Gods enemies. On the contrarie part in his aduersaries may appeare, might against right, mans authoritie against plaine veritie: against which they hauing nothing directly to answere, proceed in condemnation against whom they are able to bring forth no confutation. The chiefest occasion that seemed to stir vp the heart and zeale of this Walter against the pope: was the impudent pardons and indulgences of pope Vrbane, granted to Henrie Spenser bishop of Norwich: to fight against pope Clement, mentioned before pag. 410. Secondlie, the wrongfull condemnation of the articles and conclusions of William Swinderby, the whole order whereof, in the processe heere following more plainlie may appeare.

Nota zelles Ecclesiæ Hereford.

The processe had by Iohn bishop of Hereford, against Walter Brute lay man, and learned, of the diocesse of Hereford, touching the cause of hereste, as they called it, set forward by the way of the bishops office, &c. at the instruction of certaine faithfull christians, as he termed them, but indeed cruell and false promoters.

Wrestling hearts in hiding vnder fayning words.

IN the name of God, Amen. To all maner of faithfull christian people, that shall see and heare this our present processe, Iohn by the sufferance of God bishop of Hereford send greeting and continuall charitie, in the Lord. We would that you all should know, that of late by many faithfull christian people, and specially zealous followers of the catholike faith, it was lamentable done vs to vnderstand by way of complaint: that a certaine son of ours going out of kind, named Walter Brute lay person, learned, of our diocelle, hath vnder a cloked shew of holines, damnablie seduced the people; and setting behind him the feare of God, doth seduce them as much as he can, from day to day, informing and teaching openly and priuily, as well the nobles as the commons, in certaine conclusions, heereticall, schismaticall, and erroneous, and also heretofore condemned. And they haue also probablie exhibited against the same Walter, articles vnderwritten, in maner and forme as followeth.

Articles exhibited and denounced to the bishop, against Walter Brute.

Articles heretofore exhibited against William Swinderby by priests and clarkes.

RVerend father and lord, we the faithfull people of Christ, and zealous louers of the catholike faith, and also your humble and deuout children: do minister and exhibit to your reuerend fatherhod, the articles vnder written, touching a catholike faith, contrarie and against malicious persons, and detractours of the same faith, and the determinations of holy mother church, and namely against the child of Belial, one Walter Brute, a false teacher and seducer amongst the people. Humble beseeching, that you would vouchsafe to haue regard to the correction of the enormities vnder written, according vnto the canonicall constitutions, euen as to your office pastorall doth lie and belong.

The first article.

In primis, we do giue and exhibit and intend to proue, that the saide Walter Brute being vnmindfull of his saluation, hath ben by many and diuers faithfull christian people sundrie times accused of the cursednesse of heresie: As by the swift report, slander, and rumour of the people, proceding before the most reuerend father and lord, lord William archbishop of Canturburie, and also before the reuerend father and lord, lord Iohn late bishop of Hereford, your predecessor, and now bishop of S. Asse, hath ben testified, and also hath ben many and diuers times cited to answere vnto articles by him against the catholike faith auouched, and openly and publikely taught: But he in this matter of heresie hath openly, publikely, and notoriously refused (by grieuous and shamefull speech of) hath neuer regarded to purge his innocencie, but lurkingly and running into corners, hath many and sundrie yeres laboured to aduance things erroneous, schismaticall, and also heresies, and to imprint them in the harts of faithfull people.

The second article.

Item, the foresaid Walter Brute hath openly, publikely, and notoriously auouched, and commonly said and taught, and stubbornely affirmed: that euerie christian man (yea and woman) being without sin, may make the bodie of Christ so well as the priest.

The third article.

Item, the same Walter hath notoriously, openly and publikely auouched and taught, that in the Sacrament of the altar there is not the verie bodie, but a signe and a memoriall only.

The fourth article.

Item, the foresaid Walter hath said commonly and auouched, and also hath laboured to insome men and companies, that no man is bound to giue tithes, nor oblations: and if anie man will needs giue, he may giue his tithes, and oblations to whom he will, excluding thereby their curats.

The fifth article.

Item, that such as do preach and prefer croised matters, and pardons (granted by the high bishop to them that helpe the purpose of the reuerend father lord Henrie by the grace of God bishop of Norwich, when as he take his iourney vpon him to fight for the holy father the pope) are schismatikes and heretikes, and that the pope cannot grant such maner of pardons.

The sixth article.

Item, the said Walter hath oftentimes said, and commonlie auouched, that the pope is Antichrist, and a seducer of the people, and vtterly against the law and life of Christ.

The seuenth article.

Item, whereas of late your reuerence did (at the instance of faithfull christian people) proceed in forme of law against William Swinderby, and that the said William Swinderby had vnto the said articles obiected against him, giuen by his answeres in writing, containing in them errors, illusines and heresies, euen as you with the mature counsell of masters and doctors in Diuinitie, and other faculties haue determined and giuen sentence, and haue pronounced the same William Swinderby to be an heretike, and a schismatike, and an erroneous teacher of the people: Neuertheles the forenamed Walter hath openly, publikely, and notoriously said, auouched, and stubbornely affirmed, that the said Williams answeres (whereof notice hath ben giuen before) are good, righteous, and not able to be conuinced, in that they containe none error, and that your sentence before said, giuen against the same William, is euill, false and vniust: And that your assistants haue wickedly, naughtily, peruerstly, and vniustly condemned the answeres aforesaid.

Otherwise bloonte pronounced.

Now thereupon immediatly those same faithfull christian people haue instantly required that we would vouchsafe that other articles giuen by the same faithfull christians against the said William Swinderby, together with the writings and answeres of the same William thereunto: should be admitted against Walter Brute, mentioned of in this matter of cursed heresie: of which articles and answeres, the tenors do follow in these words.

These conclusions and articles of William Swinderby heere repeated, and obiected to Walter Brute are to be found before, pag. 429. and 430.

In primis, that one William Swinderby pretending himselfe priest, was of certaine articles and conclusions erroneous, false, schismaticall and heretical, by him preached, at diuers places and times, before a great multitude of faithfull christians, iudicially conuinced: and the same articles and conclusions did he (inforced by necessitie of law) reuoke and abiure, some as heretical, and other as erroneous and false: and for such did he auouch them euer afterward, promising to take and beleeue them, and that from thenceforth he would openly or priuily preach, teach, or affirme none of them: nor that he should make sermon or preach within your diocesse without licence demanded and obtained. And in case he should to the contrarie presume, by preaching or auouching, that then he should be subiect to the seueritie of the canons, euen as he iudicially sware accordingly as the law inforced. Also the conclusions abiured by the said William do follow, and are such.

1. Conclusion.

1 In primis, that men by the rule of charitie, may demand debts, but by no meanes imprison any man for debts: and that the partie is imprisoning a bodie, is excommunicated, before pag. 428.

2 Item, that if the parishioners shall know their curat to be incontinent and naughtie; they ought to withdraw from him their tithes, &c. pag. 428.

3 Item, that tithes are meere almes, and in case that the curats shall be ill, that they may be lawfully bestowed vpon others by the temporall owners, &c. pag. 428.

4 Item, that an euill curat to excommunicat any vnder his iurisdiction for withholding of tithes, is nought else, &c. pag. 428.

5 Item, that no man may excommunicat any bodie, except that first he know him excommunicat of God: neither do those that communicat with such a one, incur the sentence of excommunication by any maner of meanes: ibid.

6 Item, that euery priest may absolue curry sinner being contrite, and is bound to preach the Gospell vnto the people, notwithstanding the prohibition of the bishops: pag. 428.

7. Item,

7 Item, that a priest receiuing by bargaine any thing of priuely annuitie, is in so doing a schismaticue, and excommunicate: pag. 428.

8 Item, he doth affuredly beleeue (as he auoucheth) that euery priest being in deadly sin, if hee dispose himselfe to make the bodie of Christ, doth rather commit idolatrie, then make Christs bodie, ibid.

9 Item, that no priest doth enter into any house, but to handle ill the Wife, the daughter, or the maid, and therefore, &c. pag. 428.

10 Item, that the child is not rightly baptised, if the priest, &c. ibid.

11 Item, that no manner of person ishe liue against Gods law, &c. ibid.

12 Item, the same William against the things premised, and his reuocation and abiuration (not to his heart conuerting, but from euill to worse peruerting) did turne aside into our diocesse: where running to and fro in diuers places, hath of his owne rash head presumed to preach, or rather to peruert, &c. pag. 429.

13 Item, after that we had heard diuers rumors, and slanders of very many, we directed diuers monitions and commonitions comminatorie, to be sent abroad by our commissaries to sundrie places of our diocesse: that no person of what estate, degree, or condition soeuer he were of, should presume to preach, or to teach the sacred Scripture to the people in places holy or prophane, within our diocess, &c. pag. 429.

14 Item, that the same sort of monitions, inhibitions and precepts confirmed by our seale, came to the true and vndoubted knowledge of the said William.

Infandum facinus fecisse.

15 Item, the same William vnmindful of his owne saluation hath stiffnece and against those monitions, inhibitions, and precepts, and (that which is more abominable to bee spoken) in contempt of the high bishops dignitie, and to the slander and offence of many people, presumed in diuers places of our said diocesse, to preach or rather to peruert and to teach the forementioned, and other heretical, erroneous and schismaticall deuices.

16 Item, the same William in preaching to the people, on monday, to wit, the first of August, in the yeere of our Lord 1390. in the Church of Whitney in our diocesse, held and affirmed; that no prelate of the world, of what state, preheminence or degree soeuer hee were of, hauing cure of soules and being in deadly sinne, &c. pag. 429.

A persons booke to open.

17 Item, the same William in many places said and affirmed in the presence of many faithfull Christian people, after the sacramentall words vttered by the priest, hauing the intent to consecrate, there is not made the very bodie of Christ in the sacrament of the Eucharist pag. 430.

18 Item, that accidents cannot bee in the sacrament of the altar without their subiect: and that there remaineth materiall bread Concomitanter with the bodie of Christ in the Sacrament. Vide supra, pag. ibid.

19 Item, that a priest being in deadly sinne cannot by the power of the sacramentall words, make the bodie of Christ: pag. 430.

20 Item, that all priests are of like power in all points, notwithstanding that some of them are in this world of higher dignitie, degree, or preheminence: pag. 430.

21 Item, that contrition only putteth away sinne, if a man shall be duly contrite: and that all vocall confession and exercise, is superfluous, and not requisite of necessitie to saluation: ibidem.

22 That inferiour curates haue not their power of binding and losing immediatly from the pope or bishop, but immediately of Christ, &c. pag. 430.

23 Item, that the pope cannot grant such a kind of annuall pardons, because there shall not bee so many yeres to the day of iudgement as is contained in the popes bulles or pardons. Whereby it followeth, that pardons are not so much worth as they are noised and praised to be: ibid.

24 Item, that it is not in the popes power to grant to any penitent body forgiuenesse of the paine, or of the trespasse: pag. 430.

25 Item, that one giuing his almes to any bodie which as he iudgeth hath no need thereof, doth sin in so giuing it: pag. ibi.

Matters and conclusions inuented against Walter Brute.

26 Item, that it standes not in the power of any prelate, of what priuate religion soeuer he bee, to giue byletters dimissis of their order. Neither doe such kind of benefits giuen profit them to whom they be giuen for the saluation of soules. Vide supra, pag. ibid.

This conclusion seemeth to be falsly collected, as wares before the articles of Chri. Swinderby.

A foule faule fayleth.

27 Item, that the same William vnmindfull of his owne saluation, hath many times and often resorted to a certain desert wood called Werlualswod of our diocesse, and there in a certaine vnhallowed chapell (nay a prophane cottage) hath presumed of his owne proper rashnesse, to celebrate, &c. pag. 430.

This conclusion also is not rightly gathered.

28 Item, the same William hath also presumed to doe the like things in a certaine prophane chapell, situate in the park of Newton, nigh to the towne of Leyntwardyn, in the same our diocesse pag. ibid.

Witnesses against Walter Brute.

¶ Which things being done, the same faithfull christian people, and specially sir Walter Pryde the penitentiarie of our cathedrall Church of Hereford, personallie appearing before vs, sitting in our iudgement seat in the parish church of Whitborne of our diocess: brought forth and exhibited two publike instruments against the same Walter Brute, in the case of cursed heresie aforesaid, of which instruments heere followeth the tenors and articles in this sort.

Walter Pryde promoter or father, a great promoter.

The first instrument exhibited by certaine citizens of Hereford against Walter Brute.

IN the name of God, Amen. Be it euidently knowne to all persons by this present publike instrument: that in the yeere from the incarnation, after the course and computation of the Church of England 1391. the indiction xv. of the pontificall office of our most holy father and lord in Christ, lord Boniface the ninth, by Gods sufferance pope, the second yeere, the 19. day of the moneth of October, in the dwelling house of the worshipfull man, master Iohn Codemanton, canon of the Cathedrall Church of Hereford, in the presence of mee the publike Notarie vnder written, and of witnesses subscribed: Walter Brute lay man, learned, of Hereford dioces, personallie appearing said, auouched, and stiffely maintained: that the said bishop of Hereford and his assistances, which were with him the third day of the foresaid moneth of October, the yeere of our Lord aforesaid, in the church of Hereford; did naughtilie, wickedly, peruerstlie, and vniustlie condemne the answeres of sir William Swinderby chaplaine, giuen by the same sir William to the same lord bishop in writing, and also the articles ministred by the same sir William.

Bishop of Hereford vniustly condemned the articles of sir Chri. Swinderby.

And furthermore he said, held, and auouched, that the same conclusions giuen by the same sir William, euen as they were giuen, are true and catholike.

Matters obiected against Walter Brute.

Item, as touching the matters obiected against him by them that stood by, concerning the sacrament of the altar: hee said, that after the sacramentall words, there doth remaine very bread, and the substance thereof after the consecration of the bodie of Christ, and that there doe not remaine accidents without substance: subiect after the consecration of the bodie of Christ. And as touching this matter, the doctors hold diuers opinions.

The pope antichrist.

Furthermore, as concerning the pope, he said, held, and auouched: that hee is the very antichrist, because that in life and maners he is contrarie to the lawes, doctrines and deeds, of Christ our Lord.

All and euery of these things were done, euen as they be aboue written and rehearsed in the yeere of our Lord, pontificall office, month, day and place aforesaid, at supper time of the day aforenamed, then and there being present the worshipfull and discrete men, sir Walter Ramsburie, chiefe chaunter of the said cathedrall Church of Hereford, Roger Vaye Chanon of the same Church, Walter Wall, chaplaine of the said Church of Hereford, being a vicar of the choyall, and certaine other worthie witnesses of credit, that were specially called and desired to the premisses: Ex Regist. Hereford.

Witnesses against Walter Brute.

And I Richard Lee wheeler, clerke of Worcester, being a publike notarie, by the authoritie Apostolike; was personally present at all and singuler the premisses, whilest that (as is before rehearsed) they were done and a doing in the yeere of our Lord 1391. pontificall office, month, day, place, and the houre aforesaid: and I did see, write, and heare all and singuler those things thus to bee done, and haue reduced them into this publike manner and forme: and being desired truely to testifie the premisses, haue sealed the said instrument, made hereupon, with mine accustomed seale and name.

Richard Lee Register and writer hereof.

The forme of the second instrument.

In the name of God, Amen. Be it plainely knowne to all persons, by this present publike instrument: that in the yeere from the incarnation of the Lord, after the course and computation of the Church of England, 1391. the indiction fiftene, in the third yeere of the pontificall office of the most holy Father in Christ, and our lord, lord Boniface pope by the prouidence of God the ninth, and in the 19. day of the moneth of Ianuarie: Walter Brute layman, of Hereford diocesse, personally appearing before the reuerend father in Christ and Lord, lord Iohn by Gods grace bishop of Hereford, in the presence of me being a publike notarie, and one of the witnesses vnder written: did say, hold, publish, and affirme, the conclusions here after written, that is to say: that christian people are not bound to pay tithes neither by the law of Moses, nor by the law of Christ.

Matters and conclusions inuented against Walter Brute.

This conclusion seemeth to be falsly collected, as wares before the articles of Chri. Swinderby.

Item, that it is not lawfull for christians for any cause in any case, to sweare by the Creator neither by the creature.

This conclusion also is not rightly gathered.

Item, he confesseth openly and of his owne accord: that within the same moneth of Ianuarie, he did eate, drinke, and communicate with William Swinderby, not being ignorant of the sentence of the said reuerend father: whereby the same William Swinderby was pronounced an heretike, schismatike, and a false seducer of the common people. Which conclusions, the same reuerend father caused to bee written, and in writing to bee deliuered to the same Walter. Which when he had seene and read, he said also that he did maintaine and iustifie them according to the lawes aforesaid. These things were done in the chamber of the said bishop of Hereford, at his manour of Whitebourne of the said diocesse of Hereford: then being there present the same bishop aboue said. master

Witnesses against Walter Brute.

Reynold

Reynold of Wolfden, Canon of Hereford, sir Philip Dicester parson of the parish church of Blamurin, Thomas Culdefild parson of the Church of Englishplinose, John Crosset parson of the Church of Whiteborne, and Thomas Wallewaine houshold seruant, for witnesses specially called and desired to the premisses of the diocesse of Hereford and saint Asse.

Benedict Come register, witnes and writer of this instrument of the graue Walter Brute.

And I Benedict Come clerk of the diocesse of S. Asse, publike notarie by the apostolike authoritie of the diocesse of saint Asse, was personally present together with the witnesse before named, at all and singuler these and other things here premissed, whilest they were so done and a doing, and did see, heare, and write those things so to be done, as is before mentioned: and did write the same and reduce them into this publike forme, and with my wonted and accustomed seale and name haue sealed it, being desired and required truely to testifie the premisses.

At the last, the aforesaid Walter Brute, did present and cause to be presented to vs, at diuers places and times assigned by vs to the same Walter, to answere to the former conclusions and articles) diuers scroules of paper, written with his owne proper hand, for his answeres to the same articles and conclusions aboue written: he partly appearing by his owne selfe, before vs sitting in our iudgement seate, and partly by his messengers, specially appointed to that purpose: of which scroules, the tenors doe follow in order word by word, and be on this manner.

Certaine confessions of Walter Brute in writing presented to the Bishop for his defence. Walter Brute a Britton borne.

In the name of the father, and of the son, and the holy ghost, Amen. I Walter Brute, sinner, layman, husbandman, and a Christian (hauing mine offspring of the Britons, both by my fathers and mothers side) of the Britons, haue been accused to the bishop of Hereford, that I did erre in many matters concerning the catholike Christian faith: by whom I am required, that I should write an answere in Latine to al those matters. Which desire I will satisfie to my power, protesting first of all, before God and before all the world: that like as it is not my mind through Gods grace, to refuse the knowne truth, for any reward greater or smaller, yea bee it neuer so big, nor yet for the feare of any temporall punishment: euen so it is not my mind to maintaine any erroneous doctrine for any commodities sake. And if any man, of what state, sect or condition soeuer he be, will shew me that I erre in my writings or sayings, by the authoritie of the sacred scripture, or by probable reason grounded on the sacred scripture, I will humblie and gladly receiue his information. But as for the bare words of any teacher (Christ only excepted) I will not simplie beleeue, except he shall be able to stablish them by the truth of experience, or of the Scripture: for because, that in the holy Apostles elected by Christ, there hath been found error by the testimonie of the holy Scripture, because that Paul himselfe doth confesse that he rebuked Peter, for that he was worthie to be rebuked, Galath. the 2. chapter. There haue been errours found in the holy doctors, that haue been before vs, as they themselues confesse of themselues. And oftentimes it falleth out, that there is errour found in the teachers in our age: who are of contrarie opinions among themselues, and some of them doe sometimes determine one thing for truth, and others to condemne the selfesame thing to be heresie and errour. Which protestation premised, I will heere place two suppositions or cases for a ground and a foundation of all things that I shall say, out of which I would gather two probable conclusions stablished vpon the same, and vpon the sacred Scripture. By which conclusions, when as they shall be declared after my manner and fashion, it shall plainlie appeare what my opinion and iudgement is concerning all matters that I am accused of. But because I am ignorant and vnlearned, I will get me vnder the mightie defences of the Lord. O Lord Iesu I will remember thine only righteousnesse.

No writer or doctor without the holy scripture only excepted. Errour in the Apostles. Errour in the Doctors. Errours and contrarieties among the popish writers.

Protestation made.

Diuers modestly refuseth his learning.

The first case or supposition.

God the Father almightie diuerse ate, the maker of heauen and earth, hath sent his Sonne (that was euerlastinglie begotten) into this world: that he should be incarnated, for the saluation and redemption of mankind, who was conceiued by the holy Ghost, euerlastinglie proceeding from the Father and the Sonne, and was borne of Marie the virgin, to the end that he might be borne anew. He suffered passion vnder Pontius Pilate for our sinnes, laying downe his life for vs, that we should lay downe our life for our brethren. He was crucified, that we should be crucified to the world, and the world to vs. He was dead, that he might redeeme vs from death, by purchasing for vs forgiuenesse of sinnes. He was buried, that we being buried together with him into death by Baptisme, and that we dead to sinnes, should liue to righteousnesse. He descended into hell, thereby deliuering man from thraldome, and from the bondage of the diuell, and restoring him to his inheritance, which he lost by sinne. The third day he rose from the dead, through the glorie of his Father, that we also should walke in newnesse of life. He ascended vp to the heauens, to which no bodie hath ascended, sauing he that descended from heauen, euen the Sonne of man which is in heauen. He sitteth at the right hand of God the Father almightie, vntill his enemies be made his footstoole. Hee being in verie deed so much better then the Angels, as he hath obtained by inheritance a more excellent name then they. From thence hee shall come to iudge the quicke and the dead, according to their workes, because the Father hath geuen all iudgement to the Sonne. In whose terrible iudgement we shall rise againe, and shall all of vs stand before his iudgement seat, and receiue eyther as well bodily as spiritually, pain euer to endure, if we be of the sheepe placed at the right hand; or else punishment both of bodie and soule, if we shall be found amongst goates, placed on the left hand, &c.

The second case or assertion.

Jesus Christ the Sonne of God, very God and very man a king for euer, by stablishing an euerlasting kingdome, hyeking to powder all the kingdomes of the world, Daniel 2. 8 Priest for euer after the order of Melchisedech, whereby also he is able euermore to saue such as by him come vnto God, and alwaies liueth to intreat for vs, Heb. 7. He offering one sacrifice for our sinnes, hath made perfect for euer by one oblation, those that be sanctified, Heb. 10. Being the wisedome that cannot be deceiued, and the truth that cannot be vttered: he hath in this world taught the will of the Godhead of his Father, which will hee hath in worke fulfilled, to the intent that hee might faithfully instruct vs, and hath giuen the law of charitie to be of his faithfull people obserued, which he hath written in the hearts and minds of the faithfull with the finger of God, where is the Spirit of God, searching the inward secrets of the Godhead. Wherefore his doctrine must be obserued aboue all other doctrines, whether they be of Angels or of men, because that he could not nor would not erre in his teaching. But in mens doctrine there chance oftentimes to be error, and therefore we must follow their doctrines, if (likelihood or perpetly they be repugnant to the doctrine of Christ. Mens doctrines being made for the peoples profit must be allowed and obserued, so that they be grounded vpon Christs doctrine, or at least be not repugnant to his words.

Ieremie. 51.

If the high bishop of Rome calling himselfe the seruant of the seruants of God, and the chiefe vicar of Christ in this world, do make and maintaine many lawes contrarie to the Gospell of Iesu Christ: then is he of those that haue come in Christs name, saying I am Christ, and haue seduced manie a one, by the testimonie of our Sauiour in Math. chap. 24. and the idoll of desolation sitting in the Temple of God, and taking away from him the continuall sacrifice for a time, times, and halfe a time. Which Idoll must be reuealed to the chiefe an people by the testimonie of Daniel. Whereof Christ speaketh in the Gospell: When you shall see the abomination of desolation that was told of by Daniel the Prophet, standing in the holy place: let him that readeth, vnderstand, and he is the perfidious mountaine infecting the whole vniuersall earth, as witnesseth Ieremie, chapter 51. and not the head of Christs bodie. For the ancient person in yeeres, and honorable in reuerence, he is the head, and the Prophet teaching lies is the taile, as Esay alleageth chapter 9. And he is that wicked and vnfull captaine of Israel, whose foreappointed day of iniquitie is come in time of iniquitie, who shall take away Charim, and take away the crowne. Ezechiel chapter 21. to whom it was said: For so much as thy heart was exalted, and thou dost say, I am a god, and sittest in the seat of God, in the heart of the sea, seeing thou art a man and not God, and hast giuen thine heart, as if it were the heart of God: therefore behold I will bring vpon thee the most strong and mightie strangers of the nations, and they shall draw their swords vpon the beautie of thy wisedome, and shall defile the commandements and kill thee, and pull thee out, and thou shalt die in the destruction of the slaine, and it followeth:

The first beast like the lambe.

The pope an idol of desolation sitting in the temple of God. The pope is this idol, for he is the perfidious mountaine infecting the whole earth. Ieremie 51.

The pope, the sinfull captaine of Israel, spoken of Ezechiel 21.

In the multitude of thine iniquities, and of the iniquities of thy merchandize, thou hast defiled thy sanctification. I will therefore bring forth a fire from the middest of the whole earth, and will make thee as ashes vpon earth. Thou art become nothing, and neuer shalt thou be any more, Ezech. chap. 28. Furthermore he is the idle shepheard forsaking his flocke, hauing a sword on his arme, and another sword on his right eye, Zach. 11. and sitting in the temple of God, doth aduance himselfe as a bone all thing that is called God, or that is worshipped, by the testimonie of Paul to the Thessal. 2. epist. 2. chap. And in the defection or falling away that the man of sinne be reuealed, whom the Lord Iesus shall slay with the breath of his mouth. For euery kingdome diuided in it selfe shall be brought to desolation. He is also besides, the beast ascending vp out of the earth, hauing two hornes like vnto a lambe, but he speaketh like a dragon, and as the cruell beast ascending vp out of the sea, whose power shall continue 42. moneths. He worketh the things that he hath giuen to the image of the beast. And he compelled small and great, rich and poore, freemen and bondslaues, to worship the beast, and to take his marke in their forehead or their hands, Apocal. 13. chap. And thus by the testimonie of all these places is he the chiefe Antichrist vpon the earth, and must be slaine with the sword of Gods word, and cast with the dragon, the cruell beast and the false prophet that hath seduced the earth, into the lake of fire and brimstone to be tormented for euer and euer without end.

Antichrist described.

If the citie of Rome do allow his traditions, and do disallow Christ holy commandements, and Christs doctrine, that it may confirme his traditions: then is the Babylon the great of the daughter of Babylon, and the great whore sitting vpon manie waters, with whom the kings of the earth haue committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth are become drunken with the wine of her harlotrie lying open to bawdrie. With whose spirituall whoredome, enchantments, witchcrafts, & Simon Magus marchandises, the whole round world is infected and seduced: saying in her heart, I sitte as a Queene, and widow I am not, neither shall I see sorrow and mourning. Yet is she ignorant that within a little while shall come the day of her destruction and ruine by the testimonie of the Apoc. chap. 17. Because that from the time that the continuall sacrifice was taken away, and the abhomination of desolation placed, there be pulled 1290. dayes by the testimonie of Daniel, and the Chronicles added doe agree to the same. And the holy citie also hath bin troden vnder foot of Heathen, for 42. moneths, and the woman was nourished vp in the wildernesse (vnto which she fled for feare of the face of the serpent) during 1260 dayes, or else for a time, times, and halfe a time, which is all one. All these things be manifest by the testimonie of the Apocalyps, and the Chronicles thereto agreeing. And as concerning the fall of Babylon aforesaide, it is manifest in the Apocalyps, where it is said: In one day shall her plagues come, death, lamentation, and famine, and she shall bee burned with fire. For strong is the Lord which will iudge her. And againe, Babylon that great citie is fallen, which hath made all nations to drinke of the wine of her whoredome. And thirdly, one mightie angell tooke vp a mill stone that was a very great one, and did cast it into the sea, saying: With such a violence as this is, shall that great citie Babylon be ouerthrown, and shall no more be found. For her marchants were the princes of the earth, and with her witchcraft all nations haue gone astray, and in her is there found, the blood of the saints & prophets. And of her destruction speaketh Esay in the 13. chapter: And Babylon that glorious citie, being so noble amongst kingdomes in the pride of the Caldeans, it shall be that like as the Lord did ouerturne Sodome and Gomorre vpside downe, it shall neuer more be inhabited, nor haue the foundation laid in no age, from generation to generation. Ieremie saith: Your mother that hath borne you, is brought to very great confusion and made euen with the ground. And againe: The Lord hath deuised and done as he hath spoken against the inhabiters of Babylon, which dwell richly in their treasures vpon many waters, thine end is come. And thirdly: Drouth shall fall vpon her waters, and they shall begin to bee drie, for it is a lande of grauen images, and boasteth in her prodigious wonders: It shall neuer more be inhabited, neither be builded vp in no age nor generation. Verily, euen as God hath subuerted Sodome and Gomorre with her cities.

Pardon me (I beseech you) though I bee not plentifull in pleasant words: For if I should runne after the course of this wicked world, and should please men, I should not bee Christes seruant. And because I am a poore man, and neither haue nor can haue notaries hired to testifie of these my writings: I call vpon Christ to be my witnes, which knoweth the inward secrets of my heart, that I am ready to declare the things that I haue written after my fashion, to the profit of all Christen people, and to the hurt of no man liuing, and am readie to be reformed if any man will shew me where I haue erred: being readie also (miserable sinner though I be) to suffer for the confession of the name of Christ & of his doctrine, as much as shall please him by his grace and loue to assist me a miserable sinner. In witnesse of all these things, I haue to this writing set the seale of our Lord and Sauiour Iesus Christ: which I beseech him to imprint vpon my forehead, and to take from me all manner of marke of Antichrist: Amen.

Esay 29.

Libanus and Chiamell, two hils, the one in Phœnicia, the first a pleasant, the other in the borders of Iewry, barren & vnpleasant, which is Chiamell.

¶ These two suppositions (as they are termed in the schooles) written by Walter Brute, and exhibited vnto the Bishop, although they contained matter sufficient either to satisfie the bishop if he had bene disposed to learne, or else to haue prouoked him to replie againe, if his knowledge therein had beene better then his: yet could they worke neither of them effect in him. But he receiuing and perusing the same, then he neither could confute that which was said, neither would replie or answere by learning to that which was truth, finding other by cauillations, said that this his writing was to short, difficult, and therefore required him, to write vpon the same again more plainelie and more at large. Whereupon the saide maister Walter (satisfying the bishops request, and readie to giue to euerie one an account of his faith) in a more ample tractation reuieweth his matter againe before declared, writing to the bishop in words and some as followeth:

Another declaration of the same matter before written in more ample tractation exhibited by M. Brute vnto the B.

RVerend father, forsomuch as it seemeth to you that my motion in my two suppositions or cases, and in my two conclusions, is too short and somewhat darke: I will gladlie now satisfie your desire, according to my small learning, by declaring the same conclusions. In opening whereof, it shall plainelie appeare, what I doe iudge in all matters, that I am accused of to your reuerence, desiring you first of all that your discretion would not beleeue that I doe enterprise of any presumption to handle the secrets of the scriptures, which the holie, and iust, and wise doctors haue left vnexpounded. It is not vnknowen to manie, that I am in all points farre inferiors to them, whose holinesse of life and profoundnesse in knowledge, is manifolde wayes allowed. But as for mine ignorance, and multitude of sinnes, are to my selfe and others sufficiently knowen: wherefore, I iudge not my selfe worthie to vnlose or to carie their shoes after them. Doe you therefore no otherwise deeme of me, then I doe of mine owne selfe. But if you shall finde any goodnesse in my writings, ascribe it to God only: who according to the multitude of his mercy doth sometimes reueale those things to Idiots and sinners, which are hidden from the holie and wise, according to this saying: I will praise and confesse thee O father, for that thou hast hidden these things from the wise and prudent, and hast disclosed them to the little ones. Euen so father, because it hath thus pleased thee. And in another place: I am come to iudgement into this world, that they which see not, may see, and that they which see, may be made blind. And Paul saith: that God hath chosen the weake things of the worlde, to confounde the mightie, that no man shall boast in himselfe, but that all men should giue the honour to God.

It was commanded to Esaie, bearing the type of Christ: Go and say to this people: Heare yee with your hearing, and doe not vnderstand? Behold ye the vision, and yet knowe yee not the thing that yee see? Make blinde the heart of this people, and make dull their eares, & shut their eyes, lest that perchance with their eyes they should see, and with their eares they should heare, and with their hearts they should vnderstand, and be conuerted, and I should heale them. And I said, how long Lord? And he said, vntill that the cities be made desolate, without inhabitants, and the house without any person within it. Also in Esay thus it is written: And the multitude of all nations, which shall fight against Ariel, and all persons that haue warred, and besieged and preuailed against it, shall be as a dreame that appeareth in the night, and as the hungrie person dreameth that he eateth, but when he shall awake our of sleepe, his soule is emptie. And like as the hungry person dreameth that he eateth, and yet after that he shall awake, hee is still wearie and thirstie, and his soule voide of nourishment: euen so shall it be with the multitude of all nations that haue fought against the mount Sion. Be you amazed, and haue great wonder: reele ye to and fro, and stagger yee: be yee drunken, and not with wine: stagger, but not through drunkennesse for the Lord hath mingled for you the spirit of drousines. He shall shut your eyes, he shall couer your Prophets and Princes that see visions. And a vision shall bee to you altogether like the wordes of a sealed booke, which when he shall giue to one that is learned, he shall say: Reade here, and he shall answere, I cannot, for it is sealed. And the booke shall be giuen to one, that is vnlearned and knoweth not his letters, and it shall be saide vnto him, Reade, And he shall answere, I know not the letters, I am vnlearned. Wherefore the Lord saith: For as much as this people draweth nigh me with their mouthes, and glorifieth me with their lippes, but their heart is farre from me, and they haue rather feared the commandements of men, & haue cleaued to their doctrines: Behold therefore I will adde besides, & bring such a muse and marueil vpon this people which shall make men amazed with marueiling. For wisedome shall perish from their wise men, and the vnderstanding of their prudent persons shall be hidden. And soone after it followeth in the same place, yet a little while and Libanus shall bee turned into Charmell, and Charmell counted for a cops or grouse, and in the same day shall the deafe folkes heare the word of this booke, and the eyes of the blinde (changed from darkenes and blindnesse) shall see.

Daniel 12.

Babuchodonosor enquiring of Daniel said: Thinkest thou that thou canst truely declare me the dreame that I haue seen, and the meaning thereof? And Daniel said: As for the mysterie whereof the king doth aske, neither the wise men, magicians, soothsayers, nor enchanters can declare to the king: But there is a God is heauen, that discloseth mysteries, who will declare to thee (O king Nabuchodonosor) what things shall come to passe in the last times of all. To me also is this sacrament or mysterie disclosed (not for any wisedome that is in me more then in all men liuing) but to that the interpretation might be made manifest to the king, and that thou shouldest know the cogitations of thy minde.

Daniel 12.

It was also said to Daniel: And thou Daniel, shut vp the words, seale vp the booke, vntill the time appointed. Verely many people shall passe ouer, and manifold knowledge shall there be. And Daniel sayde to the man that was clothed with linnen garments, who stood vpon the waters of the floud, How long will it be before the ende shall come of these marueilous things? And I heard the man that was clothed in linnen apparell, who stood vpon the waters of the floods, when hee had lift vp his right hand and his left hand vnto heauen, and had sworne by him that liueth for euermore, that for a time, times, and halfe a time. And when the scattering abroad of the hand of the holy people shall bee accomplished; then shall all these things be finished. And I heard and vnderstood not, & I said: O my Lord, what shall be after these things? and he said: Go thy wayes Daniel, for this talke is shut and sealed vp, vntill the time that is before appointed.

All

All these things haue I written, to the ende, that hee that hath the key of Dauid, who openeth and no man shutteth, shutteth and no man openeth: both (when and how long it pleaseth him) vnde the mysteries, and the hid secrets of the Scriptures from the wise, prudent, and righteous: and otherwhiles at his pleasure, reuealeth the same to sinners and lay persons, and simple soules, that hee may haue the honor and glorie in all things. Therefore as I haue before said, if you shall find any good thing in my writings, ascribe the same to God alone: If you shall find otherwise, thinke yee the same to be written of ignorance, and not of malice. And if any doubt of errour be shewed me in all my writings, I will humbly allow your information and fatherly correction.

But why that such maner of matters are moued touching the disclosing of antichrist in this kingdome, more then in other kingdomes, and in this time also more then in time past: the answere, as concerning the time of the motion, is, that it is the last coniunction of Saturne and Iupiter in the signe of the Twinnes, which is the house of Mercurie, being the signifier of the Christian people: which coniunction seemeth to me to betoken the second comming of Christ, to reforme his Church, and to call men againe by the disclosing of Antichrist, and to the perfection of the Gospell, from their heathenish rites and vsages of the Gentiles. By whom the holy citie was trampled vnder foote: for 42. monethes, euen as the coniunction of the said two planets being inclosed in the signe of the Virgine, which is also the house of Mercurie: did betoken the first comming of Christ, for the saluation of all people that were perished of the house of Israel, thereby to call them through the same comming, to the full perfection of the Gospell. As touching this calling of the heathen, speaketh Christ in the Gospell, I haue also other sheepe, that are not of this fold, and those must I bring, and they shall heare my voice, and there shall bee one sheepefold, and one shepheard. For although the Gentiles be conuerted from the infidelitie of their idolatrie, to the faith of Christ: yet are they not conuerted to the perfection of the law of Christ. And therefore did the Apostles in the primitiue Church, lay no burthen vpon the Gentiles, but that they should abstaine from hainous things, as from things offered to Idols, and from bloud, and strangled, and fornication. As touching this second comming, speaketh Esay: On that day the roote of Iesse which standeth for a signe, or marke to the people, to him shall the heathen make their homage and supplication, and his sepulchre shall be glorious: and in that day shall it come to passe, that the Lord shall the second time put to his hand, to possesse the remnant of his people, &c. And hee shall lift vp a token toward the nations, and he shall assemble the runnagate people of Israel that were fled, and those that were dispersed of Iuda shall he gather together from the fower quarters of the earth. And the zealous emulation of Ephraim shall be broken to peeces, and the enemies of Iuda shall come to nought. Paul to the Thessalonians saith: Wee beseech you brethren, by the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ, and of our gathering together before him, that you bee not soone removed from your vnderstanding, neither that you be put in feare, as though the day of the Lord were at hand, neither, as it were, by letter sent by vs, neither by spirit, nor yet by talke. Let not any bodie by any meanes bring you out of the way, or seduce you. For except there shall first come a departing, and that the man of sinne, the sonne of perdition shall be disclosed, which maketh resistance, and is aduanced aboue all thing that is called God, or that is worshipped: so that he doth sit in the temple of God, shewing himselfe as if he were God. Do ye not remember that whilest I was yet with you, I told you of this? and now ye know what keepeth him backe, that he may be vttered in his due time: For euen now doth he work the mysterie of iniquitie, only that he which holdeth, may hold still vntill he be come to light: and then shall that wicked one be disclosed, whom the Lord Iesus shall slay with the breath of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightnesse of his comming, euen him, whose comming is according to the working of Satan, in all power, with signes and lying wonders, and in all deceitfull leading out of the truth towards those that do perish, because that they receiue not heartily the loue of truth, that they might be saued.

Christ being demanded of the Apostles what should be the token of his comming, and of the end of the world; said vnto them: There shall come many in my name, saying, I am Christ, and they shall seduce many. Also he telleth them of many other signes, of battels, famine, pestilence, and earthquakes. But the greatest signe of all he teacheth to bee this: When you shall see (saith he) the abomination of desolation standing in the holy place, he that readeth, let him vnderstand. But Luke 21. in his gospell, speaketh more plainely hereof: When you therefore shall see Ierusalem to bee compassed about with an armie, then know yee, that the desolation thereof shall draw nigh. And afterward it followeth: And they shall fall by the face of the sword, and shall be led away captiue to all nations, and Ierusalem shall bee troden vnder foote of the heathen, vntill the times of the Nations bee fulfilled. Now in Daniel thus it is written of this matter: And after 72. weekes, shall Christ be slaine, neither shall that be his people, that will deny him. And as for the citie and sanctuarie, shall a people (with his captaine that will come with them) destroy the said citie and sanctuarie, and his end shall be to bee washed vtterlie, till it bee brought to nought, and after the end of the warre, shall come the desolation appointed. In one weeke shall hee confirme the couenant to many, and within halfe a weeke shall the offering and sacrifice cease. And in the temple shall there bee the abomination of desolation, and euen vnto the end shall the desolation continue. And else where in Daniel, thus it is written: From the time that the continuall sacrifice shall be offered, and that the abomination shall bee placed in desolation, there shall be one thousand, two hundred, and ninetie daies.

Now, if any man will behold the Chronicles, he shall find, that after the destruction of Ierusalem was accomplished, and after the strong hand of the holie people was fully dispersed, and after the placing of the abomination, that is to say, the Idoll of desolation of Ierusalem, within the holy place, where the temple of God was before, there had passed 1290. daies, taking a day for a yeere, as commonly it is taken in the Prophets. And the times of the heathen people are fulfilled, after whose rites and customes God suffered the holy citie to be trampled vnder foot for, foztie and two monethes. For although the Christian Church, which is the holy citie, continued in the faith from the Ascension of Christ, euen till this time: yet hath it not obserued and kept the perfection of the faith all this whole season. For, some after the departure of the Apostles, the faith was kept with the abstersion of the rites of the Gentiles, and not of the rites of Moses law, nor of the law of the Gospell of Iesus Christ. Wherefore seeing that this time of the erroz of the Gentiles is fulfilled: it is likely that Christ shall call the Gentiles from the rites of their gentilitie, to the perfection of the Gospell, as hee called the Iewes from the law of Moses to the same perfection, in his first comming: that there may be one sheepefold of the Iewes and Gentiles, vnder one shepheard. Seeing therefore that Antichrist is knowne which hath seduced the nations: then shall the elect after that they haue forsaken the erroz of their gentilitie come through the light of Gods woꝛd, to the practise of the Gospel, and that same sonne shall be slaine with the sword of Gods woꝛd. So that by these things it doth partly appeare vnto me, why at this time rather then at any other time, this matter of antichrist is moued.

And why that this motion is come to passe in this kingdom rather then in other kingdomes: me thinkes there is good reason, because that no nation of the Gentiles was so soone conuerted to Christ as were the Britons, the inhabitants of this kingdome. For to other places of the woꝛld, there were sent preachers of the faith, who, by the working of miracles and continuall preaching of the woꝛd of God, and by grieuous passion and death of the bodie, did conuert the people of those places: but in this kingdome, in the time of Lucius king of the Britons, and of Eleutherius bishop of the Romans, did Lucius heare of the Romans that were Infidels (by the way of rumors and tales) of the Christian faith, which was preached at Rome. Who beleeued straightwaies, and sent to Rome, to Eleutherius for men skilfull to instome him moze fully in the very faith it selfe: at whose comming hee was toyfull, and was baptised with his whole kingdome. And after the receiuing of the faith, they neuer forsoke it, neither for any manner false preaching of other, neither for any manner of tormentes, or set assaults of the Painims, as in other kingdomes it hath come to passe. And thus it seemeth to meethe Britons amongst other Nations, haue been, as it were by the speciall election of God, called and conuerted to the faith of Christ.

Of them as me seemeth, did Esay prophesie, saying: For they did see to whom there was nothing told of him, and they did behold, that had not heard of him. And againe, Behold, thou shalt call a nation which thou knewest not: and nations that haue not known thee, shall run vnto thee for the Lord thy God, and the holy one of Israel, shall glorifie thee.

Of this kingdom, did saint John in the Apocalyps prophesie (as me seemeth) where hee said, The Dragon stood before the woman, which was about to bee deliuered of child, to the intent that when she had brought it forth into the world, hee might deuoure vp her sonne: and shee brought forth her child which was a manchild, who should gouerne all nations with an iron rod. And the same sonne was taken vp to God, and to his throne. And the woman fled into the wildernesse, whereas she had a place prepared of God, that they may feed her 1260. daies. And againe in the same chapter, after that the Dragon saw that he was cast out vpon the earth, hee did persecute the woman, which brought forth the manchild. And there were giuen to the woman two wings of a great Egle, that shee might flee into the Wildernesse into her place, where as she is foztred vp for a time, times, and halfe a time, from the face of the Serpent. And the Serpent did cast as it were a flood of water after the Woman, to the intent that he might cause her to be drowned by the flood: and the earth opening her mouth, did helpe the woman, and did swallow vp the flood which the Dragon did cast out of his mouth. Let vs see how Britons by the speciall election of God called to faith.

The calling of the Gentiles to faith.

The woman fled in the desert 1260. daies.

how these sayings may be applied vnto this kingdome rather then to other kingdomes. It is well knowne that this kingdome is a wildernesse or a desert place, because that the philosophers and wise men did not passe vpon it, but did leaue it for a wildernesse and desert, because it is placed without the climates.

Vnto this place fled the woman, that is to say, the Church, (that by faith did spiritually bring forth Christ into the woꝛld) where as she was fed with the heauenly bread, the flesh and bloud of Iesus Christ, for one thousand, two hundred and sixtie daies, seeing that for so many daies, taking a day for a yeere, the Britons continued in the faith of Christ, which thing cannot be found so of any christian kingdome, but of this desert: and well is it said, that shee fled vnto this place. For from the East came the faith into Britaine, not by walking in iourney, nor yet by sailing: for then should it haue come by Rome, Italie, Almaine, France, which cannot bee found: and therefore she flew ouer those places, and rested not in them, euen as a bird flying ouer a place, resteth not in the same: but refled in this wildernesse for a time, times, and halfe a time, that is, 1260. yeeres, from the first comming of the faith into Britaine vntill this present.

In saying for a time, times, and halfe a time, there is a going forward from the greater to the lesse. The greatest time that we name, is a 1000. yeeres, there is a time: and the next time that is lesse in the singuler number, is one 100. yeere. In the plurall number, times signifie that there be two hundzeds then one, at least 200. yeeres. Wherefore if they be put vnder a certaine number, it must needs be that they be two, but the same two cannot fitly be called some times, except they be hundzeds. For in that, that there is a going downe from the greater to the lesse, when as it is said a time, times, and halfe a time, and that the number of a 1000. is likely assigned for a time: it must needs follow that times must be taken for hundzeds, and halfe a time for 60. because it is the greater halfe of a hundzed yeeres, though that 50. be the euen halfe.

And when that the serpent sent the water of the persecution after the woman to cause her to be drowned of the flood: then did the earth, that is to wit, the stablenesse of faith helpe the woman, by supping vp the water of tribulation. For in the most cruell persecution of Diocletian and Maximian against the Christians, when as christianitie was almost euery where rooted out: yet did they in this kingdome stand continuallie in the faith vnmoueable. And so, considering that the Britons, were conuerted to the faith of Christ, as you would say, by an election, and picking out amongst all the nations of the heathen, and that after they had receiued the faith, they did neuer start backe from the faith for no manner of tribulation: it is not to bee maruelled if in their place, the calling of the Gentiles be made manifest, to the profiting of the Gospell of Iesus Christ, by the reuealing of Antichrist.

But besides this, me seemeth that Ezechiel doth specially speake of them, whereas he speaketh of the fall of the prince of Tyre, saying: Because thy heart is lifted vp as if it were the heart of God, therefore behold I will bring vpon thee some of the strongest of the heathen, and they shall draw their naked swoords vpon the beautie of thy wisedome, and they shall defile thy cominesse, and they shall slay thee, and pull thee out, and thou shalt die in the slaughter of the slaine persons, in the heart of the sea.

This prince who saith, that he himselfe is God, and doth sit in Gods chaire in the heart of the sea, doth signifie (as most likely it seemeth to me) that Antichrist shall bee destroyed by the most mightie people of the gentiles sorte, though the sword of the woꝛd of God. Because that amongst the other gentils, there haue been none moze strong then the Britons, either in their bodie or their faith, and in their bodilie warres there haue been none moze mightie then they. For neuer in warres haue they been vanquished, but by their owne sedition or treason. But how many kingdomes haue they conquered? Yea, and neither by the most mightie citie of Rome, could they be driuen out of their kingdome, vntill that God sent vpon them pestilence and famine: whereby they being wasted, were compelled to leaue their countrie, which thing I haue not heard of any other people. Now, in the faith, haue they been amongst all the people, the strongest, as is before said, because that by no tribulation, could they be compelled to forsake the faith.

Wherefore of them, this seemeth to mee to bee vnderstood: When I will bring vpon thee some of the most strongest people, and they shall draw their naked swoords, &c. By these things it may plainely appeare, why at this time (rather then in time past) this matter is stirred vp: and why in this kingdome (rather then in other kingdomes) the calling of the gentiles is intreated of, to the verifying of the Gospell, through the disclosing of Antichrist.

But forasmuch as many tales and fables are told of Antichrist and his comming, and many things which doe rather seduce then instruct the hearers, are applied to him out of the Scriptures of the Prophets: wee will briefly write those things which are spoken of him, and wee will shew that the same fable sprang from the erroz of people imagining, and from no truth of the scriptures prophesying. Now then they doe say, that antichrist shall be borne in Babylon of the tribe of Dan, and conceiued of the mixture of man and woman in time, because that Christ was borne of a virgin, and conceiued of the holy Ghost. They say, that he shall bee an ill fauoured personage, because that it is written of Christ: Comlie and beautifull is he, beyond the sons of men. They say that he shall preach three yeeres and an halfe where Christ preached, and that he shall circumcise himselfe, and say that he is Christ, and the Iewes sent for the saluation of the Iewes. And they say, that he shall three maner of waies seduce the people, by false miracles, gifts, and tozments. So that whom he shall not bee able to ouercome with miracles nor with gifts, those shall he goe about to ouercome with diuers kinds of tozments. And those that he shall seduce, will he marke with his tokens in their foꝛehead or hands. He shall sit in the temple of God, and cause himselfe to be worshipped as God. He shall fight (as they say) with the two witnesses of Christ, Enoch and Helie, and shall kill them, and he himselfe shall finallie be slaine with lightning. To this imagined man of their owne imagination, but of none of the prophets foꝛethewed (at least in no such wise as this is) doe they apply the Prophets, as this of Daniel: When that continuall sacrifice shall be taken away, and abomination shall be placed to desolation: That is (say they) when the worshipping of God shall be taken away, and desolation (to wit, antichrist) shall abominable shew forth himselfe to be worshipped, then shall there bee 1290. daies: that is to say, three yeeres and a halfe. And this time doe they say is the time, times, and halfe a time. And when it is said in Daniel: Blessed is he that waiteth for, and commeth to 1335. daies: As this doe they say, is thus to be vnderstood, 45. daies of repentance to such as haue worshipped antichrist: which 45. bates added to the 1290. make 1735. daies. Which daies they that shall reach vnto, shall be called blessed.

They apply also to this antichrist, this saying of the Apocalyps: I saw a beast rising vp out of the Sea, hauing 7. heads, and 10. hornes, who had power giuen him to make 42. monethes. Which monethes (as they say) doe make 3. yeeres and a halfe, in which antichrist shall raigne. And many other things there are told, and applied vnfitly to this imagined antichrist, that are not truly grounded vpon the scriptures.

Now, let be this to the erroꝛs of this fable. First of all, if there shall come such one (saying expressie that hee is Christ) what Christian would be seduced by him, though he could neuer so many miracles: neither shall he come after the maner of a seducer, which shall shew himselfe an expresse aduersarie. Neither is it likelie that the Iewes can be seduced by such a one, seeing that Christ is not promised vnto them of the stocke of Dan by any of the prophets, but of the stocke of Iuda: nor yet is he promised to them to be a king warlike, but peaceable, taking warre away, and not making warre. For of Christ saith Esay: And in the last daies, shall there be prepared the mountaine of the house of the Lord, in the top of the mountaines, and it shall be exalted aboue the hils: and to it, shall all the nations haue great recourse, and many people shall goe and say: Come, let vs goe vp to the mountaine of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Iacob, and he shall teach vs his waies, and we shall walke in his pathes. For out of Sion shall there goe a law, and the word of the Lord from Ierusalem, and he shall iudge the nations, and reprooue much people. And they shal turne their swords into plowshares, and their speares into sithes. There shall not a nation lift vp it selfe against another nation, nor yet shall they be any more exercised to war. And againe, A little babe is borne to vs, and a sonne is giuen to vs, and his imperiall kingdome vpon his shoulder, and his name shall be called, The great counsellour, The mighty God, The father of the world to come, The prince of peace. His empire shall be multiplied, and there shall be no end of his peace. He shall sit vpon the seat of Dauid, and vpon his kingdom: that he may make it stedfast and strong in iudgement, and in iustice, from henceforth and for euermore. Zacharie doth say of Christ: Reioyce thou greatly, O thou daughter Sion, bee thou exceeding merrie, O daughter Ierusalem: Behold thy king shall come a righteous person, and a Sauior vnto thee, and yet he a poore man, and getting vp vpon an asse, euen vpon a young colt of the shee asse. And I will scatter abroad the chariot of Ephraim, and the horse of Ierusalem: And the bow of war shall be dispersed, and he shall speake peace to the nations, and his power shall be from the sea to the sea, and from the floud vnto the borders of the earth.

By which things it is manifest, that the wise Iewes knew well enough, Christ to be promised to them of the stock of Iuda; and not of the stocke of Dan; and that he was giuen, all to peace, and not to warre: Therefore it is not likelie, that they can be seduced to be such a one. But if there should haue been in time to come some such singuler antichrist, then would Christ (seeing he loued his) haue said somewhat vnto them of him. Now, of one singularly doth he not speake: but of many, saying: Many shall come in my name, and say, I am Christ, and they shall seduce many persons. But now let vs see, how the prophecies in Daniel, and the Apocalyps (also said)

Antichrist cannot come of the tribe of Dan.

Daniel 9. be fully and erroneouslie applied to the same imagined Antichrist. For in Daniel the 9. chap. thus it is written: And after 72. weekes shall Christ be slaine, and they which will deny him shall not be his people. And the citie and sanctuarie, shall a people, with their captaine that shall come with them destroy, whose end shall be utter desolation, and after the end of the warre a determined destruction. Loe, hee shall in one weeke confirme his covenant towards many, and in the halfe weeke shall the offering and sacrifice cease, and in the temple shall there be an abomination of desolation, and euen to the fulfilling vp of all, and to the end, shall the desolation continue. It is plaine and manifest that this prophecie is now fulfilled. For the people of Rome with their captaine, destroyed Jerusalem euen to the ground, and the people of the Iewes was slaine and scattered. And the abomination, that is, the Foul of desolation was placed of Adrian, in the last destruction, in Jerusalem in the holy place, that is to say, in a place of the temple. And from that time hitherto haue pastred neere about 1290. dates, taking a day for a yere, as Daniel takes it in his prophecies, and other prophets likewise. For Daniel speaking of 62. weekes, doth not speake of the weekes of daies but of yeres. So therefore when hee saith: From the time that the continuall sacrifice was taken away, &c. 1290. dates must be taken for so many yeres, from the time of the desolation of Jerusalem, euen vnto the reuealing of antichrist: and not for three yeres and a halfe, which they say, antichrist shall raigne. And againe, whereas Daniel said, How long till the end of these marueilous matters? it was answered him: For a time, and times, and halfe a time. Behold also, holie writtie they bid all gene this time, by three yeres and a halfe, which, they say, Antichrist shall raigne. For when as it is said, a time, times, and halfe a time; there is a going downeward from the greater to the lesse, from the whole to the part, because it is from a time to halfe a time. If therefore, there be a going downeward from the whole to the part, by the middest (which is greater then the whole it selfe) the going downeward is not meet nor agreeing. And this is done when as it is said, that a time, times, and halfe a time, is a yeere, two yeers, and halfe a yeere. Wherefore more fitly it is said, that a time, times, and halfe a time, doth signifie 1290. yeres, as is before said in the chapter preceding. Thus therefore is the prophecie of Daniel falsly applied to that imagined Antichrist.

The abomination or desolation standing in the holy place.

Antichrist to raigne only 3. yeeres and a half, is false.

Looke before in the story of the 12. first persecutions.

Likewise is the prooefe of the Apocalyps applied to the same imagined Antichrist, too much erroneouslie. Because that the same cruell beast which came vp out of the sea, hauing seuen heads and ten hornes, to whom there was power giuen ouer euery tribe, people, and tongue, and the power giuen for the space of 42. months: This beast doth note the Romane Emperors, which most cruellie did persecute the people of God, as well Christians as Iewes. For when as the condemnation of the great whore sitting vpon the many waters was shewed to Iohn: he saw the same woman sitting vpon the purple coloured beast full of the names of blasphemie, hauing 7. heads and 10. hornes: and hee saw a woman being drunken with the bloud of the saints and martyrs of Iesu. And the angell expounding and telling him the mysterie of the woman and the beast that carried her, said: That 7. heads are 7. hilles, and are 7. kings: Fiue are fallen, one is, the other is not yet come: and when hee shall come, hee must raigne a short time. And the ten hornes which thou sawest, are 10. kings, who haue not yet taken their kingdome, but shall receiue their power as it were in one houre, vnder the beast. And finallie hee saith, the woman whom thou sawest, is the great citie, which hath the kingdome ouer the kings of the earth. And it is manifest that the citie of Rome, at the time of this prophecie, had the kingdome ouer the kings of the earth. And this citie was borne vp and vpholden by her cruell and beastlie Emperors: who by their cruelties and beastliues, did subdue vnto themselues in a manner, all the kingdomes of the world, of a zeale to haue lordship ouer others, and not vertuouslie to gouerne the people that were their subiects, seeing that they themselues did lacke all vertue, and drew backe others from the faith and from vertue.

Apoc.13.

The beast in the 13. of the Apocalyps expounded.

The purple beast with the 7. heads and 10. hornes, is Rome.

Therefore that cruell beast comming vp out of the sea, doth rightly note the Romane Emperours, who had power ouer euery language, people, and countrie. And the power of this beast was for 42. moneths, because that from the first Emperor of Rome, that is to say, Julius Cesar, vnto the end of Fredericke the last emperor of Rome there were 42. moneths, taking a moneth for 30. daies, as the moneths of the Hebrewes and Grecians are, and taking a day alwaies for a yere, as commonly it is taken in the prophets. By which things it may plainely appeare, how inistlie this prophecie is applied to that imagined Antichrist, and the 42. moneths taken for three yeres and a halfe, which (they say) he shall raigne in, against the saying of the prophets, because that dates are taken for yeres. As in the 1. of the Apocal. They shall be troubled 10. daies. Which doe note the most cruell persecution of Diocletian against the christians that endured 10. yeeres. And in another place of the Apocalyps, it is written of the smoake comming vp out of the bottomlesse pit: Out of which pit there came forth grashoppers into the earth, and to them was power giuen, as Scorpions haue power, to vexe and to trouble men 5. moneths. Now it is manifest, that from the beginning of the friers minors and preachers, to the time that Armachanus began to disclose and vncourt their hypocrisie, and their false foundation of saliant begging vnder the pourtie of Christ, were 5. moneths, taking a moneth for 30. daies, and a day for a yere. And to Ezechiel mens daies giuen for yeres. Therefore it is an vnfit thing to assigne the 42. moneths being appointed to the power of the beast, vnto 3. yeres and a halfe, for the raigne of that phantasticall and imagined Antichrist: specially seeing that they doe applie to his raigne the 1290. dates in Daniel, which make 42. moneths, and in the Apocalyps they assigne him 42. moneths. It is plaine that the Psaltery and the harp agree not. And therefore seeing that it is sufficiently shewed, that the same falling tale of that imagined antichrist to come, is a fable and erroneous: let vs goe forward to declare whether antichrist be already come, and yet is he hid from many, and must bee opened and disclosed within a little while, according to the truth of the holy scripture, for the saluation of the faithfull.

The beginning and end of the vailand begger-ly friers spoken of in the Apocalyps, expounded at Armachanus: looke before pag. 378

Non conuenit Psalterium cum cithara. Whether antichrist be already come.

And because that in the first conclusion of mine answer, I haue conditionallie put it, who is that antichrist lying priuie in the hid scriptures of the prophets: I will passe on the declaration of that conclusion, bringing to light those things which lay hid in darkenesse, because nothing is hid which shall not be disclosed, and nothing couered that shall not bee knowne: And therefore, the thing that was said in the darkenesse, let vs lay in the light: and the thing that wee haue heard in the eare, let vs preach vpon the house tops. Therefore as I haue before said, so say, that if the high bishop of Rome, calling himself the seruant of God, and the chiefe vicar of Christ in this world, doe make and institute many lawes contrarie to the Gospel of Iesu Christ: then is hee the chiefe of many, which comming in the name of Christ, haue said, I am Christ, who haue seduced many. Which is the first part of the first conclusion, and is manifest. For Christ is called of the Hebrues the very same that we call anointed. And amongst them there was a double sort of legall annointing by the law, the one of kings and the other of priests. And alwell were the kings as the priests, called in the law, Christs. The kings, as in the Psalme: The kings of the earth stod vp together, and the princes met themselues in one against the Lord and against his Christ or annointed. And in the books of the kings very often are the kings called Christs. And our Sauiour was Christ, or annointed king, because hee was a king for euermore vpon the throne of Dauid, as the Scriptures doe verie ostentimes witnesse. The priests also were called annointed, as where it is written, Doe not yee touch my Christs, that is, mine annointed ones, and bee not yee spitefull against my prophets. And so was our sauior Christ, a priest for euer according to the order of Melchisedech.

The pope the very Antichrist.

Annointing possible in scripture.

Kings and priests annointed.

Seeing then, that the bishops of Rome doe say, that they are the high priests: they say also therein that they are kings, because they say that they haue the spirituall sword pertaining to their priesthood, and the corporall sword, which appertaineth to a kings state. So is it plaine, that really and in verie deed they say that they are Christs, albeit that expressie they bee not called Christs. Now, that they come in the name of Christ, it is manifest, because they say that they are his principall vicars in this world, ordained of Christ specially for the gouernment of the christian Church. Therefore, seeing they say, that really and in very deed they are Christs, and the chiefe friends of Christ: if they make and institute manie lawes contrarie to the Gospell of Iesu Christ, then is it plaine that they themselues in earth are the principall Antichrists, because there is no worse plague and pestilence, then a familiar enemie. And if in secret they be against Christ, and yet in open appearance they say that they are his friends, they are so much the more meet to seduce and deceiue the christian people, because that a manifest enemie shall haue much adoe to deceiue a man, because men trust him not: but a priuie enemie pretending outward friendship, may easilie seduce, yea those that be wise.

The popes make themselues priests and kings. The pope meeteth diuinitie with Christ.

The pope commeth in the name of Christ. Popes vpheld principall Antichrists.

The pope an outward friend and a priuie enemie to Christ.

But that this matter may the more follie be knowen, let vs see what is the law and doctrine of Christ, that ought to be obserued of all faithfull people: which being knowne, it shall bee an easie thing to see, if the bishop of Rome doe make or maintain anie lawes contrarie to the law of h gospel of Iesu Christ.

Whether the pope doth maintaine any lawes against the lawes of Christ.

I say then, that the law of Christ is charitie, which is the perfect loue of God and of Christ. This thing is plaine and manifest: For Christ being demanded of a certain doctor of the law; What is the greatest commandement in the law? answered: Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soule, and with all thy minde: That is the principal and greatest commandement. And as for the second, it is like vnto this: Thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thine owne selfe. In these two commandements, doth the whole law and prophets depend. And in another place Christ saith: All manner of things therefore, that you would that men should doe to you, the same also do ye vnto them. For this is the law and the prophets. And in Iohn the thirteenth chapter saith Christ: And now doe I say vnto you, I giue you a new commandement, that you should loue each other as I loued you, in like manner that you also should loue one an other. In this shall all men know that you are my disciples, if you shall haue loue one towards an other. And Iohn 15. chapter: This is my commandement, that you loue together as I haue loued you. Greater loue then this hath no body, that a man should giue his life for his friends. The apostle Peter saith in his first Epistle 4. chapter: Above all things hauing continually charitie one towards an other, for charitie couereth the multitude of sinnes. Be ye harborers, and entertaine yee one an other without grudging; euery one as he hath receiued grace, so let him bestow it vpon an other man, as the good stewards of the manifold graces of God. If any man speake, let him speak as the word of God. If any man doe ought for an other, let it be done with singlenes and vnfeined veritie, ministred of God to vsward, that in all things God may bee honoured through Jesus Christ our Lord. James in his Epistle the 2. chapter: If ye performe the royall law accordingly to the Scriptures, (thou shalt loue thy neighbour) ye doe well: But if ye be partiall in receiuing and preferring mens personages, ye worke wickednes, being blamed of the law as transgressors. And againe, So speake ye, and so do ye, as ye should now begin to be iudged by the law of libertie. What shall it auaile, my brethren, if a man say he haue faith, and haue no workes? neuer shall the faith be able to saue him. For if a brother or sister be naked, and haue need of daily foode, and some of you say to them, go ye in peace, bee ye made warme and satisfied: and if ye shall not giue those things that are necessarie for the body, what shall it auaile? Euen so faith, if it haue not workes, is dead in it selfe.

Coloss.3.

John in his first epistle the 3. chapter: This is the tidings which you haue heard from the beginning, that you should loue one an other. And againe, we know that we are translated from death to life, if we loue the brethren: He that loueth not, abideth in death. And againe, Herein do we know the loue of God, because that he hath laid downe his life for vs, and wee ought to lay downe our liues for the brethren. Hee that hath haue the substance of this world, and shall see his brother haue need, and shall shut vp his bowels from him, how abideth the loue of God in him? My little children, let vs not loue in word, nor tongue, but in deed and truth. And againe 4. chapter: Not dearely beloued, let vs loue together. For loue is of God, hee that loueth not, knoweth not God, for God is loue. In this thing hath the loue of God appeared in vs, that God hath sent his onely begotten sonne into the world, that wee should liue by him. Herein is loue: not that we haue loued God, but that he hath first loued vs, and hath sent his sonne an attonement for our sinnes. Not dearely beloued, if God haue loued vs, we so ought to loue together. No man hath seene God at any time: if wee loue together, God abideth in vs, and his loue is perfect in vs. And againe, Let vs loue God, for he hath first loued vs. If a man shall say, I loue God, & do hate his brother, he is a liar. For he that loueth not his brother whom he seeth, how can he loue God whom he seeth not? And this commandement haue we of God, that who so loueth God, should loue his brother also. Paul the apostle in his epistle to the Romans the 13. chapter: Owe yee nothing to no body, sauing that yee should loue together, for hee that loueth his brother hath fulfilled the law. For thou shalt not commit adulterie, thou shalt not murther, thou shalt not steale, thou shalt not beare false witnesse, thou shalt not couet thy neighbours good: and if there bee any other commandement, it is plentifully fulfilled in this word, Thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. Wherefore the fulfilling of the law is loue.

Rom.13.

Paul to the Corinths the 13. chap. saith: If I should speake with the tongues of men and angels, and yet haue not charitie, I am become as it were a piece of sounding mettall or tinkling cymball. And if I shall haue all prophecie, and know all mysteries, and all knowledge, and shall haue all faith, so that I might remoue mountaines, and yet shall not haue charitie; I am nothing. And if I shall giue abrode all my goods to feede the poore, and shall giue vp my body to be burned, and yet haue not charitie, it profits me nothing. To the Galanthians 5. saith Paul: For you my brethren, are called vnto libertie: do not giue your libertie for an occasion of the flesh, but by charitie of the spirit serue ye one an other. For all the law is fulfilled in one saying; Thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thine owne selfe. To the Ephesians 4. chapter he saith: I therefore that suffer bonds in the Lord, doe beseech you, that you would walke worthie of the calling wherewith yee are called, with all humblenesse and mildnes, with patience, forbearing one another in loue, being carefull to keepe the vnitie of the spirit, in the bond of peace: that you be one body, and one spirit, euen as you bee called in one hope of your calling. And againe in the 5. chap. Be ye followers of me, as most deere children, and walke yee in loue, as Christ also hath loued vs, and hath deliuered by himselfe for vs, an offering and sacrifice to God of a sweete sauour. To the Philip. thus he speaketh in the first chap. Onely let your conuersation be worthie of the Gospell of Christ, that either when I shall come and see you, or else in mine absence I may heare of you, that you stand stedfast in one spirit labouring together with one accord for the faith of the Gospell. And in nothing be ye afraid of the aduersaries, which is to them a cause of damnation, but to you of saluation, and that of God. For to you it is giuen, not onely that you should beleeue in him, but also that you should suffer with him, you having the like fight and battell that both you haue seene in me, and also now do heare of me. If therefore there be any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of charitie, if any fellowship of the spirit, if any bowels of compassion, fulfill you my ioy, that you may be of one iudgement, hauing one and the selfe same charitie, being of one accord, of one minder of iudgement, doing nothing of contention, nor of vaine glory, but in humblenes, accounting other amongst you, euery one better then your selues; not euery bodie looking vpon the things that bee his owne, but those that belong vnto others. And to the Coloss. 3. chap. thus he writeth; You therefore as the elect of God, holy and beloued, put vpon you the bowels of mercy, gentlenesse, humblenesse, lowlinesse, modestie, patience, bearing one with an other, and giuing place to your selues (if any haue a quarrell against any body;) euen as the Lord forgaue you, so doe you also. Aboue all things haue yee charitie, which is the bond of perfection, and let the peace of Christ triumph in your hearts, in which peace you also are called in one body. And be ye kind and thankefull. And to the Thessalonians thus Paul writeth in the 4. chapter; As concerning brotherly charitie, wee haue no need to write vnto you: for you your selues haue learned of God, that you should loue one an other. And the same thing ye do towards all the brethren throughout all Macedonia.

Ephes.5.

1.Thess.4.

Out of all these and many other places of the holy Scripture it sufficiently appeareth, that the law of Christ is charitie, neither is there any vertue commanded of Christ, or any of his apostles, to be obserued of the faithfull people, but that it commeth out of charitie, or else doth nourith charitie.

Many things obserued in the old law, which be not obserued now.

The law is giuen by Moses, and the truth by Christ. Christ came not to vnloose the law, but to fulfill them. But yet many things were lawfull and might haue been obserued in the time of the law, which in the time of grace must not be obserued. And many things were vnlawfull to them that were vnder the law, which in the time of grace are lawfull enough. After what sort then he did not loose the law, but did fulfill it, it is necessarie to declare, for those things which hereafter must be said. For amongst christians, many things are iudged to be lawfull, because in the former testament in the law they were lawfull; and yet they bee expressie contrarie to Christs Gospell. But the authors of such things do argue and reason thus: Christ came not to loose the law or the prophets. Now after what sort he did not vnloose them, it is manifest by the holy Scripture: that the law giuen by Moses, was written in tables of stone, to declare the hardnes of the peoples heart towards the loue of God, or of Christ. But Christ hath written his law in the hearts and in the minds of his, that is to say, the law of perfect loue of God, and of Christ. Which law whosoeuer obserueth, hee doth obserue the law of Moles, and doth much greater workes of perfection, then were the workes of the law. Thus therefore were the morals of the old law fulfilled in the law of the charitie of Christ, and not vnloosed: because they are much more perfectly obserued, then of the Iewes. This I say, if the christians doe obserue the commandements of Christ in such sort, as he commanded the same to bee obserued. Christ hath fulfilled the lawes morall of the old testament, because that the morals & iudicials were ordained, that one person should not do iniurie to an other, & that euery man should haue paid him that is his. Now they that are in charitie, will do no iniurie to others, neither doe they take other mens goods away from them. Nay, it seeketh not her owne things. For charitie seeketh not the things that be her owne. Wherefore, much lesse by a stronger reason it ought not to seeke for other mens goods. And when as the iudicials and morals were ordained, Christ did not by the workes of the law iustifie the beleeuers in him, but by grace iustified them from their sins. And so did Christ fulfill that by grace, that the law could not by iustice.

Christ entirely not vnto the temple made by man, but into the very heauē.

Paul to the Romans declareth in a godly discourse, and to the Galathians likewise, that none shall bee iustified by the workes of the law, but by grace, in the faith of Iesu Christ. As for the morals & ceremonies of the law, as circumcision, sacrifices for offences and for sinnes, firstfruits, tenths, vowes, diuers sorts of washings, the sprinkling of bloud, the sprinkling of ashes, abstaining from vncleane meates, which are ordeined for the sanctifying and cleansing of the people from sinne, no not yet the praiers of the priests, neither the preachings of the prophets, could clense a man from his sin. For death reigned euen from Adam to Moses, and sinne from Moses to Christ, as Paul declareth to the Romans in the fifth chapter. But Christ, willing to haue mercy, and not sacrifice, being a priest for euer after the order of Melchisedech, and an high priest of good things to come, did neither by the bloud of goats or calues, but by his owne bloud enter in once into the holy places, when as euerlasting redemption was found: neither did Jesus enter into the holy places that were made vnto hands, which are the examples of true things, but into the heauen, that now he may appeare before the countenance of God for vs. Nor yet he did so, that he should offer vp himselfe ostentimes, as the high bishop entred into the holy place euery yeer with straunge bloud (for otherwise hee must needs haue suf-

Hebr.9.

The sacrifice of Christ not expreslie taken away by him.

fred oftentimes sithence the beginning of the world, but now in the latter end of the world hath he once appeared by his owne sacrifice, for the destruction of sinne. And like as it is decreed for men once to die, and after that commeth iudgement: euen so was Christ once offered vp to confume away the sinnes of many. The second time shall he appeare without sinne to the saluation of such as looke for him. For the law hauing a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of substance it selfe of the things, can neuer, by those sacrifices which they offer (of one selfe same sort continually euery by yeare) make them perfect that come vnto her. Otherwise men would leaue off offering, because that those worshippers being once cleansed, should haue no more pricke of conscience for sinne afterwards. But in them is there remembrance made of sins euery yeare.

Hebr.10.

For it is impossible, that by the blood of goats and bulls, sins should be taken away. Wherefore, he entring into the world, doth say: As for sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not haue, but a body hast thou framed vnto me. And sacrifices for sinne haue not pleased thee: then said I, behold I come: In the head, or principall part of the booke it is written of me, that I should doe thy will O God. Wherefore he said before, that sacrifices, oblations, and burnt offerings, and that for sin thou wouldest not haue: neither were those things pleasant to thee which are offered according to the law: then said I, behold I come, that I may doe thy will O God: He taketh away the first, that he may stablish that that followed. In which will, we are sanctified and made holy by the offering vp of the body of Iesus Christ once. And verily euery priest is readie euery day ministring, and oftentimes offering the selfe same sacrifices, which neuer can take away sinnes. But this man offering one sacrifice for sins, doth for euer and euer sit at Gods right hand, looking for the rest to come till that his enemies bee placed to be his footstoole. For with one offering hath he for euer made perfect those that be sanctified. By which things it plainely appeareth, that Christ by one offering hath cleansed his from their sinnes: who could not be cleansed from the same, by all the ceremonies of the law, and so did fulfill that which the priesthood of the law could not. Wherefore onely the morals and iudicials be fulfilled by the laws of charitie, and by grace; and the ceremonials, by one offering vp of his body on the altar of the crosse. And so it is plaine, that Christ fulfilled the whole law.

All the doctors ought to cease and stop their cauillations.

Wherefore sithence that the holy things of the law, were a shadow of those things that were to come in the time of grace, it were meet that all those things should vtterly cease amongst christians, which should either bee against charitie or the grace of Christ. Although in the time of the law they were lawfull, and not vtterly contrarie to it, but were figures of perfections in Christs faith: yet it were meet that they should cease at the comming of the perfection which they did prefigurate: as circumcision, the eating of the paschall Lambe, and other ceremoniall points of the law. Whereupon also Paul to the Hebrues the 7. chapter saith thus: If therefore the making vp of the perfection of all was by the Leuiticall priesthood (for the people receiued the law vnder him) why was it necessarie before, that an other priest should rise vp after the order of Melchisedech, and not be called after the order of Aaron? For when the priesthood is remoued, it must needs be, that the law also be remoued. For he in whom these things are spoken, is of an other tribe, of which, none stood present at the altar: because it is manifest that our Lord had his offspring of Iuda, in which tribe Moses spake nothing of the priests. And besides this, it is manifest: if according to the order of Melchisedech there doe rise vp an other priest, which was not made according to the law of the carnall commandement, but according to the power of the life perpetuall. For thus he beareth witnes, that thou art a priest for euer, after the order of Melchisedech: so that the commandement that went before, is disallowed for vnprofitablenesse thereof. For the law hath brought no body to perfection. By which things it appeareth, that Christ making an end of the priesthood of Aaron, doth also make vp a full end of the law belonging to that priesthood. Whereupon I maruell that your learned men doe say, that christian folkes are bound to this small ceremony of the payment of tithes, and care nothing at all for other, as well the great as the small ceremonies of the law.

Heb.7. Christ by the priesthood of Melchisedech is proued to be the mediator of the new Testament by the mediator of Christ the law and ceremonies of Moses is proued to be remoued.

The cause why Christ would not haue the ceremonies of the law obserued.

It is plaine, that the tithes were giuen to the sonnes of Leui, for their seruing in the tabernacle and in the temple of the Lord, as the first fruits were giuen to the priests, and also to part of the sacrifices, and so were the vowes of their ministerie, as it appeareth in the booke of Numbers the 22. chapter. But forasmuch as the labour of those sacrifices did cease at the comming of Christ, how should those things bee demanded, which were ordained for that labour? And seeing that the first fruits were not demanded of christians, which first fruits were then rather and sooner demanded then the tithes: why must the tithes be demanded, except it be therefore preuidence because that the tithes be more worthy in value then be the first fruits?

If tithes be claimed by the priests of the old law, how can the Christian priests claime tithes of the people, but not by the old law.

Secondly, who are the lay people bound to the payment of tithes, more then the Leuites and the priests were to the not hauing of possessions of realties and lordships amongst their brethren, seeing that the selfe same law in the selfe same place (where he saith that the tithes ought to be giuen to Leuites) saith also to the Leuites, Non shall bee contented with the offering of the tithes, and haue none other thing amongst your brethren. Wherefore seeing that the priests be bound, to the not hauing of temporall lordships, how are the lay people bound by that law of God he meaneth, and not of man, to the paiment of tithes?

The priests not content, but that they be due by the ordinance of man: Although not by the ceremoniall law of Moses.

Thirdly, as touching circumcision, which is one of the greater ceremonies of the law, and was giuen before the law, and was an vniuersall ceremonie, concerning the couenant betweene God and his people, and was so much regarded in the law, that thereof it was said: The soule, whose flesh shall not be circumcised in the foreskin, shall perish from amongst his people: yet did this ceremonie vtterly cease at the comming of Christ, although that certaine of the Iewes did lay in the primitiue church, that the christians must needs keepe the commandement of circumcision with the faith: whom Paul reproueth, writing thus to the Galathians the fourth chapter, where he speaketh of the children of the bondwoman and of the freewoman, which doe signifie the two Testaments. But we (O brethren) are the children of the promise after Isaac: but like as at that time he that was borne after the flesh, did persecute him which was after the spirit, euen so it is now also. But what saith the Scripture? Throw out the bondwoman and her sonne. The sonne of the bondwoman shall not be heire with the sonne of the freewoman. Wherefore brethren, we are not the sonnes of the bondwoman, but of the free. Stand ye fedfast in the libertie wherewith Christ hath deliuered you, and be not ye holden againe vnder the yoke of bondage. Behold, I Paul say vnto you, if you be circumcised, Christ shall nothing profit you. For I testifie againe to euery man that circumcideth himselfe, that he is bound to keepe all the whole law. Ye are vtterly void of Christ: whosoeuer will bee iustified in the law, are fallen from grace.

Sithes due to be paid by the positiue law of man.

Galath.4.

Christians liberte from the bondage of the law.

In like maner we may reason, if wee be bound to tithing, we are debters, and bound to keepe all the whole law. For to say that men are bound to one ceremony of the law, and not to the others, is no reasonable saying. Either therefore wee are bound to them all, or to none. Also, that by the same old law, men are not bound to pay tithes, it may bee shewed by many reasons, which we needs not any more to multiplie since we alleage the things that be said are sufficient. Whereupon some doe say, that by the Gospell wee are bound to pay tithes, because Christ said to the Pharisies, Matth. 23. chap. Woe be to you Scribes and Pharisies, which pay your tithe of Mint, of Anise seed, and of Cummin: and leaue iudgement, mercy, and truth vndone, being the waighties things of the law: both should ye haue done these things, and also not haue left the other vndone. Ye blind guides, that straine out a gnat, and swallow vp a camell. This word foundeth not as a commandement or maner of bidding, whereby Christ did command tithes to be giuen: but it is a word of disallowing the hypocrisie of the Pharisies, who of couetousnesse did rather weigh and esteeme tithes, because of their owne singuler commoditie, rather then other great and weightie commandements of the law. And we seeme by that our men are in the same predicament of the Pharisies, which do leaue off all the ceremonies of the old law, keeping onely the commandement of tithing. It is manifest and plaine enough by the premisses, and by other places of the Scripture, that Christ was a priest after the order of Melchisedech, of the tribe of Iuda, not of the tribe of Leui: who gaue no new commandement of tithing of any thing to him and to his priests, whom he would place after him: but when his apostles said to him: Behold, we leaue all things and haue followed thee, what then shall wee haue; he did not answere them thus: Tithes shall be paid vnto you: neither did he promise them a temporall, but an euerlasting reward in heauen. For he, both for soul, and also apparell, taught his disciples not to be carefull: We pe not carefull for your life, what ye shall eate, or for your body what ye shall put on: Is not the life of man more worth then the meate: and the body more worth then apparell? Behold ye the birds of heauen, which doe not sow, nor reape, neither yet lay vp in barnes, and yet your heauenly father feedeth them. And as for apparell, why should you be carefull? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow, they labour not, neither doe they spinne, &c. In conclusion he saith, We not ye carefull, saying, what shall we eate, or what shall we drinke, or wherewithall shall we be couered? For all these things doe the Gentiles seeke after: For your father knoweth, that you haue need of all these things. First therefore seeke ye for the kingdome of God and the righteousnes thereof, and all these things shall bee cast vnto you. And Paul right well remembring this doctrine, inferreth Timothie and saith thus: But we hauing food, and wherewithall to be couered, let vs therewith be contented. And as the Acts of the apostles doe declare; in the first conuersion of the Iewes at Ierusalem, they had all things common, and to euery one was distribution made as neede required. Neither did the priests make the tithes their owne proper goods. For like as it was not meet that the lay people being conuerted, should haue propuetie of goods: euen so neither that priests should haue propuetie of tithes. So that if Christ in answering to his brother, did not breake his rule of patience outwardly.

The precept of Christ to returne the other cheek, hath a priuie comparison and if he would say, rather be you ready to suffer two iniuries, then to reuenge one.

This article of Paule must haue a declaration ouer to the Lutenist of the clergie.

If the priests started backe from seruent charitie in challenging to themselues the propuetie of tithes; it is no maruell of departing backward (as doe the priests from the perfection of charitie) also of the latitie to be willing to appropriate to themselues, the nine parts remaining after tithes. Wherefore seeing that neither Christ, nor any of the apostles, commanded to pay tithes: it is manifest and plaine, neither by the law of Moses, nor by Christs law, christian people are bound to pay tithes: but by the tradition of men, they are bound.

Sithes due to be paid by the positiue law of man.

By the premisses now it is plaine, that Christ did not vndo the law, but by grace did fulfill it. Notwithstanding, in the law many things were lawfull, which in the time of grace are forbidden; and many things were then vnlawfull, which now are lawfull enough. For nothing that is contrarie to charitie, is lawfull to a christian.

Let vs now heare what maner of commandements Christ hath giuen vs in the Gospell, without the obseruation of which commandements, charitie shall not perfectly bee kept. By which commandements, Christ did not vndoe the old law, but did fulfill it. By the obseruation also of which commandements, he teacheth vs to passe and goe beyond the righteousnesse of the Scribes and Pharisies, who most perfectly thought themselues to keepe the law. This absolute and perfect righteousnesse, which we are bound to haue beyond the righteousnesse of the Pharisies and the Scribes, he teacheth in Matthew 5. 6. and 7. chap. Which being heard, and compared to the traditions made and commanded by the Romane prelats, it shall plainely appeare, whether they be contrarie or no. Christ therefore saith, You haue heard, that it was said to them of the old time, Thou shalt not kill. For he that killeth shall be guiltie of iudgement. But I say vnto you, that euery one that is angrie with his brother, shall be in danger of iudgement. In this he doth teach, that wee ought not to bee angrie with our brethren: not that he would vndoe this old commandement (Thou shalt not kill) but that the same should bee the more perfectly obserued. Againe hee saith; You haue heard that it was said, thou shalt loue thy friend, and hate thine enemie. But I say vnto you, Loue your enemies, doe well to them that hate you, pray for them that persecute and slander you, that you may be the children of your father which is in heauen: Which maketh his sunne to arise vpon the good and the euill people, and raineth vpon the iust and vniust. For if you loue them which loue you, what reward shall you haue? Doe not the Publicans thus? And if you shall salute your brethren onely, what great thing doe ye? Doe not the heathen thus also? Be you therefore perfect, as also your heauenly father is perfect.

Bound in one thing, the meaneth bound in all: Either bound to all, or to none.

* Here he expreslie his meaning plainely.

The doctrine of Christ and of the pope compared.

Againe Christ saith, You haue heard that it is said, an eie for an eie, a tooth for a tooth. But I say vnto you, see that you resist not euill. But if any man shall strike you vpon the right cheeke, giue him the other to. And to him that will striue with thee for thy coate in iudgement, let him haue thy cloke also. And whosoeuer shall constraine thee one mile, goe with him also two other. He that asketh of thee, giue him: and he that will borrow of thee, turne not thy selfe from him.

The one is disallowed, the other is not commanded.

Priests must religion to their owne profit.

By these things it may plainely appeare, how that Christ the king of peace, the Sauiour of mankind, who came to saue, and not to destroy, who gaue a law of charitie to bee obserued of his faithfull people; hath taught vs not to be angrie, not to hate our enemies, not to render euill for euill, nor to resist euill. For all these things doe softer and nourish peace and charitie, and doe procede and come forth of charitie, and when they bee not kept, charitie is losed, and peace is broken. But the bishop of Rome appiouth and alloweth warres, and slaughters of men in warre, as well against our enemies, that is, the infidels, as also against the Christians for temporall goods. Now, these things are quite contrarie to Christs doctrine, and to charitie, and to peace.

Tithes not expreslie commanded anew by Christ in the Gospell. Matth.6.

The glosse of Gratianus vpo the cap. Paratus 23.q.1. dist. primo.

In the decrees 23. q. 1. cap. Paratus, it is taught, that the precepts of patience must alwaies be retained in purpose of the heart, so that patience with benecuolence must bee kept in the mind secret. But apparantly and manifestly, that thing should be done, which seemeth to doe good to those, whom wee ought to wish well vnto. Wherein they giue to vnderstand, that a christian may freely defend himselfe. And so confirmation of this saying, they do say: That Christ when he was stricken on the face of the high bishops seruant, did not fulfill (if we looke vpon the words of his owne commandement: because he began not to the smiter the other cheek, but rather did forbid him, that he should not doe it, to double his iniurie. For he said, If I haue spoken euill, beare witnes of the euill; but if well, why doest thou strike me? I doe maruell of this saying; for first if those commandements of patience must bee kept in secret in the mind: and seeing the body doth worke at the motion of the mind, and is and ought to be moued and ruled by the same: it must then needs be, that if patience be in the mind, it must appeare also outwardly in the body.

Secondly, I maruell that it is said, that Christ did not fulfill his owne precept of patience. For it is manifest, that albeit he teaching alwaies as a good schoolemaster, those things which were fit for the saluation of soules, speaking the whole some word of instruction to the high bishops seruant smiting him vniustly; did neither by word forbid an other stroke to bee giuen on the other cheeke, neither did hee defend himselfe bodily from striking on the same cheeke: But speaking to him, it is likely that hee gaue him the other cheeke, hee meaneth, that he turned not the other cheeke away. For a man turneth not away from him whom he speaketh to, of whom hee inferreth, but layeth open before him all his face: Euen so do I beleeue that Christ did, that he might fulfill in very deed that, which before he had taught in word. Neither yet did Christ by his word or by his deed, shew any thing of defence, or of bodily resistance.

Rom.12. Rules of Christian patience.

Thirdly, I maruell why wise men leauing the plaine and manifest doctrine of Christ, whereby hee teacheth patience, doe seeke corners of their owne imagining, to the intent they may appoue fightings and wars. Why marke they not after what maner Christ spake to Peter striking the high bishops seruant, saying: Put vp thy sword into the sheath, for euerie one that shall take the sword, shall perish with the sword: But in another case hee must make resistance: which case may bee righteous, as it is for a mans lord and maister being a most righteous man, and yet suffering iniurie of mischieuous persons.

The cause here assigned of Christ was patiuate, and his doctrine to be vnderstood in priuate cases. Warre in case allowed of the Iewes.

Fourthly, I maruell, seeing that we are bound of charitie and by the law of Christ to giue our liues for our brethren, how they can allow such maner of dissentions, and resisting. For when thy brother shall maliciously strike thee, thou maiest be sure, that he is manifestly fallen from charitie, into the snare of the diuell. If thou shalt keepe patience, hee shall be ashamed of his doing, and thou mayest bow and bend him to repentance, and take him out from the snare of the diuell, and call him backe againe to charitie. If thou resist, and perchance by resisting doest strike againe, his furie shall bee the more kindled, and hee being striued vp to greater wrath, peraduenture shall either slay thee, or thou him. Touching thy selfe, thou art vncertaine if thou goe about to make resistance, whether thou shalt fall from charitie, and then shalt thou goe backward from the perfection of Christs commandement: Neither doest thou know but that it may happen thee so greatly to be moued, as that by the heate and violence of wrath, thou shalt slay him. Whereas if thou wouldest dispose thy selfe to patience (as Christ teacheth) thou shouldest easilie auoide all these mischiefes, as well on the behalfe of thy brother, as also of thine owne part. Wherefore the obseruing of charitie, as the precept of patience, is to be obserued.

Hereunto be exhorted all priests and other, that they be not derogate to the doctrine of our Sauiour.

Pe meaneth such wars as Christian ye ought to allow.

The incommence of priuate resistance among Christian brethren.

Fifthly, I doe maruell why that for the allowing of this corporall resistance, he doth lap in the same chapter, that Paul did not fulfill the precept of the patience of Christ, when as he being stricken in the place of iudgement by a commandement of the high priest, did say, God strike thee, O thou painted wall: Doest thou sit to iudge me according to the law, and doest thou command me to be stricken against the law? It is manifest that Paul made resistance in nothing, though he spake a word of instruction to the priest, who against the law commanded him to be stricken. And if Paul had ouerpassed the bounds of patience, through the griefe of the stroke, what of that? Christ the head of Paule impatiencie for this cause bee fulfilled, and the commandement of patience taught by Christ, bee left vndone for Pauls deed, and corporall resistance bee allowed of God for vs? For both Paul and Peter might erre. But in the doctrine of Christ there may be found no errour. Wherefore we must giue more credence and beleefe to Christs sayings, then to any liuing mans doings. Wherefore, although Paul had resisted, which I doe not perceiue in that Scripture, it followeth not thereof, that corporall resistance must be appioued, which is of Christ expreslie forbidden. I much maruell that alwaies they seeke corners and shadowes to iustifie their deeds, Why doe they not marke what great things Paul reciteth himselfe to haue suffered for Christ? And where I pray you haue they found, that he after his conuersion, stroke any man that did hurt him? Or where doe they find that hee in expreslie wood doth teach such a kind of corporall resistance? But as touching patience, hee saith in plaine words to the Romans: Be not wise in your owne conceits: Render ill for ill to no bodie: prouiding good things not onely before God, but also before all men, if it be possible: Be at peace with all folkes as much as in you lieth: not reuenging your selues, my most dearely beloued, but giue you place vnto anger. For it is written, Vengeance is mine, and I will recompence them, saith the Lord. But if thine enemie shall be an hungred, giue him meate; if he bee a thirst, giue him drinke. For thus doing, thou shalt heape coales of fire vpon his head. Bee not ouercome of euill, but ouercome thou euill with good.

The fact either of Paul or of any other, doth not derogate to the doctrine of our Sauiour.

To the Corinthians the 5. as touching iudgement and contention, which are matters of lesse weight then are fightings, thus he writeth: Now verily there is great fault in you, that you beat law amongst your selues. Why rather take yee not wrong? Why rather suffer ye not deceit? And generally in all his epistles hee teacheth, that patience should bee kept, and not corporall resistance by fighting, because charitie is patient, it is courteous, it suffereth all things. I maruell how they iustifie and make good the warres by Christians sauing onely the warres against the diuell and sinne. For seeing that it is plaine, that those things which were in the old Teflament, were figures of things to bee done in the new Testament; Therefore we must needs say, that the corporall warres being then done, were figures of the christian warres against sinne and the diuell, for the heauenly countrey, which is our inheritance. It is plaine that it was written thus of Christ: The mightie Lord, and of great power in battell, hath girded himselfe in force and manlinesse to the warre: and hee came not to send peace into the earth, but warre. In this warre ought christian people to bee souldiers, according to that maner which Paul teacheth to the Ephesians the last: Put vpon you the armour of God, that you may bee able to stand against the deceits of the diuell. For wee haue not to wrastle against flesh and blood, but against princes and potestates, against the rulers of the darknesse of the world, against spirituall wickednesse in heauenly things, which are in the high places. Wherefore take yee the armour of God, that yee may bee able to resist in the euill day, and to stand perfectly in all things. Stand ye therefore girded about in truth vpon your loynes, hauing put vpon you the brest-plate of righteousnesse, and your feet shod in a readinesse to the Gospell of peace; in all things taking the shield of faith, wherewith you may quench all the fiery dartes of that wicked one. And take vnto you the helmet of saluation, and the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God.

By these things it is plaine, what are the warres of Christians, and what are the weapons of their warfare. And because it is manifest, that this Testament is of greater perfection then the former, wee must now fight more perfectly then at that time. For now spiritually, then corporally: now for an heauenly euerlasting inheritance, then for an earthly and temporall: now by patience, then by resistance. For Christ saith, Blessed are they that suffer persecution for righteousnes, for theirs is the kingdome of heauen. He saith not, blessed are they that fight for righteousnesse. How can a man say, that they may lawfully make warre, and kill their brethren for the temporall goods, which peraduenture they vniustly occupie, or vniustly intend to occupie? For he that killeth an other to get these goods which an other body vniustly occupieth, doth loue more the very goods then his owne brother. And then hee falling from charitie, doth kill himselfe spiritually. If he goe forward without * charitie to make warre, then doth he euill, and to his owne damnation. Wherefore he doth not lawfully nor iustly in proceeding to the damnation of his owne selfe and his brother, whom, though hee see vniustlie to occupie his goods, yet hee doth intend to kill. And what if such kinde of warres were lawfull to the Iewes? this argueth not, that now they are lawfull to christians, because that their deedes were in a shadow of imperfection, but the deeds of christians in the light of perfection. It was not said vnto them, All people that shall take the sword, shall perish with the sword. What if Iohn the Baptist disallowed corporall fightings, and corporall warfare, at such time as the souldiers asked him saying, And what shall we do? Who saith to them, See that you strike no man, neither picke ye quarrels against any, and bee ye contented with your wages. This saying of Iohn alloweth not corporall warre amongst christians. For Iohn was of the Priests of the old Testament, y vnder the law, neither to him it appertained to follow the law, but to warne the people to the perfect obseruation of the law: for hee beeing likewise demanded of the Publicans what they should do, said vnto them, Doe no other thing then is appointed vnto you. But Christ the author of the new testament and of greater perfection, then was the perfection of the old law, which gaue new things, as it plainely appeareth by the Gospell. So that christians ought to receiue information of Christ, not of Iohn. For of Iohn also both Christ speake: Verily I say vnto you, there hath not risen amongst the children of women, a greater then Iohn Baptist; but he that is least in the kingdome of heauen, is greater then he. In which saying, Christ sheweth, that they that be least in the kingdome of heauen in the time of grace, are placed in greater perfection then was Iohn, which was one of them that were the elders, and he lined also in the time of the law in greater perfection. And when as certaine of Iohns disciples said vnto him: Master, hee that was beyond Iordan, to whom thou gauest witnesse, behold he baptizeth, and all people come vnto him; Iohn answered and said: A man cannot take vpon him, vnlesse it shall bee giuen him from aboue. You your selues bee beare mee record, that I said I am not Christ, but that I was sent before him. Hee that hath the bride, is the bridegroom; as for the bridegromes friend, who standeth and heareth him, he reioyceth with great ioy to heare the voice of the bridegroome. This therefore my ioy is fulfilled: he must increase, and I must bee diminished. Hee that commeth from an high is aboue all. Hee that is of the earth is earthy, and speaketh of the earth: Hee that commeth from heauen, is aboue all folkes; that which he hath seene and heard, the same doth hee witnesse, and yet his witnessing doth no body receiue. But he that receiueth his witnessing, hath put to his Seale, that God is true. For hee whom God hath sent, speaketh the words of God.

By which things it plainely appeareth, that credence is to be giuen neither to Iohn, nor yet to Angell, if hee teach any thing that is not agreeable to Christs doctrine. For Christ is about the Angels, because that God infinitely passeth them in wisedome. Now if Moses the seruant of God, a minister of the old Testament was so much to bee beleeued, that nothing could be added, nor yet any thing diminished, from the commandements that were giuen by him, (for so Moses had said, The thing that I command thee, that doe thou onely to the Lord, neither adde thou any thing, nor diminish;) how much more ought wee not to adde nor to take away from the commandements giuen by God himselfe, and also the sonne of God? In the primitiue church because the christians had feruent loue & charitie, they obserued these precepts as they were giuen: but their feruent charitie afterward waxing lukewarme, they inuented glosses by drawing the commandements of God backe to their owne deeds, which they purposed to iustifie and maintaine: that is to say, warres against the infidels. But that these by warres should be conuerted to the faith, is a fast faithlesse enough: because, that by violence or vnwillingly, no body can beleeue in Christ, nor bee made a christian, neither did hee come to destroy them by battell, that beleeued not in him: for he said to his disciples, You know not what spirit you are of. The sonne of man came not to destroy mens liues, but to saue them. Then to grant pardons and forgiuenes of sinnes to those that kill the infidels, is to much an infidels fact, seducing many people. For what greater seducing can there be, then to promise to a man forgiuenesse of sinnes, and afterward the top of heauen, for setting himselfe against Christs commandements in the killing of the infidels, that would not be conuerted to the faith? whereas Christ doth say, Not euery one that saith to me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdome of heauen; but he that doth the will of my father which is in heauen, this person shall enter into the kingdome of heauen. And the will of the father is, that we should beleeue in his onely sonne Iesus Christ, and that we should obey him by obseruing of those things which he himselfe hath commanded. Wherefore Christs precepts of patience must bee fulfilled. Warres, fightings, and contentions must be left, because they are contrarie to charitie.

But peraduenture some man will thus reason against Christ: The saints by whom God hath wrought miracles, do allow warres against the faithfull people, as alls against the infidels. And the holy kings were warriers, for whose sakes miracles alo haue beene shewed, as well in their death, as also in their life, yea in the very tim wherein they were warriers. Wherefore it seemeth that their facts were good and lawfull. For otherwise, God would not haue done miracles for them.

To this against I say, that we for no miracles must do contrarie to the doctrine of Christ; for in it can there be no errour: but in miracles there oftentimes chanceth errour, as it is plaine as well by the old as by the new Testament. God forbid then, that a Christian should for perceiuable miracles, depart from the infallible doctrine of Christ. In Exodus the 7. chapter it is manifest, how that the wicked wise men of the Egyptians, through the inchantments of Egypt, and certaine secret workings, threw their wands vpon the earth, which were turned into Dragons, euen as Aaron beforetime in the presence of Pharao threw his wand vpon the earth, which by the power of God was turned into a serpent. In the third of the Kings, the 22. chap. Micheas did see the Lord sitting vpon his throne, and all the host of heauen standing about him on the right hand, and on the left. And the Lord said, who shall deceiue Achab the king of Israel, that he may goe vp and bee slaine in Ramoth Gilead? And one said this way, and an other otherwise: now, there went forth a spirit, and stood before the Lord and said, I will deceiue him. To whom the Lord spake: by what meanes? And he said, I will goe forth, and bee a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And the Lord said, thou shalt deceiue him and preuaile, goe thy wayes forth, and doe euen so. Thus also is it written in Deuteronomium: If there shall arise a prophet amongst you, or one that shall say he hath seene a dreame, and shall tell it a signe and a wonder: and if that shall come to passe that he hath spoken, and hee shall say vnto thee, let vs goe and follow strange Gods (whom thou knowest not) and let vs serue them: thou shalt not hearken vnto the words of that prophet or dreamer, for the Lord your God tempteth you, to make it knowne whether yee loue him or no, with all your heart and with all your soule.

In Jeremy the 23. chap. Are not my words euen like fire, saith the Lord? and like an hammer that breaketh the stone? Therefore behold, I will come against the prophets which haue reaued a lie (saith the Lord) which haue shewed those things, and haue seduced the people through their lies and their miracles, when as I sent them not, neither commanded them; which haue brought no profit vnto this people (saith the Lord.) In Sparke the 13. chapter, saith Christ: For there shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall shew great signes and wonders to deceiue if it were possible euen the very elect. Apoc. 13.

In the Apocalypse the 13. chapter, John saw a beast ascending vp out of the earth, and it had two hornes like a lamb, but he spake like the dragon, and hee did all that the first beast could doe before him: and he caused the earth, and the inhabitants thereof to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed, and did great wonders, so that he made fire come downe from heauen on the earth, in the sight of men, and deceiued them that dwelt on the earth, by meanes of the signes which were permitted him to do in the sight of the beast.

Miracles are to be tried.

By these things it is most manifest and plaine, that in miracles this manifold errour oftentimes happeneth through the working of the diuell, to deceiue the people withall. Therefore, we ought not for the working of miracles, to depart from the commandements of God: I would to God that they which put confidence in miracles, would giue heede vnto the word of Christ, in the 7. chap. of Matth. thus speaking: Many shall say vnto me in that day, Lord, Lord, haue we not in thy name prophecied? and in thy name cast out diuels? and in thy name done many great workes? &c. I will professe vnto them, I neuer knew you, depart from me all yee which worke iniquitie.

Matth. 7.

By this saying it is most manifest, that the seruants of Christ are not discerned by the working of miracles but by the working of vertues, departing from iniquity, and obaying the commandements of God. Wherefore it is wonderfull, that any in this life dare presume to preuent the day of the iudgement of God, to iudge by meanes of miracles, that some are Saints whom men ought to worship, who peraduenture God will in the last iudgement condemne, saying: depart from me all ye which worke iniquitie. If any man could here on earth iudge sinners to be condemned, then if this iudgement were certaine, Christ should not iudge the second time, and whatsoeuer such iudges bind in earth, the same ought to be bound in heauen. But if such a iudgement bee vncertaine, then it is perilleous and full of deceit, when as by it men on earth may in stead of saints worship such as are damned with the fellowship of the diuels, and in prayer require their aide, who euen like as the diuels their companions are more readie and more of might to euill then to good, more to hurt then to profit. I wonder they marke not that Christ said, when his sinfull woman came vnto him, desiring and requiring some thing of him, and saying: Command that these my two sonnes may sit, one vpon thy right hand and the other vpon thy left hand, in thy kingdome. But Iesus answering, said: Ye know not what yee aske, can ye drinke of the cup which I shall drinke of? they said vnto him, wee can. He said vnto them, Of my cup indeed yee shall drinke, but to sit at my right hand or at my left, it is not mine to giue, but vnto whom it is prepared for, of my father, Christ, being equall vnto the father according to his Godhead, exceeding all manner of men, according to his manhood, namely in goodnes and wisdome, said, to sit at my right hand, or at my left, is not mine to giue, but vnto whom it is prepared of my father. If it were none of his to giue to sit at the right hand, or at the left, &c. how then is it in the power of any sinfull man to giue vnto any man a seate either on the right hand, or on the left in the kingdome of God? which sinfull man knoweth not whether such haue any seat prepared for them of the father in his kingdome. They much erre if themselues which exercise this iudicial power in giuing iudgement; that there are some saints, which ought to be honoured of men, by reason of the euidencie of dreames, or of deceitfull miracles, of which men they are ignorant whether God in his iudgement will condemne them or not, together with the diuels for euer to be tormented. Let them beware, for the vnfalsible truth saith, that euery one that exalteth himselfe, shall be brought low.

By these things is gathered, that the warres of Christians are not lawfull, for that by the doctrine and life of Christ they are prohibited, by reason of the euidencie of the deceitfull miracles of those, which haue made warres amongst the Christians, as well against the Christians, as also against the infidels. Because Christ could not erre in his doctrine, for as much as he was God: And for as much as heauen and earth shall passe away, but thy words of Christ shall not passe away: Hee therefore which establisheth his lawes, allowing warres and the slaughter of men in the warre, as well of Christians, as of infidels, doth he not iustifie those things which are contrarie vnto the gospell and law of Christ? Therefore in this he is against Christ, and therefore Antichrist: seducing the people, making men beleeue that to be lawfull and meritorious vnto them, which is expresly prohibited by Christ.

Of this and thus much concerning the first part, touching peace and warre. wherein hee declareth Christ and the pope to bee contrarie, that is, the one to be gruen all to peace, the other all to warre, and so to proue in conclusion the pope to bee Antichrist. Where in the meane time thou must vnderstand gentle reader, his meaning rightly: not that he so thinketh, no kind of warres among the Christians in any case to be lawfull, for he himselfe before hath openly protested the contrary. But that his purpose is to procure the pope in al his doings and teachings, more to be addicted to warre then to peace, yea in such cases, where is no necessitie of warre. And therein plainely he the pope to be contrary to Christ, that is, to be Antichrist. Now he proceedeth further to the second part, which is of mercie.

In the which part he vseweth how Christ teacheth vs to bee mercifull, because mercie (as we saith) proceedeth from charitie, and nourisheth it. In which doctrine of mercie, he breaketh not the law of righteousnes, for hee himselfe by mercie hath cleansed vs from our sinnes, from which wee could not by the righteousnesse of the law, be cleansed. But whom he hath made cleane by mercie, vndoubtedly it behoueth vpon same to bee alls mercifull. For in the fifth chapter of Matthew, hee saith: Blessed are the mercifull, for they shall obtaine mercie. And againe in the sixth of Matthew: If yee forgiue vnto men their sinnes, your father will forgiue vnto you your sinnes. And again, in the seuenth chapter of Matthew: Iudge not, and yee shall not be iudged, condemne not, and ye shal not be condemned, and with what measure ye measure, with the same shall it be measured vnto you againe. In the 18. chap. of Math. Peter asked the Lord, saying: Lord, how often shall my brother sinne against me, and I shall forgiue him, seuen times? Iesus said vnto him: I say not vnto thee seuen times, but seuentie times seuen times. Therefore is the kingdome of heauen likened vnto a certaine King, which would take account of his seruants. And when he had begun to reckon, one was brought vnto him which ought him ten thousand talents: And because he had nothing wherewithall to pay, his maister commanded him to be sold, and his wife and his children, and all that he had, and the debt to be paid. The seruant therefore fell downe, and besought him, saying, haue patience with me, and I will pay thee all. And the Lord had pitie on that seruant, and loosed him, and forgaue him the debt. But when that seruant was departed, he found one of his fellow seruants, which ought him an hundred pence, and hee laid hands on him, and tooke him by the throte, saying, pay me that thou owest: and his fellow fell downe, and besought him, saying: Haue patience with me, and I will pay thee all. But he would not, but went and cast him into prison, till hee should pay the debt. And when his other fellowes saw the things that were done, they were very sorie, and came and declared vnto their master all that was done: Then his master called him, and said vnto him: O thou vngracious seruant, I forgaue thee all that debt when thou desiredst me: Oughtest thou not then also to haue had pitie on thy fellow, euen as I had pitie on thee? And his lord was wroth, and deliuered him vnto the iaylers, till hee should pay all that was due vnto him. So likewise shall my heauenly father do vnto you, except yee forgiue from your hearts each one to his brother their trespasses.

Matth. 18. Mercy and pitie commended among christians.

By this doctrine it is most plaine and manifest, that euery Christian ought to bee mercifull vnto his brother, how often soeuer hee offendeth against him. Because we so often as we offend, do aske mercie of God. Wherefore, for as much as our offence against God is farre more grieuous then any offence of our brother against vs: it is plaine, that it behoueth vs to be mercifull vnto our brethren, if we will haue mercy at Gods hand. But contrarie to this doctrine of mercie the Pope, bishop maketh and confirmeth many lawes, which punish offenders, euen vnto the death. As it is plaine by the processe of the decrees, Dist. 23. quest. 5. It is declared and determined, that to kill men ex officio, that is, hauing authority and power so to doe, is not sinne. And againe: The souldier which is obedient vnto the higher power, and so killeth a man, is not guiltie of murther. And againe, He is the minister of the Lord, which smiteth the euill in that they are euill and killeth them. And many other such like things are throughout the whole processe of that question determined: That for certaine kinds of sinnes men ought by the rigour of the law to bee punished euen vnto death. But the foundation of their sawing, they take out of the old law, in which for diuers transgressions were appointed diuers punishments. It is very much wonderfull vnto me, why that wise men being the authors and makers of lawes, do alwaies for the foundation of their sayings, leah vpon the shadow of the law, and not the light of the gospell of Iesus Christ, for they giue not heed vnto the figure of perfection, nor yet vnto the perfection figured. Is it not written in the third of Iohn, God sent not his son into the world to iudge the world, but to saue the world by him? In Iohn the 8. chap. The scribes and pharises bring in a woman taken in aduiterie, and set her in the midst, & said vnto Christ: Master, euen now this woman was taken in aduiterie. But in the law, Moses hath commanded vs to stone such, what saist thou therefore? This they said to tempt him, that they might accuse him. But Iesus stouped downe, and with his finger wrote on the ground. And while they continued asking him: hee lift himselfe vp, and said vnto them, let him that is among you without sinne, cast the first stone at her. And againe hee stouped and wrote on the ground. And when they heard it, they went out one by one, beginning at the eldest: so Iesus was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst. When Iesus had lift vp himselfe againe, he said vnto her: where be they which accused thee, hath no man condemned thee? She said, no man Lord. And Iesus said vnto her: Neither doe I condemne

the. God thy way and sinne now no more.

It is manifest by the scriptures, that Christ was promised he should be king of the Iewes, and vnto the kings pertained the iudgements of the law: but because he came not to iudge sinners according to the rigor of the law, but came according to grace, taking that which was lost, in calling the sinner to repentance: it is most plaine, that in the comming of the law of grace, he would haue the iudgement of the law of righteousnesse to cease: for otherwise he had dealt vnfaithfully with the foresaid woman, forasmuch as the witnesses of her adulterie, bare witnes against her. Wherefore seeing the same king Christ was a Iudge, if it had been his will that the righteousnesse of the law should bee obserued, he ought to haue adiudged the woman to death, according as the law commaunded: which thing foras much as he did not, it is most euident that the iudgements of the righteousnesse of the law are finished in the commings of the king, being king of the law of grace: euen as the sacrifices of the priesthood of Aaron, are finished in the comming of the priest, according to the order of Melchisedech, who hath offered himselfe vp for our sinnes: because, as it is before said, neither the righteousnes of the law, nor sacrifices for sinne, brought any man to perfection. Therefore it was necessary that the same, by reason of their imperfection, should cease. And seeing among all the lawes of the world, the law of Moses was most iust, forasmuch as the author thereof was God, who is the most iust iudge: and by that law always loke, what manner of iniurie one had done vnto another, contrarie to the commandement of the law, the like iniurie he should receiue for his transgression, according to the vpright iudgement of the law: As death for death, a blow for a blow, burning for burning, wound for wound, eie for eie, tooth for tooth, and most iust punishments were ordained according to the quantitie of the sinnes. But if this law of righteousnesse be cleane taken away in the comming of the law of grace, how then shall the law of the Gentiles remaine among Christians, which was neuer iust? Is not this true, that in them, which are conuerted vnto the faith, there is no distinction betweene the Iew and the Gentile? For both are vnder sinne, and are iustified by grace in the faith of Christ, being called vnto faith and vnto the perfection of the Gospell.

Therefore the Gentiles conuerted, are not bound to play the Iewes, to follow the law of the Iewes: why should the Iewish conuerted, follow the lawes of the Gentiles which are not so good? Wherefore it is to bee wondred at, why theues are among Christians, for theft put to death, where after the law of Moses they were not put to death. Christians suffer adulterers to liue, Sodomites, and they which exercise father and mother, and many other vile sinners: And they which according to the most iust law of God were condemned to death, are not put to death: So we neither keepe the law of righteousnes giuen of God, nor the law of mercie taught by Christ.

Wherefore the law makers and Iudges, doe not giue heed vnto ye foresaid sentence of Christ vnto the Scribes and Phārisies, who said: He which amongst you is without sinne, let him cast the first stone at her. What is hee that dareth be so bold as to say hee is without sinne? Yea, and without a grieuous sinne, when as the transgression of the commandement of God is a grieuous sinne? And what man say that hee neuer transgressed this commandment of God, Thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe? Or the other commandement which is of greater force: Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with all thy hearte &c. Wherefore tho vi what soeuer thou art that iudgest thy brother vnto death, thinkest thou that thou shalt escape the iudgement of God, which peraduenture hast offended more grieuously then hath hee whom thou iudgest? How best thou amisse in thy brothers eie, and best not a beame in thine owne eie? Knowest thou not that with what measure thou measurest, that same shall bee measured to you againe? Doth not the scripture say: Vnto mee belongeth vengeance, and I will render it againe, saith the Lord? How can any man say that these men can with charitie keepe these iudgements of death? Who is it that offendeth God, and desireth of God iust iudgement for his offence? Hee desireth not iudgement, but mercie. If hee desire mercie for himselfe, why desireth he vengeance for his brother offending? How therefore loueth hee his brother as himselfe? Or how doeth thou shew mercy vnto thy brother (as thou art bound by the commandement of Christ, which seeketh the greatest vengeance vpon him that hath committed iniurie vnto him? For death is the most terrible thing of all, and a more grieuous punishment then death, can no man inferre. Therefore, they which will keepe charitie, ought to obserue the commandements of Christ touching mercie: and they which liue in the law of charitie ought to leaue the law of vengeance and iudgements. Ought we to beleeue, that Christ in his comming, by grace abrogated the most iust law which he himselfe gaue vnto the children of Israel by Moses his seruant, and established the lawes of the Gentiles being not so iust to bee obserued of his faithfull? Doth not Daniel expounding the dreame of Nabuchodonosor the king concerning the image, whose head was of gold, the brest and armes of siluer, the belie and thighes of brasse, the legges of iron, one part of the feet was of iron, and the other part of clay. Nabuchodonosor saw that a stone was cut out of a mountaine without hands, and brake the Image in his feet of iron and of clay, and brake them to peeces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brasse, the siluer and gold broken altogether, and became like the chaffe of the sommer flower, which is caried away by the wind, and there was no place found for them: and the stone that smote the image, became a great mountaine, & filled the whole earth. He applieth therefore 4. kingdoms vnto the foure parts of the image, namely; the kingdome of the Babylonians vnto the head of the gold; the kingdom of the Medes and Persians vnto the brest and armes of siluer; the kingdome of the Grecians vnto the belly and thighes of brasse: But the fourth kingdome, which is of the Romans, hee applieth vnto the feet and legges of iron. And Daniel addeth: In the daies of these kingdomes, shall God raise vp a kingdome which shall neuer be destroyed: And his kingdome shall not be deliuered vnto another, but it shall breake and destroy those kingdomes: and it shall stand for euer, according as thou sawest, that the stone was cut out of the mountaine without hands, and brake in peeces the clay and iron, brasse, siluer and gold. Seeing therefore it is certaine, that this stone signifieth Christ, whose kingdome is for euer: it is also a thing most allowed, that he ought to raigne euery where, and to breake in peeces the other kingdomes of the world. Therefore if terrestriall kings and the terrestriall kingdome of the Iewes, and their lawes and iudgements haue ceased by Christ the king, calling the Iewes vnto the perfection of his Gospell, namely, vnto Faith and Charitie: it is not to be doubted, but that the kingdome of the Gentiles which is more imperfect and their lawes, ought to cease among the Gentiles, departing from their Gentilitie vnto the perfection of the Gospell of Iesus Christ. For there is no distinction betweene the Iewes and Gentiles being conuerted vnto the faith of Christ, but all of them abiding in that eternall kingdome, ought to bee vnder one law of charitie and of iustice. Therefore they ought to haue mercie, and to leaue the iudgements of death, and the desire of vengeance. Wherefore they which do make lawes marke not the parable of Christ, saying: The kingdome of heauen is like vnto a man which sowed good seed in his field: but when men were on sleepe, the enemy came and sowed tares in the midst of the wheate, and went his way. But when the herb was growne and brought forth fruite, then appeared the tares. And the seruants came vnto the good man of the house, and said vnto him, Lord, didst not thou sowe good seed in thy field? from whence then come these tares? And hee said vnto them: The enemie hath done this. And the seruants said vnto him: Wilt thou that wee goe and gather them vp? And he said, no, lest peraduenture in gathering vp the tares ye plucke vp the wheate by the roote: Suffer them both to growe vntill the haruest, and in the time of the haruest, I will say vnto the haruest men, gather first the tares and bind them in bundels that they may bee burnt, but gather the wheate into my barne. Christ himselfe onely expoundeth this parable in the selfesame chapter, saying: He which soweth the good seed is the sonne of man, but the field is the world, and the good seed, those are the children of the kingdome. But the tares are the naughtie children. And the enemie which soweth them is the diuell. And the haruest is the end of the world, and the haruest men are the Angels. Euen as therefore the tares are gathered and burnt with fire, so shall it bee in the end of the world. The sonne of man shall send his Angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdome all offenders, and these which commit iniquitie, and shall put them into a furnace of fire, there shal be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

By which plaine doctrine it is manifest, that Christ will haue mercie shewed vnto sinners, euen vnto the end of the world, and will haue them to remaine mingled with the good: Least peraduenture when a man thinketh that hee doth right well, to take away the tares, he taketh away the wheate. For how great a sinner soeuer a man be, we know not whether his end shall be good, and whether in the end he shall obtaine mercy of God: Neither are we certaine of the time wherein God will by grace iudge him whom we abhorre as a sinner. And peraduenture such a one shall more profit after his conuersion in the Church, then he who we thinke to be iust, as it came to passe in Paul. And if God iustifieth a man by grace (although at his end) why dareth thou bee so bold to be his iudge, and to condemne him? For Peter, although a man seme to bee obstinate and hardned in his euill, so that he is not corrected by a secret correction (correct him before one alone) if he bee not receiue open correction being done before two or three witnesses, neither passeth vpon a manifest correction when his sinne is made knowne vnto the Church: Christ doth not teach to punish such a one with the punishment of death. Yea rather he saith, If he harken not vnto the church, let him bee vnto thee as an Ethnicke and Publican. And Paul following this doctrine in the 1. Corinth. 5. chapter, saith: There goeth a common saying, that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not once named among the Gentils, that one should haue his fathers wife. And yee are puffed vp, and haue not rather sorowed, that he which hath done this deed, might be put from among you. For I verily as absent in bodie, but present in spirit, haue allreadie determined, as though I were present: that he which hath done this thing, when ye are gathered together and my spirit, in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ, that such one by the power of our Lord Iesus Christ, be deliuered vnto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may bee saued in the day of the Lord Iesus. Paul teacheth not to kill this man (as some gather by this text) but to separate him from the other faithfull, & so from Christ, which is the head of the church of the faithfull, and so is he deliuered vnto Satan, which is separated from Christ: that the flesh may be killed, that is, that that carnall concupiscence, wherby he luxuriously lusted after the wife of his father, may bee destroyed in him, by such a separation, that the spirit may be saued; and not that his bodie should be killed, as some say, as it is moll manifest in the selfesame chapter, where hee saith: I wrote vnto you an epistle, that ye should not keepe companie with fornicators, and I meant not of all the fornicators of this world, either of the couetous, or extortioners or idolaters, for then must ye needs haue gone out of the world. But now I haue written vnto you, that ye keepe not companie together: if any that is called a brother be a fornicator, or couetous person, or a worshipper of images, either a cursed speaker, or drunkard, or an extortioner: with him that is such, see that ye eate not.

By which it is manifest, that Paul would haue the foresaid fornicatour separated from the fellowship of the faithfull: that his carnall concupiscence might be mortified, for the health of the spirit, and not that the bodie should be killed. Wherefore, they doe ill vnderstand Paul, which by this saying doe confirme the killing of men. And forsomuch as heresie is one of the most grieuous sinnes (for an heretike leadeth men in errors, wherby they are made to stray from faith, without which they cannot be saued) it doth most great hurt in the church.

Further as concerning such a wicked man, Paul thus speaketh, As from the man that is an heretike after the first and second correction, knowing that such a one is subuerted and sinneth, forsomuch as hee is by his owne iudgement condemned. Behold Paul teacheth not to kill this man, but with Christ to separate him from the fellowship of the faithfull. But some say, that Peter in the primitiue church slew Ananias and Saphira for their sinnes, wherefore they say it is lawfull for them, to condemne wicked men to death. We will declare in shewing the whole processe how falslie they speake in alleaging of Peter, for to iustifie their errour.

In the fourth chapter of the Acts it is written, that as manie as were possessors of lands or houses, they sold them and offered the prices of that which they sold, and laid it before the feet of the apostles: and it was diuided vnto euery one as he had need thereof. But a certaine man called Ananias with Saphira his wife sold a peece of land, and kept backe a part of the price of the field, his wife being priuie vnto it, and bringing a certaine part thereof, he laid it at the feet of the Apostles. But Peter said vnto Ananias: Ananias, why hath Satan tempted thy heart that thou shouldest lie vnto the holy Ghost, to keepe backe a part of the price of the land? Did it not whilest it remained, remaine vnto thee: and being sold, was it not in thine owne power? why hast thou conceiued this thing in thine heart? Thou hast not lied vnto men, but vnto God. And when Ananias heard these words, he fell downe and gaue vp the ghost, and great feare came on all them that heard these things. And the young men rose vp and tooke him vp, and caried him out and buried him. And it came to passe about the space of three houres after, that his wife came in being ignorant of that which was done. And Peter said vnto her, Tell me woman, sold ye the land for so much? And she said, yea for so much. But Peter said vnto her, why haue ye agreed together to tempt the spirit of the Lord? Behold, the feet of them which buried thy husband are at the doore, and shall carrie thee out. And straightway she fell downe before his feet, and gaue vp the ghost, and the young men entring in, found her dead, and they caried her out, and buried her by her husband. And great feare came on all the church, and all those which heard these things. It is manifest that any man that is wise, will say that by this processe Peter slew Ananias or his wife. For it was not his act but the act of God, who made a wedding to his son, and sent his seruants to call them, that were bidden vnto the wedding, and they would not come. The king then sent forth his seruants, to the outcomers of the high waies, together all that they could find, both good and euill: And so they did. And the marriage was full furnished with guests: The crime in all the king to view and see them sitting. Among whom he perceiued there one sitting hauing not a wedding garment, and saith vnto him, friend how camest thou hither? And he being dumbe had not a word to speake. Then said the king to the seruitors, take and bind him hand and fot, and cast him into the outward darknesse, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Many there be called, but few chosen, &c.

It is manifest, that this wedding garment is charitie, without which, because Ananias entred into the marriage of Christ, he was giuen to death, that by one many might be enfourmed to learne and vnderstand: that they which haue faith and not charitie, although they appeare to men to haue, yet it cannot be ioyned to the spirit of God, that they do raine. Such there are no doubt, but they shall be excluded from the marriage of Christ, as was he this here corrupted in the death of Ananias and his wife by the hand of God, and not by the hand of Peter. And how should Peter then haue iudged Ananias (albeit he had iudged him) worthie of death by the rigor of the old lawe? For why? by the lawe he had not been guiltie of death, for that part, which they fraudulently and diuelishlie did reserue to themselues. Yea, and if they had done as much from another man, which was greater: neither yet for his lie committed, he had not therefore by that law of iustice been found guiltie of death. Wherefore if he did not condemne him by the law of iustice, it appeareth that he condemned him by the law of grace and mercie, which he learned of Christ. And consequently it followeth much more apparant, that Peter could not put him to death. Furthermore, to say that Peter put him to death by the mere motion of his owne will, and not by the authoritie of the olde lawe, nor by the new, it were derogatorie and slanderous to the good fame and name of Peter. But if Peter did kill him, why then doth the bishop of Rome (which pretendeth) to be successor of Peter, excuse himselfe and his priests from the iudgement of death against heretiques and other offendors, although they themselues be consenting to such iudgements done by lay men? For that which was done of Peter (with out offence, may reasonablie excuse him and his fellow priests from the spot of crime: Acts 5. It is manifest that there was another which did more greeuously offend then Ananias, and that Peter rebuked him with more sharpe words: but yet he commanded him not so to be put to death. For Simon Magus also remaining at Samaria, after that he beleeued and was baptized, he ioyned himselfe with Philip: And when he saw that the holy Spirit was giuen by the Apostles (laying their hands vpon men) hee offered them money, saying: Giue vnto me this power, that vpon whomsoeuer I shall lay mine hand, he shall receiue the holy Ghost. To whom Peter answered: Destroyed be thou and thy money together: And for that thou supposest the gift of God to bee bought with money, thou shalt haue neither part nor fellowship in this our rine. Thy heart is not pure before God: therefore repent thee of thy wickednesse, and pray vnto God that this wicked thought of thy heart may be forgiuen thee: for I perceiue thou art euen in the bitter gall of wickednesse and band of iniquitie. Behold here the grieuous offence of Simon, Peters bitter rebuking of him, and yet therevpon he was not put to death. Wherby it appeareth that the death of Ananias aforesaid, proceeded of God and not of Peter. Of all these things it is to be gathered, seeing the iudgements of death are not grounded vpon the expresse and plaine Scriptures, but only vnder the shadow of the old law: that they are not to be obserued of Christians because they are contrarie to charitie. Ergo, the bishop of Rome appealing such iudgements allowed by those that are contrarie to the lawe and doctrine of Christ, as before is said of warres, where he appoueth and iustifieth the: it which is contrarie to charitie. The order of priesthood, albe it if both iustifie the iudgements to death of the laitie, whereby offenders are condemned to die, yet are they themselues forbidden to put in execution the same iudgements. The priests of the old law being figured, when Pilate said vnto them concerning Christ (whom they had accused worthy death) take him vnto you, and according to your lawe iudge him, answered: that it was not lawfull for them to put to death any man.

Whereby it appeareth that our priests being much more perfect, may not lawfully giue iudgement of death against any offenders: yet notwithstanding, they claime vnto them the power iudicall vpon offenders: Because, say they, it belongeth vnto them to know the offences by the auricular confession of the offenders, and to inioyne vpon the same being known, penances to inioyne diuers penances vnto the parties offending, according to the quantitie of their offences committed, so that the sinner may make satisfaction, say they, vnto God for the offences which he neuer committed. And to confirme vnto them this iudicial power, they alleage the scriptures in many places, wresting it to serue their purpose.

First they say that the bishop of Rome (who is the chiefe priest and iudge among them) hath full power and authoritie to remit sinnes. Whereupon they say, that hee is able iustlie and iuslie to absolue a man a poena & culpa, so that if a man at the time of his death, as his remission, he should straightwaies be vnto heauen without any paine of Purgatorie. The other Bishops (as they say) haue not so great authoritie. The priests constituted vnder euery Bishop, haue power, say they, to absolue the sinnes of them that are confessed, but not all kinde of sinnes: because there are some grieuous sinnes reserued to the absolutions of the Bishops: and some againe to the absolution onely of the chiefe and high Bishop. They say also that it behoueth the offenders, for the necessitie of their soules health, to call to remembrance their offences, and to manifest the same with all the circumstances thereof, vnto the priest in auricular confession, supplying the place of God, after the manner of a Iudge: and afterward humbly to fulfill the

There is meant, a double death, the one, that whereby the soule is separated from the bodie, and this death is not to be feared, by reason of the immortalitie of the soule. The other death is, when the soule is separated from God by sinne, and this death is to be feared.

Here is declared, that the iudgements of the law of righteousnesse ceased in the commings of Christ, and that they which liue in the law of charitie, ought to leaue the law of vengeance.

Here is declared, that Christ abrogated the law of iustice.

Here is declared, that the iudgements of death ceased in the comming of Christ.

Here is declared, that the iudgements of the law of righteousnesse the penance enioyned vnto him by the priest for his sinnes, except the said penance so enioyned, or any part thereof bee released by the superior power. All these things (say they) are manifestly determined, as well in the decrees, as decretals. And although these things haue not expressly their foundation in the plaine and manifest doctrine of Christ, nor any of the Apostles: yet the authors of the decrees and decretals concerning this matter, haue grounded the same vpon diuers places of the Scriptures, as in the processe of Christ in the Gospell of S. Mat. the 16. chapter. Whereupon they ground Matthew. the popes supreme power iudiciall, to surmount the powers of other priests, as where Christ said vnto his disciples: whom doe men say that I am? And they answered: some say that thou art Iohn Baptist, some Elias, and some Ieremie, or one of the Prophets. To whom he said: but you say you that I am? Simon Peter making answere, said: Thou art Christ the sonne of the liuing God. And Iesus answered and said vnto him: Blessed art thou Simon the sonne of Ionas, for flesh and blood hath not reuealed this vnto thee: but my father which is in heauen. And I say vnto thee, that thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke will I build my church: and hell gates shall not preuaile against it. And I will giue thee the keies of the kingdome of heauen. And whatsoeuer thou shalt binde vpon earth, shall also be bound in heauen: and whatsoeuer thou shalt loose vpon earth, shall be loosed also in heauen.

Out of this text of Christ, diuers expositions haue bene made diuers errors. For when Christ said: And I say vnto thee, that thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke will I build my Church: Some thereupon affirme, that Christ meant he would build his church vpon Peter by authoritie of that text, as it is written in the first part of the decrees, Dist. 19. cap. Ita dominus noster. The exposition hereof is ascribed to pope Leo: the errour whereof is manifestly knowne. For the church of Christ is not builded vpon Peter, but vpon the rocke of Peters confession, for that he said: Thou art Christ the sonne of the liuing God: and for that Christ said singularlie vnto Peter: I will giue vnto thee the keies of the kingdome of heauen, and whatsoeuer thou shalt binde, &c. By this saying they affirme, that Christ gaue vnto Peter specially, as chiefe of the rest of the Apostles, a larger power to binde and to loose, then he did vnto the rest of the Apostles or disciples. And because Peter answered for himselfe and all the Apostles, not only confessing the faith which he had chiefly aboue the rest, but also the faith which the rest of the Apostles had euen as himselfe, by the reuelation of the heauenly father: it appeareth that as the faith of all the Apostles was declared by the answer of one: so by this that Christ said vnto Peter, whatsoeuer thou shalt binde, &c. is giuen vnto the rest of the Apostles the same power and equalitie to binde and to loose, as vnto Peter. Which Christ declareth in the gospell of S. Matthew, the 18. chapter, in these words: Verely I say vnto you, what things soeuer you shall binde vpon earth, shall be bound in heauen, and whatsoeuer you shall loose vpon earth, shall be also loosed in heauen. And further hee addeth: And againe, I say vnto you, That if two of you shall consent vpon earth, and request what soeuer it be: it shall bee granted vnto you of my father which is in heauen. For when two or three be gathered together in my name, I am there in the midst of them. And in Iohn the twentith chapter, he saieth generally vnto them: Receiue ye my spirit. Whose sinnes yee shall remit, shall be remitted vnto them: and whose sinnes you shall retaine, shall be retained.

By this it appeareth, that the power to binde and to loose is not specially granted to Peter, as chiefe and head of the rest: and that by him the rest had their power to binde and to loose; for that the head of the body of the church is one, which is Christ, and the head of Christ is God. Peter and the rest of the Apostles, are the good members of the bodie of Christ, receiuing power and vertue of Christ: whereby they doe confirme and glew together the other members (as well the strong and nable, as the weak and vnable) to a perfect compolition and semelinesse of the bodie of Christ: that all honour from all parts and members may bee giuen vnto Christ as head and chiefe, by whom as head, all the members are gouerned. And therefore Paul, 1. Corinthians chap. 2. Whē one man saith, I hold of Paul, and another saith, I hold of Apollo, are ye not carnall men? For what is Apollo? what is Paul? The minister of him in whom ye haue beleeued, and hee as God giueth vnto euery man. I haue planted, Apollo hath watered, but God hath giuen the increase. Therefore neither he that planteth is any thing, neither he that watereth, but God that giueth the increase. And Paul to the Gal. 2. God hath no respect of persons. Those that seemed to be great, and doe much, auailed or profited me nothing at all: But contrariwise, when they saw that the Gospell of the vncircumcision was committed vnto me, as the circumcisiō vnto Peter (for he that wrought with Peter in the Apostleship of the circumcision, wrought with me also among the Gentils) & when they knew the grace which was giuen me, Peter, Iames and Iohn straightwaies ioyned themselues with me and Barnabas: we among the Gentils, and they in circumcision only might be mindfull of the poore, the which to doe, I was very carefull. Hereby it appeareth, that Paul had not his authoritie of Peter to conuert the Gentils, to baptise them, and to remit their sinnes, but of him which said vnto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? It is hard for thee to kick against the pricke. Here is Paul of the head of the Church, and not of Peter: By which head they say, that all the members are sustained and made liuely.

Galath. 2.

The third error (which the authors of the canons conceine in the said text of Christ) which was said to Peter: Vnto thee will I giue the keies, &c. is this: They say that in this sentence which was said to Peter of the authoritie to bind and lose, was meant: that as Christ gaue vnto Peter aboue all the rest of the Apostles a speciall, and as it were an excellent power aboue all the Apostles: euen so say they, hee gaue vnto the bishops of Rome (whom they call Peters chiefe successors) the same speciall power and authoritie, exceeding the power of all other bishops of the world.

Thyrd error.

The first part of this similitude and comparison, doth appeare manifestly by the premisses to be erroneous: wherein is plainely shewed, that the other Apostles, had equall power with Peter to bind and lose. Wherefore consequently it followeth, the 2. part of the similitude, grounded vpon the same text, to be also erroneous. But and if the first part of the said similitude were truth, as it is not, yet the second part must needs be an errour, wherein is said, that the bishops of Rome are Peters chiefest successors. For although there be but one Catholicke Christian Church, of all the faithfull first conuerted: yet the first part thereof, and first conuerted was of the Iewes, the second of the Greeks, and the third part was of the Romans or Latines. Whereof, the first part was most perfectly conuerted vnto the faith, for that they faithfully obserued the perfection of charitie, as appeareth in the Acts of the Apostles by the multitude of the beleeuers. They were of one heart, and one soule, neither called they any thing that they possessed their owne, but all was common amongst them.

Other Apostles had like power to bind and to loose as Peter had.

Acts 2.

Rom. 2.

Hereupon Paul to the Romans: Salutation to euery beleeuer, first to the Iew, and to the Greekes after the Iewes. The Greekes were the second, and after the Iewes, next conuerted, and after them the Romans, taking their information of the Greekes, as appeareth by the Chronicles, although indeed some Romans were conuerted vnto the faith, by Peter and Paul. And as Christ said thrice vnto Peter, feed my sheepe, so Peter ruled these three Churches, as witnesseth the Chronicles. But first he reformed the church of the Iewes in Ierusalem and Iudea, as appeareth by the testimonie of the Acts of the Apostles: For Acts 1. it is manifest how Peter standing by amongst his brethren, spake vnto them concerning the election of an Apostle in the place of Iudas the traitor, alleaging places out of the Scripture, that another should be vpon him his Apostleship. And so by lot was Matthias constituted in the 12. place of Iudas, Acts 2. After that the holy Ghost was come vpon the Apostles, and that they spake with the tongues of all men, the hearers were astonied at the miracle. And some mocked them, saying: these men are full of new wine: But Peter stood vp and spake vnto them, saying: that it was fulfilled in them that was prophecied by Ioel the Prophet, and hee preached Christ vnto the people, whom they of ignorance had put to death. To whom was a saiour promised by the testimonie of the Prophets. And when they heard the words of Peter, they were pricked at the heart, saying vnto him and the rest of the Apostles: What shall wee then doe? And Peter said vnto them, repent: and let euery one of you be baptised in the name of Iesus Christ for the remission of your sinnes, and ye shall receiue the holy Ghost. And there were ioyned vnto them the same day about three M. soules. And Acts 3. 4. 5. it appeareth, that Peter aboue the rest did those things which belonged to the ministerie of the Apostleship, as well in preaching as in answering. Whereupon some Chronicles say, that Peter gouerned the church of the Iewes at Ierusalem 4. yeres, before he gouerned Antioche. And by the testimonie of Paul to the Gal. as before is said: The Gospell of the vncircumcision is committed to Paul, euen as the circumcision to Peter. And he that wrought with Peter in the Apostleship of circumcision, wrought with Paul amongst the Gentiles. Thereby it appeareth that the Church of the Iewes was committed to the gouernement of Peter. And in the processe of the Acts of the Apostles, it appeareth, that Peter beleeued that the faith of Christ was not to be preached vnto those Gentiles, which alwaies liued in vncleannesse of Idolatrie. But when Peter was at Ioppe, Cornelius a Gentile sent vnto him, that hee would come and shew him the way of life. But Peter (a little before the comming of the messengers of Cornelius) being in his chamber, after he had prayed, fel in a trance, and saw heauen open, and a certaine vessell descending euen as a great sheete, letten downe by foure corners from heauen to earth. In the which, were all manner of foure footed beasts, serpents of the earth, and foules of the aire. And a voice spake vnto him, saying: Arise Peter, kill and eate, and Peter said: Not so Lord, because I haue neuer eaten any common or vncleane thing. This was done thrice. And Peter descended (not knowing what the vision did signifie) and found the messengers of Cornelius.

As concerning the authoritie iudiciall of the clergie, many things are written thereof in the canons of decrees, greatlie to be maruelled at, and farre from the truth of the Scripture. The authors of the canons say: That Christ gaue vnto the priests, power iudiciall ouer sinners that confessed their sinnes vnto them. And this they ground vpon the text of Christ: I will giue vnto thee the keies of the kingdome of heauen, and whatsoeuer thou loosest, &c. And these keies of the kingdome of heauen, they call the knowledge to discerne, and the power to iudge, which they say onely belongeth to the priests, except in case of necessitie; then they say a lay man may absolue a man from sinne. And as touching absolution, they say there are three things to be required on the sinners part: first, hearty contrition, whereby the sinners ought to bewaile their offending of God though sinnes: the second is, auricular confession, whereby the sinner ought to shew vnto the priest his sinnes, and the circumstances of them: the third is satisfaction, though penance inioined vnto him by the priest for his sinnes committed. And of his part that giueth absolution, there are two things (say they) to be required: that is to say, knowledge to discerne one sinne from another, whereby hee ought to make a difference of sinnes, and appoint a conuenient penance, according to the quantitie of the sinnes. The second is, authority to iudge, whereby he ought to minister penance to the offender. And further they say, that he that is confessed, ought with all humilitie to submit himselfe to this authoritie, and wholly and voluntarily to doe those penances which are commanded him by the priest, except the said penance bee released by a superior power: for all priests (as they say) haue not equall authoritie to absolue sinnes. The chiefe priest, whom they call Peters successor, hath power fully and wholly to absolue. But the inferior priests haue power, some more, some lesse. The more as they are nere him in dignitie, the lesse as they are farther from the degree of his dignitie. All this is declared by the decrees in the decrees, but not by the expresse doctrine of Christ, or any of his Apostles. For although Christ absolued men from their sinnes, I doe not finde that hee did it after the manner of a iudge, but of a Sauiour. For Christ saith: God sent not his Sonne into the world to iudge sinners, but that the world should be saued by him: Iohn chap. 3. Whereupon he spake vnto him whom he healed of the palsie: Behold thou art made whole, goe thy waies and sinne no more. And to the woman taken in adultery Christ said: Woman, where be thy accusers? hath no man condemned thee? who said, No man Lord. To whom then Iesus thus said: No more will I condemne thee, goe, and now sinne no more.

Children departing before baptisme not condemned.

By which words and deeds of Christ, and many other places of the Scripture, it appeareth he was not as a iudge at his first comming, to punish sinners according to the quantitie of their offences: but that day shall come hereafter, wherein he shall iudge all men according to their works, as in Matth. 25. where he saith: When the Sonne of man shall come in his maiestie, and all his Angels with him: then shall hee sit vpon the seat of his maiestie, and all nations shall be gathered together before him, and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepheard separateth the sheep from the goats, &c. Neither shal he iudge alone, but his saints also with him. For he saith: You that haue followed me in this generation, when the sonne of man shal sit in the seat of his maiesty, shall sit also vpon twelue seats, and iudge the twelue tribes of Israel. If then sith Christ came not as a iudge, why doe the priests say that they supply the roome of Christ on earth, to iudge sinners according to the quantity of their offences? And yet not onely this, but it is more to be maruelled at, how the bishop of Rome dareth to take vpon him to be a iudge before the day of iudgement, and to preuent the time, iudging some to be saints in heauen, and to be honored of men, and some againe to be tormented in hell eternally with diuels. Would God these men would waigh the saying of S. Paul, 1. Cozinth. 4. Iudge ye not before the time, vntill the comming of the Lord, who shall make light the darke and secret places, and disclose the secrets of hearts, and then euery one shall haue his praise. Let the bishop of Rome take heed, lest that in Ezekiel he spoken by him: Because thy heart is eleuate, & thou saidst vnto thy God, I am God, I haue sitten in the seat of God, and in the heart of the sea, when thou art but man and not God. It is manifest, that the remission of sinnes principally belongeth to God, who though grace inwheth alway our sinnes. For it is said: The lambe of God taketh away the sinnes of the world. And vnto christians it belongeth as the ministers of God. For in the 20. of Iohn Christ said: Receiue vnto you the holy Ghost: whose sinnes you shall remit, they are remitted vnto them; and whose sinnes you shall retaine, they are retained. Seeing therefore that all christians that are baptised in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the holy Ghost, receiue the holy Ghost: it appeareth that they haue power giuen to them of Christ, to remit sinnes ministerially. Hath not euery christian authoritie to baptise? and in the baptisme all the sinnes of the baptised are remitted. Ergo, they that doe baptise, doe remit sinnes. And thus ministerially all such haue power to remit sinnes. Therefore, to say that one in vnhath more authoritie to remit sinnes then all other christians haue, is to much to exalt him, and to place him euen in Gods seat. I pray you how are the sinnes remitted him that is baptised of the priest (yea although he were of the pope himselfe baptised) more then if he were baptised of another christian? Surely I thinke no more. For seeing that before baptisme he remaineth a sinner, and of the kingdome of the diuell by sinne, after baptisme he entreth into the kingdome of heauen; it appeareth that he that doth baptise, openeth the gate of the kingdome of heauen to him that is baptised: the which he cannot doe, without the keies of the kingdome of heauen. Therefore euery one that doth baptise, hath the keies of the kingdome of heauen, as well the inferior priest as the pope. But these keies are not the knowledge to discerne, and power to iudge, because these doe nothing auaile in baptisme: Ergo, there are other keies of the kingdome of heauen then these. Wherefore it seemeth, that the authors of the canons erred in misstaking the keies, whereupon they ground the authority iudiciall of the clergy.

Now a little error in the beginning granted, groweth to great inconuenience in the end. Wherefore in my iudgement it seemeth, that the keies of the kingdome of heauen are faith and hope. For by faith in Iesus Christ, and hope in him for the remission of sinnes, we enter the kingdome of heauen. This faith is a spirituall water, springing from Iesus Christ the fountaine of wisdome, wherein the soule of the sinner is washed from sinne. With this water were the faithfull Patriarks baptised before the law, and the faithfull people of the Hebrewes, and the faithfull christians after the law. Wherefore I greatly maruell of that saying in the Decrees, which is ascribed vnto Augustine: that little children that are not baptised, shall bee tormented with eternall fire, although they were borne of faithfull parents that wished them with all their hearts to haue bene baptised: as though the sacrament of baptisme in water, were simply necessary to saluation, when nuertheless many christians are saued without this kinde of baptisme, as Martyrs. If that kind of Sacrament bee not necessarie, to one of elder yeres, how then is it necessary to an infant borne of the faithfull? Are not all baptised with the holy Ghost and with fire? But yet not with material fire: no more is the lotion of water corporally necessarie to wash away sinnes, but onely spirituall water, that is to say, the water of faith. Are not the quicke baptised for them that are dead, as witnesseth Paul 1. Cozinth. 15. If the dead arise not at all, why are they liuing then baptised for them? If the liuing be baptised for the dead, why then is not the infant saued by the baptisme of his parents; seeing the infant at selfe is impotent at the time of birth, and not able to require baptisme? Christ saith; He that beleeueth and is baptised, shall be saued. He saith not, he that is not baptised: but he that beleeueth not shall be damned. Wherefore in the 12. chap. of S. Iohn, Christ saith; I am the resurrection and life; he that beleeueth in me, yea although he were dead, shall liue. The faith therefore is necessary which the infant hath in his faithfull parents, although he be not washed with corporall water. How then is the infant damned and tormented with eternall fire? Were not they that were before the comming of Christ, and dead before his death by a thousand yeres, saued also by his death and passion? All that beleeued in him, were baptised in his bloud, and so were saued and redemed from sinne and the bondage of the diuell, and made partakers of the kingdome of heauen. How then in the time of grace shall the infant be damned that is borne of faithfull parents, that doe not despise, but rather desire to haue their children baptised? I dare not consent to so hard a sentence of the decrees; but rather beleeue, that hee is saued by vertue of the passion of Christ in faith of his faithfull parents, and the hope which they haue in Christ. Which faith and hope, are the keies of the heauenly kingdome. God were not iust and mercifull, if hee would condemne a man that beleeueth not in him, except he be shewed vnto him the faith which he ought to beleeue. And therefore Christ saith: If I had not come and spoken vnto them, sinne could not haue bene laid vnto their charge; but now they haue no excuse of sinne. Therefore seeing the faith of Christ is not manifest vnto the infant departing before baptisme, neither hath he denied it; how then shall he be damned for the same? But if God speaketh inwardly by way of illumination of the intelligence of the infant, as he speaketh vnto Angels; who then knoweth (saue God alone) whether the infant receiueth or not receiueth the faith of Christ?

What is he therefore that so rashly dare take vpon him to iudge the infants begotten of faithfull parents, dying without baptisme, to be tormented with eternall fire? Now let vs consider the three things which the canons of decrees affirme to be requisite for the remission of the sinnes of those that sinne after baptisme: that is to say, contrition of heart, auricular confession, and satisfaction of the deed though penance enioined by the priest for the sinnes committed. I cannot finde in any place in the Gospell, where Christ commanded that this kinde of confession should be done vnto the priest: nor I cannot finde that Christ assigned any penance vnto sinners for their sinnes, but that he willed them to sinne no more. If a sinner confesse that hee hath offended God through sinne, and sorroweth heartily for his offences, minding no more hereafter to sinne; then is he truly repentant for his sinne, and then is he conuerted vnto the Lord. If hee shall then humbly and with god hope craue mercy at God and remission of his sinnes: what is he that can let God to absolue that sinner from his sinne? And as God absoluech a sinner from his sinne, so hath Christ absolued many, although they confessed not their sinnes vnto the priests, and although they receiued not due penance for their sinnes. And if Christ could after that manner ease absolue sinners; how is hee become now not able to absolue? except some man will say that he is aboue Christ, and that his power is minished by the ordinances of his owne lawes. How were sinners absolued of God in the time of the Apostles, and alwaies heretofore, vnto the time that these Canons were made? I spake not these things as though confession to priests were wicked; but that it is not of necessitie requisite vnto saluation. I beleeue verily that the confession of sinnes vnto good priests, and likewise to other faithfull christians, is good, as witnesseth Saint Iames the Apostle: Confesse ye your selues one to another, and pray yee one for another, that ye may be saued: for the continuall praier of the iust auaileth much. Elias was a man that suffered many things like vnto vou and he praied that it should not raine vpon the earth, and it rained not in three yeeres and six months. And againe he praied, and it rained from heauen, and the earth yeelded forth her fruit. This kind of confession is good, profitable and expedient: for if God peraduenture heareth not a mans owne praier, he is helped with the intercession of others. Yet neuertheleste the praiers of the priests seeme to much to bee ertolled in the decrees, where it treateth of penitence, and that saying is ascribed vnto pope Leo, Cap. multiplex misericordia Dei, &c. And it followeth: So is it obtained by the prouidence of Gods diuine tuill, that the mercy of God cannot be obtained but by the praier of the priests, &c. The praier of a good priest doth much auaile a sinner, confessing his faults vnto him. The counsell of a discreet priest is very profitable for a sinner, to giue the sinner counsell to beware hereafter to sinne, and to instruct him how he shall punish his body by fasting, by watching, and such like acts of repentance, that hereafter hee may be better preserued from sinne.

After this manner I esteeme confession to priests very expedient and profitable to a sinner. But to confesse sinnes vnto the priest, as vnto a iudge, and to receiue of him corporall penance for a satisfaction vnto God for his sinnes committed; I see not how this can be founded vpon the truth of the scripture. For before the comming of Christ, no man was sufficient or able to make satisfaction vnto God for his sinnes, although he suffered neuer so much penance for his sinnes. And therefore it was needfull that he that was without sinne, should be punished for sinnes, as witnesseth Esay, chap. 53. where he saith: He take our griefes vpon him, and our sorrowes he bare. And againe: He was wounded for our iniquities, and beeed for our wickednesse. And againe: The Lord put vpon him our iniquitie. And againe: For the wickednes of my people haue I stricken him. Therefore Christ though his passion, hath made satisfaction for our sinnes, whereas we our selues were vnable to doe it; then though him haue we grace and remission of sins. How can we say now, that we are sufficient to make satisfaction vnto God by any penance inioined vnto vs by mans authority, seeing that our sins are more greeuous after baptisme, then they were before the comming of Christ? Therefore, as in baptisme the paine of Christ in his passion was a full satisfaction for our sins: euen so after baptisme, if we confesse that we haue offended, and be heartily sory for our sins, and mind not to sinne againe afterwards.

Hereupon Iohn writeth in his first epistle, chap. 1. If we say we haue no sinne, wee deceiue our selues, and the truth is not in vs. If we confesse our sinnes, God is faithfull and iust, hee will remit them, and cleanse vs from all our iniquities. If we say we haue not sinned, wee make him a lier, and his word is not in vs. My welbeloued children, this I write vnto you that ye sinne not: but if any man sinne, wee haue an aduocat with the Father Iesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sinnes, and not for our sinnes onely, but for the sinnes of the whole world. Therefore we ought to confesse our selues chiefly vnto God euen from the heart, for that he chiefly doth remit sinnes, without whose absolution little auaileth the absolution of man. This kind of confession is profitable and good. The authors of the canons say, that although auricular confession made vnto the priest, bee not expressly taught by Christ, yet (say they) it is taught in that saying which Christ said vnto the diseased of the leprosie, whom hee commanded: Go your waies, and shew your selues vnto the priestes, because as they say, the law of cleansing leapers, which was giuen by Moyses, signified the confession of sinnes vnto the priest. And whereas Christ commanded the lepers to shew themselues vnto the priests, they say that Christ meant, that those that were vncleane with the leprie of sinne, should shew their sinnes vnto the priests by auricular confession. I marueil much at the authors of the canons: for euen from the beginning of their decrees vnto the end, they ground their sayings vpon the old law, which was the law of sinne and death, and not (as witnesseth Paul) vpon the words of Christ, which are spirit and life. Christ saith: The words which I speake vnto you, are the spirit and life. They ground their sayings in the shadow of the law, and not in the light of Christ. For euery euill doer hateth the light, and commeth not into it, that his deeds be not reproued: but he that doth the truth, commeth into the light, that his workes may be openly seene, because they are done in God.

Now let vs passe to the words that Christ spake to the leper: Lord if thou wilt, thou canst make me cleane. And Iesus stretching forth his hand, touched him, saying: I will, be thou cleane: and straightwaies hee was cleansed of his leprosy. And Iesus said vnto him: See thou tell no man, but goe and shew thy selfe to the priests, and offer the gift that Moyses commanded for a witnesse of these things. This Gospell witnesseth plainly, that the diseased of the lepers were cleansed onely by Christ, and not by the priests; neither did Christ command the leper to shew himselfe vnto the priests, for any helpe of cleansing that hee should receiue of the priests: but to fulfill the law of Moyses, in offering a sacrifice for his cleansing, and for a testimonie vnto the priests, who alwaies of enuie accused Christ as a transgressor of the law. For if Christ after hee had cleansed the leper, had licensed him to communicat with others that were cleane, before he had shewed himselfe cleansed vnto the priests, then might the priests haue accused Christ as a transgressor of the law: because it was a precept of the law, that the leper after he was cleansed, should shew himselfe vnto the priests. And they had signes in the books of the law, whereby they might iudge whether he were truly cleansed or no. And if hee were cleansed, then would the priests offer a gift for his cleansing: and if hee were not cleansed, then would they segregate him from the company of others that were cleane. Seeing euery figure ought to be assimuled vnto the thing that is figured; I pray you then what agreement is there betweene the cleansing of lepers by the law, and the confession of sinnes? By that law the priest knew better whether hee were leprous then hee himselfe that had the leppy. In confession, the priest knew not the sinnes of him that was confessed, but by his own confession. In that law the priest did not cleanse the leprous. How now therefore ought the priests to cleanse sinners from their sinne, and that without them they cannot bee cleansed? In this law the priest had certaine figures, by the which hee could certainly know whether a man were cleansed from his leppy or not. In confession, the priest is not certaine of the cleansing of sinnes, because he is ignorant of his contrition. Hee knoweth not also whether he will not sinne any more; without the which contrition and granting to sinne no more, God hath not absolued any sinner. And if God hath not absolued a man, without doubt then is he not made cleane. And how then is confession figured vnder that law? Doubtlesse so it seemeth to me (vnder the correction of them that can iudge better in the matter) that this law beareth rather a figure of excommunication, and reconciliation of him that hath been obstinat in his sinne, and is reconciled againe. For so it appeareth by the processe of the Gospell, that whereas the sinner doth not amend for the priuat correction of his brother, nor for the correction of two or three, neither yet for the publike correction of the whole church; then is he to be counted as an Ethnicke and a publican, and as a certaine leper to be auoided out of the company of all men. Which sinner notwithstanding, if he shall yet repent, is then to be reconciled, because he is then cleansed from his obstinacie.

But he which pretendeth himselfe to be the chiefe vicar of Christ, and the high priest, saith; that hee hath power to absolue A poena & culpa. Which I doe not finde how it is founded in the Scripture, but that of his owne authority hee inioineth to sinners penance for their sinnes. And grant that from their sinnes hee may well absolue them; yet from the paine (which they call a poena) he doth not simply absolue, as in his indulgences he promiseth. But if hee were in charitie, and had such power as he pretendeth, he would suffer none to lie in purgatory for sinne, forsomuch as that paine doth farre exceed all other paine which here wee suffer. What man is there being in charitie, but if he see his brother to be tormented in this world, if he may, he will helpe him and deliuer him? Much more ought the pope then, to deliuer out of paines of purgatory, indifferently as well rich as poore. And if he fell to the rich his indulgences, double wise, yea triple wise he seeketh them. First, in promising them to deliuer them out of the paine from whence he doth not, neither is able to deliuer them: and so maketh them fally to beleeue that which they ought not to beleeue. Secondly, he deceiueth them of their money, which he taketh for his indulgences. Thirdly, hee seduceth them in this, that hee promising to deliuer them from paine, doth induce them into greeuous punishment indeed, for the heresie of simonie, which both of them doe commit, and therefore are worthy both of great paine to fall vpon them: for so we reade, that Iesus cast out buyers and sellers out of his Temple. Also Peter said vnto Simon, the first author of this heresie: Thy money, said hee, with thee bee destroied, for that thou hast thought the gift of God to bee possessed for money. Moreouer, whereas Christ saith, Freely you haue receiued, freely giue: and whereas contrary the pope doth sell that thing, which he hath taken: what doubt is there, but that he doth greeuously destroy to be punished, both he that selleth and he that buyeth for the crime of simony which they commit. Duet and besides, by many reasons and authorities of the scripture it may be proued, that he doth not absolue a man, contrite for his sinne, although he doe absolue him from the guilt.

But this marueilleth me, that he in his indulgences promiseth to absolue men from all manner of deadly sinnes, and yet cannot absolue a man from debt: for although as the debt which we owe to God, is of much more greater importance then is the debt of our brother. Therefore if he be able to remit the debt due to God, much more it should seeme that he is able to forgiue the debt of our brother.

Another thing there is that I marueil at: for that the pope sheweth himselfe more strait in absoluing a priest for not saying, or negligently saying his mattens, then for transgressing the commandement of God; considering that the transgression of the commandement of God, is much more greeuous then the breach of mans commandement.

For these and many other errors concurring, and in this matter of the popes absolutions, blessed be God, and honour be vnto him for the remission of our sinnes. And let vs firmely beleeue and know, that he doth and will absolue vs from our sinnes, if we be sorie from the bottome of our hearts that wee haue offended him, hauing a good purpose and will to offend him no more. And let vs bee bold to resort vnto god and discreet priests, who with wholsome discretion and sound counsell can instruct vs, how to auoid the corruption of sinne hereafter. And which, because they are better then wee, may pray to God for vs; whereby wee may both obtaine more sooner the remission of our sinnes past, and also may learne better how to auoid the danger of sinne to come. Ex Registro Latino Epist. Hereford.

And thus much concerning the iudgement and doctrine of this Walter for Christian patience, charitie and mercy: which as they be true and infallible notes and markes of true Christianity; so the said Walter Brute making comparison herein betweene Christ and the pope, goeth about purposely to declare and manifest, whereby all men may see, what contrariety there is betweene the rule of Christs teaching, and the proceedings of the Pope; betweene the examples and life of the one, and the examples of the other. Of which two, as one is altogether giuen to peace: so is the other on the contrary side as much disposed to wars, murther, and bloudshed, as is easie to be seen; whoso looketh not vpon the outward shews and pretenced words of these Romish popes, but aduising & considering the inward practises and secret works of them, shall easilie espie vnder the vizour of peace, what discord and debate they worke. Who bearing outwardly the meeke homes of the Lambe mentioned in the Apocalypse, within doe beare the bowels of a wolfe, full of cruelty, murther, and bloudshed. Which if any do thinke to be spoken of me contumeliously, would God that man could proue as well the same to be spoken of me not truly. But truth it is, I speake it sincerely, without affection of blind partialitie, according to the truth of histories both old and new. Thus vnder in Dei nomine, Amen, how vnmercifully doth the pope condemne his brother! And while he pretendeth not to be law full for him to kill any man, what thousands hath he killed of men? And likewise in this sentence, pretending in nefariibus Iesu Christi, as though he would be a mediator to the magistrate for the party: yet indeed will he be sure to excommunicat the magistrat, if the execute not the sentence giuen. Who be true heretikes, the Lord when hee commeth shall iudge. But giue them to be heretikes, whom he condemneth for heretikes: yet what bowels of mercy is here, where is nothing but burning, faggoting, drowning, prisoning, chaining, famishing, racking, hanging, tormenting, threatning, reuiling, cursing, and oppressing, and no instructing, nor yet indifferent hearing of them, what they can say? The like cruelty also may in their wars appeare, if we consider how pope Vrban 5. beside the racking and murdering of seuen or eight cardinals, set vp Henry Spencer bishop of Norwich, to fight against the French pope. Innocentius 4. was in war himselfe against the Apulians. Likewise Alexander 4. his successour, stirred vp the sonne of king Henry 3. to fight against the sonne of Frederike 2. emperour, for Apulia. Boniface 8. moued Albertus (which stood to be emperour) to driue Philip the French king out of his realme. Gregorius 9. excited Ludouicke the French king three sundry times, to mortall warre against the earle Raimundus and citie of Tholouse, and Auinion, where Lewes the said French king died. Honorius 3. by strength of warre many waies resisted Fredericke 2. and sent out 25. gallies against the coasts of the emperors dominions. The same pope also besieged Ferrariato passe ouer the warre at Tichiume with many other bateels and conflicts of popes against the Romans, Venetians, and diuers other nations. Innocentius 3. set vp Philip the French king to warre against king John. What stirre pope Gregory the 7. otherwise named Hildebrand, kept against the emperor Henricus 4. it is not vnknowne. And who is able to recite all the warres, battels, and fields fought by the stirring vp of the pope? These with many other like examples considered, did cause this Walter Brute to write in this matter so as he did, making yet thereof no vniuersall proposition: but that Christian magistrates in case of necessitie might make resistance, in defence of publike right. Now hee proceedeth further to other matter of the Sacrament.

Touching the matter (saith hee) of the Sacrament of the body and bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ, diuers men haue diuers opinions, as the learned doe know. As concerning my iudgement vpon the same, I firmely beleeue whatsoeuer the Lord Iesus taught implicitely or expresly to his Disciples and faithfull people to be beleeued. For he is (as I beleeue and know) the true bread of God which descended from heauen, and giueth life to the world. Of which bread whosoeuer eateth, shall liue for euer: as it is in the 6th of Iohn declared. Before the comming of Christ in the flesh, although men did liue in body, yet in spirit they did not liue; because all men were then vnder sinne, whose soules thereby were dead: from the which death, no man by the law, nor with the law was iustified: For by the works of the law shal no flesh be iustified: Galat. 2. And againe in the same epistle, cap. 3. That by the law no man is iustified before God it is manifest: for the iust man shall liue by his faith: the law is not of faith; but whosoeuer hath the works thereof, shall liue in them. And againe in the same chapter: If the law had beene giuen, which might haue iustified, then our righteousnesse had come by the law. But the Scripture hath concluded all vnder sinne, that the promise might bee sure by the faith of Iesu Christ to all beleeuers. Moreouer, before that faith came, they were kept and concluded all vnder the law, vntill the comming of that faith which was to bee reuealed. For the law was our schoolemaister in Christ Iesu, that we should bee iustified by faith. Also the said Paul, Rom. 5. saith: That the law entred in the meane time, Rom. 5. wherehy that sinne might more abound. Where then sinne hath more abounded, there hath also grace superabounded; that like as sinne hath raigned vnto death, so that grace might raigne also by righteousnesse vnto eternall life, through Iesus Christ our Lord. Whereby it is manifest, that by the faith which we haue in Christ, beleeuing him to be the true Sonne of God, which came downe from heauen to redeeme vs from sinne: we are iustified from sinne, and so doe liue by him, which is the true bread and meat of the soule. And the bread which Christ gaue, is his flesh giuen for the life of the world: Iohn 6. For hee be- Iohn 6. ing God, came downe from heauen; and being truly carnall man, did suffer in the flesh for our sinnes, which in his diuinitie he could not suffer. Wherefore like as wee beleeue by our faith that hee is true God: so must wee also beleeue, that he is a true man. And then doe wee eat the bread of heauen, and the flesh of Christ. And if we beleeue that he did voluntarily shed his bloud for our redemption, then doe we drinke his bloud.

And this except we eat the flesh of the Sonne of man, and shall drinke his bloud, wee haue not eternall life in vs; because the flesh of Christ verily is meate, and his bloud is drinke indeed: and whosoeuer eateth the flesh of Christ, and drinketh his bloud, abideth in Christ and Christ in him: Iohn chap. 6. And as in this world the soules of the faithfull liue, and are refreshed spiritually with this heauenly bread, and with the flesh and bloud of Christ; so in the world to come, the same shall liue eternally in heauen, refreshed with the deitie of Iesus Christ, as touching the most principall part thereof, that is to wit, intellectum: for as much as this bread of heauen, in that it is God, hath in it selfe all delectable pleasantnesse. And as touching the intelligible powers of the same (as well exteriour as interiour) they are refreshed with the flesh (that is to say) with the humanitie of Iesus Christ; which is as a Queene standing on the right hand of God, decked with a golden robe of diuers colours: for this queene of heauen alone by the word of God, is exalted aboue the companie of all the angels; that by her, all our corporall power intellectiue may fully be refreshed, as is our spirituall intelligence, with the beholding of the deitie of Iesus Christ. And euen as the Angels shall wee bee fully satisfied. And in the memory of this double refection, present in this world and in the world to come, hath Christ giuen vnto vs (for eternall blessednesse) the sacrament of his body and bloud, in the substance of bread and wine: as it appeareth in Matthew chapter 26. As the Matth. 26. Disciples sate at supper, Iesus tooke bread and blessed it, brake it, and gaue it vnto his disciples, and said: Take, eate, this is my body. And he tooke the cup, and thanked, and gaue it them, saying: Drinke ye all of this, this is my bloud of the new Testament, which shall bee shed for many for the remission of sinnes. And Luke in his Gospell, chapter 22. of this matter thus writeth: And after hee had taken the bread, hee gaue thanks, he brake it, and gaue it vnto them, saying: This is my body which shall be giuen for you: doe you this in my remembrance. In like manner he tooke the cup after supper, saying: This is the cup of the new Testament in my bloud, which shall bee shed for you. That Christ said, this my body, in shewing to them the bread, I firmely beleeue, and know that it is true: That Christ (forsomuch as he is God) is the very truth it selfe; and by consequence, all that hee saith is true. And I beleeue that the very same was his body, in such wise as he willed it to be his body: for in that he is almightie, he hath done whatsoeuer pleased him. And as in Cane of Galile, he Confession vnto God.

Auricular confession not truly grounded vpon the scripture. Luke 17.

The authors of the canon law reproued.

Note well gentle Reader.

he changed the water into wine, really: so that after the transubstantiation, it was wine and not water. So when he said; This is my body: if he would have had the bread really to be transubstantiated into his very body, so that after this changing it should have been his natural body, and not bread as it was before; I know that it must needs have been so. But I finde not in the Scripture, that his will was to have any such reall transubstantiation or mutation.

And as the Lord God omnipotent in his perfection essentially being the Sonne of God, both creator the most pure creature, and yet when it pleased him, hee tooke upon him our nature, remaining really God as he was before, and was really mademan; so that after this assumpting of our substance, he was really very God and very man: even so, if he would when he said; This is my body: hee could make this to be his body really, the bread still really remaining as it was before. For lesse is the difference of the essence, between bread and the body of a man, then betweene the deitie and humanitie, because that of the bread, is naturally made the body of a man. Of the bread is made blood: of the blood, naturall seed; and of naturall seed, the naturall substance of man is ingendred. But in that that God became man; this is an action supernaturall. Wherefore hee that could make one man to be very God and very man; could, if hee would, make one thing to be really very bread, and his very body. But I doe not finde it expressly in the Scripture, that he would any such Identitie or connuntion to be made. And as Christ said, I am very bread; not changing his essence or being into the essence or substance of bread, but was the said Christ which he was before, e really, and yet bread by a similitude or figurative speech: so if he would, it might be, that when he said, This is my body; that this should really haue beene the bread as it was before, and sacramentally or memorially to be his body. And this seemeth unto me, most nerely to agree to the meaning of Christ, following as he said, Doe this in remembrance of me. Then forasmuch as in the Supper it is manifest, that Christ gaue unto his disciples the bread of his body which he brake, to that intent to eat with their mouthes: in which bread, he gaue himselfe also unto them, as one in whom they should beleeue (as to be the food of the soule) by that faith they should beleeue him to be their Saviour which take his body, wherein also he would it to be manifest, that he should redeeme them from death: so was the bread eaten with the disciples mouthes, that hee being the true bread of the soule, might be in spirit received and eaten spiritually by their faith, which beleeued in him.

Bread by similitude.

Bread substantially, and the body sacramentally.

The bread which in the disciples mouthes was chewed, from the mouth passed to the stomacke. For as Christ saith; Whatsoeuer commeth to the mouth, goeth into the belly, and from thence into the privie: Matth. cap. 15. But that true and very bread of the soule, was eaten of the spirit of the disciples, and by faith entred their mindes, and abode in their intraites though loue. And so the bread broken, seemeth unto me to be really the meat of the body, and the bread which it was before; but sacramentally to bee the body of Christ, as Paul, 1. Corinth. 10. The bread which we breake, is it not the participation of the body of the Lord? So the bread which wee breake, is the participation of the Lords body. And it is manifest, that the heavenly bread is not broken, neither yet is subiect to such breaking. Therefore Paul calleth the materiall bread which is broken, the body of Christ which the faithfull are partakers of. The bread therefore changeth not to his essence, but is bread really, and is the body of Christ sacramentally. Euen as Christ is the very vine, abiding really and figuratively the vine: so the temple of Jerusalem was really the materiall temple; and figuratively it was the body of Christ: because he said; Destroy you this temple, and in three daies I will repaire the same againe. And this spake he of the temple of his body: whereas others understood it to bee the materiall temple, as appeared by their answere. For said they, 47. peeres hath this temple beene in building, and wilt thou build it by in three daies?

The bread which the Lord gaue entred not into the bodies, but the body which he gaue entred into the minds of the disciples. Paul called it materiall bread.

Note Reader.

Euen so may the consecrated bread be really bread, as it was before, and yet figuratively the body of Christ. And therefore Christ would this bread to be onely sacramentally his body, and would not haue the same bread really to be transubstantiated into his body, and so ordained his priests to make this sacrament as a memorial of his passion: then do the priests grieuously offend, which beseech Christ in their holy masse, that the bread which lieth upon the altar, may be made really the body of Christ, if he would not haue the same to be but a sacrament of his body. And then both he they greatly deceiued themselues, and also doe greatly deceive others. But whether the bread be really transubstantiated into the body of Christ or is only the body of Christ sacramentally; no doubt but that the people are marueilously deceiued. For the people beleeue that they see the body of Christ, may rather Christ himselfe betweene the hands of the priests (for so is the common oth they sweare,) by him before I saw this day betweene the priests hands. And the people beleeue that they eat not the body of Christ but at Easter, or else when they lie upon their death bed, and receiue with their bodily mouth the sacrament of the body of Christ. But the body of Christ (admit the bread be transubstantiated really into the body) is in the sacrament, indiuisibiliter, that is, not able to be diuided; and so immensurabiliter, that is, not able to be measured: Ergo, inuisibiliter, that is, not able to be seene. To beleeue therefore that he may be seene corporally in the sacrament, is erroneous. And forasmuch as the body of Christ is the soules food, and not the food of the body in this world, for that wholsoeuer beleeueth, doth eat spiritually and really, at at any time when he so beleeueth: it is manifest, that they bee greatly erre which beleeue that they eat not the body of Christ, but when they eat with their teeth the sacrament of the body of Christ.

The priests seek their owne honor in their transubstantiation.

And although it should be to the great honor of priests that the bread really were changed into the body of Christ, by the vertue of the sacramentall words pronounced: yet if Christ would not haue it to be so, then they desiring to do this contrary to the will of Christ, and informing the people that is to be done, so contrary to the will of Christ: are in great perill, most dangerously seducing both themselues and the people. And then, although that hereby they get a little worldly and transitory honor for a short time; it is to be feared, lest perpetuall shame finally shall follow and ensue upon the same. For Christ saith; Every one that exalteth himselfe shall be brought low. Let them therefore take heed, lest they extolling themselues for this Sacrament, above the company of Angels which never sinned, for the error which they bein, for euermore be placed with the sinfull angels under the earth.

Marke here yet good policie.

Let every man therefore thinke lowly of himselfe in what state or degree soeuer he be; neither let him presume to do that which he is not able to doe: neither desire to haue that thing done which God would not haue done.

The makers of the canon law, contrary to themselues.

I greatly marueil at those which were the makers of the canons, how variably and contrary one to another they write of this Sacrament of the body of Christ. In the last part of the decrees there is this matter to touched, not only in the text, but also in the processe of the matter, diuers doe diuerstly write, and one contrary to another. For in the chapter that thus beginneth, Prima inquit heresis, it is thus written: You shall not eat this body which you see, nor shall drinke this blood which they shall shed which shall crucifie me: I will commend unto you a certaine Sacrament spiritually understood that quickneth you; for the flesh profiteth you nothing at all. And in the end of the same chapter it is thus written: Till the world shall haue an end, the Lords place is in heauen: yet notwithstanding the vertue of the Lord is here abiding with us. For the body where with he rose, ought to be in one place, but his verity is in every place diffused and spread abroad. And in the chapter following, which thus beginneth; Omnia quæcunq; voluit, &c. it is written: Although the figure of the bread and wine seeme to be nothing; yet notwithstanding they must after the words of consecration be beleeued, to be none other thing then the very flesh of Christ, and his blood. Whereupon the deritie himselfe said unto his disciples: This is (saith he) my flesh, which is given for the life of the world: and to speake yet more marueilously, this is none other flesh, then that which was borne of the virgin Mary, and suffered upon the crosse, and rose out of the sepulchre.

De consec. 2. cap. Prima quidem inquit.

De consec. dist. 1. cap. Omnia quæcunque voluit. Contrariety in the popes decrees.

See how far this chapter differeth from the first. And in the chapter which beginneth, Ego Berengarius, &c. this is the confession which Berengarius himselfe confessed touching this Sacrament, and his confession is of the church allowed: I confesse (saith Berengarius) that the bread and wine which is laid upon the altar after the consecration, is not only a sacrament, but also that it is the very body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ: and the same not only sensually to be a sacrament, but also verily to be handled with the priests hands and to be broken, and to be taken with the teeth of faithfull men. Which confession is heretical: for why? if the body of Christ be in the sacrament, as of the church it is so determined; it is there then Multipliciatiuè, and so indiuisibiliter, where fore not sensualiter. And if it be there indiuisibiliter, that is, in such sort as it cannot be diuided or separated, then can it not be touched, felt, broken, nor with the teeth of men chewed.

De consecrat. dist. 2. cap. Ego Berengarius.

The recantation of Berengarius is pertinent.

The writers of this time and age doe affirme, that if by the negligence of the priest, the sacrament be so negligently left, that a mouse, or any other beast or vermin eat the same; then they say, that the sacrament returneth againe into the nature and substance of bread. Whereby they must needs confesse, that a miracle is as well wrought by the negligence of the priest, as first there was made by the consecration of the priest in making the sacrament. For either by the eating of the mouse, the body of Christ is transubstantiated into the nature of bread, which is a transubstantiation supernaturall; or else of nothing by creation is this bread produced: and therefore either of these operations is miraculous and to be marueiled at.

The sacrament left by the priests negligence to be eaten of a mouse, returneth again from bodie to bread.

The law being ceremoniall to perfection.

Now considering the disagreeing opinions of the doctors, and for the absurdities which follow, I beleeue with Paul, that the bread which we breake, is the participation of the body of Christ: and as Christ saith; that the bread is made the body of Christ for a memoriall and remembrance of him. And in such sort as Christ willed the same to be his body, in the same manner and sort do I beleeue it to be his body.

But whether we men may make the body of Christ, and minister minister unto the people: or whether that priests bee diuided from the lay people, for their knowledge, preeminence, and sanctitie of life, or else by external signes onely: Also whether the signe of tonsure and other external signes of holinesse in priests, be signes of Antichrist and his characters, or else introduced and taught by our Lord Jesus Christ: consequently it remaineth next to speake of unto the faithfull sort (according to the processe of the holy Scripture) first of the three kinds of the priests. I remember that I haue read, the first of them to be Aaronicall, legall, and temporall: The second to bee eternall and regall according to the order of Melchisedech: The third to be christian. The first of these ceased at the comming of Christ: for that, as saint Paul to the Hebrues saith, The priesthood of Aaron was translated to the priesthood of the order of Melchisedech. The legall sort of priests of Aaron, were separate from the rest of the people, by kindred, office, and inheritance. By kindred, for that the children of Aaron onely were priests. By office, for that it onely pertained to them to offer sacrifice for the sinnes of the people, and to instruct the people in the precepts and ceremonies of the law. By inheritance, because the Lord was their portion of inheritance; neither had they any other inheritance amongst their brethren, but those things which were offred unto the Lord, as the first fruits, parts of the sacrifices, and bowes, except places for their mansion houles for them and theirs, as appeareth by the processe of Moses law. The priesthood of Christ did much differ from this priesthood, as Paul doth witnesse to the Hebrues, chapter. 1. 8. 9. 10.

Three orders of priests: 1. Aaronicall. 2. Eternall. 3. Christian.

Legitimall priests diuided from the people by kindred, office, and inheritance.

The priesthood of Christ differeth from the Leuitical priesthood, how and wherein. 1. In kindred. 2. In oth taking. 3 In durabilitie.

The priesthood of Christ differeth from the legall priesthood, and how it doth differ from the Romish priesthood.

First, in kindred, because that our Lord and Sauiour Jesus Christ, came of the stock and tribe of Juda: of which tribe none had to doe with the altar, and in which tribe nothing at all was spoken of the priests of Moses.

The second, for that other were made priests without their oth taken: but hee by an oth, by him which said: The Lord swore, and it shall not repent him: Thou art a priest for euer according to the order of Melchisedech.

Thirdly, by durabilitie, for that many of them were made priests but during the terme of their liues: but he for that hee remaineth for euer, hath an eternall priesthood. Wherefore he is able to saue us for euer, hauing by himselfe accesse unto God, which euer liueth to make intercession for us.

The 4. priesthood which is the Romish priesthood.

The office of priests to offer the popes order.

The law made also such men priests as had infirmities; but Sermo (that is, the word, which according to the law is the eternall sonne and perfect) by an oth.

4. In matter of sacrifice.

The priesthood of Christ also did differ from the priesthood of Aaron and the law, in the matter of the sacrifice, and in the place of sacrificing. In the matter of the sacrifice, because they did die in their sacrifices strange bodies of the matter of their sacrifices, and did shed strange blood for the expiation of sinnes: But the offering himselfe unto God his father for us, shed his owne blood for the remission of our sinnes. In the place of sacrificing, because that they did offer their sacrifice in the tabernacle or temple: but Christ suffering death without the gates of the city, offered himselfe upon the altar of the crosse to God his father, and there shed his precious blood.

5. In place of sacrificing.

The body of Christ not left to be a sacrifice for sin, but ones in for a sacrament.

In his supping chamber also hee blessed the bread and consecrated the same for his body, and the wine which was in the cup, he also consecrated for his blood; delivering the same to his apostles to bee done, for a commemoration and remembrance of his incarnation and passion. Neither did Jesus enter into the sanctuarie made with mans hands, which bee examples and figures of true things; but entred into heauen it selfe, that he might appeare before the maiestie of God for vs. Neither doth he offer himselfe oftentimes, as the chiefe priest in the sanctuarie did euery yeare with straunge blood (for then should he oftentimes haue suffered from the beginning) but now once for all, in the latter end of the world, to destroy sinne by his peace offering, hath he entred. And euen as it is decreed, that man once shall die and then commeth the iudgement: so Christ hath beene once offered, to take away the sins of many. The second time he shall appeare without sinne to them that looke for him, to their saluation. For the law having a shadow of good things to come, can neuer by the image it selfe of things (which euery yeare without ceasing they offer by such sacrifices) make those perfect that come thereunto, for otherwise that offering should haue ceased: Because that the worshippers being once cleansed from their sinnes, should haue no more conscience of sinne. But in these, commemoration is made euery yeare of sinne; for it is impossible that by the blood of goates and calues, sinnes should bee purged and taken away. Therefore comming into the world he said: Sacrifice and oblation thou wouldest not haue, but a body hast thou given me, peace offerings for sinnes haue not pleased thee: Then said I, behold I come. In the volume of the booke it is written of mee, that I should doe thy will O God: Saying, as above; because thou wouldest haue no sacrifices nor burnt offerings for sinne, neither doest thou take pleasure in those things that are offered according to the law: Then said I; Behold I come, that I may do thy will O God. He taketh away the first to stablish that which followeth. In which will we are sanctified by the oblation of the body of Jesus Christ, once for all. And euery priest is ready daily ministring, and oftentimes offering like sacrifices, which can neuer take away sins. But this Jesus offering one sacrifice for sinne sitteth for euermore on the right hand of God, expecting the time till his enemies be made his foot stoole. For by his one onely oblation, hath he consummated for euermore those that are sanctified. All these places haue I recited which Paul writeth, for the better understanding and declaration of those things I intende to speake. By all which it appeareth manifestly, how the priesthood of Christ differeth from the legall priesthood of Aaron: and by the same also appeareth, how the same differeth from all other priesthood christian, that ministreth Christ. For the properties of the priesthood of Christ, as hath recited, are found in no other priest, but in Christ alone. Of the third priesthood, that is, the christian priesthood; Christ by expresse words speaketh but little, to make any difference betweene the priests and the rest of the people, neither yet doth he this name of Sacerdos or priest, but in the Gospell. But some he calleth disciples, some apostles, whom hee sent to baptise and to preach, and in his name to do miracles. Hee calleth them the salt of the earth, in which the name of wisedome is meant: and he calleth them the light of the world, by which, good liuing is signified. For hee saith, Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good workes, and glorifie your father which is in heauen. And Paul speaking of the priests to Timothie, and Titus, seemeth not to me to make any discerning betwixt the priests and the other people, but in that he would haue them to surmount other in knowledge and perfection of life. But the fourth priesthood, is the Romane priesthood, brought in by the church of Rome: which church maketh a distinction betweene the clergie and the lay people: and after that the clergie is diuided into sundrie degrees, as appeareth in the decretals.

The third priesthood. The name of Sacerdos or priest not vsed but in the new Testament of Christ.

This distinction of the clergie from the laity, with the tonsure of clerkes, began in the time of Anacletus, as it doth appeare in the chronicles. The degrees of the clergie were afterward inuented and distinted by their offices, and there was no ascension to the degree of the priesthood, but by inferior orders and degrees. But in the primitive church it was not so: for immediatly after the conuersion of some of them to the faith and baptisme receiued; they were priests and bishops made, as appeareth by Ananias, whom Marcus made of a taylor, a bishop, and of many other it was in like case done, according to the traditions of the church of Rome. Priests are ordained to offer sacrifices, to make supplication and prayers, and to blesse and sanctifie. The oblation of the priesthood, onely to priests (as they say) is congruent: whose duties are, upon the altar to offer for the sinnes of the people the Lords body, which is consecrated of bread. Of which saying I haue great marueil, considering saint Paul his words to the Hebrues before recited. If Christ offering for our sinnes one oblation for euermore, sitteth on the right hand of God, and with that one oblation hath consummated for euermore those that are sanctified: If Christ euermore sitteth on the right hand of God, to make intercession for vs; that needs he to leaue here any sacrifice for our sinnes, of the priests to be daily offered? I doe not find in the Scriptures of God, nor of his apostles, that the body of Christ ought to be made a sacrifice for sinne: but onely as a sacrament and commemoration of the sacrifice paſſed which Christ offered upon the altar of the crosse for our sinnes. For it is an absurditie to say that Christ is now euery day really offered as a sacrifice upon the altar by the priests: for then the priests should really crucifie him upon the altar, which is a thing of no christian to be beleeued. But euen as in his supper, his body and his blood he deliuered to his disciples, in memoriall of his body that should be crucified on the morrow for our sinnes: So after his ascension, did his apostles vse the same (when they broke bread in euery house) for a Sacrament, and not for a sacrifice, of the body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ. And by this meanes were they put in remembrance of the great loue of Christ, who so entirely loued vs, that willingly he suffered the death for vs, and for the remission of our sinnes. And thus did they offer themselues to God by loue, being ready to suffer death for the confession of his name, and for the saluing health of their brethren, fulfilling the new commandment of Christ, which said unto them: A new commandment doe I giue unto you, that you loue one another, as I haue loued you. But when loue began to wax cold, or rather to bee frosen for cold, through the anguish and anxietie of persecution for the name of Christ; then priests did vse the flesh and blood of Christ, in stead of a sacrifice. And because many of them feared death, some of them fled into solitary places, not daring to giue themselues a sacrifice by death unto God through the confession of his name, and saluing health of their brethren: some other worshipped Idols fearing death, as did alld the chiefe bishop of Rome, and many other moe in diuers places of the world. And thus it came to passe, as that which was ordained and instituted for a memoriall of the one and onely sacrifice, was altered (for want of loue) into the realitie of the sacrifice it selfe.

How the memoriall of the Sacrament came to the reality of the Sacrifice it selfe.

After these things thus discussed, he inferreth consequentlie upon the same, an other briefe tractation of women and lay men, whether in defect of the other, they may exercise the section of praier, and administration of Sacraments belonging to priests: wherein he declareth the vse receiued in the popes church for women to baptize, which faith he, cannot be without remission of sinnes; wherefore seeing that women haue power by the pope to remit sinne, and to baptise, why may they not as well be admitted to minister the Lords supper, in like case of necessitie? Wherin also he maketh relation of pope Ioane the 8. a woman pope, mouing certaine questions of her. All which for breuitie I pretermit, proceeding to the ministration of praier, and blessing of sanctification, appropriate to the office of priests, as followeth.

Further more, as touching the function and office of praying and blessing, whereunto priests seeme to be ordained (to omit here the question whether women may pray in churches, in lacke of other meet persons) it remaineth now also to prosecute. Christ being desired of his disciples to teach them to pray, gaue them the common praier both to men and women, to the which praier in my estimation, no other is to be compared. For in that, first, the whole honour due vnto the deitie is comprehended. Secondly, whatsoeuer is necessarie for vs, both for the time present, & past, & for time to come, is there desired and prayed for. Vnfrequently vs besides to pray secretly, and also briefly: secretly to enter into our close chamber, and there in secrecie be willed vnto to pray vnto his father. And saith moreouer, When ye pray, vse not much babling, or many words as doe the heathen. For they thinke in their long and prolixe praying to be heard. Therefore be you not like to them. By the which doctrine he calleth vs away from the errours of the heathen Gentiles: from whom proceed these superstitious maner of arts (erather of ignorances) as Necromancie, the art of diuination, and other spices of coniuration: not vnknowne to them that be learned: for these necromancers beleeue, one prieste to be of greater vertue then another, there to be heard sooner, then in another. Like as Balaam being hired to curse the people of God by his art of soothsaying, or charming, when hee could not accomplish his purpose in one place, he remoued to another: but he in the end was deceiued of his desire. For he intending first to curse them, was not able to accurse them whom the Lord blessed. So y his curse could not hurt any of all that people. After like sort the necromancers turne their face to the East, as to a place more apt for their prayers. Also the necromancers beleeue, that the vertue of the words of the praier, and the curiositie thereof, causeth them to bring to effect that which they seeke after; which is also another point of infidelitie, vsed much of charmers, sorcerers, inchanters, soothsayers, and such like. Out of the same art (I feare) proceedeth the practise of exorcising, whereby diuels and spirits be coniured to doe that, whereunto they are inforced by the exorcist. Also whereby other creatures likewise are exorcised or coniured, to that by the vertue of their exorcisme, they may haue their power and strength exceeding all naturall operation.

In the church of Rome, many such exorcismes and coniurations be practised, and are called of them benedictions, or hallowings. But here I aske of these exorcisers, whether they beleeue the things and creatures so exorcised and hallowed, haue that operation and efficacie giuen them, which they pretend? If they so beleeue, euery child may see that they are farre beguiled. For holy water being of them exorcised or coniured; hath no such power in it, neither can haue, which they in their exorcisme doe command. For there they enioyne and command, that wheresoeuer that water is sprinkled, all beration or infestation of the vncleane spirit should auoide, and that no pestilent spirit there should abide, &c. But most plaine it is, that no water, be it neuer so holy, can haue any such power to doe, as it is commanded, to wit, to be an vniuersall remedy to expell all diseases.

This I would aske of these exorcists; whether in their commanding, they doe coniure or adiure the things coniured, to be of an higher vertue and operation, then their owne nature doth giue: Or else whether they in their prayers desire of God, that he will infuse into them that vertue, which they require? If they in their commanding doe so beleeue, then do they beleeue that they haue that power in them to the which the inferiour power of the thing exorcised must obey, in receiuing that which is commanded. And so doing, are much more deceiued, forasmuch as they see themselues, that they which are so authorised to the effect of exorcising, say to the diuell being coniured: Go, and he goeth not, and to another, come, and he commeth not, and many things else they command the inferiour spirit their subiect to doe, and he doth not. So in like case, when they pray to God to make the water to be of such vertue, that it may be to them health of mind and body, and that it may be able to expulse euery vncleane spirit, and to chase away all maner of diffemperature and pestilence of the aire (being an vnreasonable petition after my fore alleadged) it is to bee feared left their benediction, their hallowing and blessing is changed into cursing, according to that saying that followeth: And now O you priests, I haue a message to say vnto you: If you will not heare and beare well away in your minds, to giue the glorie vnto my name, saith the Lord God of hosts, I will send scarsitie amongst you, and I will curse your blessings. What things and how many are blessed, or hallowed in the church, that in hallowing thereof displease God, and are accursed? And therefore according to the saying of S. Iames, they aske and are not heard, because they aske not as they should, that they in their owne desires may perish. Let a man behold the blessing or hallowing of their fire, water, incense, ware, bread, wine, the church, the altar, the churchyard, ashes, bells, copes, palmes, oile, candles, salt, the hallowing of the ring, the bed, the staffe, and of many such like things: and I beleeue that a man shall find out many errours of the heathen Magicians, witches, soothsayers and charmers. And notwithstanding the ancient & old Magicians in their bookes, command those that bee coniurers, that they in any wise liue deuoutly (for otherwise, as they say, the spirits will not obey their commandements, and coniurations) yet the Romish coniurers do impute it to the vertue of the holy words, because they be they which worke, and not the holinesse of the coniurers. How commeth it to passe that they say, the things consecrated of a cursed and vitious Priest, should haue so great vertue in pronouncing (as they say) the holy and mysticall words, as if they were pronounced of a priest neuer so holy? But I maruell that they say so, reading this saying in the Acts of the apostles: because the charmers pronouncing the name of Iesus (that is aboue all names) would haue healed those that were possessed with diuels, and said: In the name of Iesus whom Paul preacheth, goe ye out of the men. And the possessed with diuels answered, Iesus we know, and Paul we know, but what are ye? and they all to be beate the coniurers.

And now considering this and many such like things, I maruell wherefore the vicious priests, doe sell their praiers and blessings & curses (as also their masses and trentals of masses) then those that bee deuout lay men, and holy women: which with all their heart desire to flee from vices, and take hold of vertue. Forasmuch as God in diuers places of the Scripture doth promise that hee will not heare sinners and wicked persons: Neither should hee seeme to bee iust, if he should sooner heare the praiers of his enemies, then of his faithfull friend. How I pray you shall a sinnefull priest deliuer another man from sinne by his praiers, or else from the punishment of sinne, when he is not able to deliuer himselfe by his praier from sin? That then doth God so much accept in the masse of a vitious priest, that for his masse, his praier & oblation, he might deliuer any man either from sin, or from the paine due for sinne? No, but for that that Christ once offred himselfe for our sinnes, and now sitteth on the right hand of God the father, alwaies shewing vnto him what and how great things hee hath suffered for vs. And euery priest alwaies maketh mention in his masse of this oblation. Neither doe we this, that wee might bring the same oblation into the remembrance of God, because that he alwaies in his presence saith the same: but that wee should haue in remembrance this so great loue of God, that he would giue his owne son to death for our sinnes, that he might cleanse and purifie vs from all our sinnes. What, doth it please God, that the remembrance of so great loue is made by a priest, which more loueth sinne then God? Or how can any praier of such a priest please God, in what holy place soeuer he be, or what holy vestiments soeuer he put on, or what holy praiers soeuer he maketh? And wheras Christ and his apostles doe command the preaching of the word of God; the priests be now more bound to celebrate the masse, and more straitly bound to say the canonicall houres: whereat I cannot but greatly maruell. For why? to obey the precepts of men more then the commandements of God, is in effect to honor man as God, and to bestow the sacrifice of men, which is due vnto God, and this is also spirituall fornication. How therefore are priests bound at the commandement of man to leaue the preaching of the word of God, at whose commandement they are not bound to leaue the celebration of the masse, or singing of Psalmes? Therefore as it seemeth, priests ought not at the commandement of any man to leaue the preaching of the word of God, vnto the which they are bound both by diuine and apostolicall precepts. With whom agreeth the writing of Hierome vpon the Decretals, saying in this wise: Let none of the bishops swell with the enuie of diuelish tentation: let none be angrie, if the priest doe sometime exhort the people, if they preach in their church, &c. for to him that forbiddeth mee these things, I will say, that he is priuiledging that priests should do those things which be commanded of God. What thing is there aboue Christ? or what may be preferred before his body and his blood, &c.

Doe priests therefore sin or not, which bargaine for money to pray for the soule of any dead man? It is well knowne that Iesus did whippe those that were buyers and sellers out of the temple, saying: My house shall bee called the house of praier, but you haue made the same a den of theeues: Truely hee cal not out such merchants from out of the church, but because of their sins. Whereupon Hierome vpon the text set saith: Let the priest be diligent and take good heede in this church, that they turne not the house of God into a den of theeues. Yee doubtlesse is a theefe which seeketh gaine by religion, and by a shew of holinesse endeth to find occasion of merchandise. Here vpon, the holy canons do make accursed, Simoniacall heretic, and and do command that those should be deprined of the priesthood, which for the selling or marueilous spirituall grace, do seeke gaine or money. Peter the apostle said to Simon Magus, Let thy money and thou goe both to the diuell, which thinkest that the gifts of God may be bought for money. Therefore the spirituall gifts of God ought not to be sold.

Selling of praier abominable.

Deritle praier is the spirituall gift of God, as is also the preaching of the word of God, or the laying on of hands, or the administration of other sacraments. Christ sending forth his disciples to preach, said vnto them: Heale ye the sicke, cast out diuels, raise the dead, freely haue ye receiued, freely giue ye again. If the priests haue power by their praiers to deliuer soules being in purgatorie, from grieuous paines: without doubt, he hath receiued that power freely from God. How therefore can hee sell his act, vnlesse hee resist the commandements of God, of whom he hath receiued that authority? This truely cannot bee done without sin, which is against the commandement of God. How plainely spake Christ to the Pharisies and priests saying; Woe be vnto you Scribes and Phariſies hypocrites, because yee haue eaten the whole houses of such as be widowes, by making long praiers, and therfore haue you receiued greater damnation? Wherein I pray you doe our Pharisies and priests differ from them? Doe not our priests deuoure widowes houses and possessions, that by their long praiers they might deliuer the soules of their husbands from the grieuous paines of purgatorie? How many Lordships I pray you haue beene bestowed vpon the religious men and women to pray for the dead, that they by their praier might deliuer those dead men from the paine (as they said) that they suffer in purgatorie, grieuously tormented and vexed? If their praiers and speaking of holy words, shall not be able to deliuer themselues from paine, vnlesse they haue good workes; how shall other men be deliuered from paine, by their praiers, which whilest they liued here, they gaue ouer themselues to sin? For preuarication of those lordships or lands which they gaue vnto the priests to pray for them, they themselues haue gotten by might from other faithfull men, vniustly, and violently. And the canons doe say, that sinne is not forgiuen, till the thing taken away wrongfully, be restored: How then shall they bee able (which doe vniustly possesse such lordships or lands) to deliuer them by their praiers from paine, which haue giuen to them these lordships or lands, seeing God from the beginning hath hated all extortion in his burnt sacrifices? For euery one that saith vnto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdome of heauen: but he which doth the will of my father which is in heauen. And againe, For the hearers of the law, but the doers of the law shall be iustified.

Buying and selling of praiers in the popes church. Buying and selling of pardons, Person, place, apparell, curiositie or elaborate sentence of praier not regarded of God.

If therefore the words of him that praieth, doe not deliuer himselfe from sinne, nor from the paine of sinne: how doe they deliuer other men from sinne or from the paine of sinne, when no man prayeth more earnestly for another man then for himselfe? Therefore many are deceiued in buying or selling of praiers, as in the buying of pardons that they might bee deliuered from paine; when as commonly they bee dearer for the praiers of the proud and vitious prelats, then for the praiers of deuout women and deuout men of the lay people. But out of doubt, God doth not regard the person of him that prayeth, neither the place in which he prayeth, nor his apparell, nor the curiousines of his praier, but the humilitie and godly affection of him that prayeth. Did not the Pharisie and the Publican go vp into the Temple to pray? The Publicans praier for his humilitie and godly affection is heard. But the Pharisies praier for his pride and arrogancie is contemned. Consider that neither the person, nor the place, nor the apparell, nor the curiousines of his praier doth helpe the Pharisie: Because the Publican not thinking himselfe woorthie to lift vp his eyes vnto heauen, for the multitude of his sinnes, saying (O God be mercifull vnto me a sinner) is iustified by his humilitie, and his praier is heard. But the Pharisie boasting in his righteousnes is despised, because God thrusteth downe the proud, and exalteth the humble and those that be meeke. The rich glutton also that was clothed with purple and silke, and fared euery day daintilie, prayed vnto Abraham, and is not heard, but is buried in paines and toiments of hell fire. But Lazarus which lay begging at his gate (being full of sores) is placed in the bosome of Abraham. Behold that neither the riches of his apparell, nor the deliciousnesse of his bankets, nor the goodlinesse of his estate, neither the abundance of his riches, doth helpe any thing to preser the praiers or petitions of the rich glutton, nor yet diminish his torments, because that mightie men in their mightinesse shall suffer torments mightilie. How dare any man by composition demand or receiue any thing of another man for his praiers? If he beleeue that he can by his praier deliuer his brother from grieuous paine, he is bound by charitie to releeue his brother with his praiers although hee be not hired thereto. But and if he will not pray vnlesse he be hired, then hath he no loue at all. What therefore helpeth his praier, which abideth not in charitie? Therefore let him first take compassion of himselfe by praier, that he may come into charitie, and then he shall be the better able to helpe others. If he beleeue not, or that hee standeth in doubt to be able to deliuer his brother by his praier: wherefore doth he make with him an assured bargaine, and taketh his money, and yet knoweth not whether he shall releeue him euer awhit the more or not, from his paine? I feare left the words of the prophet are fulfilled, saying: From the least to the most all men applie themselues to couetousnesse, and from the prophet to the priest all worke deceitfully. For the poore priests receiue themselues of such bargaining and selling of their praiers, sayings: The pope tooke learneth to crow of the old cocke. For, saith he, thou maist see that the pope himselfe in stalling of bishops and abbats, taketh the first fruits: In the placing or bestowing of benefices, he alwaies taketh somewhat, and specially if the benefices be great. And he selleth pardons or bulls, and to speake more plaine, he taketh money for them. Bishops in giuing orders, in hallowing churches and churchyards, doe take money: In ecclesiasticall correction they take money for the mitigation of penance: In the grieuous offences of couate persons, money is required, and caused to be payed. Abbats, monks, and other religious men that haue possession, will receiue no man into their fraternitie, or make them partakers of their spirituall suffrages, vnlesse he bestow somewhat vpon them, or promise them somewhat. Curats and vicars hauing sufficient liuings, by the tithes of their parishioners, yet in dirges & prayers minds, in hearing confessions, in weddings and burpings, doe require and haue money. The friers also of the foure orders of beggers, which thinke themselues to bee the most perfect men of the church, do take money for their praiers, confessions, and burpings of the dead: and when they preach, they beleeue that they shall haue either money or some other thing worthie money. Wherefore then be the poore priests blamed? ought not they to bee held excused, although they take money for their praiers by composition? Truely (me thinketh) that this excuse by other mens sinnes, doth not excuse them: forasmuch, as to heape one mischiefe vpon anothers head, is no sufficient discharge: I would to God that all the buyers and sellers of spirituall suffrages, would with the eyes of their heart behold the ruine of the great citie, and the fall of Babylon, and that which they shall say after that fall. Doth not the prophet say: And the merchants of the earth shall weepe and mourne for her, because no man shall buy any more their merchandise, that is, their merchandise of gold and siluer, and of pretious stone, and of pearle, and of silke and purple? And againe he saith: And the merchants which were made rich by her, shall stand aloofe, for feare of her torments, weeping, mourning, and saying, Alas, alas, that citie Babylon, that great citie, which was vonne to weare purple, white silke, crimsin, gold, pearle, and pretious stone, because that in one houre all those riches are come to nought. And againe: And they cast dust vpon their heads, and cried out weeping and mourning, and saying: Alas, alas, that great and mightie citie Babylon, by whom all such as had ships vpon the sea were made rich by her rewards: Because that in one houre she is become desolate.

Selling of parsons. Selling of church hallowings. Selling of diuine seruice. Selling of fraternitie. Selling of Dirges, trentalles, confessions, and burnings. Selling of seruices.

Exemple to be taken by the fall of Babylon.

The citie of Rome, Babylon. Apoc. 18.

This Babylon, this great citie, is the citie of Rome, as it apeareth by the processe of the apostle. Because the angell which shewed vnto saint Iohn the destruction of the mightie harlot sitting vpon many waters, with whom the kings of the earth haue committed fornication, and all they which dwell vpon the earth are made drunke with the wine of her whoredome, said vnto him: And the woman which thou sawest, is the great citie which hath dominion aboue kings, &c. And indeed in the dates of saint Iohn, the whole world was subiect to the temporall empire of the citie of Rome, and afterwards it was subiect to the spirituall empire or dominion of the same. But touching the temporall gouernment of the citie of Rome, it is fallen alreadie: and to that the other also, for the multitude of her spirituall fornication shall fall. The emperours of this citie gaue themselues to idolatrie, and would haue that men should honour them as Gods, and put all those to death that refused such idolatrie, and by the crueltie of their tormentes all infidels gat the vpper hand.

The temporall dominion of the citie of Rome. The spirituall dominion of the citie of Rome.

Hereupon, by the image of Nabuchodonozor, the empire of the Romans is likened to iron, which beateth together, and hath the mastrie of all mettals. And in the vision of Daniel, wherein he saw the foure windes of heauen to fight in the maine sea, and foure great beasts comming out of the sea: the kingdome of the Romans is likened to the fourth terrible and marueilous beast, the which had great iron teeth; eating and deuouring, and treading the rest vnder his feete: and this beast had ten homes, and as Daniel saith, hee shall speake words against the most highest, and shall teare with his teeth the saints of the most highest: and he shall thinke, that he may be able to change times and lawes, and they shall be deliuered into his power, vntill a time, times, and a halfe time. In the Apocalyps, saint Iohn saw a beast comming out of the sea, hauing ten heads and ten homes, and power was giuen to him to make moneths 42. So long time endured the empire of the Romans, that is to say, from the beginning of Iulius Cesar, which was the first emperor of the Romans, vnto the end of Fridericus, which was the last emperour of the Romans. Vnder this empire Christ suffered, and other martyrs also suffered for his names sake. And here is fallen Rome as Babylon (which is all one) according to the maner of speaking in the Apocalyps, as touching the temporall and corporall power of governing. And thus shall the fall also touching the spirituall power of governing, for the multitude of the iniquities and spirituall fornication and merchandise that are committed by her in the church.

The first of the image which Nabuchodonozor saw, did betoken the empire of Rome, and part of them were of iron, and part of clay and earth. The part that was of iron fell, and the power thereof vanished away, because the power thereof was at an end after certaine monethes. That part of clay and earth yet endureth, but it shall vanish away by the testimonie of the prophets: wherevpon saint John in the Apocalyps: After that, he saw the part made of iron rising out of the sea, to which each people, tribe, and tongue submitted themselues. And he saw another beast comming out of the earth, which had two hornes, like to the hornes of a Lambe, and he spake like a Dragon, and he tarryeth by the first beast in his sight.

This beast as formeth me, doth betoken the clay and earthen part of the feet of the image, because he cannot out of the earth. For that by certeine helpe he is made the high and chiefe priest of the Romanis, in the church of Christ, and so from aboue he ascended on high. But Christ from heauen descended, because that he which was God and author of euery creature became man: and he that was Lord of lordes, was made in the shape of a seruant. And although that in the heauens the compasse of angels minister vnto him, he himselfe ministred or serued in earth, that he might teach vs humilitie, by which a man ascendeth into heauen, euen as by pride a man goeth downe into the bottomelesse pit. This beast hath two hornes most like a lambe, because that he challengeth to himselfe both the priestly and kingly power, aboue all other here in earth. The lambe, that is, Christ, which is a king for euer vpon the kingdome of Dauid, and he is priest for euer after the order of Melchisedech, but his kingdome is not of this world: but the kingdome of this beast is of this world, because those that be vnder him, fight for him. And as Iesus is Christ two maner of waies, because that Christus is as much to say as Vnctus: he verily was anointed king and anointed priest. So this beast saith, that he is the seruant and priest. Wherefore both he call himselfe Christ: because that Christ knowing that afore, said: Many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ, and shall deceive many. And this because that he is both king and priest, he challengeth to himselfe the double sword, that is, the corporall sword and the spirituall sword. The corporall sword is in his right hand, and his spirituall sword is in his right eie, by the testimonie of Zacharie. And by speaketh subtillie like a Dragon, because that by the testimony of Christ he shall deceive many, as the Apec. witnesseth. He did great wonders, that also he might make men fire to come from heauen into the earth in the sight of men. And he might deceive them that dwell vpon the earth, because of the wonders that are permitted him to do in the sight of the beast, and he ouercame the first beast which ascended out of the sea. For that beast challenged vnto himselfe authority of gouernment of the whole world: He hath put to death and tormented those that resist his commandements, he would be honored as a God vpon the earth. The bishop of Rome saith, that the whole world ought to be in subiection vnto him; those that bee disobedient vnto his commandements, he putteth in prison, and to death if he can: If he cannot, he excommunicateth them, and commandeth them to be cast into the diuels dungeon. But he that hath no power ouer the body, much lesse hath he power ouer the soule. And truely his excommunication, nor the excommunication of any priest vnder him, shall at that time little hurt him that is excommunicate, so that the person of him that is excommunicate, be not first excommunicate of God through sin.

And thus it seemeth straeth vnto me, that God the ferneth their blessings into curses, because they gaue not due glorie vnto his name. So when that they vniustly excommunicate and curse, he turneth their curssings into blessings. Also the bishop of Rome doth make men to worship him as God, because that the speciall sacrifice that God doth require of vs, is to be obedient vnto him in keeping of his commandements. But now the popes commandements be communed to be kept, and be kept in very deede, but the commandements of Christ are contemned and reiected. Thus sitteth the bishop of Rome in the temple of God, shewing himselfe as God, and erecteth himselfe aboue all that which is called God, or worshipped as God. But in this sail he shall be deceiued, because that euery kingdome diuided in it selfe, shall be made desolate. He teaching a truth, is the head of the church, but the pope teaching a lie, is the taile of the Dragon. He seducing the world, shall be acknowledged to be the seruise of the darcine of Christ, but of he is knowne, he shall be reiected and naught esteemed. He giueth to Emallans great rich and poore, free and bond markes in their right hands, and in their foreheads: that no man should buy or sell, but those that shall haue the markes of the name of the beast, or that looketh to haue of him some recompence, small, meane, or great, or else the number of his name, which number is 666. The pope saith, that in the administration of euery sacrament, he doth imprint a certaine character or marke into the soule of him that receiueth. In baptisme he saith that he doth imprint into the soule of him that is baptised, a marke that cannot be wiped out, and is likewise in other sacraments. And I know that in a sacrament are two things, that is, the sacramentall signe, and spirituall grace represented by the same signe: the sacramentall signe is giuen to man of man, but the spirituall grace is giuen of Christ.

Wherefore, although a vitious or naughtie priest doth baptize any man, if bee that is baptised or his parents (if bee bee a child) do aske with a faithfull meaning baptisme, and doe meane faithfully hereafter to obserue the words of baptisme: is as well baptised, as if he were baptised of more vertuous a priest. So also the sinner which with all his heart is sorie for his sinnes, and doth aske faithfully mercie of God, is as well absolued of a vitious priest, as of a vertuous. Because the humble of God which taketh away the sinnes of the world, which away inwardly our sinnes by his grace, because that he is the bishop and pastour of our soules. All other priests do outwardly make absolution, which know not for a certainetie whether they haue absolued or not. So also is it in the other, because that the grace of the sacrament is giuen of God, and the sacramentall signe of man. In giuing of orders, the chiefe bishop doth imprint the corporall markes, but of the spirituall marks, I know none: vnlesse a man will say, that by receiuing the order he hath some beliefe that he may worke some things pertaining to that order, the which before the receiuing of the order he could not. What sin one thing is, that none in the church ought to sell spirituall merchandise (of which things wee haue spoken before) vnlesse he haue the marke of the beast. By counsell is, let the buyer beware of those markes: because that after the fall of Babylon, if any man hath worshipped the beast and her image, and hath receiued the marke in his forehead, and vpon his hand, he shall drinke of the wine of Gods wrath, which is mixed with the wine in the cup of his anger, and hee shall be tormented in fire and brimstone in the sight of the holy angels, and in the sight of the lambe: and the smoake of their torments shall ascende ascent, although bee looke for a recompence small, meane, or great, of the beast, or of the number of his name. The beast doubtlesse doth recompense his friends, with his small reward, that is, with great gifts and benefices corporall: with a meane reward, that is, with great spirituall gifts, in authoritie of blessing, loosing, binding, praying, and exercising other spirituall workes: and with his greatest reward, which after that they be dead, maketh them to be honored in earth among the saints. The number of his name according to the opinion of some men, is Dux Cleri, the captaine of the clergie, because by that name he is named, and maketh his name to owne, and that name is 666.

This is my opinion of the beast ascending out of the earth, and that he shall such time, as I shall be of the saints beast better instructed. But Martine the popes confessor which maketh the chronicle of the emperours and popes, reciteth many errours of the popes, more horrible and abominable then of the emperours. For he speaketh of the idolatrous popes, heretikall, and popes that were murtherers, adulterers, and vsed necromancie, and witchcraft, that were fornicators, and dessled with all kind of vice. But I haue partly declared how that the popes law is contrarie to Christs law, and how that hee saith, that he is the chiefe vicar of Christ in earth; and in his deeds is contrarie to Christ, and doth forbid both his doctrine and life. I cannot se who else may bee so well Antichrist, and a seducer of the people. For there is not a greater pestilence then a familiar enemie.

As concerning idols and the worshipping of them, I thinke of them as Moses, Salomon, Isayas, Jeremie, and the rest of the prophets, which all spake against the making of images, as also the worshipping of images. And faithfull Dauid full of the spirit of God, saith: Let all those be confounded that worship images, and that reioyce in idols: And againe hee saith: Let them be made like vnto them that make them, and all such as put their trust in them. Wherefore I pray God that this cull come not vpon me, which is the curse of God pronounced by Dauid the prophet. For will I bee by Gods grace, neither a maker, nor else a worshipper of images.

As concerning others, I beleeue and obey the doctrine of the Almightie God, and my master Jesus Christ, which teacheth: that a christian man in affirmation of a truth, should passe the righteousnesse of the Scribes and Pharises of the old Testament, or else he cannot by them from the kingdome of heauen. For he saith: Vnlesse your righteousnesse exceede the righteousnesse of the Scribes and Pharises, yee cannot enter into the kingdome of heauen. And as concerning others he saith: It hath been said to them of old time, Thou shalt not forswear thy selfe, but thalt perfourne vnto the Lord thy sie things which thou hatchest. But I say vnto you, that thalt not sweare at all, neither by the heauen, nor yet by the earth, &c. But let your communication be yea, yea, nay, nay, for what soeuer thall be more then this, proceedeth of euill. Therefore, as the perfection of the ancient men of the old Testament was, not to forsweare themselues: so the perfection of christian men, is, not to sweare at all, because they are so commanded of Christ, whose commandement must in no wise be broken, although that the citie of Rome be contrarie to this doctrine of Christ, euen as in many things he is found contrarie to her selfe.

As touching the taking away of temporall goods from those that are ecclesiasticall persons offending habituler: by such as are temporall lords, I will not affirme any thing to be lawfull in this matter (as in other matters before) that is not agreeable to charitie: And that for because it is a hard matter for a man to take another mans goods from him without beaking of charitie, because peraduenture he that taketh away, is the more moued to such maner of taking away by reason of the desire he hath to those goods, which he endeauoureth to take away: or else, because of some displeasure or hatred to the person, from whom hee goeth about to take away those goods, then that hee from whom those goods bee taken, should be amended. Therfore, vnlesse he that taketh away, bee only moued of charity to the taking away of such goods, I dare not affirme that such taking is lawfull. And if such taking away proceed of charitie, I dare not iudge it vnlawfull: because that the bishop of Rome, which receiued his temporall dominion of the emperor, when the emperor rebelled and was not obedient vnto him, he deprined him from his temporall iurisdictions: How much more then may temporall lords do the same, which haue bestowed vpon them many temporall dominions and lordships, only to the intent that they might the better intend to serue God and keepe his commandements? And if they perceiue that they be against the lawes of God, and that they be ouer busilie occupied about worldly matters: I cannot se but that they may well enough take from them those temporall goods, which to a good purpose they gaue them. But if in time to come after this, those that be temporall lords shall take from ecclesiastical persons such temporalities of which they haue left to vnderstand this, reade the prophet Ezechiel, in the chapter of the shepheards of Israel, which fed themselues in stead of their flocke: and also let him reade the Apocalyps of the fall of Babylon. Let him also reade the popes decretals against heretickes: and in those hee shall find, that the taking away of the temporalties from the clergie, shall come to passe for the multitude of their sinnes.

Thus reuerend father haue I made mine answere to the matter whereof I am accused: beseeching you, that as I haue beene obedient to your desire, and that euen as a sonne, declaring vnto you the secrets of my heart in plaine words (although rude), so I bestire to know your opinion, and crauue your fatherly benevolence, that now your labour may be for my instruction and amendment, and not to accusation and condemnation. For like as in the beginning I haue promised you, if any man of what state, sect, or condition soeuer hee be, can theis me any errour in any of my writings by the authorite of holy Scripture, or by any probable reason grounded in the Scriptures; I will receiue his information willingly and humblie.

After that all the foresaid things were exhibited and giuen by the foresaid Walter Brute, vnto the foresaid bishop of Hereford: he further appointed to the same Walter, the third day of the moneth of October, at Hereford, with the continuance of the daies following to heare his opinion. Which third day now at hand, being Friday in the yeare of our Lord God 1393. the said Walter Brute appeared before him, sitting in commission in the cathedrall church of Hereford, at six a clocke or thereabout; hauing for his assistants in the same place, diuers prelats, abbats, and learned men in the lawes of Diuinitie, whereof twelue were monks, two doctors of the law. Amongst these was Nicolas Hereford accompanied with many other prelats and worshipfull men and wise graduates in sundrie faculties. How was the foresaid Walter appoled of his writings aforesaid, and the contents therein. Earnest were they in crying out of those writings, his heresies, and in thetuing his schismes, sundrie errours, and diuers other things. Now, after that they had continued all that day and the two daies following (that is, friday, saturday and sunday) in their informations and examinations against the same Walter Brute; the same Walter Brute submitted himselfe to the determination of the church, and to the correction of the said John Bishop, as it appeareth vpon his owne hand in a scroll written in the English tongue: The tenour of which scroll, is as followeth.

I Walter Brute submit my self principally to the Euangelie of Iesus Christ, and to the determination of holy kirke, and to the generall councels of holy kirke. And to the sentence and determination of the foure Doctors of holy writ, that is, Augustine, Ambrose, Ierome, and Gregorie. And I meekely submit me to your correction, as a subiect ought to his bishop.

Which scroll, as afore is recited, in the English tongue, the foresaid Walter Brute, read with a loud and intelligible voice, at the Crosse in the churchyard on Sonday, that is to say, the sixth of the said moneth of October, before the sermon made vnto the people in presence of the said bishop of Hereford and other aboue writen, as also other barons, knights and noble men, and clergie, and also a great multitude of people. After which reading of the scroll, the foresaid Thomas Crawley, bachelor of Diuinitie, made the sermon vnto the people, and tooke for his theame the words of the apostle to the Romans, the eleuenth chapter, that is as followeth: Be not ouer wise in your owne conceits, but stand in feare, &c.

¶ Out of these declarations and writings of Walter Brute, the bishop with the Doctos and Doctors aboue rehearsed, did gather and draw out certaine articles, to the number of 37. which they sent to the Vniuersitie of Cambridge to be confuted, vnto two learned men, master Colwill, and master Newton, bachelers of Diuinitie. Which master Colwill and Newton did both labour in the matter, to the vttermost of their cunning, in replying and answering to the said 37. articles.

Besides them also, William Woodford a frier (who wrote likewise against the articles of Wickliffe) labouring in the same cause, made a solemne and a long tractation, compiling the articles of the said Brute, to the number of 29. All which treatifes, as I wish to come to the readers hand, that the slenderness of them might be knowne: so it may happen perceiue, that the same being in my hands may hereafter bee further published, with other like tractations mine, as conuenient time for the polirtie thereof may hereafter better serue then now.

What after this became to this Walter Brute, or what end he had, I find it not registred: but like it is, that bee for this time escaped. Certaine other writings I find moreover, which albeit they beare no name of this Walter nor of any certaine author: yet because they are in the same register adioyned to the history of him, I thought therfore most fit here to be inserted. Of the which, one was a letter sent to Nicolas Hereford a little aboue specified: who being at the first a great follower of John Wickliffe, as appeareth before, pag. 403. was now in the number of them which sate vpon this Walter, as is in the columne aboue recoded. The copie of this letter, bearing no name of any speciall author, but onely as sent by a certaine Lollard (as the register doth terme him) is written in maner and forme as followeth.

Here followeth the copie of a letter sent to master Nicolas Hereford, by a Lollard, as in the register it is said.

A letter sent to Nicol. Hereford.

FOrasmuch as no man that putteth his hand to the plough and looketh backe, is meet for the kingdome of God, as our Sauiour Christ saith: what manuel is it, although master Nicolas Hereford, which at the first (by the visitation of the spirit of God peraduenture) put his hand, that is, gaue his diligence vnto the plough, that is, to the sowing of the word of God and holy Scripture, as well in preaching as in doing good workes; is now so blind and vnskilfull to expound the Scripture, that he knoweth not what is vnderstood by the kingdom of heauen? Truely it is no maruell, O thou that art master of the Nicolaitans, which like Nicolas the most false Deacon, hast left or forsaken the infallible knowledge of the holy scripture. For the true knowledge of the Theologicall veritie is shut vp as well from thee as from all the other Nicolaitans following thy conditions, forasmuch as thou goest not in by the doore of the sheepfold found the same Euangelicall veritie. Therefore when thou diddest recite this other day, first, the pharisaicall & hypocriticall woe (nothing at all to any purpose) thou shouldst haue said iustly in this sort, both of thy selfe, and other thy followers and religious Antichrists: Woe be vnto vs Scribes and Pharises, for we shut vp the kingdom of heauen, that is to say, the true knowledge of the holy Scripture, before men by our false glosses and crooked similitudes: and neither we our selues enter into the same kingdome or knowledge, nor suffer others to enter into it. Wherefore, it seemeth vnto the faithfull sort, that wrongfully, falslie, and without any reuerence, ye haue expounded that storie of Gregorie, 1. q. 1. that is to say, Quicunque studet, &c. For this is the true vnderstanding of the same: Knowing first that there bee some priests after the thing, and name onely, and doth shew that this is true: that whosoeuer studeth to receiue the holy order by giuing of money; he is not a priest, Secundum rem, & nomen. But to say the truth, bee desireth to be called a priest, that is, to be a priest Secundum nomen tantum. And such a priest, which is a priest in name only, is no priest. No more then S. Mary painted is S. Mary: Nor a false doctor a doctor, but no doctor: And a mā painted is not a man, but no man. And thus such a priest in name only, is not a priest: Because that all faithfull men doe firmely beleeue with saint Gregory, that no man buying the holy orders, may then be called a priest as he saith, 1. q. 1. They that buy or sel holy orders can be no priests. Whereupon is written, Anathema dandi & Anathema accipiendi: that is, Simoniacall heresie. And it followeth, How therefore if they be accursed and not blessed, can they make others blessed? And when that they bee not in the body of Christ, how can they either receiue or deliuer the body of Christ? He that is accursed, how can he blesse? as though

The tenor of the bull, to the renowmed prince, Richard by the grace of God king of England and of France: whereof mention is made above, as followeth, and is thus much in effect.

The popes wily subtile fetches to set vp the kingdom of Christ.

TO our welbeloued sonne in Christ, Richard the noble king of England, we send greeting, &c. Ingreeueth vs from the bottome of our hearts, and our holy mother the church in all places through Christendome lamenteth. We vnderstand that there be certaine heresies sprung, and do without any condigne restraint range at their own liberty, to the seducing of the faithfull people, and doe euery day with ouermuch liberty enlarge their vndiscreet bounds. But how much the more carefully we labour for the preseruation both of you and your famous kingdome, and also the sincerity of the faith, and doe with much more ardent desire couet, that the prosperous state of the same should be preserued and inlarged; the sting of greater sorrow doth so much the more penetrate and molest vs, forasmuch as we see (alas the while) in our time, and vnder the regall presidence of your most Christian gouernment, a certaine craftie, and hairebrainie sect of false Christians, in the same your kingdome, to grow and increase; which call themselues, The poore men of the treasury of Christ and his disciples, and whom the common people by a more sounder name, call, Lollards, (as a man would say, withered darnell) according as their sinnes require and perceiue that they wax strong, and as it were preuaile against the diocesans of some places, and other gouernours as they meet together, not courageously addressing themselues against them as they ought to doe (whereof chiefly and not vndeseruedly I giue them admonition) for that they take thereby the more bolder presumption and stomacke among the vnlearned people. And forasmuch as those whom we cannot call men, but the damnable shadowes or ghosts of men, do rise vp against the sound faith, and holy vniuersall church of Rome: and that very many of them being indifferently learned, which (to the confusion and eternall damnation of some of them) they got sitting vpon their mothers lap the said church of Rome, do rise vp or inueigh against the determination of the holy fathers, with too much presumptuous boldnesse, to the subuersion of the whole ecclesiasticall order and estate; haue not bin afraid, nor are not yet afraid, publikely to preach very many erroneous, detestable, & hereticall articles, for that they are not put to silence, reproued, driuen out, rooted out or otherwise punished, by any that hath authority and the feare and loue of God. And also they are not afraid openly to write the same articles, and so being written to deliuer them to your kingly parliament, and obstinately to affirme the same. The venemous and disdainfull recitall of which articles, vpon good aduisement at this present we passe ouer, lest the sufferance of such sensuality might fortune to renew the wound that reason may heale. Yet notwithstanding, lest so great and contagious an euill should escape vnpunished, and that without deserued vexation, and also that it might not get more heart, and wax more stronger: We therefore (according to that our office and duty is, where such negligence and sluggishnes of our prelats being present, where this thing is) doe commit and giue in commandement to our reuerend brethren, Canturbury and Yorke, archbishops, by other our letters; that they stand vp in the power of God against this pestilent and contagious sect, and that they lisely persecute the same in forme of law roote out and destroy those, that aduisedly and obstinatly refuse to withdraw their foot from the same stumbling blocke, any restraint to the contrary notwithstanding. But because the assistance, counsell, fauor, and aid of your kingly estate and highnesse are requisit to the execution of the premisses: we require, exhort, and beseech the same your princely highnesse, by the bowels of the mercy of Iesus Christ, by his holy faith, by your owne saluation, by the benefit that to all men is common, and by the prosperity assured to euery man and woman, that not onely your kingly feuerity may readily shew, and cause to be shewed vnto our archbishops and their commissaries (in this behalfe requiring the foresaid due execution) conuenient aid and fauor, as otherwise also to cause them to be assisted: but that also you will inioine your magistrates and Iustices of Assise, and peace, more straytly, that of their own good wils, they execute the authority committed vnto them, with all feuerity against such damned men, according as they are bound by the office, which they are put in trust with against those I meane, which haue determined obstinately to defile themselues in their malice and sinnes, those to expell, banish, and imprison, and there so long to keep them, till condigne sentence shall pronounce them worthy to suffer punishment. For your kingly wisdome seeth, that such as they bee, doe not only deceiue poore simple soules (or at the least doe what they can to deceiue them) but also bring their bodies to destruction, and further prepare confusion and ruinous fall vnto their temporall lords. Go to therefore my sweete sonne, and indeuour your selfe to worke so in this matter, as vndoubtedly we trust you will: that as this firebrand (burning and flaming ouer sore) beganne vnder your prefidence or gouernment; so vnder your seuere iudgement and vertuous diligence, might, fauour, and aid; not one sparke remaine hidde vnder the ashes, but that it bee vtterlie extinguished, and speedily put out.

Giuen at our palace of S. Peter at Rome, the xv. Calends of October, in the fifth yeere of our pontificality.

¶ The kings Commission.

RIchard by the grace of God, king of England, and of France, and lord of Ireland. To all those vnto whom these present letters shall come, greeting. Know ye, that whereas lately at the instance of the reuerend father, William archbishop of Canturbury, Metropolitane of all England, and Legat of the apostolicall seate: We for the redresse and amendment of all those which would obstinately preach or maintaine, publikely or priuily, any conclusions of the holy Scripture, repugnant to the determination of our holy mother the church, and notoriously redounding to the subuersion of the catholike faith, or containing any heresie or errour, within the prouince or bishopricke of Canturbury; haue by our speciall letters patents, in the zeale of the faith, giuen authority and licence vnto the foresaid archbishop, and to all and singuler his suffragans, to arrest all and euery of them that will preach or maintaine any such conclusions, whersoeuer they may be found, and to commit them either to their owne prisons, or any others at their owne pleasure, and to keep them in the same, vntill they repent them of their errours and prauities of those heresies; or till that, of such manner of arrests, by vs or by our counsell it should be otherwise determined: that is to say, to euery one of them and their ministers throghout their cities & diocesse. And now the reuerend father in God, Iohn bishop of Hereford, hath for a certaintie informed vs; that although the same bishop hath according to iustice conuinced a certaine fellow named Wat Swinderby, pretending himselfe to be a chaplen, and one Stephan Bell a learned man, and hath pronounced them heretikes & excommunicat, and false informers among the common people, and hath declared the same by the definitiue sentence of the aforesaid bishop, for that they haue presumed to affirme and preach openly in diuers places within the diocesse of Hereford, many conclusions or naughty opinions notoriously redounding to the subuersion of the catholike found faith, and tranquillity of our kingdome: The same bishop notwithstanding, neither by the ecclesiasticall censures, neither yet by the force and strength of our commission was able to reuoke the foresaid William and Stephan, nor yet to bridle the malice and indurat contumacie of them: for that they, after that they were vpon such heretical prauity conuict by the same bishop, (to the intent they might delude his iudgement and iustice) conueied themselues by and by vnto the borders of Wales, with such as were their fautors and accomplices, in keeping themselues close, vnto whom the force of our said letters doth in no wise extend. Whereupon the said bishop hath made supplication vnto vs, that we will vouchsafe to prouide a sufficient remedy in that behalfe. Wee therefore, which alwaies (by the helpe of almighty God) are defenders of the faith, willing to withstand such presumptuous and peruerse enterprises by the most safe way and meanes we may, giue and commit full power and authority to the foresaid bishop & to his ministers, by the tenor of these presents, to arrest or take, or cause to be arrested or taken, the foresaid William and Stephan, in any place within the citie and diocesse of Hereford and our dominion of Wales, with all the speed that may be; and to commit them either to our prison, or else to the prison of the same bishop, or any other prison at their pleasure, if such need be, and there to keep them safe. And afterwards, vnlesse they wil obey the commandements of the church, with diligence to bring them before vs and our counsell, or els cause them to be brought: that we may determin for their further punishment, as we shall thinke it requisite and conuenient to be done by the aduice of our counsell, for the defence and preseruation of the catholike faith. And that the foresaid William and Stephan, being succored by the aid of their fautors or fauorers, should not be able to flie or escape to their accustomed starting holes; and that the sharpnes of their paines so aggrauated, may giue them sufficient cause to returne to the lap againe of their holy mother the church: we straitly charge and command all and singuler our sheriffes, bailiffes, barons, and all other our officers in the citie and diocesse of Hereford, and in any other places being within our dominion of Wales, by the tenour of these presents: that from time to time (where they thinke it most meet) they cause it openly to bee proclaimed in our name, that none, of what state, degree, preheminence, kind, or other condition he shall be of, doe cherish openly or secretly the foresaid William and Stephan, vntill the time that they repent them of their heresies and errors, and shall be reconciled vnto the holy church of God: Neither that any person or persons, be beleeuers, fauourers, or receiuers, defenders, or in any case wittingly instructers of the said William or Stephan, or any other of the residue of the heretikes that are to be conuinced, vpon the forfeiture of all that euer they haue. And that also they giuing their attendance, bee obedient and answerable to the foresaid bishoppe and his deputies in this behalfe, for the execution execution of the premisses: and that they certifie vs and our counsell distinctly and plainly, from time to time, of the names of all and singuler persons, which shall fortune to be found culpable in this behalfe, vnder their seales. In witnesse whereof, we haue caused these our letters patents to be made. Witnesse our selfe at Westminster, the 9. day of March, in the 15. yeere of our raigne.

Another letter of the said king against Walter Brute.

Another letter of king Richard against Walter Brute.

RIchard by the grace of God king of England and of France, and lord of Ireland. To his beloued and faithfull Iohn Chaundos knight, Iohn Eynsore knight, Renold de la Bere knight, Walter Deueros knight, Thomas de la Bare knight, William Lucie knight, Leonard Hakelute knight, and to the maior of the citie of Hereford, to Thomas Oldcastle, Richard Nash, Roger Wygmore, Thomas Waylwayne, Iohn Skydmore, Iohn Vp-Harry, Henry Motton, and to the sheriffe of Hereford, sendeth salutations.

Walter Brute.

Forasmuch as it is aduertised vs, that one Walter Brute, and other such children of iniquitie, haue damnably holden, affirmed, and preached, certaine articles and conclusions being notoriously repugnant against the holy Scripture (of the which, some of them as heresies, and the rest as errors, are finally by the church condemned) and that in diuers places of dioceses within the diocesse of Hereford, and parts neere adioining, both priuily, openly, and obstinatly: which thing wee perceiue not onely to redound to the subuersion (in a manner) of the catholike faith, which as well we as other catholike princes ought of duty to maintaine, but also to forewarne vs of the subuersion of our faithful Diocesans. And that the said bishop, vpon the good deliberation and aduisement of a great number of doctors in Diuinity, and other learned and skilfull men in the Scriptures, of speciall deuotion, according to his bounden duty, purposed to begin and make diuers and sundry processes by law to bee sent vnto the foresaid Walter and his accomplices, to appeare personally before him and other the doctors aforesaid, in the cathedral church of Hereford, the morrow after the translation of S. Thomas of Hereford next ensuing, and to proceed in the same place against the same Walter, in the foresaid articles and conclusions, for the amendment of his foule. Now afresh (because that the said Walter and others of their retinew, cleauing and confederating with him, might not suffer condigne paines according to their demerits) indeuor themselues to make void and frustrate the said godly purpose of the same bishop, in such sort correction and execution as should haue been done, and with force doe resist and let the same with all the power they may, to the great contempt of vs and of our crowne, and to the breaking and hurting of our peace, and pernicious example of others: Do appoint you, and euery of you, immediatly as soone as this our commission shall be deliuered vnto you, in our behalfe and name, to make open proclamation in the diocesse and parts aforesaid, where ye shall thinke it most meet and conuenient: That no man be it hereafter, of what state or condition so euer he shall be, within the diocesse and parts aforesaid, vpon paine of forfaiture of all that euer hee hath, to make or leuie any conuenticles, assemblies, or confederacies; by any colour: or that they presume to attempt or procure any other thing, whereby our peace may be hurt or broken, or that the same bishops and doctors aforesaid, may be by any means molested or let in the execution of such correction as is to be done, according to the canonicall sanctions; and to arrest all those which ye shall finde, or take offending in this behalfe, or that keep themselues in any such conuenticles. And that they being committed to prison, be there kept, till you shall haue other commandement from vs and our counsell for their deliuerance: and that ye distinctly and plainly certifie vs and our said counsell, of all your doing in this behalfe vnder your seales, or else the seales of some of you. And therefore we straitly charge and command you, and euery of you, that ye diligently attend vpon the premisses, and that in your deeds ye execute the same with all diligence and carefull indeuour, in the forme and manner aforesaid. And further, we giue straite charge and commandement to all and singuler sheriffes, maiors, bailiffes, constables, and other our faithfull subiects, by the tenour of these presents: that they be attending vpon you, counselling and aiding you, and euery of you, as is meet and conuenient in the doing and execution of the premisses. In witnesse whereof, we haue caused these our letters patents to be made. Witnesse my selfe at Westminster the 22. day of September, in the 17. yeere of our raigne.

By the same king and counsell.

King Richard against the gouernors of the archbishop and the prelats.

Thus king Richard by the setting on of W. Courtney, archbishop of Canturbury and his fellowes, taking part with the pope and Romish prelats, warred something strait & hard to the pore christians of the contrary side, of Wicklife, as by these letters aboue prefixed may appeare. Albeit, during all the life of the said king, I finde of none expressly by name that suffered burning. Notwithstanding, some there were which by the foresaid archbishop William Courtney, and other bishops had been condemned, and diuers also abiured, and did penance as well in other places, as chiefly about the towne of Leicester, as followeth here to be declared out of the archbishops register and records.

K. Regist. W. Courtney, fol. Cant.

At what time the said archbishop William Courtney was in his visitation at the towne of Leicester, certaine there were accused and detected to him, by the maniis and other priests in the said towne. The names of which persons there detected, were, one Roger Derre, Nicolas Taylor, Richard Wagstaffe, Michael Scriuener, William Smith, John Henry, William Parch menar, and Roger Goldsmith, inhabitants of the same towne of Leicester. These with other mo, were denounced to the archbishop for holding the opinion of the sacrament of the altar, of auricular confession, and other sacraments, contrary to that which the church of Rome doth preach and obserue. All which parties aboue named, and many other mo, whose names are not knowne, did hold these heresies and erroes here vnder written, and are of the Romish church condemned.

Roger Derre, Nicolas Taylor, Richard Wagstaffe, Michael Scriuener, William Smith, Iohn Henry, William Parch menar, and Roger Goldsmith inhabitants of Leicester.

1. That in the sacrament of the altar, after the words of consecration, there remaineth the body of Christ with the materiall bread.
2. That images ought not to be worshipped in any case, nor that no man ought to set any candles before them.
3. That no crosse ought to be worshipped.
4. The masses and mattens ought not with an high and loud voice to be said in the church.
5. Item, that no curat or priest taken in any crime, can confesse at, heare confessions, nor minister any of the sacraments of the church.
6. That the pope & all prelats of the church cannot binde any man with the sentence of excommunication, vnlesse they know him to be first excommunicated of God.
7. That no prelat of the church can grant any pardons.
8. That euery lay man may in euery place preach and teach the Gospell.
9. That it is sinne to giue any almes or charity to the friers preachers, Minorites, Augustines, or Carmelites.
10. That no oblation ought to be vsed at the funerals of the dead.
11. That it is not necessary to make confession of our sinnes to the priest.
12. That euery good man, although hee be vnlearned, is a priest.

These Articles they taught, preached, and affirmed manifestly in the towne of Leicester, and other places adioining. Whereupon the said archbishop monished the said Roger, and Nicolas, with the rest, on the next day to make answere vnto him in the said monastery to the foresaid articles. But the foresaid Roger and Nicolas, with the rest, did themselues out of the way, and appeared not. Whereupon the archbishop vpon All hallow day, being the first day of November, celebrating the high masse at the high altar in the said monastery, being attired in his pontificalibus, denounced the said parties with all their adherents, fautors, fauorers, and counsellers, excommunicat and accursed, which either held, taught, or maintained the foresaid conclusions heretical and erroneous, and that in forme lawe, by ringing the bels, lighting the candles, and putting out the same againe, and throwing them downe to the ground, to other circumstances thereunto belonging. Also on the morow after (being All Soules day) he sent for all the curats and other lay men of the towne of Leicester, to inquire more diligently of the verity of such matter as they knewe, and were able to say against any persons whatsoeuer, concerning the foresaid articles, as also against the parties before named and specified vpon their othes, denouncing euery one of them severally by their names to be excommunicat and accursed; and caused them also in diuers parish churches in Leicester also to be excommunicat. And further the said archbishop interdicted the whole towne of Leicester, and all the churches in the same, so long as any of the foresaid excommunicat persons should remaine or be within the same, and till that all the Lollards of the towne should returne and amend from such heresies and errors, obtaining at the said archbishop his handes the benefit of absolution.

The whole towne of Leicester interdicted.

At length it was declared and shewed to the said archbishop, that there was a certaine anchoresse whose name was Matilde, inclosed within the churchyard of S. Peters church of the said towne of Leicester, to be infected (as they said) with the pestiferous contagion of the foresaid heretikes & Lollards: Whereupon, after that the said archbishop had examined the foresaid Matilde, touching the foresaid conclusions, heresies, and errors, and found her not to answer plainly and directly to the same, but sophistically and subtilly; gaue and assigned vnto her a day peremptory, personally to appeare before him in the monastery of Saint Iames at Northhampton, more fully to answer to the said articles, heresies, and errors, which was the first day of the said moneth of November; commanding the abbat of the monastery of Pratis aforesaid, that the daze of the recluse in which the said Matild was, should be opened, and that till his return he should cause her to be put in safe custody.

Matilde an anchoresse cited to appeare.

That

That done, he sent forth his mandat against ti, Lollards, vnder this forme:

The kings precedent by the bishop to arrest the L. Mountmer.

William by the permission of God, &c. To his welbeloued sonnes, the Maior and Bailifes of the towne of Leicester diocesse, greeting. We haue lately receiued the kings letters, gratiously granted vs for the defence of the catholike faith, in these words following. Richard by the grace of God, king of England and of France, &c. We on the behalfe of our holy mother the church, by the kings authority aforesaid, doe require you, that you cause the same Richard, William, Roger, and the rest, to be arrested, and sent vnto vs; that they with their pernicious doctrine doe not infect the people of God, &c. Giuen vnder our seale, &c.

By another instrument also in the same Register, is mention made of one Margaret Tally Nun, which forsaking her order, was by the said archbishop constrained against her will, against to enter the same, as by this instrument here vnder ensuing may appeare.

Margaret Tally a nun, constrained against her will to take againe her habit.

William by the grace of God, &c. To our reuerend brother in God, Iohn, by the grace of God bishop of Ely, greeting, &c. In the visitation of our diocesse of Lincolne according to our office, amongst other enormities worthy reformation, we found one theepe out of our fold strayed, and amongst the briers tangled; to wit, Margaret Tally, Nun professed, of the monastery of S. Radegond within your diocesse: the calling off the habit of her religion, was found in secular attire, many yeres being an apostata, and leading a dissolute life. And lest her bloud should be required at our hands, wee haue caused her to be taken, and brought vnto you, being her pastor; and straitly inioyning you, by these presents doe command, that you admit the same Margaret againe into her forsaid monastery (although returned against her will) or else into some other place, there for her soules health you shall thinke most conuenient: and that from henceforth she be safely kept, as in the strait examination of the same you will yeelde an account. Giuen vnder our seale, &c.

Matilde recanteth.

By sundry other instruments also in the same Register recorded, I finde, that the foresaid Matilde the anchoresse, vpon the strait examination and handling of the foresaid archbishop, before whom peremptorily she was enioyned to appeare, and til that day of appearance taken out of the recluse and committed to safe custody, as you heard; retracted and recanted her foresaid articles and opinions. For the which she being enioyned forty daies penance, was again admitted into her foresaid recluse in Leicester. The bishops letter to the magistrates of the towne thus beginneth: Willielmus permissione diuina, &c. dilectis filijs, &c.

Smith, Roger Derter, and Alice reuocate abiured.

Also by another letter of the foresaid archbishop to the deane of the cathedrall church of our lady of Leicester being registred, I finde, that of the number of those eight persons before recited, whom the archbishop himselfe at high masse, did in his pontificalibus solemnly curse with booke, bell, and candle: after certaine processe being sent out against them, or else in the meane time being apprehended and taken, two of them recanted their opinions, to wit, William Smith, and Roger Derter. But in the meane time Alice, the wife of the said Roger Derter, taking hold of the foresaid articles with her husband also, together with the said William Smith, abiured the same. For these be the words of the instrument: Subsequenter verò, præfati Willielmus, Rogerus, & Alicia reatus suos respicientes, se nostro conspectui præsentarunt, &c. Notwithstanding, whether they presented themselues willingly, or else were brought against their wils (as most like it was) hard penance was enioyned them before they were absolued. These be the words of the instrument.

Sancta mater ecclesia, &c. i. Seeing our holy mother the church deriech not her lap to any penitent child returning to the vnity of her, but rather prefereth to them the same: We therefore do receiue againe the said William, Roger, and Alice to grace. And further haue caused them to abiure all and singuler the foresaid articles and opinions, before they receiued of vs the benefit of absolution, and were loosed from the sentence of excommunication, wherein they were snarled, inioyning vnto them penance, according to the quantitie of the crime, in forme as followeth that is to say: that euery one of them the sunday next after their returning to their proper gods: they the said William, Roger, and Alice, holding euery one an image of the crucifix in their hands, and in their left hands euery one of them a taper of wax, weighing halfe a pound waight, in their shirts (hauing none other apparell vpon them) doe goe before the crosse three times, during the procession of the cathedrall church of our lady of Leicester: that is to say, in the beginning of the procession, in the middle of the procession, and in the latter end of the procession; to the honour of him that was crucified, in the memorial of his passion, and to the honor of the virgin his mother: who also deuoutly bowing their knees and kissing, shall kisse the same crucifix so held in their hands. And so with the same procession, they entring again into the church, shall stand during all the time of the holy masse, before the image of the crosse with their tapers and crosses in their hands. And when the masse is ended, the said William, Roger, and Alice, shall offer to him that celebrated that day the masse. Then vpon the saturday next ensuing, the said William, Roger, and Alice, shall in the full and publike market, within the towne of Leicester, stand in like manner in their shirts, without any more clothes vpon their bodies, holding the foresaid crosses in their right hands; which crosses, three times they shall (during the market) deuoutly kisse reuerently kneeling vpon their knees: that is, in the beginning of the market, in the middle of the market, and in the end of the market. And the said William (in that he vnderstood vnderstandeth the Latine tongue) shall say this Antheame with the collect, Sancta Katharina: and the foresaid Roger and Alice, being vnlearned, shall say deuoutly a Pater Noster, and an Aue Maria. And thirdly, the sunday next immediatly after the same, the said William, Roger, and Alice, in their parish church of the said towne of Leicester, shall stand and doe as vpon the sunday before they stood and did in the cathedrall church of our lady aforesaid in all things. Which done, the foresaid William, Roger, and Alice, after masse, shall offer to the priest or chaplen that celebrated the same, with all humilitie and reuerence the wax tapers which they shall carry in their hands. And because of the cold weather that now is, lest the foresaid penitents might peraduenture take some bodily hurt standing so long naked (being mindfull to moderate partly the said our rigour) we giue leaue, that after their entrance into the churches aboue said, whilest they shall bee in hearing the foresaid masses, that they may put on necessary garments to keepe them from cold, so that their heads and face notwithstanding be bare and vncouered. We therefore will and command you, together and apart, that you denounce the said William, Roger, and Alice, to be absolued and restored again to the vnity of our holy mother the church, and that you call them forth to doe their penance in manner and forme aforesaid. Vnto the narration of these aboue said, we will adioine the story of one Peter Patchul, an Anfen frier, who obtaining by the popes priuiledge (though the meanes of Walter Dis, confessor to the duke of Lancaster) liberty to change his coat and religion: and hearing the doctrine of Iohn Wickliffe and other of the same sort, began at length to preach openly, and to detect the vices of his order, in such sort as all men wondered to heare the horrible reciting thereof. This being brought to the eares of his order, they to the number of twelue (coming out of their houle to the place where he was preaching) thought to haue withstood him perforce. Among the which one especially for the zeale of his religion, stood by openly in his preaching, and contraried that which he said, who then was preaching in the church of S. Christopher in London. This when the faithfull Londoners did see, taking griefe hereat, they moued with great ire against the said frier, thrusting him with his other brethren out of the church, whom they not onely had beaten and sore wounded, but also followed them home to their house, minding to haue destroied their mansion with fire also, and so would haue done, had not one of the cheriffes of London, with two of the friers of the said houle, well knowne and reported amongst the Londoners, with gentle words mitigated their rage and violence. After this, Peter Patchul (forsomuch as he could not well preach amongst them) to put in writting that which hee had said before, and other things more that he knew by the Friers: this then at their request writting the same, accused the friers of murther, committed against diuers of their brethren. And to make the matter more apparant and credible, hee declared the names of them that were murthered, with the names also of their tormentors: and named moreouer time and place, where & when they were murthered, and where they were buried. He affirmed further that they were Sodomites and traitors both to the king and the realme: with many other crimes, which mine author for tediousnesse leaueth off to recite. And for the more confutation of the said friers, the Londoners caused the said bill to be openly set vp at S. Pauls church dore in London, which was there read and copied out of very many. This was done in the yeere of our Lord 1387. and in the 10. yeere of king Richard the second. Ex Chron. Monachi Albanensis. Cuius est exordium, Anno gratiæ millesimo, &c.

Ex Chron. D. Albani.

Thus it may appeare by this and other aboue recited, how the Gospel of Christ preached by Iohn Wickliffe and others, began to be spread and scattered abroad in London, and other places of the realme: and more would haue done no doubt, had not William Courtney, the archbishop and other prelats with the king, set them so forcibly with might and maine, to gainstand the course thereof. Albeit, as is said before, I finde none which yet were put to death therefore, during the raigne of this king Richard the second. Whereby it is to be thought of this king, that although he cannot be vtterly excused for molesting the godly & innocent preachers of that time, (as by his letters and letters afore mentioned may appeare) yet neither was he so cruell against them, as other that came after him: and that which hee did, seemed to proceed by the instigation instigation of the pope and other bishoppes, rather then either by the consent of his parliament, or aduice of his councell abaut him, setlie by his owne nature. For as the decrees of the parliament in all his time, were constant in stopping out the popes prouisions, and in bridling his authority, as we shall see (Chuse willing) anon: so the nature of the king was not altogether so fiercely set, if that he hadnot by the guiding thereof, had not stood so much in feare of the bishoppe of Rome and his prelats, by whose impostune letters and calling on, he was continually vged to doe contrary to that, which both right required, and will perhaps in him desired. But howsoeuer the doings of this king are to be excused, or not, vndoubted it is, that Queene Anne his wife, most rightly deserueth singular commendation: who at the same time liuing with the king, had the gospels of Christ in English, with foure bookes vpon the same. This Anne was a Bohemian borne, and sister to Wincelaus, king of Boheme before: who was married to king Richard about the fifth (some say the sixth) yeere of his raigne, and continued with him the space of eleuen yeeres. By the occasion whereof it may seeme not vnprobable, that the Bohemians comming in with her, or resorting into this realme after her, perused and receiued here the bookes of Iohn Wickliffe, which afterward they conueied into Bohemia, whereof partly mention is made before: pag. 428.

Few or none burned in king Richards time.

The death of Queene Anne. Ex fragmento historiæ cuiusdam Wigorniensis bibliothecæ. Ex accommodato D. Mat. Archib. Cant.

Queen Anne hath the foure gospels, with the doctrine in English.

The death of Queene Anne, wife to king Richard about eleuen yeeres, in the seuenteenth yeere of his raigne, changed this mortal life, and was buried at Westminster. At whose funerall Thomas Arundel, then archbishop of Yorke and lord chancellor, made the sermon. In which sermon (as remaineth in the library of Worcester recorded) he intreating of the commendation of her, said these words: That it is no more ioy of her, then of any woman that euer he knew. For not withstanding that she was an alien borne, she had in English all the foure gospels, with the doctors vpon them: affirming moreouer and testifying, that she had sent the same home to him to examin. As he said they were good and true. And further with many words of praise, did greatly commend her, in that the being so great a lady, and also an alien, would stoup so lowly to vertuous bookes. And hee blamed in that sermon sharply the negligence of the prelats and other men. Inso much that some said, he would on the morow leaue vp the office of chancellor, and forsake the world, and giue him to fulfill his pastorall office, for that hee had seene and read in those bookes. And then it had beene the best sermon that euer they heard. Hæc ex libro Wigo. In the which sermon of Thomas Arundel, these points are to be considered. First, the laudable vse of those old times receiued to haue the Scripture and doctours in our tongue English tongue. Secondly, the vertuous exercise & alo example of this godly lady, who had those bookes not for a shew hanging at her girdle; but alls seemeth by this sermon to be a studious occupier of the same. The third thing to be noted, is, what fruit the said Thomas archbishop declared also himselfe to receiue at the hearing and reading of the same bookes of hers in the English tongue. Notwithstanding, the same Thomas Arundel, after this sermon and promise made, became the most cruell enemy that might be against English bookes, and the authors thereof, as followeth after in his story to be seene.

Thomas Arundel, archbishop heretofore his owne pontifex.

Thomas Arundel and the bishop of London go to Ireland to the king to complaine of the fauorers of Gods word.

For shortly after the death of Queene Anne, the same peere (the king being then in Ireland) this Thomas Arundel archbishoppe of Yorke, and bishoppe of London, Robert Braybrooke (whether sent by the archbishop of Canturbury and the clergy, or whether going of their owne accord) crossed the seas to Ireland, to the intent the king in all speedy wise to returne and helpe the faith and church of Christ, against such as holding of Wickliffes teaching, went about (as they said) to subuert all their procedings, and to destroy the canonicall sanctions of their holy mother church. At whose complaint, the king hearing the one part speake, and not admiting the other, was in such sort incensed, that incontinent leauing all his affaires vncompleate, hee sped his returne toward England. Where he kept his Christmas at Dublin; in the which meane time, in the beginning of the next peere following, which was anno 1395. a Parliament was called at Westminster, by the commandement of the king. In which parliament, certaine Articles or conclusions were put vp by them of the gospels side, to the number of twelue. Which conclusions moreouer were fastened vp vpon the church dore of Saint Paul in London, and also at Westminster: the copie of which conclusions, with the words and contents thereof here vnder ensue.

Conclusions exhibited by in the parliament house.

The booke of Conclusions or Reformations, exhibited to the parliament holden at London, and set vp at Pauls doore and other places, in the 18. yeere of the raigne of king Richard the 2. and in the yeere of our Lord 1395.

Conclusions exhibited in the parliament.

THe first conclusion: when as the church of England began first to dote in temporalities after her stepmother the great church of Rome, and the churches were authorised by appropriations: faith, hope, and charity began in diuers places to vanish and flie away from our church, forsomuch as pride with her most lamentable and boteous genealogy of mortall and deadly sins, did challenge that place by title of heritage. And this conclusion is generall, and approued by experience, customs, and manner, as ye shall after heare.

Papistical priesthood.

The second conclusion: that our vnholy priesthood, which tooke his originall at Rome, and fained to be a power higher then Angels, is not that priesthood which Christ ordained vnto his disciples. This conclusion is thus proued; forsomuch as the Romish priesthood is done with signes and pontificall rites and ceremonies, and benedictions, of no force and effect, neither hauing any ground in Scripture, forsomuch as the bishops ordinall and the new Testament doe nothing at all agree; neither doe we see that they holy Ghost doth giue any good gift (though any such signes or ceremonies: because that hee together with all noble and good gifts, cannot consist and be in any person with deadly sinne. The corolary or effect of this conclusion is, that it is a lamentable and boteous mockery vnto wise men, to see the bishoppes mocke and play with the holy Ghost in the giuing of their orders: because they giue crownes for their characters and markes, in stead of white hearts: and this character is the marke of antichrist, brought into the holy church to close and colour their idlenesse.

The single life of priests.

The third conclusion: that the law of chastity enioined vnto priesthood, the which was first ordained to the preiudice of women, inducech Sodomy into the church: but we doe excuse vs by the bible, because the fisher decree doth say, that we should not name it. Both reason and experience proueth this conclusion. Reason thus; Forsomuch as the delicate feeding and fare of the clergy, will haue either a naturall purgation, or some worse. Experience thus; forsomuch as the secret triall and proofe of such men is, that they doe delight in women. And whensoeuer thou dost proue or see such a man, marke him well, for he is one of that number. The corolary of this conclusion is, that those priuat religions with the beginners thereof, ought most chiefly to be distaulish as the originall of that sinne and offence. But God of his might doth of priuie sinnes send open vengeance.

Dedoth here excellently paint out the leeches of clergy.

The fained miracle of transubstantiation.

The fourth conclusion, that most harmeth the innocent people, is this: that the fained miracle of the sacrament of breadhead, inducech all men, except it be a very few, vnto idolatry: forsomuch as they thinke that the body, which shall neuer be out of heauen, is by the vertue of the priests words, essentially included in the little bread, the which they do shew vnto the people. But would to God they would beleeue that which the Euangelicall bookes teacheth vs in his Tetalogue, Quod panis altaris est accidenter Corpus Christi. i. that the bread of the altar is the body of Christ accidentally: forsomuch as we suppose that by that meanes, euery faithfull man and woman in the law of God, may make the sacrament of that bread, without any such miracle. The corolary of this conclusion is, that albeit the body of Christ be endowed with the eternall ioy, the seruice of Corpus Christi, made by frier Thomas, is not true, but painted full of false miracles: neither is it any maruell, forsomuch as frier Thomas at that time taking part with the pope, would haue made a miracle of a hens egge: and wee know it very well, that euery lle openly preached and taught, doth turn to the rebuke and oppobry of him, which is alwaies true without any lacke.

He meaneth here Wickliffe.

The least of Corpus Christi inuented by Thomas Aquinas.

The fifth conclusion is this: that the exorcismes and hallowings, confections, and blessings ouer the wine, bread, wax, water, oile, salt, incense, the altar stone, and about the church walles, ouer the vestiment, chalice, miter, crosse, and pilgrim-staues, are the very practises of Necromancie, rather then of sacred Diuinitie. This conclusion is thus prooued; because that by such exorcismes, the creatures are bound to doe more force and power then by their owne proper nature, for we doe not see any alteration or change in any creature by exorcism, except it be by false faith, which is the principall point of diuelish art. The corolary of this is, that if the booke of exorcisation or coniuring of holy water which is sprinkled in the church, were altogether faithfull and true; wee thinke certainly that holy water vsed in the church, were the best medicine for all kind of sicknesse and force; Cuius contrarium experimur. i. the contrary whereof daily experience doth teach vs.

The exorcismes and blessings of priests.

The sixth conclusion which maintaineth much pride is: that a king and bishop both in one person, a prelat and iustice in temporall causes, a curat and officer in worldly office, doth make euery kingdome out of good order. This conclusion is manifest, because the temporality and the spirituality, are two parts of the holy vniuersall church, and therefore see which addicteth himselfe to the one part, let him not intermeddle with the other. Quia nemo potest duobus Dominis seruire: wherefore to bee called Amphroditæ, which are men of both kindes, or Ambidextri, which is such as can play with both hands, were good names for such men of double effates. The corolary of this conclusion is, that thereupon we the procurators of God in this case, doe sue vnto the Parliament: that it may be enacted, that all such as be of the clergy (as well of the highest highest degree as of the lowest, should be fully ordered, and occupie themselues with their owne cure and charge, and not with others.

The difference betweene the ecclesiasticall and politike estate.

The seuenth conclusion that we mightily affirme is, that spirituall praiers made in the church for the soules of the dead, (preferring any one by name more then another) is a false foundation of almes, whereupon all the soules of almes in England are fallie founded. This conclusion is proued by two reasons. The one is, that a meritorious praier (of any force or effect) ought to be a worke proceeding from meere charitie: and perfect charitie accepteth no person, because thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. Whereby it appeareth, that the benefit of any temporall gift bestowed and giuen vnto priests and soules of almes, is the principall cause of any speciall praiers, the which is not farre different from simonie. The other reason is, that euery speciall praier made for men condemned to eternall punishment, is very displeasant before God. And albeit it be doubtfull, yet is it very likely vnto the faithfull Christian people, that the founders of euery such soule of almes for their wicked endowing of the same, are for the most part passed by the broad way. The corolary is, that euery praier of force and effect, proceeding of perfect charitie, would comprehend generally all such whom God would haue saued, and to line. The merchandise of speciall praiers now vsed for the dead, maketh mendicant possessioners and other hireling priests, which otherwise were strong enough to worke and to serue the whole realme: and maintaineth the same in idlenesse, to the great charge of the realme, because it was proued in a certaine booke which the king hath, that a hundred houses of almes, are sufficient for the whole realme. And therebey might peraduenture greater increase and profit come vnto the temporaltie.

Pilgrimages and oblations.

The eighth conclusion needfull to tell to the people beguiled is, that pilgrimages, praiers, & oblations made vnto blind crosses or rodes, or to dease images made either of wood or stone, are very neere of kin vnto idolatry, and farre different from almes. And albeit that these things which are forbidden and imagined, are the booke of erro vnto the common people: notwithstanding the vsuall and common image of the Trinitie is most especially abominable. This conclusion God himselfe doth openly manifest, commanding almes to be giuen to the poore and needy man, for hee is the image of God in more perfit similitude and likenesse then any blocke or stone. For God did not say, let vs make a blocke or stone vnto our likenesse and images: but let vs make man, vnto whom as the supreme and highest honour which the clergy calleth Latria, pertaineth onely to the Godhead, and the inferior honor, which the clergy call Dolia, pertaineth vnto men and Angels, and to none other inferior creature. The corolarie is, that the seruice of the crosse celebrat twice euery yeere in our church, is full of idolatry: for if rode, tree, nailes, and speare ought so profoundly to be honoured and worshipped, then were Iudases lippes (if any man could get them) a marueilous good relike. But thou pilgrime, wee pray thee tell vs when thou doest offer to the bones of the Saints and holy men which are laid vp in any place; whether dost thou relieue thereby the holy man which is already in ioy, or that almes house that is so well endowed, where as they are canonised: the Lord knoweth how) and to speake more plaine, euery faithfull christian may well iudge and suppose, that the strokes of that same man, whom they call S. Thomas, were no cause of martyrdome, nor yet he.

The image of the Trinity an abominable thing.

A golden man the perfect image of God.

Latria, Dulia.

Iudases lipps.

The ninth conclusion that keepeth the people low, is, that auricular confession which is said to be so necessary for saluation, and the fained power of absolution; craftely and subtelly set vp the pride of priests, and giueth them opportunitie of other secret thinges, which wee will not at this time talke of, for so much as both lords and ladies doe witnesse, that for feare of their confessors, they dare not speake the truth: and in time of confession, is good opportunitie minished of vowing, or to play the bawdes, or to make other secret conuentions to deadly sinne. They affirme and say, that they are commissaries sent of God to iudge and discerne of all manner of sinne, to pardon and cleanse whatsoeuer please them. They say also, that they haue the keies of heauen and hell, and that they can excommunicat, curse and bleese, binde and lese at their owne will and pleasure: insomuch, that for a small reward, or for tuelue pence, they will sell the blessing of heauen by charter and clause of warrantise, sealed by their common seale. This conclusion is so common in vse, that it needeth not any probation. The corolary hereof is, that the pope of Rome, which fained himselfe to be the profound treasurer of the whole church, hauing that same worthy iewell which is the treasure of the passion of Christ in his owne keeping and custody, together with the merits of all the Saints in heauen, whereby he giueth fained indulgences and pardons, a poena & culpa: hee is a treasurer almost banished out of charity, whereby he may deliuer all captiues being in purgatory at his pleasure, and make them not to come there. But here euery faithfull Christian may easily perceiue that there is much falshood hid in our Church.

tensed law of iustice for any temporall cause, or spirituall reuelation) is expresly contrary vnto the new Testament, which is the law of grace, full of mercy. This conclusion is euidently proued by the examples of the preaching of Christ here in earth, who chiefly teacheth euery man to loue his enemies, and haue compassion vpon them, and not to kill and murther them. The reason is this, that for the most part when as men do fight, after the first stroke, charity is broken: and the sooner dieth without charity, goeth the right way to hell. And beside that, wee doe well vnderstand and know, that none of the clergy, neither by any other lawfull reason, can deliuer any from the punishment of death for one deadly sinne, and not for another: but the law of mercy, which is the new Testament, forbiddeth all manner of murther. For in the Gospell it is spoken vnto our forefathers, Thou shalt not kill. The corolary is; It is a very robbing of the people, when lords purchase indulgences and pardons, a poena & culpa, vnto such as doe helpe their armies to kill and murther the christian people in forren countries for temporall gaine, as we doe see certaine soulders which doe run amongst the heathen people to get themselues fame and renowme, by the murther and slaughter of men. Much more do they deserue euill thanks at the handes of the king of peace, forsomuch as by humility and peace, our faith is multiplied and increased: for murtherers and manquellers, Christ doth hate and menaceth: yee that striketh with the sword, shall perish with the sword.

Kinds and widowes which bow single life.

The eleuenth conclusion is, which is shame to tell: that the vow of chastity made in our church by women which are fraile and vnperfit in nature, is the cause of bringing in many great and horrible offences and vices, incident vnto the nature of man. For albeit the murther of their children beene before their time, and before they are christened, and the destruction of their nature by medicine, are filthy and foule sinnes: yet they accompanying amongst themselues, or with vnreasonable beasts, or with any creature not hauing life, doe palle to such an vnseemlinesse, that they are punished by infernall torments. The corolary is, that widowes and such as take the mantell and the ring deliciously fed, yee would that they were married, because that we cannot excuse them from great offence of sinne.

The twelfth, that the multitude of arts not necessary vsed in this our church, causeth much sinand offence in waste, curiosity, and beguiling in curious apparell: experience and reason partly doth shew the same, forsomuch as nature with a few arts, is sufficient for mans vse and necessity.

This is the whole tenor of our ambassage, which Christ hath commanded vs to prosecute at this time, most fit and conuenient for many causes. And albeit that these matters be here briefly noted and touched; yet notwithstanding they are more at large declared in another booke with many other more in our owne proper tongue, which we would should be common to all christian people. Wherefore we earnestly desire and beseech God for his great godnesse sake, that hee will shortly reforme our church (now altogether out of frame) vnto the perfection of her first beginning and originall. Ex Archiuis Regijs.

The verses following were annexed vnto the conclusions.

Plangunt Anglorum gentes crimen Sodomorum,
Paulus fert, horum sunt idola causa malorum:
Surgunt ingrati Gierzite Simone nati,
Nomine prælati hoc defensare parati.
Qui Reges estis, populis quicunque præestis,
Qualiter his gestis gladios prohibere potestis?

The which verses are thus Englished:

The English nation doth lament of Sodomites their sin,
Which Paul doth plainly signifie by Idols to begin.
But Gierzites full ingrate, from sinfull Simon Sprong,
This to defend, though Priests in name, make bulwarks great and strong.
Ye princes therefore which to rule the people God hath placed,
With iustice sword, why see ye not this euill great defaced?

After these conclusions were thus proposed in the parliament, the king not long after returned home from Dubline into England, toward the latter end of the parliament. Who at his return, called certain of his nobles vnto him, Richard Stirrie, Lewes Clifford, Thomas Latimer, Iohn Mountacute, &c. whom he did sharply rebuke, and did terribly threaten for that hee heard them to bee fauourers of that sect; charging them straitly, neuer to hold, maintaine, nor fauor any more those opinions and conclusions. And namely of Richard Sturry, he took an oth, that he should neuer from that day, fauor or defend any such opinions: which oth being taken, the king then answered: And I sweare (saith he) against to thee, that if thou doest euer breake thine oth, thou shalt die for it a shamefull death, &c. Ex Chron. D. Albani.

yet pope Vrbane the great master of the Catholites sect was dead and buried six yeere before. After whom succeeded in the shismaticall see of Rome pope Boniface the ninth; who nothing inferiour to his predecessour in all kind of cruelties, took no diligence vnattempted to set forward that which Vrbane had begun, in suppressing them that were the setters forth of the light of the Gospell: and had written sundrie times to king Richard, as well for the repealing of the acts of parliament against his prouisions, Quare impedit, and præmunire facies: as also that he should assist the prelats of England in the cause of God (as he pretended) against such, whom he falsly suggested to be Lollards and traytours to the church, to the king, and the realme, &c. Thus the courteous pope, whom he could not reach with his sword, at least with cruell slander of his malitious tongue, would worke his poison against them; which letter he wrote to the king in the yere of our Lord 1396. which was the yere before the death of William Courtney archbishop of Canturburie. After whom succeeded in that see Thomas Arundell, brother to the earle of Arundell, being first bishop of Elie, afterward archbishop of Yorke, and lord Chancellour of England, and at last made archbishop of Canturburie and the yere of our Lord 1397. The next yere following, which was the yere of our Lord 1398. and the ninth yere of the pope. I find in certaine records of the bishop of Sureine, a certaine letter of king Richard the second, written to the said pope Boniface, which because I iudged not vnworthie to be seene, I thought here to annex the same, proceeding in forme as followeth.

A letter of king Richard the second vnto pope Boniface the ninth.

To the most holy father in Christ and lord, lord Boniface the ninth, by the grace of God high pope of the most holy Romish and vniuersall church, his humble and deuout sonne Richard by the grace of God king of England, and France, lord of Ireland, greeting, and desiring to helpe the miseries of the afflicted church, and kissing of that his blessed feet.

WHo will giue my head water, and mine eyes streaming teares, that I may bewaile the decay and manifold troubles of our mother, which haue chanced to her by her owne children in the distresse of this present schisme and diuision. For the sheep haue forgotten the proper voice of their shepheards, and hirelings haue thrust in themselues to feed the Lords flock, who are clothed with the apparell of the true shepheard, challenging the name of honor and dignitie, resembling so the true shepheard, that the poore sheepe can scarce know whom they ought to follow, or what pastour as a stranger they ought to flee, and whom they should shun as an hireling. Wherefore we are afraid, lest the holy standard of the Lord be forsaken of his host, and so that citie being full of riches, become solitarie and desolate, and the land or people which was wont to say (flourishing in her properities) I sate as a Queen, and am not a widow, left it be destitute of the presence of her husband, and as it were so bewitched, that she shal not be able to discerne his face, & so wrapped in mazes, that she shal not know where to turne her, that she might more easily find him, and that she shal with weeping speake that saying of the spouse: I sought him whom my soule loueth, I sought him and found him not: For now wee are compelled so to wander, that if any man say, behold heere is Christ, or there, we may not beleeue him so saying; and so many shepheards haue destroyed the Lords vineyard, and made his amiable portion a waste wildernesse.

Bishops taught by Christ not to play the lords.

This multitude of shepheards is become very burdenous to the Lords flocke. For when two striue to be chiefe, the state of both their dignities stands in doubt, and in so doing they giue occasion to all the faithfull of Christ, of a schisme and diuision of the church. And although both parties go about to subdue vnto their power the whole church militant, yet contrarie to both their purpose, by working this way, there beginneth to rise now a diuision in the bodie of the church: Like as when two harlots did striue afore Salomon: like as the ten tribes of Israel followed Ieroboam the intruder, and were withdrawne from the kingdome for Salomons sinne: euen so of old time the desire of ruling hath drawne the great power of the world from the vnitie of the church. Let your selues remember, we beseech you, how that all Greece did fall from the obedience of the Romish church in the time of the faction of the primarch of Constantinople, and how Mahomet with his followes by occasion of the supremacie in Ecclesiasticall dignitie, deceiued a great part of christians, and withdrew them from the empire and ruling of Christ. And now in these daies, whereas the same supremacie hath withdrawne it selfe from the obedience of it, in so much that now in verie few realmes the candle that burnes afore the Lord remaineth, and that for Dauids sake his seruant: And although now remaine few countries professing the obedience of Christs true vicar, yet peraduenture if euery man were left to his owne libertie, he would doubt of the preferring of your dignitie, or that is worse, would vtterly refuse it by such doubtfull euidence alleaged on both sides: and this is the subtill craft of the crooked Serpent, that is to say, vnder the pretence of vnitie, to procure schismes, as the spider of a wholesome flower gathers poyson, and Iudas learned of peace to make warre. Wherefore, it is liuely beleeued of wisemen, that except this pestilent schisme be withstood by and by, the keyes of the church will be despised, and they shall bind the consciences but of a few: and when either none dare be held to correct this fault, or to reforme things contrarie to Gods law, so by this meanes at length temporall lords will take away the liberties of the church, and peraduenture the Romanes will come and take away their place, people and lands: they will spoile their possessions, and bring the men of the church into bondage, and they shall be contemned, reuiled and despited, because the obedience of the people and deuotions towards them will almost be taken away, when the greater part of the church left to their owne libertie, shall waxe prouder then they bee wont, leauing a wicked example to them that doe see it. For when they see the prelats studie more for couetousnesse then they were wont, to purse vp money, to oppresse the subiects, in their punishings to seeke for gaine, to confound lawes, to stirre vp strife, to suppresse truth, to vexe poore subiects with wrong corrections, in meate and drinke intemperate, infeastings past shame: what maruell is it if the people despise them as the foulest forsakers of Gods law? but all these things doe follow if the church should be left long in this doubtfulnesse of a schisme, and then should that old saying be verified; in these daies there was no king in Israel, but euery one did that that seemed right and straight to himselfe. Michias did see the people of the Lord scattered in the mountaines as they had been sheepe without a shepheard: for when the shepheard is smitten, the sheepe of the flocke shall be scattered, the great stroke of the shepheard is the minishing of his iurisdiction, by which the subiects are drawne from his obedience. When Iason had the office of the highest priest, hee changed the ordinance of God, and brought in the customes of the heathen, the priests leauing the seruice of the holy altar, and applying themselues to wrastling and other exercises of the Grecians, and despised those things that belonged to the priests, did labour with all their might to learne such things of the Grecians, and by that meanes the lace, people, and holy ouning of priests, which in times past were had in great reuerence of kings, were trodden vnder foot of all men, and robbed by the kings power, and was prophaned by thrusting in for money. Therefore, let the highest vicar of Christ looke vnto this with a diligent eye, and let him be the follower of him by whom he hath gotten authoritie aboue others. If you marke well most holy father, you shall find that Christ rebuked sharply two brethren, couueting the seat of honor: he taught them not to play the lords ouer the people, but the more grace they were presented with, to be so much more humble then other, and more lowly to serue their brethren. To him that asked his coate, to giue the cloake: to him that smote him on the one cheeke, to turne the other to him. For the sheepe that are giuen to his keeping, he must forsake all earthly things, and to shead his owne blood, yea and if need required, to die. These things, I say, be those that adorne the highest Bishop if they be in him, not purple, not his white horse, nor his imperiall crowne, because he among all men is most bound to all the sheepe of Christ. For the feare of God therefore, and for the loue of the flocke which ye guide, consider these things diligently, and do them wisely, and suffer vs no longer to wauer betwixt two: although not for your owne cause, to whom peraduenture the fulnesse of your owne power is knowne: yet in pitying our weaknesse, if thou be he, tell vs openly, and shew thy selfe to the world, that all we may follow one. Be not to vs a bloodie bishop, left by your occasion mans blood be shead, left hell swallow such a number of soules, and left the name of Christ be euill spoken of by infidels, through such a worthie personage. But peraduenture yee will say, for our righteousnesse it is manifest enough, and we will not put it to other mens disputation. If this bald answere should be admitted, the schisme should continue still, seeing neither part is willing to agree to the other: and where the world is as it were equally diuided betwixt them, neither part can be compelled to giue place to the other without much bloudshed. The incarnation of Christ and his resurrection was well enough knowne to himselfe and his disciples, yet he asked of his Father to be made knowne to the world. He made also the Gospell to be written, and the doctrine of the Apostles, and sent his Apostles into all the world, to the office of preaching, that the same thing might be knowne to all men. The foresaid reason is the subtilie of Mahomet, the which knowing himselfe guiltie of his sect, vtterly forbad disputations. If ye haue so full trust of your righteousnesse, put it to the examinations of worthie persons in a generall councell, to the which it belongeth by right to define such doubts, or els commit it vnto able persons, and giue them full power to determine all things concerning that matter, or at the least lay forsaking the office on both parties, leaue the church of God free, speedilie to prouide for a new shepheard.

A bald answere.

Desire to rule in the church.

Greece renounced the Romish church.

Publike offences to be preferred before priuate.

We find, kinges haue forsaken their temporall kingdomes, vpon only respect of deuotion, and haue taken the apparell of meniles profession. Therefore let Christs Vicar (being a professour of most high holinesse) be ashamed to continue in his seat of honor, to the offence of all people, and the preiudice and hurt of the Romish church, and the deuotion of it, and cutting away kingdomes from it. But if you say, it is not requisit that the cause of Gods church should bee called in controuersie, and therefore we cannot so easily go from it, seeing our conscience gain-sayeth it. To the which we answere, if it be the cause of God and the church, let the generall councel iudge of it: but if it be a pretensed cause (as almost all the world probably thinketh) if ye were the followers of Christ, ye would rather chuse a temporall death, the to suffer such a wauering, I say not, to the hurt of so many, but to the endlesse destruction of soules, to the offence of the whole world, and to an euerlasting shame of the apostolicall dignity. Did not Clement named or that I may more truly speake) ordained of S. Peter to the apostolike dignitie and to be bishop, resigne his right, that his deed might be taken of his successours for an example? Also pope Siricius gaue ouer his popedome to bee a comfort of the 11000. Virgins. Therefore much more ought you (if need require) giue ouer your popedome, that you might gather together the children of God which be scattered abroad. For as it is thought a glorious thing to defend the common right, euen to bloodshed: so is it sometimes necessarie for a man to winke at his owne cause, and to forsake it for a greater profit, and by that meanes better to procure peace. Should not he be thought a diuell, and Christs enemie of all men, that would agree to an election made of him for the apostolical dignitie and popedome, if it should be to the destruction of Christians, diuision of the church, the offence and losse of all faithful people? If such mischiefs should be known ne to all the world by Gods reuelation, to come to passe by such receiuing of the popedome and apostolicall dignitie: then by the like reason, why shall he not bee iudged of all men an apostata, and forsaker of his faith, which chuseth dignitie, or rather worldly honor, then the vnitie of the church? Christ died that he might gather together the children of God which are scattered abroad: but such an enemie of God and the church wisheth his subiects bodilie to die in battell, and the more part of the world to perish in soule, rather then forsaking to be pope, to liue in a lower state, although it were honorable. If the feare of God, the desire of the heauenly kingdome, and the earnest loue of the vnitie of the church do moue your heart, shew in deed that your workes may beare record to the truth.

Answere to a popish obiection.

Pope resisted for his euill.

Vnitie of the church to be preferred before worldly dignitie.

The pope will not lose his dignitie, for any profit that can ensue.

Clement and Siricius most holy popes, for our sins are not reproued, but rather are reuerenced of all men, because they gaue ouer their right for profitable causes, and for the same cause all the church of holy men shew forth their praise. Likewise, your name should liue for euer and euer, if yee would do the like for a necessarie cause, that is to say, for the vnitie of Gods church. Giue no heed to the vnmeasurable cryings of them that say, that the right chusing of popes is lost, except ye defend your parts manfully: but be afraid, lest such stirrers vp of mischiefe looke for their owne commoditie or honor, that is to say, that vnder your wing they might bee promoted to riches and honour. After this sort Achitophel was led with Absolon in persecuting his owne father, and false vsurping of his kingdome.

Flatterers about the pope.

Furthermore, there should be no ieopardie to that election, because both parties sticke stiffie to the old fashion of election, and either of them couet the preeminence of the Romish church, counselling all christians to obey them. And although through their guiling ouer, the fashion of chusing the pope should bee changed for a time, it were to be borne, rather then to suffer anie longer this diuision in Gods church. For that fashion in chusing is not so necessarily required to the state of a pope, but the successour of the apostle as necessarie cause required, might come in at the doore by another fashion of chusing, and that canonicall enough. And this we are taught manifestly by examples of the fathers: for Peter the apostle appointed after him Clement, and that not by false vsurping of power, as we suppose. And it was thought, that that fashio of appointing popes, was lawfull vnto the time of pope Hilarie: Which decreed that no pope should appoint his successour.

Better that the order of the popes election should cease, then the church should suffer any diuision.

Bishops of Rome appointed their successors to their time of pope Hilarie.

Afterward, the election of the pope went by the clergie and people of Rome, and the emperours counsell agreeing thereto, as it appeareth in the election of the beleiued Gregorie. But Martinus pope with the consent of the holy Synode, granted Charle the power to chuse the pope. But of late Nicolas the second was the first whom Martine makes mention of in his councels, to be chosen by the cardinals. But all the bishops of Lumbardie (for the most part) withstood this election, and chose Cadulus to be pope, saying, that the pope ought not to be chosen, but of the precinct of Italie. Wherefore, we thinke it not a safe way so earnestly to sticke to the traditions of men, in the fashion of chusing the pope, and so oft to change, lest we be thought to breake Gods traditions concerning the vnitie of the church. Yea rather it were better yet to ordaine a new fashion of his election, and meeter for him as it hath been afore. But all things concerning the same election might bee kept safe, if Gods honor were looked for afore your owne, and the peace of the church were vprightly sought: for such a dishonoring should bee the getting of a greater dignitie, and the willing deposing of your honor, should obtaine you the enuie of euerlasting honor, and should procure the loue of the whole world toward you, and you should deserue to be exalted continually, as Dauid was in humbling himselfe. O how monstrous a sight and how foule a monster is a mans bodie disfigured with two heads? So if it were possible, the spouse of Christ should be made so monstrous, if she were ruled with two such heads: but that is not possible, shee is euer altogether faire, in whom no spot is found; therefore we must cast away that rotten member, and thruster in of his second head: We cannot suffer any longer so great a wickednes in Gods house, that we should suffer Gods cote that wants a seame, by any meanes to be torne by the hands of two, that violently draw it in sunder. For if these two should bee suffred to raigne together, they would to betwixt them teare in pieces that little coate of the Lord, that scarse one piece would hang to another. They passe the wickednes of the souldiers that crucified Christ: for they willing to haue the coat remaine whole, said: Let vs not cut it, but let vs cast lots for it, whose it shall be. But these two popes suffring their right and title to be tried by no lot nor way (although not in words yet in deede) they pronounce this sentece: It shall neither be thine nor mine, but let it be diuided for they chose rather, as it appeareth, to be Lords (though it be but in a little part, and that to the confusion of the vnitie of the church) then in leauing that lording, to seek for the peace of the church. We doe not affirme this, but we shew almost the whole iudgemēt of the world of the, being moued so to think by likely conIectures. We looked for amendment of this intollerable confusion, by the space that these two inuenters of this mischiefe liued. But we looked for peace, and behold trouble: for neither in their liues nor in their deaths, they procured any comfort, but rather dying as it were in a double betwixt two waies, left to their successors matters of contention continuall. But now for the space of seuen yeeres of their successors, that which we desired and looked for afore (that is, they should beare good grapes, and they bring forth wilde grapes) in this matter we fall into a deepe despaire. But in as much that we heare the comfort of the Lord, which promised that miserable he would destroy those wicked men, and let his vineyard to other husband-men which will bring him fruit at their times appointed, hee hath promised faithfully that he will helpe his spouse in her need to the end of the world: and we leaning on the sure hope of this promise, and in hope, contrarie to hope beleeuing, by Gods grace will put our helping hands to the easing of this miserie, when a conuenient time shall serue, as much as our kingly power is able, although our witte doth not perceiue how these things afore rehearsed may be amended: yet we being encouraged to this by the hope of Gods promise, will do our endeuour: like as Abraham beleeued, his son being slaine by sacrifice, that the multitude of his seed should encrease to the number of the stars, according to Gods promise. Now therefore the time drawes neere to make an end of this schisme, left a third election of a schismatick against the apostles successor make a custome of the doing, and so the pope of Auinion shal be double Romish pope, and he shall say with his partakers, as the Patriarch of Constantinople said vnto Christs vicar when he forsooke him: The Lord be with thee, for the Lord is with vs. And is much to be feared of all christen men: For that Pharise begins now to be called the pope of Auinion among the people. But peraduenture it would be thought of some men, that it belōgeth not to secular princes to bridle outrages of the pope. To whom we answere, that naturally the members put themselues in ieopardie for to saue the head, and the parts labour to saue the whole. Christ so decked his spouse, that her sides should cleaue together, and should vphold themselues by course of time and occasion of things, they should correct one another and cleaue together tunablie. Did not Moses put downe Aaron, because he was vnfaithfull? Salomon put downe Abiathar, who came by lineall descent from Anatoth, and remoued his priesthood frō his kindred to the stock of Eliazar in the person of Sadocke which had his beginning frō Elie the priest? 3. Reg. 2. Otho emperour, deposed pope Iohn the 12. because he was lecherous. Henrie the emperour put downe Gratianus, because he vsed Simonie in buying and selling spirituall liuings. And Otho deposed pope Benner the first, because he thrust in himselfe. Therfore by like reason, why may not kings and princes bridle the Romish pope in default of the church: if the quality of his fault require it, or the necessitie of the church by this compel to helpe the church oppressed by tyrannie? In old time schismes which rose about making the pope, were determined by the power of secular princes, as the schisme betwixt Symmachus & Laurece was ended in a councell before Theodoricus king of Italy. Henrie the emperour when two did striue to be pope, he deposed them both, and receiued the third being chosen at Rome to be pope, that is to say, Clement the second, which crowned him with the imperiall crowne. And the Romanes promised him that from thence forth they would promote none to bee pope without his consent. Alexander Iulie ouercame foure popes schismatickes, all which Fredericke the emperour corrected.

Popes put downe by princes.

Thus looke on the register of popes and their deeds, and ye shall find that schismes most commonly haue been decided by the powers of secular princes, the schismatickes cast out, and sometimes new popes made, & sometime the old ones cast out of

of their dignities, and restored to their old dignities againe. If it were not lawfull for secular princes to bridle the outrages of such a pope lawfully made, and afterward becomming a tyrant: in such a case he might oppresse ouermuch the Church, he might change christendome into heathens, and make the labour of Christ crucified to be in vaine, or else truely God should not haue prouided for his spouse in earth by all meanes as much as is possible by seruice of men to withstand dangers. Therefore we counsell you with such a louing affection as becomes children, that ye consider in your heart well, lest in working by this meanes ye prepare a way to antichrist, through your desire to beare rule, and so by this means as we feare the one of these two shall chance: either ye shall cause all the princes of the world to rise against you to bring in a true follower of Christ to haue the state of the Apostolicall dignitie; or, that is worse, the whole world despising the ruling of one shepheard, shall leaue the Romish church desolate. But God keepe this from the world, that the desire of honour of two men should bring such a desolation into the Church of God: for then that departing away which the Apostle prophecied, should come afore the comming of antichrist were at hand: which should be the last disposition of the world, peaceably to receiue antichrist with honour. Consider therefore the state of your most excellent holinesse, how ye receiued the power from God to the building of the Church, and not to the destruction, that Christ hath giuen you wine and oyle to heale the wounded, and hath appointed you his vicar in these things as pertaine to gentlenesse, and hath giuen vs these things which serue to rigour. For we beare not the sword without a cause to the punishment of euill doers, the which power ordained of God we haue receiued, our selues being witnesse: beseeching you to receiue our counsell effectually, that in doing thus, the waters may returne to the places from whence they came, and so the waters may begin to be made sweete with salt: left the axe swimme on the water and the wood sinke, and left the fruitfull Oliue degender into a wilde Oliue, and the leprosie of Naaman that Noble man, cleaue continually to the house of Giezy, and left the pope and the Pharises crucifie Christ againe. Christ the spouse of the Church, which was sent to bring the chiefe bishop into the holiest place, encrease your holines, or rather restore it being lost. ¶ This epistle of king Richard the 2. written to pope Boniface the 9. in the time of the schisme, about the yeere as appeareth 1397. as it contained much good matter of wholesome counsell to be followed, so how little he wrought with the pope, the sequell afterward declared. For the schisme notwithstanding continued long after, in which neither of the popes would giue ouer their holde, or yeeld any thing to good counsell giuen them, for any respect of publike wealth. Such a strobe beareth ambition in this apostolicall se, which we are wont so greatly to magnifie. But of this enough, which I leaue and referre to the consideration of the Lord, seeing men will not take vpon it.

Drawing now toward the latter end of king Richards raigne, it remaineth, that as we did before in the time of king Edward the third, so here also we shew forth a summarie recapitulation of such parliaments all notes and proceedings, as then were practised by publike parliament in this kings time, against the iurisdiction of the bishop of Rome: to the intent, that such (if any such be) that thinke, or haue thought the receiuing of the popes double authozitie to be such an ancient thing within this realme, may diminish their opinion, as euidentlie map appeare by diuers arguments heretofore touched, concerning the election and inuesting of bishops by the king. As where king Oswin commanded Cedde to bee ordained archbishop of Yorke. Also where king Egfride caused Cuthbert to be brought to king Canute, and at his commandement was instituted bishop of the same se. Ex lib. Malmesb. de gestis pontif. Anglorum. And likewise Matth. Parisiensis testifieth, that king Henrie the third gaue the archbishopricke of Canturburie, to Rudulphus then bishop of London, and inuested him with staffe and ring. And the same king gaue the bishopricke of Winchester to William Giffard: and moreouer, following the steps both of his father and brother before him, endued him with the possessions pertaining to the said bishopricke (the contrarie statute of pope Vrbane, forbidding that clerks should receiue any Ecclesiasticall dignitie at the hand of princes, or of any lay person, to the contrarie notwithstanding, &c.) Innumerable examples of like sort are to be seene in ancient histories of this our realme. As also out of the parliament rolles in the time of king Edward the third, hath sufficiently been touched a little before. Wherunto also may be added the notes of such parliaments as haue been holden in the raigne of this present king Richard the second, the collection whereof in part here followeth.

¶ Notes of certaine Parliaments holden in the raigne of King Richard the second, making against the Pope.

Ex Archiuis parliamentariis 9. An. I. Reg. Rich. 2. m. 65.

IN the first yeere of king Richard the second, in the parliament holden at Westminster, it was requested and granted, that the popes collectors bee willed no longer to gather the first fruits of benefices within this realme, being a verie noueltie, and that no person doe any longer pay them.

Item, that no man do procure any benefice by prouision from Rome, on paine to be out of the kings protection. Tit. 67.

Item, that no Englishman doe take to farme of any Alien, any ecclesiasticall benefice or prebend, on the like paine. In which bill was rehearsed, that the Frenchmen had fire thousand pounds yeerely of such liuings in England. Tit. 68.

Item, that remedie might be had against the popes reseruations to dignities elective, the same being done against the treatie of the pope, taken with king Edward 3. Tit. 77.

In the second yeere of the said king Richard the second, it was by petition requested, that some order might bee taken touching Aliens, hauing the greatest part of the Church dignities in their hands. Wherunto the king answered, that by aduice of the lords, he would prouide therefore. Ex Anno 2. Tit. 72.

Item, it was enacted, that all the benefices of Cardinals and other rebels to pope Vrbane that now is, shall be seased into the kings hands. Tit. 73.

An Act that pope Vrbane was true and lawfull pope, and that the liuings of all Cardinals and other rebels to the said pope, should bee seased into the kings hands, and the king bee answered of the profits thereof: And that whosoeuer within this realme, shall procure or obtaine any prouision or other instrument from any other pope then the same Vrbane, shall be out of the kings protection. Tit. 78.

Moreouer, in the third yeere of king Richard the second, the prelats and clergie made their protestation in this Parliament peaceablie against a certaine note or grant, to wit, their exactions: That the same neuer should passe with their assent and good will, to the blemishing of the liberties of the Church, if by that word extortion, they meant any thing largelie to proceed against Ordinaries and others of the Church. But if they meant none otherwise to deale hereafter therein, then before that time had been done, then would they consent. Wherevnto it was replied for the king, that neither for the same their said protestation, or other words in that behalfe, the king would stay to grant to his Iustices in that case, and all other cases, as was vsed to bee done in times past, and was bound to doe by vertue of his oth done at his coronation. Ex 1. Anno Reg. Rich. 2. Here note well a strange proceeding. But marke the strange euent.

Furthermore, in the fourth yeere of the said king Richard the second, it was requested, that prouision might be had against the popes collectors, for leuying of the first fruits of ecclesiasticall dignities within the realme. Tit. 44.

Item, that all priors Aliens might bee remoued out of their houses, and licensed to depart, and neuer to reuert. And that English men may be placed in their liuings, answering the king as they did. Tit. 46.

And in the 9. yeere of the foresaid king touching matter of the Staple: the speaker of the Parliament pronounced, that he thought best the same were planted within the realme, considering that Calis, Burges, and other townes beyond the seas, grew very rich thereby, and good townes here very much decayed, and so much for the conuaion profit. Touching the king, hee affirmed that the subsidie and custome of wooll yeelded more to the king when the staple was kept in England by one thousand markes yeerely, then it did now being holden beyond the seas. Ex 9. Anno eiusdem Regis. Tit. 4.

Item: that inquisition and redresse might bee had against such religious persons, as vnder the licence to purchase 10. li. yeerely, doe purchase 80. li. or 100. li. Tit. 36.

Item, that all clerks aduanced to any ecclesiasticall dignitie or liuing by the king, will grant to the king the first fruits of their liuings, none otherwise then they would haue done to the pope, being aduanced by him. Tit. 44.

In the 11. yeere of king Richard the second, it was put by by the petitions of the commons, that such impositions as are gathered by the popes bulles of Volumus and imponimus of the translations of B.B. and such like, might bee imployed on the kings warres against the schismatickes of Scotland. And that such as bring into the realme the like bulles and nouelties, may be repuled for traitors. Tit. 26.

In the 12. yeere of his raigne, followed another Parliament, in which, although the archbishop of Canturburie and Yorke, for them and the whole clergie of their prouinces, made their solemne protestations in open Parliament, that they in no wise meant or would assent to any statute or law made in restraint of the popes authozitie, but vtterly withstood the same, willing this protestation of theirs to be enrolled: yet the said protestation of theirs at that time tooke no great effect. An. 13. Regis Rich. 2. Tit. 24.

Item, in the same Parliament was put vp by publike petition, that the popes collectors should bee commanded to auoid the Realme within 40. daies, or elle to be taken as the kings enemie, and that euery such collector from henceforth, may be an Englishman, and sworne to execute the statutes made in this Parliament. Tit. 34.

Moreouer, in the said Parliament, the yeere abouesaid of the king, the 26. of Ianuarie, 9. Iohn Wyndour Clerke was charged openly in the Parliament, that he should not passe, ne send ouer to Rome, ne attempt or do any thing there touching the Archdeaconrie of Durham in preiudice of the king, & of his lawes, & the party presented thereto by the king, on perill that might ensue.

Ex an 14. R. 2. Statut. secund. cap. 2. & 6. Item, the next yeere following, which was the 14. of this kings raigne, it was enacted first touching the staplers, that after the feast of the Epiphany next ensuing, that the staple should be remoued from Calice into England, in such places as are contained in the statute made in 27. Edw. 3. the which statute should be fully executed: and further, that euery Alien that bringeth merchandize into the Realme, should find sufficient surety to buy and carry away commodities of the Realme, to halfe the value of his said merchandize.

Tithes. Against vsurie. Item, in the same Parliament petition was made, that against the horrible vice of vsurie, then termed shifts, practised as well by the clergie as laitie, the order made by John Notte, late Maior of London, might be executed throughout the Realme.

Ex tit. 29. Moreouer, in the 15 yeere of the raigne of the foresaid king it was accorded, for that Sir William Brian knight had purchased from Rome a Bull directed from the Archbishops of Canturbury and Yorke, to excommunicate such as had broken vp his house, and had taken away diuers letters, priuileges, and charters: the same Bull being read in the Parliament house, was adiudged prudicial to the kings crowne, and in derogation of the lawes, for the which he was by the king and assent of the lords committed to the Tower, there to remaine at the kings will and pleasure.

Pride & insolencie. Title 29. In the said Parliament also, William Archbishop of Canturbury maketh his protestation in the open Parliament, saying, that the Pope ought not to excommunicate any Bishop, or to entermeddle, for, or touching any presentment to any ecclesiasticall dignitie recouered in any the kings courts. He further protested, that the Pope ought to make no translation to any Bishoprieke within the Realme against the kings will: for that the same was to the destruction of the Realme and crowne of England, which hath alway beene so free, as the same hath had none earthly soueraigne, but onely subiect to God in all things touching regalities, and to none other. The which protestation he prayed might be entred.

Ex An. 17. Reg. Richa. Title 33. In the 17. yeere of the raigne of the king aforesaid, it was desired that remedie might be had against such religious persons as caused their villaines or vnderlings to marry free women inheritable, whereby the lands came to those religious mens hands by collusion.

43. Item, that sufficient persons might be presented to benefices, who may dwell on the same, so as their flocke for want thereof doe not perish.

47. Item, that remedy might be had against the Abbats of Colchester and Abington, who in the townes of Colchester and Colnham claime to haue sanctuarie.

Ex an. 20. Reg. Richa. Title 1. To come to the Parliament holden in the 20. yeere of this kings raigne: we find moreouer in the said rolles, how that the Archbishops of Canturbury and Yorke, for themselues and the clergy of their prouinces, declared to the king in open Parliament, that for as much as they were bounde to the Pope and Sea of Rome, if any thing were in the Parliament attempted in restraint of the same, they would in no wise attent thereto, but verily withstand the same; the which their protestation they require to be enrolled.

Vpon the petition of the begging Friers there at large it was enacted, that none of that order should passe ouer the seas, without licence of his Soueraigne, nor that he should take vpon him any order of S. of Diuinitie, vnlesse he were first approued in his Chapter prouinciall, on paine to be put out of the kings protection.

Title 31.

Item, that the kings officers for making arrests or attachments in Churchyards, are therefore excommunicated; where of remedy was required.

Title 36.

Ex an. 20. Reg. Richa. tit. 15. In the yeere of the same kings raigne 21. the Parliament being holden at Westminster, we find how the commons in full Parliament, accused Thomas Arundell Archbishop of Canturbury, for that he as Chancellor procured, and as chiefe doer executed the same commission, made traiterously in the tenth yeere of the king. And also that he the said Archbishop procured the Duke of Glocester and the Earles of Arundell and Marwicke, to intend to themselues royall power, and to iudge to death Simon de Burley, and sir John Berners without the kings assent. Wherevnto the Commons required that the same Archbishop might rest vnder safe keeping: whereunto, for that the same impeachments touched so great a person, they would be aduised.

Ex tit. 16. Item, the 25. day of September, the Commons prayed the king to giue iudgement against the said Archbishop, according to his desires. The king answered, that priuately the said Archbishop had confessed to him, how he mistooke himselfe in the said Commission, and therefore submitted himselfe to the kings mercy: Wherefore the king, lords, and sir Thomas Percy, prayed for the clergie, abridged the fact of the said Archbishop to be treason, and himselfe a traitour, and therefore it was ordered, that the said Archbishop should be banished, his temporalties seased, his lands and goods forfeited, as well in vse as in possession.

Sentence pronounced against Tho. Arundell Archbishop of Canturbury for his banishment.

The king further prescribed, that he said Archbishop should take his passing on Friday within fiue weekes of Pentichalmas, at Douer, towards the parts of France. Ex tit. 17.

Thus hauing briefly to sufficiently touched and comprehended such things as haue hapned in the raigne of this king, necessarie for the Church to know, by course of storie: we came now to the 22. yeere of king Richards raigne, which is the yeere of our Lord, 1399. In the which yeere hapned the strange and also lamentable deposing of this king Richard the second aforesaid, from his kingly scepter. Strange, for that the like example hath not often beene seene in estates roiall. Lamentable, for that it cannot be but grieuous to any good mans heart, to see him either so to deserue, if he were iustly deposed: or if he were vniustly deprived, to see the kingly title there not able to hold his right, where by force, it is compelled to giue place to might. Anno 1399. The deposing of king Richard the second. The diuers dealings and fame inable.

As concerning the order and processe of whose deposing, for that it neither is greatly pertinent to my argument, and is sufficiently contained in Robert Fabian, and in the kings records, in the Chronicle of S. Albans, and in other histories at large, it were here tedious and superfluous to intermeddle with repeating thereof: What were the conditions and properties of this king, partly before hath beene touched. In whom, as some good vertues may be noted, so also some vices may seeme to be mixed withall. But especially this, that he flattring out of the steps of his progenitors, ceased to take part with them, which take part with the Gospell. Whereupon it so fell, not by the blind wheele of fortune, but by the secret hand of him, which directeth all estates: that as he first began to forsake the maintaining of the Gospell of God, so the Lord beganne to forsake him. And where the protection of God begunneth to fade, there can lacke no causes to be charged withall, whom God once giueth ouer to mans punishment. So that to me, conferring the whole life and trade of this Prince, among all other causes alledged in stories against him, none seemeth so much to be weighed of vs, as most hurtfull to him, then this forsaking of the Lord and his word. Although to such as list more to be certified in other causes concurring withall, many and sundry defects in that king may appeare in stories to the number of 33. Articles alledged or forced rather against him. Cities and townes mis-vsed by king Richard. What it is to forsake the maintenance of the Gospell. Articles 33. laid against king Richard.

In which, as I cannot denie, but that he was worthy of much blame, so to be displaced therefore from his regall seat, and rightfull state of the crowne, it may be thought perhaps the causes not to be seuere, or so materiall in a Prince, which ere they could or else would haue serued: had not he giuen ouer before to serue the Lord and his word, chusing rather to serue the humour of the pope and bloudy prelates, then to further the Lords proceedings in preaching of his word. And then, as I said, how can enimies lacke where God standeth not to friend: or what cause can be so little which is not able inough to cast downe, where the Lords arme is hoisted to sustaine? Wherefore, it is a point of principall wisedome in a Prince, not to forget, that as he standeth aloofe in rede of God his helping hand, so all waies to haue the assistance and fauor of him before his eies, according to the counsell of the godly king Dauid, Psalme 2. Gods speciall fauour requisite for princes.

And thus much touching the time and race of this King Richard, with the tragicall storie of his deposing. The order and maner whereof purposely I pretermit, onely contented briefely to lay together a few speciall things done before his fall, such as may be sufficient in a briefe summe, both to satisfie the Reader inquisitiue of such stories, and also to forewarne other Princes to beware the like dangers. In such as write the life and acts of this Prince, thus I read of him reported: that he was much inclined to the fauouring and aduancing of certaine persons about him, and ruled all by their counsell, which were then greatly abhorred and hated in the Realme: The names of whom were Robert Vere Earle of Oxford, whom the king had made Duke of Ireland, Alexander Neuill Archbishop of Yorke, Michael Delapole Earle of Suffolke, Robert Tresilian lord chiefe Iustice, Nicolas Brembre, with other. The king led with lewd counsell.

These men, being hated and disdained of diuers of the nobles, and of the commons, the king also by fauouring them, was lesse fauoured himselfe. In so much, that the Duke of Glocester, named Thomas Woodstocke the kings Vncle, with the Earle of Warwicke and Earle of Darby, stood vp in armes against those counsellers and abuters (as they named them) of the king. In so much that the king for feare was constrained against his minde to remoue out of his court Alexander Neuill Archbishop of Yorke, John Foxde Bishop of Duresme, Frier Thomas Rushoke Bishop of Chichester the kings confessor, with the lord Haringworth, lord Burnell, and Scroope, lord Tere, and diuers other. The Nobles vp in armes against certaine of the kings Counsellers.

And further more, in the Parliament the same yeere following, Robert Tresilian the Iustice was hanged & drawne. Also Nicolas Brembre knight, James Salisburie also, and James Barnes both knights, John Beuchamp the kings Steward, and John Blake Esquire in like maner. All these by the counsell of the lords being cast in the Parliament against the kings minde, did suffer, which was in the 11. of his raigne, Ex Chron. Albani. Ex Thom. Walsing. Ex Chron. Albani.

raigne, he being yet vnder gouernours: but consequently after the same, the king claiming his owne libertie, being come to the age of 20. began to take more vpon him. And this was one thing that stirred vp the kings stomacke against the Nobles. Ex Chron. Albani.

2. Another thing that stirred him vp as much against the Londoners was this, for that he would haue borrowed of them a thousand pound, and they denied him, to their double and triple disaduantage, as after ensued vpon it. Ibidem. Another occasion besides this, betweene the king and the Londoners hapned thus, by reason of one of the bishop of Salisburies seruants, named Roman, and a bakers man: who then carying a basket of hose bread in Fleetstreet, the foresaid Roman stole a hose loafe out of the basket. The baker asking why he did so, the thapsilesse yeoman turned backe againe and brake his head: whereupon the neighbors came out, and would haue arrested this Roman, but he escaped away vnto the bishops house. Then the Constable would haue had him out, but the bishops men shut fast the gates, that they should not approach. Thus, much people gathered together, threatning to burst open the gates and fire the house, vnlesse they had the foresaid partie to them brought out. Whereby much adoe there was, till at length the Maior and Sheriffes came and quieted the rage of the commons, and sent euery man home to his house, charging them to keepe peace. Here as yet was no great harme done, but if the bishop for his part had been quiet, and had not stirred the coles of debate, which were well slaked already, all had been ended without further perturbation. But the stomacke of the bishop not yet digested (although his man had done the wrong) hauing no great cause so to do, whose name was John Waltam, being then Threasurer of England, went to Thomas Arundel, archbishop the same time of Yorke, and Lord Chancellor of England, to complaine of the Londoners. Where is to be noted, or rather reuealed by the way a priuie mysterie, which although it lie hid in this storie touched of the writers, yet it touched the hearts of the bishops not a little. For the Londoners at that time were notoriously knowen to be fauourers of Wickliffes side, as partly before this is to be seene, and in the storie of S. Albanes more plainely both appeare: Where the author of the said historie writing vpon the 15. yeere of king Richards raigne, reporteth in these words of the Londoners, that they were Male creduli in deum & traditiones suitas, Lollardorum fautentatores, religiosorum detractores, facinorum detectores, & communis vulgi depaperatores, &c. that is, not right beleeuers in God, nor in the traditions of their forefathers, fauourers of the Lollards, depauers of religious men, withholders of tithes, and impouerishers of the common people, &c. John Waltam bishop of Salisburie maketh complaint to Thomas Arundell archbishop of Yorke. Londoners fauourers of Wickliffes doctrine. Ex hister. D. Albani, cuius fi. lebet initium, Augusto, &c.

Thus the Londoners being noted and suspected of the bishops, were the more maliced (no doubt therefore) of the said bishops, which were the more ready to finde and take all occasions to worke against them, as by their doing herein may well appeare. For the bishop of Salisburie, and Archbishop of Yorke, hauing no greater matter against them, then was declared: with a grieuous complaint went to the king, complaining of the Maior and Sheriffes of London. What trespasse the Maior and Sheriffes had done, as pe haue heard before, to may you iudge. Now what followed after let vs heare. The king incensed not a little with the complaint of the bishops, conceiued displeasures against the Maior and Sheriffes, and against the whole Citie of London, a great stomacke: In so much that the Maior and both the Sheriffes were sent for, and removed from their office. Sir Edward Darlington then was made warden and gouernor of the citie, who also for his gentlenesse shewed to the citizens, was also deposed, and another named sir Baldwin Radington, placed in that rome. Moreouer, so much grew the kings displeasure against the citie, that he also removed from London the courts, and termes to be kept at Yorke, that is to say, the Chancerie, the Eschequer, the kings Bench, the Hamper, and the common Pleas: where the same continued from Midsummer till Chrislinas, to the great decay of the citie of London: which was an. 1393. Londoners complained of to the king, by the bishops. Beati pacifici. The king led with lewd counsell. The court removed from London to Yorke.

3. Another great cause which purchased the king much euill will amongst his subiects, was the secret murthering of his owne vncle named Thomas Woodstocke, duke of Glocester, of whom mention was made before; where was declared, how the said duke, with the earle of Arundell, the earle of Warwicke, and the earle of Darby, with other were vp in armes against certaine wicked counsellors about the king. Whereupon, the king watching afterward his time, came into Chelmesford, and so to the place where by, where the duke lay: where with his own hands he arrested the said duke his vncle, and sent him bolne by water immediatlie to Calice, and there through the kings commandement, by secret meanes was put to death, being strangled vnder a featherbed, the earle marshal being then the keeper of Calis, whereby great indignation rose in many mens hearts against the king. King Richard agreeth to resigne his crowne.

and seward of his houshold, willing him with other of his familie, to provide for themselues in time. Who then openly in the hall brake his white rod before them all, commanding euery man to shift for himselfe. Although Fabian and some other say, that he did this of his owne accord, contrarie to his allegeance. The king compassed on euery side with miseries, shifted from place to place, the duke still following him, till at length being at the castle of Conewey, the king deliuered to the lords Thomas Arundell archbishop, and the earle of Northumberland: to whom he declared, that he would resigne vp his crowne, in condition that an honorable liuing might be for him prouided, and like promised to eight persons, such as he would name. Which being granted and ratified, but not performed, he came to the castle of Flint, where (after talke had with the duke of Lancaster) he was brought the same night by the duke and his armie to Chester, and from thence was conueyed secretly into the tower, there to be kept till the next parliament. By the way as he came were to London, diuers still disposed men of the citie being warned thereof, gathered themselues, thinking to haue slaine him, for the great crueltie he had vsed before toward the citie; but by the policies of the Maior and rulers of the citie, the madnesse of the people was staied. Not long after followed the duke, and alls began the parliament. In which parliament, the earle of Northumberland, with many other earles and lords were sent to the king in the tower, to take of him a full resignation according to his former promise, and so they did. This done, diuers accusations and articles were laid and engrossed against the said king, to the number of thirtie three, some say thirtie eight, which for the matter not greatly materiall in them contained, I ouerpasse. And the next yeare after was had to Pontfret castle, and there famished to death.

The king committed to the tower.

¶ King Henrie the fourth.

AFter thus king Richard by common assent being deposed from his rightfull crowne, the duke of Lancaster was led by Thomas Arundell the archbish p, to the seate royall: who there stood, regarding, and crossing himselfe on the forehead and the brest, spake in words as followeth.

The words of Henrie duke, at his first entring the crowne.

¶ In the name of God, Amen. I Henrie of Lancaster, claime the realme of England and the crowne, with all the appurtenances, as I that am descended by right line of the blood coming from that good lord king Henrie the third. And through the right that God of his grace hath sent to me with the help of my kin, and of my friends to recouer the same, which was in point to be vndone for default of good gouernance, and due justice, &c.

Henrie Henrie the fourth inthroned and crowned. Anno 1400

¶ After which words, the Archbishop asking the assent of the people, being ioyfull of their new king, take the duke by the hand, and placed him in the kingly throne, which was an. 1399. and shortly after by the foresaid archbishop he was crowned also for king of England. Ex Chron. De Alban.

William Sautre marty.

The next yeare after, followed a parliament holden at Westminster: in which parliament one William Sautre, a good man and a faithfull priest, inflamed with zeale of true religion, required he might be heard for the commodity of the whole realme. But the matter being stirelt before by the bishops, they obtained that the matter should be referred to the conuocation: where the said William Sautre being brought before the Bishops and Notaries thereunto appointed, the conuocation was deferred to the Saturday next ensuing.

William Sautre brought before the Bishops in the conuocation.

Then Saturday was come, that is to say, the twelfth day of February, Thomas Arundell archbishop of Canturburie, in the presence of his councel prouincial being assembled in the said Chapter house, against one sir William Sautre, otherwise called Chatris chaplaine personally there and there appearing by the commandement of the foresaid archbishop of Canturburie, obicted; that the said Sir William before the bishop of Norwich, had once renounced and abiured diuers and sundrie conclusions hereticall and erroneous; and that after such abiuration made, he publikely and priuily held, taught and preached the same conclusions, or else such like, disagreeing to the Catholike faith and to the great perill and pernicious example of others. And after this he caused such like conclusions holden and preached, as is said, by the said Sir William without renunciation, then and there to be read vnto the said archbishop, by master Robert Hall, chancellor vnto the said bishop, in a certaine scrole written, in tenor of words as followeth.

The articles of William Sautre.

Sir William Chatris, otherwise called Sautre, parish Priest of the church Saint Scithe the Virgine in London, publikelie and priuilie doth hold these conclusions vnder written.

¶ In primis, he saith that he will not worship the crosse on which Christ suffered, but only Christ that suffered vpon the crosse.

2 Item, that he would sooner worship a temporall king, then the foresaid wodden crosse.

3 Item, that he would rather worship the bodies of the Saints, then the very crosse of Christ, on which he hung, if it were before him.

4 Item, that he would rather worship a man truely contrite, then the crosse of Christ.

5 Item, that he is bound rather to worship a man that is predestinate, then an angell of God.

6 Item, that if any man would visite the monuments of Peter and Paul, or go on pilgrimage to the Tombe of Saint Thomas, or else any whither else, for the obtaining of any temporall benefit: he is not bound to keepe his vow, but that he may distribute the expences of his vow vpon the almes of the poore.

7 Item, that euery Priest and Deacon is more bound to preach the word of God, then to say the canonicall houres.

8 Item, that after the pronouncing of the Sacramentall words of the bodie of Christ, the bread remaineth of the same nature that it was before, neither doth it cease to be bread.

To which conclusions or articles being thus read, the Archbishop of Canturburie required the same Sir William to answere. And then the said William asked a copie of such articles or conclusions, and a competent space to answere vnto the same. Whereupon the said Archbishop commanded a copie of such articles or conclusions to be deliuered, then and there vnto the said Sir William, assigning the Thursday then next ensuing to him to deliberate and make answere in. When Thursday the said day of appearance was come, Master Nicolas Ashton, auditor of the causes and businesse belonging to the said Archbishop (then being in the Parliament house at Westminster otherwise let) continued the said conuocation with all matters rising, depending and appertinent thereunto, by commandement of the said bishop, vntill the next morrow at eight of the clocke. When the morrow came, being Friday, the foresaid sir William Sautre, in the chapter house before the said bishop and his councell prouincial then and there assembled, making his personall appearance, exhibited a certaine scrole containing the answere vnto certaine articles or conclusions given vnto him, as is aforesaid, by the said bishop: and said, that vnto the foresaid archbishop he deliuered the same as his answere in that behalfe, vnder the tenor of such words as ensue.

The conuocation continued. W. Sautre examined.

The answere of William Sautre giuen vp in writing.

I William Sautre priest vnworthie, say and answere, that I will not, nor intend not to worship the crosse whereon Christ was crucified, but onely Christ that suffered vpon the crosse: so vnderstanding me, that I will not worship the materiall crosse, for the grosse corporall matter: yet notwithstanding I will worship the same as a signe, token, and memorial of the passion of Christ. Adoramus signum. And that I will rather worship a temporall king, then the foresaid wodden crosse, as the materiall substance of the same. And that I will rather worship the bodies of Saints, then the very crosse of Christ whereon he hung: with this addition, that if the very same crosse were afore me, as touching the materiall substance. And also that I will rather worship a man truely confessed and penitent, then the crosse on which Christ hung, as touching the materiall substance.

The crosse materially not to be worshipped.

A man predestinate rather to be worshipped, then an Angell that is to say, neither can be worshipped without idolatrie.

And, that also I am bound, and will rather worship him whom I know to be predestinate, truely confessed and contrite, then an angell of God: for that the one is a man of the same nature that is the humanitie of Christ, and so is not a blessed angell. Notwithstanding I will worship both of them, according as the will of God is I should.

Also, that if any man hath made a vow to visit the shrines of the Apostles Peter and Paul, or to goe on pilgrimage vnto S. Thomas tombe, or any whither else to obtaine any temporall benefit or commoditie; he is not bound simplie to keepe his vow, vpon the necessitie of saluation: but that he may giue the expences of his vow in almes amongst the poore, by the prudent counsell of his superiour, as I suppose.

And also I say, that euery Deacon and Priest is more bound to preach the word of God, then to say the canonicall houres according to the primitiue order of the church.

How bread remaineth in the Sacrament.

Also, touching the interrogation of the sacrament of the altar; I say, that after the pronouncing of the sacramentall words of the body of Christ, there ceaseth not to be very bread simplie, but remaineth bread, holy, true, & the bread of life: and I beleeue the said sacrament to be the very bodie of Christ, after the pronouncing of the sacramentall words.

When all these answeres were throughlie by Maister Robert Hall, directlie and publiclie there read, the foresaid archbishop of Canturburie inquired of the said Sir William, whether he had deliuered the foresaid heresies and errors obicted against him, as before is said, before the bishop of Norwich, or not; or else had reuoked and renounced the said or such like conclusions or articles, or not? To which he answered and affirmed, that he had not. And then consequentlie (all other articles, conclusions and answeres aboue written, immediatlie omitted) the said archbishop examined the same sir William Sautre, especiallie vpon the sacrament of the altar.

First, whether in the sacrament of the altar after the pronouncing of the sacramentall words, remaineth very materiall bread or not. Vnto which interrogation, the same sir William somewhat waueringly said, and answered, that he knew not that. Notwithstanding he said, that there was very bread, because it was the bread of life which came downe from heauen.

After that the said archbishop demanded of him, whether in the Sacrament after the sacramentall words, rightlie pronounced of the priest, the same bread remaineth, which did before the words pronounced, or not? And to this question the foresaid William answered in like manner as before, saying, that there was bread, holy, true, and the bread of life, &c.

After that, the foresaid archbishop asked him, whether the same materiall bread before consecration, by the sacramentall words of the priest rightly pronounced, bee transubstantiated from the nature of bread, into the very bodie of Christ, or not? Whereunto sir William said, that he knew not what that matter meant.

And then the said archbishop assigned vnto the said sir William, time to deliberate, and more fullie to make his answere till the next day: and continued this conuocation then and there till the morrow. Which morrow, to wit, the 19. day of Februarie being come, the foresaid archbishop of Canturburie, in the said chapter house of saint Paul in London, before his councell prouincial, then and there assembled, specialie asked and examined the same sir William Sautre there personally present, vpon the Sacrament of the altar, as before. And the same sir William againe in like manner as before, answered.

After this, amongst other things the said bishop demanded of the same William, if the same materiall bread being vpon the altar after the sacramentall words being of the priest rightlie pronounced, is transubstantiated into the verie bodie of Christ, or not? And the said sir William said hee vnderstood not what he meant.

Then the said archbishop demanded, whether that materiall bread being round and white, prepared and disposed for the Sacrament of the bodie of Christ vpon the altar, wanting nothing that is meet and requisit thereunto, by the vertue of the sacramentall words being of the priest rightly pronounced, be altered and changed into the very bodie of Christ, and receiueth any more to be materiall and very bread, or not? Then the said sir William deridingly answering, said hee could not tell.

Determination of the church to be followed as it is ioyned to the will of God.

Then consequently the said archbishop demanded, whether he would stand to the determination of the holy church or not, which affirmeth: that in the Sacrament of the altar, after the words of consecration, being rightly pronounced of the priest, the same bread which before in nature was bread, ceaseth any more to be bread. To this interrogation, the said sir William said: that he would stand to the determination of the church, where such determination was not contrarie to the will of God.

This done; he demanded of him againe, what his iudgement was concerning the Sacrament of the altar: Who said and affirmed, that after the words of consecration by the priest duly pronounced, remained very bread, and the same bread which was before the words spoken. And this examination about the Sacrament, lasted from eight of the clocke of the same day, vntill eleuen of the clocke, or thereabouts: insomuch, that during all this time, the foresaid William would no otherwise answere: neither yet touching the same Sacrament, reuerne catholike information, according to the institution of the popes church and his christian faith. Wherefore the said Canturburie, by the counsell and assent of his whole couent then and there present, did promulgate and giue sentence by the mouth of Robert Hall, against the same sir William Sautre (being personalie present, and refusing to reuoke his heresies, that is to say his true doctrine, but constantly defending the same) vnder the tenour of words as followeth.

The sentence against W. Sautre.

IN the name of God, Amen. Wee Thomas by the grace of God archbishop of Canturburie, primat of England and Legate of the sea Apostolicall, by the authoritie of God almightie and blessed saint Peter and Paul, and of holy church, and by our owne authoritie sitting for tribunall or chiefe Iudge, hauing God alone before our eies; by the counsell and consent of the whole Clergie our fellow brethren, and suffragans assistants vnto vs in this present councell prouincial, by this our sentence definitiue, do pronounce, decree and declare by these presents, thee William Sautre, otherwise called Chawtrey, parish priest pretented, personallie appearing before vs, in & vpon the crime of heresie iudiciallie and lawfullie conuict as an heretike, and as an heretike to be punished.

Which sentence definitiue being thus read; the foresaid archbishop of Cant. continued in the same prouinciall councell till Wednesday next, and immediatly ensuing, to wit, the 24. day of the same moneth of Februarie: which being expired, the bishop of Norwich, according to the commandement of the said archbishop of Canturburie, presented vnto the foresaid William Sautre by a certaine friend of his, being present at the same councell, a certaine processe inclosed and sealed with his seale, giuing the names of credible witnesses sealed with their seales: The tenour whereof followeth in this wise.

Memorandum, that vpon the last day of April, in the yere of our Lord, 1399. in the 7. indiction, and 10. yere of the pacie of pope Boniface the 2. in a certaine chamber within the manor house of the said bishop of Norwich, at South Heylingham (where the register of the said bishop is kept) before the houre of 9. in a certaine chapell within the said manour situate, and the first day of May, then next and immediatlie ensuing, in the foresaid chamber, sir William Chatteris, parish priest of the church of S. Margaret in the towne of Lunne, appeared before the bishop of Norwich, in the presence of John de Derlington, archdeacon of Norwich, doctor of the decrees, frier Walter Disse, and John Kiluinghall professors in diuinitie, William Carleton, doctor of both lawes, and William Friseby, with Hugh Wisham, publike Notaries: and there publikely affirmed and held, the conclusions, as before is specified.

A certaine processe against W. Sautre presented by the bishop of Norwich.

All and singuler the premises the foresaid William affirmed vpon mature deliberation. And afterwards, to wit, the 19. day of May in the yere, indiction, and papacie aforesaid, in the chapell within the manour house of the said Henrie bishop of Norwich, situate at South Heylingham; the foresaid sir William, reuoked and renounced all and singuler the foresaid his conclusions: abiuring and correcting all such heresies and errours, taking his oth vpon a booke before the foresaid Henrie the bishop of Norwich, that from that time forward he would neuer preach, affirme, nor hold openly nor apertly, the foresaid conclusions: And that he would pronounce according to the appointment of the said bishop, the foresaid conclusions to bee erroneous and heresies, in the parish churches of Lunne, and Tilney, and in other places at the assignement of the said bishop: and farther sware, that he would stand to the ordinance of the said bishop, touching the premisses, in the presence of the discreet and worshipfull men afore recited with diuers other moe.

As concerning the first conclusion, that hee said hee would not worship the crosse, &c. hee confessed himselfe to haue erred, and that the article was erroneous and submitted himselfe. And as touching the second article, that he said he would rather worship a king, &c. he confessed himselfe to haue erred, and the article to be erroneous, and submitted himselfe, and so forth of all the rest.

Then next after this, vpon the 25. day of May in the yere of our Lord aforesaid, in the Churchyard of the chapell of saint James within the towne of Lunne; the foresaid William, in presence of the foresaid bishop and clergie, and the people of the said towne of Lunne standing round about; publikely declared in the English tongue, the foresaid conclusions to bee erroneous and heresies, as was contained in a certaine scrole. And after this, the 26. day of May in the yere above said, in the church of the hospitall of S. Johns in the towne of Lunne; the said sir William, before the said bishop sitting as iudge, sware and toke his oth vpon the holy Euangelists, that hee would neuer after that time preach openly and publikely the foresaid conclusions, nor would beare the confessions of any of the subiects of his diocs of Norwich, without the speciall licence of the said bishop, &c. In the presence of frier John Somermen, M. John Kilninghale, doctor of diuinitie. W. Carlton doctor of both lawes, and Thomas Bulton officer of the liberty of Lunne aforesaid, with diuers others.

The tenour of the scrole and recantation.

IN primis, touching the first and second, where I said, that I would adore rather a temporall prince, and the linele bodies of the saints, then the woodden crosse, whereupon the Lord did hang, I doe reuoke and recant the same as being therein deceiued. 1 2

To this I say, that the article is false and erroneous, and by false information I held it; the which I renounce and aske forgiuenesse thereof, and say, that it is a precious relique, and that I shall hold it while I liue, and that I sweare here. 3

I know well that I erred wrongfullie, by false information: for I wot well, that a deacon or a priest is more bound to say his Mattins and houres, then to preach; for thereto hee is bounden by right: wherefore I submit me, &c. 4

Touching that article, I know right well that I erred by false information. Wherefore I aske forgiuenesse. 5

As concerning vowes, I say, that opinion is false and erroneous, and by false information I held it: for a man is holden to hold his vow, &c. 6

To the 7. article I say, that I did it by authoritie of priesthood, wherethrough I knowledge well that I haue gilt and trespassed: wherefore I submit me to God and to holy Church, and to you father, sweating that I shall neuer hold it more. 7

The 8. I say, that I held it by false and wrong information. But now I know well that it is hereste, and that bread anon as the word of the sacrament is said, is no longer bread materiall, but that it is turned into very Christs bodie; and that I sweare here. 8

I say, that this is false and erroneous, &c. 9

I say as I said, &c. 10

This being done, the 22. of Februarie aforesaid in the yere of our Lord. 1400. in the chapter house of Saint Paul in London aforesaid; the foresaid archbishop of Canturburie, in in the consecration of his prelats and clergie and such like men there being present, caused the foresaid processe of the bishop of Norwich to be read openly and publikely to sir William Sautre, otherwise called Chautris. And afterward, he asked the said sir William, whether hee plainely understood and knew such processe and the contents within the same; and hee said, yea. And further he demanded of him, if he would or could say or object any thing against the processe; and hee said, no. And after that incontinent, the foresaid archbishop of Canturburie demanded and obiected against the said sir William, as diuers others more did: That after hee had before the bishop of Norwich reuoked and abiured iudicially diuers errors and heresies, that among other errors and heresies by him taught, holden, and preached, he affirmed: That in the same Sacrament of the altar after the consecration made by the priest, as he taught, there remained materiall bread: which heresie amongst others as erroneus also he abiured before the foresaid bishop of Norwich. Hereunto the foresaid William answered smiling or in mocking wise, saying, and denying that he knew of the premisses. Notwithstanding he publikely affirmed, that he held and taught the foresaid things after the date of the said processe made by the said bishop of Norwich, and that in the same councell also he held the same. Then finallie, it was demanded of the said sir William, why he ought not to be pronounced as a man fallen into heresie, and further to proceed both to his degradation, according to the canonicall sanctions: whereunto he answered nothing, neither could he alleage any cause to the contrarie.

Ex Regist. Cantuar.

Whereupon the foresaid archbishop of Canturbury by the counsell and consent of the whole councell, and especially by the counsell and assent of thereuerend fathers and bishops as also priors, deanes, archdeacons, and other worshipfull doctours and clerks then and there present in the councell: fullie determined to proceed to the degradation, and actuall deposing of the said William Sautre, as reallen into heresie, and as incorrigible, according to the sentence definitive put in writing, the tenour whereof is in words as followeth.

Sentence of relaps.

In the name of God Amen: Wee Thomas by the grace of God archbishop of Canturbury, Legate of the see Apostolical, and Metropolitane of all England: doe finde and declare, that thou William Sautre, otherwise called Chautris priest, by vs with the counsell and assent of all and singuler our fellow brethren and whole clergie, by this our sentence definitive declared in writing, hast been for heresie conuict and condemned, and art (being againe fallen into heresie) to be deposed and degraded, by these presents.

And from that day being Wednesday, there was in the said councell proiuntcall nothing further proiocuted, but was continued with all dependents, till the Friday nert insuing. Which Friday approching, maister Nicolas Ryshton, by the commandement of the said archbishop of Canturburie, being then busied, as he said, in the parliament house; continued this councell and conuocation with all incidents, dependents, and accessions, growing and annexed hereunto, to the nert day, to wit, Saturday nert and immediatly after ensuing. Upon Saturday, being the 26. of the said moneth of February, the foresaid archbishop of Canturburie sate in the bishops seate of the foresaid church of S. Paul in London, and solemnely apparelled in his pontificall attire, sitting with him as his assistants, these reuerend fathers and bishops, of Londō, Lincolne, Hereford, Exeter, Menenensis & Roffensis Episcopi, aboue mentioned; commanded and caused the said sir Wm. Sautry apparelled in priestly vestments, to bee brought and appeare before him. That done, he declared & expounded in English to al the clergy and people there in a great multitude assembled: that all processe was finished and ended against the said sir Wil. Sautry. Which thing finished, before the pronouncing of the said sentence of the Relapse against the said sir William, as is premised, hee often times and there recited and read. And for that he saw the said William in that behalfe, nothing abashed; hee proceeded to his degradation and actuall deposition in forme as followeth.

Sentence of degradation.

In nomine patris & filij & spiritus sancti: Wee Thomas by Gods permission archbishop of Canturbury, primate of all England, and Legate of the apostolike see; doe denounce thee William Sautre, otherwise called Chautris, chaplaine fained, in the habite and apparell of a priest, as an heretike, and one relallen into heresie by this our sentence definitive, by counsell, assent and authoritie, to be condemned: and by conclusion of al our fellow brethren, fellow bishops, prelats, councell prouincial, and of the whole clergie; doe degrade and deprive thee of thy priestly order. And in signe of degradation and actuall deposition from thy priestly dignitie, for thine incorrigible vice and want of amendment: We take from thee the patent and chalice; and doe deprive thee of all power and authoritie of celebrating the masse: and also we pull from thy backe the casule, and take from thee the vestiment, and deprive thee of all manner of priestly hanor.

The patent and chalice taken from him.

Also, we Thomas the aforesaid archbishop by authoritie, counsell and assent, which vpon the foresaid William we haue, being deacon pretensed, in the habit and apparell of a deacon, having the new Testament in thy hands, being an heretike, and twice fallen, condemned by sentence as is aforesaid; doe degrade and put thee from the order of a deacon. And in token of this thy degradation and actuall deposition, wee take from thee the booke of the new Testament, and the stole, and doe deprive thee of all authoritie in reading of the Gospell, and of all and all manner of dignitie of a deacon.

The booke of the new Testament taken from him.

Item, we Thomas archbishop aforesaid, by authority, counsell, and assent, which ouer thee the foresaid William wee haue, being a subdeacon pretensed; in the habite and vestiment of a subdeacon, an heretike, and twice fallen, condemned by sentence, as is aforesaid; doe degrade and put thee from the order of a subdeacon. And in token of this thy degradation and actuall deposition, we take from thee the albe and maniple, and doe deprive thee of all, and all manner of subdiaconicall dignity.

The albe taken from him.

Also, we Thomas, archbishop aforesaid, by counsell, assent and authoritie which we haue ouer thee the foresaid William, an Acolyte pretensed, wearing the habite of an Acolyte, and heretike, twice fallen, by our sentence, as is aforesaid, condemned; doe degrade and put from thee all order of an Acolyte. And in signe and token of this thy degradation, and actuall deposition, we take from thee the candlestiche and taper, and also Vrceolum, and doe deprive thee of all, and all manner dignitie of an Acolyte.

The candle sticke and taper taken from him.

Also we Thomas, archbishop aforesaid, by assent, counsell and authoritie, which vpon thee the foresaid William we haue, an Exorcist pretensed, in the habite of an Exorcist or holy water clerke, being an heretike, twice fallen, and by our sentence as is aforesaid, condemned; wee doe degrade and depose thee from the order of an Exorcist. And in token of this thy degradation and actuall deposition, we take from thee the book of conjurations, and doe deprive thee of all and singuler dignitie of an Exorcist.

The holy water booke conjured from him.

Also, we Thomas, archbishop aforesaid, by assent, counsell, and authoritie, as is aboueſaid, doe degrade and depose thee the foresaid William, reader pretensed, clothed in the habite of a reader, an heretike, twice fallen, and by our sentence, as is aforesaid, condemned; from the order of a reader. And in token of this thy degradation and actuall deposition, we take from thee the booke of the diuine lections (that is, the booke of the Church legend) and doe deprive thee of all and singuler manner of dignitie of such a reader.

De mamerth the legend booke, as fairly the Register.

Item, we Thomas, archbishop of Canturburie aforesaid, by authoritie, counsell, and assent, the which we haue, as is aforesaid, do degrade and put thee the foresaid William Sawtre, ferton pretensed, in the habite of a ferton, and wearing a surplice, being an hereticke, twice fallen, by our sentence definitive condemned, as aforesaid; from the order of a ferton. And in token of this thy degradation and actuall deposition, for the causes aforesaid, we take from thee the keies of the Church doore, and thy surplice, and doe deprive thee of all and singuler manner of commodities of a doore keeper.

The surplice taken from him.

The church doore keies taken from him.

And also, by the authoritie of omnipotent God the father, the sonne and holy Ghost, and by our authoritie, counsell, and assent of our whole councell prouincial aboue written, we doe degrade thee, and depose thee, being here personallie present before vs, from orders, benefices, priuiledges and habite in the church; and for thy pertinacie incorrigible wee doe degrade thee, before the secular court of the high constable and marshall of England, being personallie present; and do depose thee from all and singuler clerkly honours and dignities whatsoeuer, by these writings. Also in token of thy degradation and deposition, here actually we haue caused the crowne and ecclesiasticall tonsure in our presence to bee razed away, and vtterlie to bee abolished, like vnto the forme of a secular lay man: and heere doe put vpon the head of thee the foresaid William, the cap of a lay secular person: beseeching the court aforesaid, that they will receiue fauourably the said William vnto them thus reconmitted.

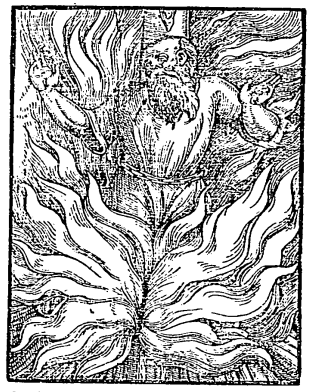
Priuiledge of the clergie taken from him.

The priests cap taken from his head, maketh vp all in all.

Thus William Sawtre the seruant of Christ, being vtterlie thrust out of the popes kingdome, and metamorphosed from a clerke to a secular lay man, was committed (as yee haue heard) vnto the secular power. Which to done, the bishops yet not herewith contented, ceasse not to call vpon the king, to cause him to bee brought forth to spedie execution. Whereupon the king, readie inough and too much to gratifie the clergie, and to retaine their fauours, directly out a terrible decree against the said William Sawtre, and sent it to the maior and sheriffes of London to be put in execution; the tenour whereof here vnder ensueth.

The decree of the king against William Sawtre.

The cruell decree of the king against Sawtre.



The decree of our Soueraigne Lord the king and his counsel in the parliament, against a certain new sprung vp heresie. To the maior and sheriffes of London, &c. Whereas the reuerend father Thomas archbishop of Canturburie, primat of all England, and Legate of the apostolicke see, by the assent, consent, and counsell of other bishops, and his brethren Suffraganes, and also of all the whole clergie within his prouince or dioces, gathered together in his prouincial councel, the due order of the law being obserued in al points in this behalfe; hath hath pronounced and declared by his definitiue sentence, William Sautre sometime chaplaine, to bee fallen againe into his most damnable heresie, the which before time the said William had abiured, therupon to be a most manifest heretike, and therfore hath decreed, that he should be degraded, and hath for the same cause really degraded him from all preiogatiue and priuiledge of the clergie, decreeing to leaue him vnto the secular power: and hath really so left him, according to the lawes and canonicall sanctions set forth in this behalfe, and also that our holy mother the Church hath no further to do in the premisses. Wherefore being zealous in religion, and reuerent louers of the catholick faith, willing and minding to maintaine and defend the holy Church, and the lawes and liberties of the same, to roote all such errors and heresies out of our kingdome of England, and with condigne punishment to correct and punish all heretikes or such as be conuict: prouided alwaies, that both according to the law of God and man, and the canonicall institutions in this behalfe accustomed, that such heretickes conuict and condemned in forme aforesaid, ought to bee burned with fire: We command you as straitly as we may, or can, firmely enioyning you, that you doe cause the said William being in your custodie, in some publick or open place within the liberties of your citie aforesaid (the cause aforesaid being published vnto the people) to be put into the fire, and there in the same fire really to be burned, to the great horror of his offence, and the manifest example of other christians. Faile not in the execution hereof, vpon the perill that will fall thereupon: Teste rege, apud Westmonast. 26. Februar. an. regni sui.

The burning of William Sautre.

Ammunition to princes.

Thus it may appeare how kings and princes haue been blinded and abused by the false prelats of the church, in so much, that they haue been their slaues and butchers, to slay Christs poore innocent members. See therefore what danger it is for princes, not to haue knowledge and vnderstanding themselues, but to be led by other mens eies, and specially e trusting to such guides, who though hypocrisie, both deceiue them, and through cruelnie deuoure the people.

King Henrie the fourth, the first of England kings that fauoured the christians with fire.

As king Henrie the fourth, who was the deposer of king Richard, was the first of all English kings that began the vnmerciful burning of Christs saints, for standing against the pope: so was this William Sautre the true and faithfull martyr of Christ, the first of all them in Wicklifes time, which I find to be burned in the raigne of the foresaid king, which was in the yere of our Lord, 1400.

After the martyrdome of this godly man, the rest of the same companie began to keepe themselues more closely, for feare of the king, who was altogether bent to hold with the popes prelacy. Such was the raigne of this prince, that to the godly hee was euer terrible, in his actions unmeasurable, to few men heartily beloued, but princes neuer lacke flatterers about them. Neither was the time of his raigne very quiet, but full of trouble, of bloud and miserie. Such was their desire of king Richard againe in the raigne of this king, that many yeeres after, he was rumored to be aliue (of them which desired belike that to bee true which they knew to be false) for the which, diuers were executed. For the space of fiue or seuen yeeres together, almost no yere passed without some conspiracie against the king. Long it were here to recite the bloud of all such Nobles and other, which was spilt in the raigne of this king, as the earle of Kent, earle of Salisbury, earle of Huntington, named John Holland, &c. as writeth the storie of S. Albans. But the English writers differ something in their names, and make mention of foure earles, of Surrey, of Gloucester, of Salisbury, and lord Spencer earle of Glocester. Ex lib. cui tit. Calendarium Brutt.

Ex Calendario Brut.

And the nert yere following, Sir John Clarendon knight, with two of his seruants, the prior of Laund, with eight friers, were hanged and quartered. And after these, Henrie Percie the younger, the earle of Worcester, named Thomas Percie his vncle, lord of Kinderton, and Lord Richard de Vernoua. The earle of Northumberland scarce escaped with his pardon, an. 1403. In the which yere, the prison in Conehill called the tunne, was turned into the conduit, there now standing.

To let passe other moe hanged and quartered the same time, as Blunt knight, and Benet Lely knight, and Thomas Wintersell esquire: Also the same yere was taken and executed, sir Bernard Bolns knight, sir John Shilley knight, sir John Mandelin, and William Frierbie. After all these, lord Henry earle of Northumberland, and lord Bardolfe, conspiring the kings death, were taken in the North and beheaded, which was in the 8. yere of this king Henrie.

Archbishop of Yorke and lord Mowbray a gainst king Henry 4.

This ciuill rebellion of so many nobles, and other against the king, declared what grudging hearts the people then bare toward this king Henrie. Among whom I cannot pretermit here also the archbishop of Yorke named Richard Scrope, who with the lord Mowbrey, Marshall of England gathered a great companie in the North countrie, against the foresaid king, to whom also was adioyned the helpe of lord Bardolfe, & Henrie Percie earle of Northumberland. Ex Chron. D. Albani. And to stirre vp the people more willingly to take their parts, they collected certaine articles against the said king, to the number of 10. and fastned them vpon the doores of churches and monasteries, to be read of all men in English. Which articles, (fairly be dispised to vnderstand, for so much as the same also contains a great part of the doings betweene king Henrie and king Richard aforesaid, I thought for the better opening of the matter here under to insert the same, in such forme as I found them in the storie of Scalamundi expressed.

Articles set vpon Church doores against king Henry the fourth.

{Anno 1401}

In the name of God Amen. Before the Lord Jesus Christ, iudge of the quicke and dead, &c. We A. B. C. D. &c. not long sithence became bound by oth vpon the sacred Euangelicall booke, vnto our Soueraigne lord Richard, late king of England and France, in the presence of many prelats, potentates and nobilitie of the realme: that we so long as we liued, should beare true allegeance and fidelitie toward him and his heires succeeding him in the kingdome by iust title, right and line, according to the statutes and custome of this Realme of England: By vertue whereof, we are bound to foresee that no vices or hainous offences arising in the common weale, do take effect to wilfull end, but that wee ought to giue our eares and our goods to withstand the same, without feare of the shoud of death whatsoeuer, vpon paine of periurie, which paine is euerlasting damnation. Wherefore we seeing and perceiuing diuers horrible crimes, and great enormities daily without ceasing to bee committed, by the children of the diuell and satans soudiers against the supremacie of the Church of Rome, the liberties of the church of England, and the lawes of the realme, against the person of king Richard and his heires, against the prelats, noble men, religion and communaltie, and finally against the whole weale publike of the realme of England, to the great offence of the maiestie of almighty God and to the prouocation of his iust wrath and vengeance towards the realme and people of the same: And fearing also the destruction both of the church of Rome and England, and the ruine of our countrie to be at hand, hauing before our eies the iustice and the kingdome of God, calling alwaies on the name of Jesus, hauing an assured confidence in his clemencie, mercie and power: Haue here taken vnto vs certaine articles subscribed in forme following, to be proponed, tried and heard before the iust iudge Jesus Christ, and the whole world, to his honour, the deliuerie of the church, the clergie and communaltie, and to the vtilitie and profit of the weale publicke. But if (which God forbid) we for loue, feare or violence of wicked persons we shall be cast in prison, or by violent death prouented, so as in this world we shall not be able to proue the said articles as we would wish, then do we appeale to the high celestiall Judge, that he may iudge and discerne the same, in the day of his supreme iudgement.

A bill of articles set vp against king Henry 4.

1. First, we depose, say, except, and entend to proue against the Lord Henrie Darbie, some of the lord John of Gaunt late duke of Lancaster, and commonly called king of England, himselfe pretending the same, although without all right and title thereunto) and against his adherents, fautours, and complices: that euer they haue been, are and will be, traitors, inuaders, and destroyers of Gods church in Rome, England, Wales, and Ireland, and of our Soueraigne lord Richard late late king of England, his heires, his kingdome, and common wealth, as shall hereafter manifestly appeare.

2. Secondarily wee depose, &c. against the said lord Henrie, for that he had conceiued, deuised, and conspired certaine haynous crimes and traiterous offences against his said Soueraigne lord Richard his state and dignitie, as manifestlie did appeare in the contention betweene the said lord Henrie, and the lord Thomas duke of Northfolke begun at Concentrie, but not finished thoughtlie. Afterwards hee was sent into exile, by sentence of the said king Richard, by the agreement of his father the Lord Iohn, duke of Lancaster, by the voice of diuers of the lords temporall, and nobilitie of the realme, and also by his owne consent: there to remaine for a certaine time appointed vnto him by the said Lords, and withall he was bound by oth not to returne into England before hee had obtained fauour and grace of the king. Not long after, when the king was departed into Ireland, for reformation of that countrie appertaining to the crowne of England, but as then rebelling against the same: the said lord Henry in the meane time contrarie to his oth and fidelitie, and long before the time limited vnto him was expired: with all his fautors and vnaders. feerctly entred into the Realme, bearing and protesting before the face of the people, that his comming into the realme in the absence of the king, was for none other cause, but that he might in humble sort with the loue and fauour of the king, and all the Lords spirituall and temporall, haue and enioy his lawfull inheritance descending vnto him of right after the death of his father: which thing as it pleased all men, so cried they: Blessed is hee that commeth in the name of the Lord. But how this blessing afterward turned into cursing, shall appeare in that which followeth: and also ye shall vnderstand his horrible and wicked conspiracie against his Soueraigne Lord king Richard, and diuers other Lords as well spirituall as temporall, besides that his manifest periurie shall well bee knowne, and that he remaineth not only forsworne and periured, but also excommunicate, for that hee conspired against his Soueraigne lord our king. Wherefore we pronounce him by these presents, as well periured as excommunicate.

King Henrie periured.

3. Thirdly, we depose, &c. against the lord Henrie, that hee the said lord Henrie, immediatlie after his entrie into England, by craftie and subtile policie, caused to bee proclaimed openly throughout the Realme, that no tenths of the Clergie, fifteenes of the people, scaling vp of cloth, diminution of wooll, impost of kine, nor other extortions or exactions whatsoeuer, should hereafter be required or exacted: hoping by this meanes to purchase vnto him the loue and fauour of the prelates spirituall, the Lords temporall, the Merchants, and comminaltie of the whole Realme. After this, hee take by force the kings castles and fortresses, spoiled and deuoured his goods whereseuer he found it, crying hanocke, hanocke. The kings maiesties subiects as well spirituall as temporall he spoiled and robbed, some he take captiue and imprisoned them, and some he slew and put to miserable death, wherevpon many were bishops, prelates, priests and religious men. Whereby it is manifest, that the said lord Henrie is not only periured, in promising and swearing that there should bee hereafter no more exactions, paiments, or extortions within the Realme, but also excommunicate for the violence and iniurie done to prelats and priests. Wherefore by these presents we pronounce him, as afore, as well periured as excommunicate.

King Henrie charged with breach of oth.

4. Fourthly, we depose, &c. against the said lord Henry, that he hearing of the kings returne from Ireland into Wales, rose vp against his Soueraigne Lord the king with many thousands of armed men, marching forward with all his power towards the castle of Flint in Wales, there he take the king and held him prisoner, and so led him captiue as a traitor vnto Lecester: from thence hee took his iourney towards London, misusing the king by the way both by and his, with many iniuries and opprobrious contumelies and scoffes. And in the end committed him to the tower of London, and held a parliament, the king being absent and in prison; wherein for feare of death, hee compelled the king to yeeld and resigne vnto him all his right and title of the kingdome and crowne of England. After which resignation being made, the said Lord Henrie standing vp in the Parliament house, stoutly and proudlie before them all, said and affirmed: that the kingdome of England and crowne of the same, with all thereunto belonging, did pertaine vnto him at that present, as of verie right, and to none other: for that the said king Richard by his owne deed, was deprined for euer, of all the right, title and interest that euer he had, hath, or may haue in y same. And thus at length by right and wrong, hee exalted himselfe vnto the throne of the kingdome: since which time, our common weale neuer florished nor prospered, but altogether hath bin void of vertue, for that the spiritualtie was so oppressed, exercise and warlike practises haue not beene maintained, charitie is waxed cold, and couetousnesse and miserie hath taken place, and finallie mercie is taken away and vengeance supplieth the roome. Thereby it doth appeare (as before is said) that the said Lord Henrie is not onelie periured and false by vsurping the kingdome and dominion belonging to another, but also excommunicate for the apprehending, imiuill imprisoning, and depriuing his Soueraigne Lord the king of his roiall crowne and dignitie. Wherefore, as in the articles before, we pronounce the said lord Henrie to be excommunicate.

5. Fiftly, wee depose, &c. against the said lord Henrie, that he the same lord Henry, with the rest of his fauourers and complices, heaping mischiefe vpon mischiefe, haue committed and brought to passe a most wicked and mischieuous fact, yea, such as hath not been heard of at any time before. For after that they had taken and imprisoned the king, and deposed him by open iniury against all humane nature, yet not content with this, they brought him to Pomfret castle, and there imprisoned him, where vp. daies and nights they vexed him with continuall hunger, thirst, and cold, and finallie bereft him of life, with such a kind of death as neuer before that time was known in England, but by Gods prouidence it is come to light. Who euer heard of such a deede, or who euer saw the like of him? Wherefore O England arise, stand vp, auenge the cause, the death and iniurie of thy king and prince: which if thou doe not, take this for certaintie, that the righteous God will destroy the by strange inuasions and forraine power, and auenge himselfe on thee for this so horrible an act. Thereby doth appeare, not only his periury, but also his excommunication most execrable: so that, as before, we pronounce the said Henrie not onely periured, but also excommunicate.

King Henrie charged with murdering of his prince.

6. Sixtly, wee depose, &c. against the said lord Henrie, that after hee had attained to the crowne and scepter of the kingdome, he caused forthwith to bee apprehended diuers lords spirituall, Bishops, Abbats, Priors and religious men of all orders, whom he arrested, imprisoned and bound, and against all order brought them before the secular iudges to be examined: not sparing the bishops, whose dioces were annointed with sacred oile, nor priests, nor religious men, but commanded them to be condemned, hanged and beheaded by the temporall law and iudgement, notwithstanding the priuiledge of the Church, and holy orders, which hee ought to haue reuerenced and worshipped if he had been a true and lawfull king: for the first and chiefest oth in the coronation of a lawfull king is, to defend and keepe inuiolate the liberties and rights of the church, and not to deliuer any priest or religious man into the hands of the secular power, except for heresie onely, and that after his degradation according to the order of the Church. Contrarie vnto all this hath he done; so that it is manifest by this article as afore in the rest, that he is both periured and excommunicate.

K. Henrie charged with the oders of the Church.

Three causes declared.

7. Seuenthly, we depose, &c. against the said lord Henry, that not onely he caused to be put to death the lords spirituall and other religious men, but also diuers of the lords temporall and nobilitie of the Realme, and chiefly those that studied for the preseruation of the common weale, not ceasing as yet, to continue his mischieuous enterprise, if by Gods prouidence it bee not preuented, and that with speed: Amongst all other of the nobilitie, these first hee put to death: the earle of Salisburie, the earle of Huntington, the earle of Gloucester, the lord Roger Clarendon the kings brother, with diuers other knights and chuiers: and afterwards, the Lord Thomas Percie earle of Worcester, and the lord Henrie Percie sonne and heire to the earle of Northumberland; the which lord Henrie hee not onely slew, but to the vttermost of his power againe and againe he caused him to be slaine. For after that he was once put to death, and deliuered to the lord of Furnuale to be buried (who committed his bodie to holy sepulture, with as much honour as might bee, commending his soule to almightie God, with the suffrages of the blessed masse and other prayers) the said lord Henrie most like a cruell beast still thirsting his bloud, caused his bodie to be exhumate and brought forth againe, and to be reposed betweene two millstones in the towne of Shrowsburie, there to be kept with armed men: And afterwards to bee beheaded and quartered, commanding his head and quarters to be carried vnto diuers cities of the kingdome. Wherefore for so detestable a fact neuer heard of in any age before, we pronounce him, as in the former articles, excommunicate.

King Henrie charged with tyrannie.

Earle of Westmerland against the archbishop.

Falsehood in fellowship.

8. Eightlily, wee depose, &c. against the said lord Henry, for that after his attaining to the crowne, he willingly ratified, allowed, and approued a most wicked statute set forth and renued in the parliament holden at Winchester. The which statute is directly against the Church of Rome, the power, and principalitie thereof giuen by our lord Iesus Christ and vnto blessed S. Peter and his successors bishops of Rome: vnto whom belongeth by full authoritie the free disposing of all spirituall promotions as well superiour as inferiour: which wicked statute, is the cause of many mischiefes, vid. of simony, periurie, adulterie, incest, murder, and disobedience, for that many bishops, abbats, priors and prelates (twee will not say by vertue, but rather by errour of this statute) haue bestowed the benefices vacant vpon young men, rude and vnworthie persons, which haue compacted with them for the same, so that scarce no one prelate is found that hath not couenanted with the partie promoted for the like pearcele, or at the least, the third part of the said benefice to bestowed. And by this meanes the said statute is the destruction of the right of S. Peter, the Church of Rome and England, the clergie and Vniuersities, the the maintenance of wars, and the whole common wealth, &c.

9. Ninthly, we say and depose, &c. against the said Lord Henrie, that after he had vsurpingly taken vpon him the gouernment of the Realme: England neuer flourished since, nor prospered, by reason of his continuall exactions of monie and oppressions, yeerely of the clergie and comminaltie: neither is it knowne how this monie so extorted is bestowed, when as neither his souldiers, nor his Gentlemen are payed as yet their wages and fees for their charges and wonderfull toile and labor, neither yet the poore countrie people are satisfied for the victuall taken of them: And neuertheless, the miserable clergie, and more miserable communaltie, are forced still to pay, by menaces and sharpe threatnings. Notwithstanding he sware when hee first vsurped the crowne, that hereafter there should be no such exactions nor vexations, neither of the clergie nor laitie. Wherefore, as afore, wee pronounce him periured, &c.

10. In the tenth and last article, wee depose, say, and openlie protest by these presents, for our selues, and all our assistants in the cause of the Church of Rome and England, and in the cause of king Richard his heires, the clergie, and comminaltie of the whole Realme: that neither our intention is, was, nor shall be, in word nor deed to offend any state, either of the prelates spirituall, Lords temporall, nor commons of the realme: but rather for seeking the perdition and destruction of this realme to approch, wee haue here brought before you certaine articles concerning the destruction of the same, to be circumspectly considered of the whole assemblie, as well of the lords spirituall as temporall, and the faithfull commons of England: beseeching you all in the bowels of Iesus Christ the righteous iudge, and for the merits of our blessed Ladie the mother of God, and of S. George our defender, vnder whose displayed banner we wish to liue and die, and vnder paine of damnation, that yee will be fauourable to vs, and to our causes which are there in number. Whereof the first is, that we exalt vnto the kingdome the true and lawfull heire, and him a crowne in kingly throne with the diademe of England. And secondlie, that we reuoke the Welchmen, the Irishmen, and all other our enemies vnto perpetuall peace and amitie. Thirdly and finally, that we deliuer and make free our native countrie from all exactions, extortions, and vniust paiments: Beseeching our Lord Iesus Christ to grant his blessing, the remission of their sinnes, and life euerlasting to all that assist vs to their power in this godly and meritorious worke: and vnto all those that are against vs, we threaten the curse of almightie God by the authoritie committed vnto vs by Christ and his holy Church, and by these presents wee pronounce them excommunicate.

These articles being seene and read, much concourse of people daily resorted more and more to the archbishop. The earle of Westmerland being then not farre off, with Iohn the kings sonne (hearing of this) mustred his souldiers with all the power he was able to make, and bent toward the archbishop: but seeing his part too weake to encounter with him, vseth practise of policie, where strength would not serue. And first comming to him vnder colour of friendship disembled, laboureth to seeke out the causes of that great stir. To whom the archbishop againe answering, no hurt to bee entended thereby, but profit rather to the king and common wealth, and maintenance of publike peace: but forsomuch as he stood in great feare, and danger of the king, he was therefore compelled so to doe. And withall shewed vnto him the contents of the articles aforesaid, which when the earle had read, setting a faire face vpon it, seemed highly to commend the purpose and doings of the bishop: promising moreouer, that he would helpe alls forward in that quarrell, to the vttermost of his power. And required vpon the same, a day to be set, when they with equall number of men, might mete together, in some place appointed to haue further talke of the matter. The archbishop easily perswaded, was content, although much against the counsell of the earle Marshall, and came. Where the articles being openlie published and read, the earle of Westmerland with his companie, pretended well to like vpon the same, and to ioyne their assents together. Which done, he exhorted the archbishop, that forsomuch as his garrison had been now long in armour, and from home, he would therefore discharge the needlesse multitude of his souldiers, and dismisse them home to their worke and businesse, and they would together drinke and ioyne hands in the sight of the whole company. Thus they shaking hands together, the archbishop sendeth away his souldiers in peace, not knowing himselfe to bee circumuented, before he was immediatelie arrested by the hands of the aforesaid earle of Westmerland, and shortly after the king comming with his power to Pooke, was there beheaded by the Sunday in Whitson weeke, and with him also lode Thomas Mowbray Marshall, with diuers other moe, of the citie of Pooke, which had taken their parts. After whose slaughter, the king proceeded farther to persecute the earle of Northumberland, and lord Thomas Bardolph: Who then did flie to Warwicke. From thence remoued to Wales. John Badby Artificer.

IN the yere of our Lord 1409. on Sunday being the first day of March, in the afternoone: The examination following of one Iohn Badby Tailor, being a lay man, was made in a certaine house or hall within the precinct of the preaching friers in London, in an vtter cloister: vpon the crime of heresie and other articles, repugnant to the determination of the reuerend Church of Rome, before Thomas Arundell, archbishop of Canturburie and other his assistants, as the archbishop of Yorke, of London, of Winchester, of Dersord, of Norwich of Salisburie, of Bath, of Bangor, Et Menenensis Episcopi, and also Symond duke of Yorke, Thomas Welsoord, the Chancellour of England, lord de Ros, the clerke of the rolles, and a great number of other lords, both spirituall and temporall, being then at the selfe same time present: maister Morgan read the articles of his opinions to the hearers, according as it is contained in the instrument read by the foresaid maister Morgan, the tenor whereof followeth, and in effect is such.

John Badby martyr. Ex Regist. Arundel.

The articles read.

In the name of God, Amen: We it manifest to all men by this present publike instrument, that in the yere of the incarnation of our Lord, according to the course and computation of the Church of England, otherwise in the yere 1409. in the second indiction, in the third yere of the popedome of the most holy father in Christ and Lord, lord Gregorie xi. by the diuine permission pope, the second day of Ianuarie, in the chapell Cantarie of Saint Thomas martyr, nigh vnto the Cathedrall Church of Worcester, being situate in the said dioces, in the presence of me the publike notarie, and of the witnesses vnderwritten: the foresaid Iohn Badby a layman, of the said dioces of Worcester, appearing personally, before the reuerend father in Christ and Lord, lord Thomas, by the grace of God bishop of Worcester, sitting in the said Chapell for diuers iudge, was detected of and vpon the crime of heresie, being heretically taught, and openly maintained by the foresaid Iohn Badby. That is, that the sacrament of the bodie of Christ, consecrated by the priest vpon the altar, is not the true bodie of Christ, by the vertue of the words of the Sacrament. But that after the sacramentall words spoken by the priest to make the bodie of Christ: the materiall bread doth remaine vpon the altar as in the beginning, neither is it turned into the very bodie of Christ after the Sacramentall words spoken of the priest. Which Iohn Badby, being examined, and diligently demanded by the foresaid reuerend father concerning the premisses, in the end did answere: that it was impossible that any priest should make the bodie of Christ, and that he beleeued firmely that no priest could make the body of Christ by such words sacramentally spoken in such sort. And also he said perpetuelly that hee would neuer while hee liued beleeue, that any priest could make the bodie of Christ sacramentally, vnlesse that first hee saw manifestlie the like bodie of Christ to bee handled in the hands of the priest vpon the altar, in his corporall forme. And furthermore he said that Iohn Baker of Bikkot had so much power and authoritie to make the like bodie of Christ, as any priest had. Moreouer he said, that when Christ sat at supper with his disciples; hee had not his body in his hand, to the intent to distribute it to his disciples: and he said expreslie, that he did not this thing. And also he spake many other words teaching and fortifying the heresie in the same place, both grieuous, and also out of order, and horrible to the eares of the hearers, sounding against the Catholike faith.

The sacrament of Christs body.

Vpon which occasion, the same reuerend father admonished and requested the said Iohn Badby oftentimes, and verie instantly to charitie: forsomuch as he would willingly that he should haue forsaken such heresie and opinion, holden, taught and maintained by him, in such sort against the Sacrament, to renounce, and vtterlie abiure them, and to beleeue other things which the holy mother the Church doth beleeue. And he informed the said Iohn on that behalfe both gentlie, and also laudably. Yet the said Iohn Badby, although he were admonished and requested both often and instantly by the said reuerend father: said and answered expreslie, that he would neuer beleeue otherwise then before he had said, taught, and answered. Wherevpon, the foresaid reuerend father bishop of

Worcester

Worcester, stirring, vnderstanding, and perceiuing the foresaid John Badby to maintaine and fortifie the said heresie, being stubborne, and proceeding in the same stubbornesse: pronounced the said John to be before this time conuicted of such an heresie, and that he hath so, and is an heretecke, and in the end disclosed it in these words.

In the name of God, Amen. We Thomas bishop of Worcester, doe accuse thee John Badby, being a lay man of our diocese, of and vpon the crime of heresie before vs, sitting for chiefe iudge, being oftentimes confessed and conuicted of and vpon that, that thou hast taught, and openly affirmed, as hitherto thou dost teach, boldly affirme, & defend that the sacrament of the bodie of Christ, consecrated vpon the altar by the priest, is not the true body of Christ: But after the sacramentall words to make the body of Christ by vertue of the said sacramentall words pronounced, to haue bin in the crime of heresie and we doe pronounce thee, both to haue been, and to be an heretike, and doe declare it finally by these writings.

These things were done accordingly as is aboue written and are recited in the yere, indiction, pope, doone, moneth, day and place aforesaid, being present the same time, John Sapiand place aforesaid, being present the same time, John Sapiton, prior of the Cathedrall Church of Worcester, John Dudle monke, and Hawle the surgion of the said Church, Thomas Penings of the order of the Carmelites, Thomas Fenchame of the order of the preaching Friers, William Pontefract of the order of the Hermites, being professors and masters in diuinitie, William Hailes, Quaker of London, John Shuppedely being publike Notaries, and William Wenhamme and Thomas Gerbis being knights, Richard Wich of Ledington, Thomas Wilby of Penbury, John Thrian of Pewer, being parsons of Churches, and Thomas Walsinges, the maister of Saint Thelston in Worcester, and also Henrie Baggeley, John Pennerell, Thomas Dregmorton and William Castledone esquires of the diocs of Worcester and Norwich, and many other worshipfull and honest men being witnesses and called specially to the things aforesaid.

And I John Gely Clerke, of the diocs of Bathe and Wells, and by the authoritie apostolicall, publique Notarie of the said bishop: haue in testimonie of the premisses, put my hand and seale to the examination, interrogation, inquisition, and answere of the same John Badby, and to his obstinacies: and also to the proceedings of all and singuler other doings as is aforesaid, which against him before the said bishop were handled and done, in the yere, indiction, popedome, moneth, day, and place aforesaid, which with the forenamed witnesses was personally present: and the same euen as I heard them and saw them to be done (being occupied with other matters) caused them to bee written and published, and into this publike forme haue compiled the same. I the foresaid Notarie am also privie, vnto the words and examinations inserted betweene seuen or eight lines of the beginning of this instrument, which lines I also the foresaid notarie doe approue and make good.

And I Walter London Clerke, of the diocs of Worcester, and by the authoritie apostolicall, publik Notarie: to all and singuler the foresaid things as afore by the foresaid Notarie is recited, and in the yere, indiction, popedome, moneth, day, and place aforesaid were handled and done, being with other the fore recited witnesses personally present: and to all and euery of the same (as I saw and heard them to bee done, being thereunto faithfully desired and required:) In testimonie of the premisses, haue signed and subscribed according to the accustomed maniere. Hacc ex Reg. Cant.

And when the articles in the foresaid instrument contained, were by the archbishop of Canturbury publikely and vulgarly read and expounded: the publikely confessed and affirmed, that he had both said and maintained the same. And then the archbishop to conuince the constant purpose of the said John Badby, commanded the same articles againe to bee read, often inculcating him both by words and examples, informing and exhorting him that thereby he might be brought the sooner to the religion that he was of. And furthermore, the said archbishop said and affirmed there openly to the same John, that he would (if he would liue according to the doctrine of Christ) gage his seale for him at the vngoeuent day. And after that againe he caused the foresaid articles in the said instrument expressed to be read by the foresaid Philip Morgan, and the said archbishop himselfe expounded the same in English as before: vnto which John Badby answered. As touching the first article concerning the body of Christ, he expressly said, that after the consecration at the altar, there remaineth material bread, and the same bread which was before: notwithstanding (said he) it is a signe or sacrament of the liuing God.

Also, when the second article was expounded vnto him, that it is impossible for any priest, &c. To this article hee answered and said, that it could not sinke into the mind that the words are to be taken as they literally lie, vnlesse hee should deny the incarnation of Christ.

Also being examined of the third article concerning Jacke Raker, he said that if Jacke Raker were a man of good liuing, and did loue and feare God, that hee hath as much power to do, as hath the priest: and said further, that he hath heard it spoken of some doctors of diuinitie, that if he should receiue a pix full consecrated bread, he were worthie to be damned, and were damned in so doing.

Furthermore he said that he would beleeue the omnipotent God in trinity: and said moreouer, that if euery host being consecrated at the altar were the Lords body, that then there be 20000. gods in England. But he beleeued, he said) in one God omnipotent, which thing the foresaid archb. of Cant. denied not.

And when the other conclusion was expounded: That Christ sitting with his Disciples at supper, &c. To this he answered and said, that he would greatly maruell that any man had a loafe of bread, and should break the same and giue to euery man a mouthfull, that the same loafe should afterwards be whole.

When all these things were thus finished, and that all the said conclusions were often read in the vulgar tongue: the foresaid archb. demanded of him, whether he would renounce & forsake his opinions and such like conclusions or not, and adhere to the doctrine of Christ and Catholike faith? He answered, that according to that he had said before, he would adhere and stand to those words, which before he had made answere vnto. Then the archb. oftentimes required the said John in the bowels of Jesu Christ that hee would forsake those opinions and conclusions, and that henceforth he would cleaue to the christian faith: which thing to doe in the audience of all the lords and others that were present, he expressly denied and refused.

After all this, when the foresaid archbishop of Cant. and the bishop of London had consulted together, to what safe keeping the said John Badby (vntill the Wednesday next) might be committed: it was concluded, that he should be put in a certaine chamber or safe house within the mansion of the friars preachers, and so he was: and then the archbishop of Canturburie said, that he himselfe would keepe the key thereof, in the meane time. And when the foresaid Wednesday was expired, being the 15. day of March, and that the foresaid archbishop of Canturbury, with his fellow brethren and suffragans were assembled in the Church of Saint Paul in London: the archbishop of Canturbury taking the Episcopall seate, called vnto him the archbishop of Yorke, Richard London, Henry Winchester, Robert Chichester, Alexander Norwich, and the noble prince Edmund the duke of Yorke, Earle of Westmerland, Thomas Beaufort knight, Lord Chancellour of England, and the lord Beamond with other noble men as well spirituall as temporall, that stode and sate by, whom to name it would be long: Before whom the said John Badby was called personally to answer vnto the Articles premised in the foresaid instrument. Who then hee came personally before them, the articles were read by the official of the court of Canturburie, and by the archbishop (in the bulgar tongue) expounded, publikely and expressly: and the same articles, as he had before spoken and deposed, he still held and defended, and said, that whilest he liued, he would neuer retract the same. And furthermore, he said specially to be noted, that the lord duke of Yorke personallie there present, as is aforesaid, and euery man else for the time being; is of more estimation and reputation, then the Sacrament of the altar, by the priest in due forme consecrated. And whilest they were thus in his examination, the archb. considering and weighing that he would in no wise be altered, and seeing moreouer his countenance stout and heart confirmed, so that he began to perswade other as it appeared in the same: these things considered, the archpriest then see saw that by his allurements it was not in his power, neither by exhortations, reasons, nor arguments, to bring the said John Badby from his constant truth to his Catholike faith (executing and doing the office of his great master) proceeded to confirme and ratifie the former sentence giuen before by the bishop of Worcester against the said John Badby, pronouncing him for an open and publike heretike. And thus shaking their hands of him, they deliuered him to the secular power: and desired the said temporall lords, then and there present very instantlie, that they would not put the same John Badby to death for that his offence, but deliuer him to bee punished or put to death, in the presence of all the lords aboue recited.

These things thus done and concluded by the bishops in the forenoone: on the afternoone, the kings writ was not farre behind. By the force whereof, John Badby still persevering in his constancie vnto the death, was brought into Smithfield, and there being put in an emptie barrell, was bound with iron chaines fastened to a stake, hauing dry wood put about him.

And as he was thus standing in the pipe or tunne (for as yet Perilous Bull was not in vre among the bishops) it happened that the prince the kings eldest sonne, was there present. Who shewing some part of the god Samaritane, began to endeuour and assay how to saue the life of him, whom the hypocriticall Leuits and Pharisies sought to put to death. He admitted and counselled him, that hauing respect vnto himselfe, he should sodenly withdraw himselfe out of so dangerous Labyrinths of opinions, adding oftentimes these and the like wordes, the which might haue damned any mans soule: also

Also Courtney at that time Chancellor of Oxford, preached vnto him, and exhorted him of the faith of holy Church.

In this meane season, the Prior of S. Bartelmewes in Smithfield, brought with all solemnitie the Sacrament of Gods body, with twelue torches before, and so shewed the Sacrament to the poore man being at the stake. And then they demanding of him how he beleeued in it, hee answered: that hee knew well it was hallowed bread, and not Gods bodie. And then was the tunne put ouer him, and fire put vnto him. And when he felt the fire, he cried, mercy (calling belike vpon the Lord) and so the Prince immediately commanded to take away the tunne, and quench the fire. The Prince, his commandement being done, asked him if hee would forsake heresie to take him to the faith of holy Church: which thing if hee would doe, he should haue goods enough, promising also vnto him a yeerely stipend out of the kings treasury, so much as should suffice his contentation.

But this valiant champion of Christ, neglecting the Princes faire words, as also contemning all mens deuices: refused the offer of worldy promises, no doubt, but being more vehemently inflamed with the spirit of God then with any earthly desire. Wherefore, when as yet he continued vnmoueable in his former minde, the prince commanded him straight to bee put againe into the pipe or tunne, and that hee should not afterward looke for any grace or saiuour. But as he could be allured by no rewards, euen so was he nothing at all abashed at their torments, but as a valiant champion of Christ, hee persevered inuincible to the end. Not without a great and most cruell battaile, but with much more greater triumph of victorie: the spirit of Christ hauing alwaies the vpper hand in his members, maugre the furie, rage, and power of the whole world. For the manifestation of which torment, we haue here set forth the picture of his burning, in such maniere as it was done.

¶ The description of the horrible burning of Iohn Badby, and how he was vsed at his death.

This godly martyr John Badby hauing thus consummate his testimony and martyrdome in fire, the persecuting bishops yet not herewith contented, and thinking themselues as yet either not strong enough, or else not sharpe enough against the pore innocent flocke of Christ: to make all things sure and substantiall on their side, in such sort, as this doctrine of the Gospell now springing, should be suppressed for euer: laid their conspiring heades together, and hauing now a king for their owne purpose, ready to serue their turne in all points (during the time of the same parliament aboue recited) yet continuing) the foresaid bishops and clergy of the realme, exhibited a bill vnto the kings maiestie: subtilly declaring, what quiet & stay hath been maintained within this realme by his most noble progenitors, who alwaies defended the ancient rites and customes of the church, & enriched the same with large gifts, to y honor of God and the realme: and contrariwise, what trouble and disquietnesse was now risen by diuers (as they termed them) wicked and peruerse men, teaching and preaching openly and priuily, a certaine new, wicked, and heretical kind of doctrine, contrary to the catholike faith and determination of holy church. Whereupon the king alwaies oppressed with blinde ignorance, by the crastie meanes and subtill pretences of the clergie, granted in the said parliament (by consent of the nobilitie assembled) a statute to be obserued called Ex officio, as followeth.

The Statute Ex officio.

That is to say, that no man within this realme, or other the kings maisties dominions, presume to take vpō him to preach priuily or apertly, without speciall licence first obtained of the ordinary of the same place (curats in their owne parish churches, and persons heretofore priuiledged, and others admitted by the canon law, only excepted.) Nor that any hereafter doe preach, maintaine, teach, informe openly or in secret, or make or write any booke contrary to the catholike faith, and determination of the holy church. Nor that any hereafter, make any conuenicles or assemblies, or keepe and exercise any maner of schooles touching this sect, wicked doctrine and opinion. And further, that no man hereafter shall by any meanes, fauor any such preacher, any such maker of vnlawfull assemblies, or any such booke maker or writer, and finally any such teacher, informer, or stirrer vp of the people. And that all and singuler persons hauing any the said bookes, writings, or schedules containing the said wicked doctrines and opinions, shall within forty daies after this present proclamation and statute, really and effectually deliuer, or cause to be deliuered, all and singuler the said bookes and writings, vnto the Ordinarie of the same place. And if it shall happen any person or persons, of what kinde, state, or condition soeuer he or they be, to doe or attempt any maner of thing contrary to this present proclamation and statute, or not to deliuer the same bookes in forme aforesaid: That then the Ordinary of the same place in his own diocesse by authority of the said proclamation and statute, shall cause to be arrested and detained vnder safe custody, the said person or persons in this case defamed and euidently suspected, or any of them, vntill he or they so offending haue by order of law purged him or themselues as touching the articles laid to his or their charge in this behalfe: or vntillhe or they haue denied and recanted (according to the lawes ecclesiastical) the said wicked sect, preachings, teachings, and heretical and erroneous opinions. And that the said Ordinarie by himselfe or his Commissaries proceed openly and iudicially to all the effect of law against the said persons so arrested and remaining vnder safe custodie, and that hee end and determine the matter within three monethes after the said arrest, (all delayes and excuses set apart) according to the order and custome of the Canon law. And if any person, in any cause aboue mentioned, shall be lawfully conuicted before the Ordinarie of the dieces or his commissaries: that then the said Ordinarie, may lawfully cause the said person to conuicted (according to the manner and qualitie of his fact) to be laid in any of his owne prisons, and there to be kept so long as to his discretion shall be thought expedient.

And further, the said Ordinary (except in cases by the which according to the Canon law, the partie offending ought to be deliuered to the secular power) shall charge the said person with such a fine of money to be paid vnto the kings maiestie, as he shall thinke competent for the manner and qualitie of his offence. And the said diocesan shall be bound to giue notice of the said fine, into the kings maiesties Exchequer, by his letters patent vnder his seale: to the intent that the said fine may be leuied to the kings maiesties vse of the goods of the person so conuict.

And further, if any person within this realme and other the kings maiesties dominion, shall be committed before the Ordinarie of the place, or his Commissaries, of the said wicked preachings, doctrines, opinions, schooles, and heretical and erroneous informations or any of them: and will refuse to abiure and recant the said wiked sect, preachings, teachings, opinions, schooles and informations: or if after his abiuration once made, the relapse be pronounced against him by the diocesan of the place, or his Commissaries (for so by the Canon law he ought to be left to the secular power, vpon credit giuen to the Ordinarie or his Commissaries) that then the sheriffe of the same countie, the maior, sheriffes, or sheriffe, or the maior or bayliffes of the same citie, village, or borough of the same countie, and neerest inhabiting to the said Ordinary or his said Cõmissaries, shall personally be present, as oft as they shall be required to confer with the said Ordinarie or his Commissaries in giuing sentence against the said persons offending, or any of them. And after the said sentence so pronounced, shall take vnto them the said persons so offending, and any of them, and cause them openly to be burned in the sight of all the people: to the intent that this kind of punishment may be a terror vnto others, that the like wicked doctrines and heretical opinions, or the authors and fauourers therof be no more maintained within this realme and dominions, to the great hurt (which God forbid) of christian religion, and the seruice of God. In which all and singuler the premisses, concerning the statute aforesaid: let the sheriffes, maiors, and bayliffes of the said countries, cities, villages and boroughes, be attendant, aiding, and fauouring the said Ordinaries and their Commissaries.

At Bloedie Rauine.

By this bloodie statute so feuerely and sharply enacted against these simple men, here shall thou (gentle reader) arme to slay with thy selfe, and to consider the nature and condition of this present world, how it hath been set and bent euer from the beginning, by all might, counsell, and wiles possible, to striue against the wiles of God and to ouerthrow that which he will haue set vp. And although the world may see by infinite stories and examples, that it is but in vaine to striue against him: yet such is the nature of this world (all set in malignitie) that it will not cease still to be like it selfe.

The like law and statute in the time of Diocletian and Maximinus was attempted, as before appeareth, pag. 70. and for more strength were written also in tables of brasse, to the intent that the name of Christ should vtterly be extincted for euer. And yet the name of Christ remaineth, where that brasen law remained not three yeres. The which law written then in brasse, although it differ in manner and forme from this our statute Ex officio, yet to the same end and cruelnesse, to spill the blood of Saints, there is no difference betweene the one and the other. Neither is there any diuersitie touching y first originall deer and worker of them both. For the same Satan, who then wrought his vttermost against Christ, before he was bound vp: the same also now after his losing out, doth what he can, though not after the same way, yet to the same intent. For then with outward violence as an open enemie, he did what he could: so now by a more couert way, vnder the title of the church he tempteth the church of Christ, vsing a more subtill way to beguile, vnder gay pretended titles: but no lesse pernicious in the end, whereto he thereth, as well appeareth by this bloodie statute Ex officio, the sequell whereof cost afterward many a christian mans life. As in processe of story remaineth more hereafter (Christ willing) to be declared.

The law of Maximinus and the Statute Ex officio compared.

Furthermore, for the more fortification of this statute of the king aforesaid, concurreth also another constitution made much about the same time by the archbishop of Canturbury Thomas Arundell. So that no industrie nor policie of man here did lacke to set the matter forward, but specially on the bishops parts, who left no meanes vnattempted, how to subuert the right waies of the Lord.

First, in most diligent and requisit execution of the kings statute set forth: the execution whereof they did so exactly apply, that marueil it is to consider, all other lawes of kings (commonly) (be they neuer so good) to be so dil'd'y kept, and this only among all the rest so nearely followed. But herein is to be seene the diligence of the Romish prelats, which neuer let any thing to fall, that maketh for y dignitie of their estate,

Secondly, besides their vigilant care, in seeing the kings statute to be executed: No lesse industrious also were they in adding thereunto mo constitutions of their owne, as from time to time appeareth as well by other archbishops hereafter, and by pope Martine, as also by this constitution here present made by Thomas Arundell the archbishop.

But before we enter to the relation of these aforesaid constitutions of the clergie men, here commeth in more to be said and noted touching the foresaid statute Ex officio, to proue the same not only to be cruell and impious, but also to be of it selfe of no force and validitie for the burning of anie person for cause of religion: for the dispense of which statute we haue sufficient authoritie remaining as yet in the parliament rolles to be seene in her graities court of records: which here were to be debated at large, but that vpon speciall occasion we haue deferred the ample discourse thereof to the cruell persecution of the lord Cobham hereafter ensuing, as may appeare in the defence of the lord Cobham against Nicolas Harpesfield vnder the title and name of Alanus Copus. And thus referring them for the examination of this statute to the place aforesaid, let vs now returne to Thomas Arundell, and his bloodie constitutions aboue mentioned. The stile and tenour wherof, to the intent the rigour of the same may appeare to all men, I thought here vnder to adioyne, in words as followeth.

The constitution of Thomas Arundell against the followers of Gods truth.

A cruell constitution by the archbishop against the Gospellers, with thirteene articles.

THomas by the permission of God, archbishop of Canturburie, primate of all England, and legat of the see apostolicke: To all and singuler our reuerend brethren fellow bishops, and our suffragans: And to Abbats, priors, deanes of cathedrall churches, archdeacons, prouosts and canons: also to all parsons, vicars, chaplaines, and clerkes in parish churches, and to all laymen, whom and wheresoeuer, dwelling within our prouince of Canturburie, greeting: and grace to stand stronglie in the doctrine of the holy mother church. It is a manifest and plaine case, that he doth wrong and iniurie to the most excellent counsell, who so reuolteth from the things, being in the said councell once discussed and decided. And whosoeuer dare presume to dispute of the supreme or principal iudgement here in earth, in so doing incurreth the paine of sacrilege, according to the authoritie of ciuill wisedome and manifest tradition of humane law. Much more then they who trusting to their owne wits, are so bold to violate and with contrarie doctrine to ouerthrow, and in word and deed to contemne the precepts of lawes and canons, rightly made and proceeding from the mouth of the Creator and power of eternall life and death: bearing the name and person, not of pure man, but of true God here in earth: which also haue been obserued hitherto, of the holy fathers our predecessors, vnto the glorious effusion of their blood, and by humane sprinkling out of their braines: are worthie of greater punishment, deseruing quickly to be cut off, as rotten members, from the bodie of the church militant. For such ought to consider, what is in the old Testament written: Moses and Aaron among his priests, that is, were chiefe heads amongst them. And in the new Testament among the apostles there was a certaine difference: And though they were all apostles, yet was it granted of the Lord to Peter, that he should beare preeminence aboue the other apostles: And all the apostles themselues would the same, that he should be the chiefetaine ouer all the rest. And being called Cephas, that is, head, should be as a prince ouer the apostles. Vnto whom it was said: Thou being once conuerted, confirme thy brethren: as though he would say, If there happen any doubt among them, or if any of them chance to erre and stray out of the way of faith, of iust liuing, or right conuersation; do thou confirme and reduce him in the right way againe. Which thing no doubt the Lord would neuer haue said vnto him, if he had not so minded, that the rest should be obedient vnto him. And yet all this notwithstanding, we know and daily proue, that we are wont to speake, how the old Sophister, the enemie of mankind, (foreseeing and fearing lest the sound doctrine of the Church determined from ancient times by the holy forefathers; should withstand his malices, if it might keepe the people of God in vnitie of faith vnder one head of the Church) doth therefore endeuour by all meanes possible, to entripe the said doctrine, fayning vices to be vertues. And so vnder false pretences of veritie distimulated, soweth discord in catholike people, to the intent that some going one way, some another; he in the meane time may gather to himselfe a Church of the malignant, differing wickedly from the vniuersall mother holy church. In the which Satan transforming himselfe into an Angell of light, bearing a liuing and deceitfull ballance in his hand, pretendeth great righteousnesse, in contrarying the ancient doctrine of the holy mother church, and refuting the traditions of the same determined and appointed by holy fathers: perswading men (by fained forgeries) the same to be naught, and so inducing other new kinds of doctrine, leading to more godnesse, as he by his lying perswasions pretendeth, although he in verie truth Blasphemy, not of pure man, but of true God.

He meaneth Thomas Becket his predecessor, who had his braines beat out in the time of king Henrie the second.

Scripture cleerly applied. This geare hangeth together like Gimmaes lips.

Marke well the popes humilitie. An argument far fet that true doctrine consisteth in making one head of the Church.

truth neither willeth nor minideth any godnesse, but rather that he may sow schismes, whereby diuers opinions and contrary to themselues being raised in the church, faith thereby may be diminished, & also the reuerend holy mysteries through the same contention of words may be prophaned with Pagans, Iewes, and other infidels, and wicked miscreants. And so that figure in the Apoc. 6. is well verified, speaking of him that sate on the blacke horse, bearing a paire of ballance in his hand, by the which heretickes are vnderstood. Who at the first appearance like to weights of a ballance, make as though they would set forth right and iust things, to allure the hearts of the hearers. But afterward appeareth the blacke horse, that is to say, their intention, full of cursed speaking. For they vnder a diuers shew and colour of a iust ballance, with the taste of a blacke horse sprinkling abroad heresies and errours, doe strike. And being poisoned themselues, vnder colour of good, raise vp infinite slanders, and by certaine persons fit to doe mischiefe, doe publish abroad as it were the sugred taste of honie mixt with poison, thereby the sooner to be taken: working and causing through their sleight and subtilties, that errors should be taken for veritie, wickednesse for holinesse, and for the true will of Christ: Yea and moreouer the foresaid persons thus picked out, doe preach before they be sent, and presume to sow the seede, before the seede discretly be separate from the chaffe. Who not pondering the constitutions and decrees of the canons, prouided for the same purpose against such pestilent sowers, doe preferre sacrifice Diabolicall (so to terme it) before obedience to be giuen to the holy church militant.

We therefore considering & waighing, that errors which is not resisted, seemeth to be allowed, and that hee openeth his bosome to wide, which resisteth not the viper thinking there to thrust her venome: And willing moreouer to shake off the dust from our feete, and to flee to the bosome of our holy mother church, whereby one vniforme holy doctrine may be sowen and planted in the church of God, (namely in this our prouince of Canturburie) so much as in vs doth lie, to the increase of faith & seruice of God, first rooting out the cuill weeds and offendicles which by the meanes of peruerse preaching, mad doctrine, haue sprung vp hitherto, and are like more hereafter to grow: purposing by some conuenient way with all diligence possible to withstand them in time, and to prouide for the perill of soules, which we see to rise vnder pretence of the premisses: also to remoue all such obstacles, by which the said our purpose may be stopped, by the aduice and assent of all our Suffragans and other Prelates, being present in this our conuocation of the clergy, as also of the procuratours of them that be absent: and at the instant petition of the procurators of the whole clergie within this our prouince of Canturburie, for the more fortification of the common law in this part, adding thereunto punishment and penalties condigne as he here vnder written, we will and command, ordaine and decree:

That no maner of person secular or regular, being authorised to preach by the lawes now prescribed, or licensed by speciall priuiledge: shall take vpon him the office of preaching the word of God, or by any meanes preach vnto the clergie or laitie, either within the church or without, in English, except he first present himselfe, and be examined of the Ordinarie of the place, where he preacheth. And so being found a fit person, as well in maners as knowledge, he shall be sent of by the said Ordinarie, to some one church or more as shall be thought expedient by the said Ordinary, according to the qualitie of the person. Nor any person aforesaid shall presume to preach, except first he giue faithfull signification in due forme of his sending and authority, that is: That he that is authorised, doe come in forme appointed him in that behalfe: & those that affirme they come by speciall priuiledge, doe shew their priuiledge vnto the Parson or Vicar of the place where they preach. And those that preteud themselues to be sent by the Ordinarie of the place, shall likewise shew the Ordinaries letters made vnto him for that purpose, vnder his great seale. Let vs alwaies vnderstand, the Curat (hauing the perpetuitie) to be sent of right vnto the people of his owne cure. But if any person aforesaid, shall be bidden by the Ordinarie of the place, or any other Superiour to preach, by reason of his ecclesiasticall interdict, and so shall remaine interdicted, vntill they that so admitted and suffered him to preach, haue reformed themselues, and obtained the place so interdicted, to be releeued in due forme of law, either from the Ordinarie of the place, or else his Superiour.

Moreouer, like as a good householder easeth wheat into the ground (well ordered for that purpose) thereby to get the more increase: euen so we will and command, that the preacher of Gods word, comming in forme aforesaid, preaching either vnto the clergy or laitie, according to his matter proponed; shalbe of good behauiour, sowing such seed as shall be conuenient for his auditorie. And chiefly preaching to the clergy, he shall touch the vices commonly vsed amongst them, and to the laitie he shall declare the vices commonly vsed among them, and not otherwise: But if he preach contrary to this order, then shall he be sharply punished by the Ordinary of that place, according to the quality of that offence.

Item, for as much as the part is vile, that agreeth not with the whole: we doe decree & ordaine, that no preacher aforesaid, or any other person whatsoeuer, shall otherwise teach or preach concerning the sacrament of the altar, matrimonie, confession of sinnes, or any other sacrament of the church, or article of the faith, then that already is discussed by the holy mother Church, nor shall bring any thing in doubt that is determined by the Church: nor shall to his knowledge priuily or apertly pronounce blasphemous words concerning the same, nor shall teach, preach, or obserue any sect, or kind of heresie whatsoeuer, contrary to the wholesomie doctrine of the church. He that shall wittingly and obstinately attempt the contrary, after the publication of these presents, shall incurre the sentence of excommunication ipso facto: from the which (except in point of death) he shall not be absolued, vntill he hath reformed himselfe by abiuration of his heresie, at the discretion of the Ordinary, in whose territorie he so offended, and hath receiued wholesome penitence for his offences. But if the second time he shall so offend, being lawfully conuicted, he shall be pronounced an heretike, and his goods confiscate, and apprehended, and kept by them to whom it shall appertaine. The penance before mentioned, shall be after this manner: If any man contrary to the determination of the Church, that is, in the decrees, decretals, or our constitutions prouinciall, doe openly or priuily teach or preach any kind of heresie or sect, he shall in the parish Church of the same place, where he so preached, vpon one Sunday, or other solemne day, or more, at the discretion of the Ordinarie, and as his offence is more or lesse, expressly reuoke that he so preached, taught or affirmed, euen at the time of the solemnity of the masse, when the people are most assembled, and there shall effectually and without fraud preach, and teach the verie truth determined by the Church: and further shall be punished after the qualitie of his offence, as shall be thought expedient to the discretion of the Ordinarie.

cipall, or other to whom it appertaineth, he shall be expelled, and a Catholicke, by lawfull meanes forthwith placed in his place.
And if the said Wardens, Provosts, or Masters of Colledges they shall incurre the sentence of greater excommunication:

customed in Colledges and Halles, being vacant in the said sters or Principals aforesaid, be suspected and defamed of and concerning the said conclusions or propositions, or be fauourers and defenders of such as doe therein offend: and doe not hall, &c. Besides other penalties afore mentioned, and that they incurre the said sentence of greater excommunication.

But if any man in any case of this present constitution or any other aboue expressed, doe rashly and wilfully presume to violate these our statutes in any part thereof (although there be another penalty expressly there limited) yet shall he be made altogether vnable and vnworthy by the space of three yeres after, without hope of pardon to obtain any ecclesiastical benefice within our prouince of Canturburie: and neuerthelesse according to all his demerits and the qualitie of his excesse, at the discretion of his superiour, be shall be lawfully punished.

Constit. 12.

Constit. 13. And further, that the maner of proceeding herein be not thought vncertaine: considering with our selues, that although there be a kind of equality in the crime of heresie and offending the Prince, as is auouched in diuers lawes: yet the fault is much vnlike, and to offend the diuine maiestie, requireth greater punishment, then to offend the princes Maiestie.

Constit. 13.

Easier to offend against the prince: law then against the bishops.

And where it is sufficient, (for feare of danger that might ensue by delaies) to conuince by iudgement the offender of the Princes Maiesties proceeding against him fully and wholly, with a citation sent by messenger, by letters, or edict not admitting proofe by witnesses, and sentence definitiue to be: Wee doe ordaine, will, and declare, for the easier punishment of the offenders in the premisses, and for the better reformation of the Church blinded and hurt, that all such as are defamed, openly knowen, or vehemently suspected in any of the cases aforesaid, or in any article of the catholicke faith sounding contrary to good manners, by the authority of the Ordinary of the place or other superiour, be cited personally to appeare, either by letters, publicke messenger being Clearke: or by edict openly set at that place where the said offender commonly remaineth, or in his parish Church, if he hath any certaine dwelling house. Otherwise, in the cathedrall Church of the place where he was borne, and in the parish Church of the same place where he so preached and taught: And afterwards certificate being giuen, that the citation was formally executed against the party cited being absent and neglecting his appearance, it shall be proceded against him fully and plainly without sound or shew of iudgement, and without admitting proofe by witnesses and other canonicall probations. And also after lawfull information had, the said Ordinarie (all delaies set apart) shall giue sentence, declare, and punish the said offender, according to the qualitie of his offence, and in forme aforesaid: and further, shall doe according to iustice, the absence of the offender notwithstanding.

Who would haue thought by these lawes and constitutions so substantially founded, so circumspectly prouided, so diligently executed; but that the name and memorie of this persecuted sort, should vtterly haue beene rooted vp, and neuer could haue stood? And yet such be the workes of the Lord, passing all mens admiration, all this notwithstanding so far was it off, that the number and courage of these good men was banished, that rather they multiplied daily and increased. For so I find in Registers recorded, that these foresaid persons, whom the king and the catholicke fathers did so greatly detest for heretickes, were in diuers countries of this Realme dispersed and increased; especially at London, in Lincolnshire, in Northfolke, in Herefordshire, in Shrewesburie, in Calice, and diuers other quarters mo, with whom the archbishop of Canturbury Thomas Arundell, the same time had much ado, as by his owne registers both appeare. Albeit some there were, that did thinke, many did reuolt and renounce, for danger of the law. Among whom was John Purney, which recanted at Pauls crosse, of whom more followeth (the Lord willing) to be said in the yeere 1421. Also John Edward Priest of the dioces of Lincolne, who reuoked in the greene yard at Norwich, Richard Herbert, and Emmot Millicot London, also John Becket, who recanted at London. Item, John Seppons of Lincolneshire, who was caused to reuoke at Canturburie. The articles of whom which commonly they did hold, and which they were constrained to abiure, most specially were these as follow.

John Purney. John Edward. John Becket. John Seppons blotted.

Their Articles.

Articles.

First, that the office of the holy crosse (so ordained by the whole Church) celebrated, doth containe idolatrie.

Item, they said and affirmed, that all they which doe reuerence and worship the signe of the crosse, doe commit idolatry, and are reputed as Idolaters.

Item, they said and affirmed, that the true flesh and blood of our Lord Iesus Christ, is not in the sacrament of the altar, after the words spoken by the priest truly pronounced.

Item, they said and affirmed, the sacrament of the altar to be sacramentall bread, not hauing life, but only instituted for a memoriall of Christs passion.

Item, they said and affirmed, that the body of Christ which is taken on the altar, is a figure of the bodie of Christ as long as we see the bread and wine.

Item, they said and affirmed that the decree of the prelats and clergy in the prouince of Canturburie, in their last conuocation, with the consent of the king and the nobles in the last Parliament against him that was burnt lately in the citie of London; was not sufficient to change the purpose of the said John, when the substance of materiall bread is euen as before in the sacrament of the altar it was, no change being made in the nature of bread.

Item, that any lay man may preach the Gospell in euery place, and may teach it by his owne authority, without the licence of his Ordinary.

Their articles commonly wont thus, that who so taketh vpon him the office of a Priest though he haue no cure of soules, nor licence of his Ordinarie, is bound to preach the gospell.

Item, that it is sinne, to giue any thing to the preaching Friers, to the Minorites, to the Augustines, to the Carmelites.

Item, that we ought not to offer at the funerals of the dead.

Item, that the confession of sinnes to the priest, is vnnedfull.

Item, that euery good man (though he be vnlearned) is a priest.

Item, that the infant (though he die vnbaptised) shall be saued.

Item, that neither the pope, nor the prelate, neither any Ordinarie can compell any man to sweare by any creature of God, or by the bible booke.

Item, that a lewd the bishop, the simple man, the priest, and lay man, be of like authoritie (as long as they liue well.)

Item, that no man is bound to giue bodily reuerence to any prelate.

William Thorpe.

The occasion of the confutation of Sir William Thorpe.

THus much briefely being signified by the way, touching these which haue beene forced in time of this king, to open aburation. Next commeth to our hands the worthy historie of master William Thorpe, a warrior valiant, vnder the triumphant banner of Christ, with the processe of his examinations, before the foresaid Thomas Arundell archbishop of Canturburie written by the said Thorpe, and storied by his owne pen, at the request of his friends, as by his owne words in the proces hereof may appeare. In whose examination (which seemeth first to beginne, anno 1407.) thou shalt haue good reader, both to learne and to marueil. To learne, in that thou shalt heare truth discussed and discussed, with the contrary reasons of the aduersary dissolued. To marueil, for that thou shalt behold here in this man, the marueilous force and strength of the Lords might, spirit and grace, working and fighting in his soulders, and also speaking in their mouthes, according to the word of his promise, Luke xxi. To the text of the Ieasp we haue neither added nor diminished: but as we haue receiued it, copied out, and corrected by master William Lindall (who had his owne handwriting) so we haue here sent it, and set it out abroad. Although for the more credite of the matter, I rather wished it in his owne naturall speech, wherein it was first written. Not withstanding, to put away all doubt and scruple hereon, this I thought before to premonish and testifie to the reader, touching the certainty hereof, that they be yet aliue which haue seene the selfe same copie in his owne old English, resembling the true antiquity both of the speech, and of the time: The name of whom, as for record of the same to auouch, is M. Whithead, who as he hath seene the true ancient copie in the hands of George Constantine, so hath he giuen credible relation of the same both to the printer, and to me. Furthermore, the said master Lindall (albeit he did somewhat alter and amend the English thereof, and frame it after our maner) yet not fully in all words: but that something both remaine, fauouring of the old speech of that time. What the causes were why this good man and seruant of Christ, W. Thorp did write it, and pen it out himselfe, it is sufficiently declared in his own preface, set before his booke, which here is prefixed in maner as followeth.

This history first set forth and corrected by M. Lindall, (who had this owne handwriting) and set out by M. Tindall.

The preface of William Thorpe.

The preface.

THe Lord God that knoweth all things, wote well that I am right sorowful for to write to make knowen this sentence beneath written: whereby of mine euen christian sort in high state and dignity, so great blindnesse and malice may be knowen: that they which doe presume of themselues to destroy vices, and to plant in men vertues, neither dread to offend God nor list to please him as their workes doe shew. For certes the bidding of God and his law, which in the praising of his most holy name he commanded vs to be knowen and kept of all men and women, young and old, after the cunning and power that he hath giuen to them: the prelates of this land and their ministers, with the couent of priests chiefely consenting to them, enforce them most busily to withstand and destroy the holy ordinance of God. And therethrough God is greatly wroth and moued to take hard vengeance, not only vpon them that doe the euill, but also on them that consent to these Antichrists limmes: which knowe or might knowe, their makes and falshod, and chelle them not to withstand their malice and their great pride. Neuertheless, foure things moueth me to write this sentence beneath.

Gods lawes must be knowen and followed.

Foure causes of writing this booke.

The first thing that moueth me hereto is this, that where as it was knowen to certaine friends, that I came from the prison of Shrewesburie, and as it befell indeede that I should to the prison of Canturb. then diuers friends in diuers places, spake to me full heartily and full tenderly: and commanded me then, if it so were that I should be examined before the Archbishop of Canturburie, that if I might in any wise, I should write mine appealing, and mine answering. And I promised to my special friends, that if I might I would gladly doe their biddings as I might.

The 2. cause. The second thing that moueth me to write this sentence is this: diuers seiends which haue heard that I haue been examined before the Archbishop haue come to me in prison, and consailed me busily, and coueted greatly that I should doe the same thing. And other brethren haue sent to me, and required on Gods behalfe, that I should write out and make knowne, both mine appealing and mine answering, for the profit that (as they say) vpon my knowledging may come thereof. But this they bad me, that I should be busie in all my wits, to goe as nere the sentence and the words as I could, both that were spoken to me, and that I spake: Apaunture this writing may come another time, before the Archbishop and his consaile. And of this consselling I was right glad: for in my conscience I was moued to doe this thing, and to aske hitherto the special help of God. And so then I considering the great desire of diuers friends of sundrie places, according all in one: I occupied all my minde and my wits so busilie, that through Gods grace I perceiued by their meaning and their charitable desire, some profite might come therethrough. For sothfastnesse and truethbath these conditions: where euer it is impugned, it hath a sweet smell, and thereof commeth a sweet sauour. And the more violently the enemies of sothfastnesse dispose themselues to oppresse and to withstand the trueth, the greater and the sweeter smell commeth thereof. And therefore, this heauenly smell of Gods word, will not as a smoke passe away with the winde: but it will descend and rest in some cleane soule, that shall serue thereafter. And thus some deale by this writing may be perceiued through Gods grace, how that the enemies of the trueth (standing boldly in their malice) inforce them to withstand the freedome of Christs Gospell, for which freedome Christ became man and shed his heart blod. And therefore it is great pitie and sorrow, that many men and women doe their owne wepward will, noz bulie them not to know noz to doe the pleasant will of God.

Sothfastnesse enbaseth a sweet smell behinde it.

Godly counsell giuen, if it may be followed.

The men and women that heare the truth and sothfastnesse, and heare oz knowe of this (perceiuing that is noto in the Church) ought here though, to be the more moued in all their wits, to able them to grace, and to set lesse price by themselues, that they without tarrying, forsake wilfullie and bodily all the wretchednesse of this life, since they know not how soone, noz when, noz where, noz by whom God will teach them and assay their patience. For no doubt, who that euer will line pitiously, that is, charitably in Christ Jesu, shall suffer now here in this life persecution, in one wise oz another. That is, sfwe shall be saued, it behoueth vs to imagine full bustie, the bilitie and soulenesse of sinne, and how the Lord God is displeased therefore: and so of this wilfie, of hideousnesse of sinne, it behoueth vs to busie vs in all our wits, for to abhoze and hold in our minde a great shame of sinne euer, and so then we owe to sorow heartily therefore, and euer slaing all occasion thereof. And then behoueth vs to take vpon vs sharpe penance, continuing therein, for to obtaine of the Lord forgifenesse of our foredone sinnes, and grace to abstaine vs hereafter from sinne. And but if we inforce vs to doe this wilfullie, and in convenient time, the Lord (if he will not bitterly destroy and cast vs away) will in diuers manners moue tyrants against vs: for to constraine vs violently to doe penance, which we would not doe wilfully. And trust that this doing is a speciall grace of the Lord, and a great token of life and mercy. And no doubt, who euer will not apply himselfe (as is said before) to punish himselfe wilfully, neither will suffer patiently, meekely, and gladly the rod of the Lord, howsoeuer that he will punish him: their warward wilies and their impatiencie, are into them earnest of euerlasting damnation. But because there are but few in number that doe able them thus faithfully to grace, for to sue here so simple and purely, and without gall of malice and of grudging: herefore the louers of this world hate and pursue them that they know patient, meeke, chaste, and wilfulle pore, hating and sleing all worldly banitie and fleshly lusts. For surely, their vertuous conditions are euen contrary to the maners of this world.

The cause why persecution is suffered to come.

The 3. cause. The third thing that moueth me to write this sentence is this, I thought I shall busie me in my self to doe faithfullie, that all men and women (occupying all their businesse in knowing and in keeping of Gods commandements able them so to grace, that they might vnderstand truely the trueth, and haue and vse vertue and prudence, and so deserue to be lightened from aboue with heauenly wisedome: that all their wardes and their workes may be hereby made pleasant sacrifices vnto the Lord God: and not onely for helpe of their owne soules, but also for edification of holy Church. For I doubt not, but all they that will applie them to haue this so said businesse shall profite full meikill both to friends and foes. For some enemies of the trueth, through the grace of God, shall through charitable folkes be made affonied in their conscience, and peraduenture conuerted from vices to vertues: and also, they that labour to know and to keepe faithfully the biddings of God, and to suffer patiently all aduersities, shall hereby comfort many friends.

Edification of prayer necessary to be considered.

And the fourth thing that moueth me to write this sentence is this: I know by my feddaine and vnwarned appealing and answering, that all they that will of good heart without fainting, able themselues willfully and gladly after their cunning and their power, to follow Christ patiently, trauelling busily, priuily and apertly in worke and in word, to withdraw whomsoeuer that they may from vices, planting in them (if they may) vertues, comforting them and strengthening them that stand in grace: so that therewith they be not bone vp in vaine glozie, through presumption of their wisedome, noz inflamed with any worldly prosperite, but euer meeke and patient: purposing to continue stedfastly in the will of God, suffering wilfully and gladly without any grutching whatsoeuer rod the Lord will chastise them with: that then this good Lord will not forget to comfort all such men and women in all their tribulations, and at euery point of temptation that any enemie purposed for to doe against them. To such faithfull louers specially, and patient followers of Christ, the Lord sendeth by his wisedome from aboue, then which the aduersaries of the truth, may not know noz vnderstand. But through their olde and new vnhumeneffall sinnes, those tyrants and enemies of sothfastnesse, shall be so blinded and obstinate in euill, that they shall wene themselues to doe pleasant sacrifices vnto the Lord God in their malicious and wrongfull pursuing and destroying of innocent men and womens bodies: which men and women, for their vertuous liuing, and for their true knowledging of the truth, and their patient, willfull and glad suffering of persecution for right counselle, deserue through the grace of God, to be heires of the endlesse blisse of heauen. And for the feruent desire and great loue that these men haue, as to stand in sothfastnesse and witness of it: though they be suddainely and vnwarnedly brought forth to be apposed of their aduersaries: the holy Ghoste yet that moueth and ruleth them through his charitie, will in that houre of their answering speake in them and shew his wisedome, that all their enemies shall not againsay, noz againstand, lawfully.

The assistance of God vnto faithfull them that are persecuted.

And therefore, all they that are stedfast in the faith of God, yea, which through diligent keeping of his commandements and for their patient suffering of whatsoeuer aduersitie that commeth to them, hope surely in his mercy, purposing to stand continually in perfect charitie: For those men and women, dred not so the aduersities of this life, that they will feare (after their cunning and their power) to knowledge prudently the truth of Gods word, when, where, and to whom they thinke their knowledging may profit. Yea and though therefore persecution come to them in one wise oz another, certes they patiently take it, knowing their consolation to be in heauen. It is an high reward and a special grace of God, for to haue and inioy the euerlasting inheritance of heauen, for the suffering of one persecution in so short time as is the terme of this life. For loe, this heauenly heritage and endlesse reward, is the Lord God himselfe, which is the best thing that may be. This sentence witnesseth the Lord God himselfe, whereas he said to Abraham, I am thy meed: And as the Lord said, he was and is the meed of Abraham: so he is of all other his saints. This most blessed and best meed, he grant to vs all for his holy name, that made vs of naught, and sent his only most deare woz thy sonne, our Lord Jesu Christ for to redeme vs with his most precious heart blod. Amen.

The examination of William Thorpe, penned with his owne hand.

Examination of William Thorpe, Thomas Arundell archbishop.

KNowne be it to all men, that reade oz heare this writing, that on the sunday next after the feast of S. Peter, that we call Lammasse, in the yere of our Lord 1407. I William Thorpe being in prison in the castle of Saltwood, was brought before Thomas Arundel Archbishop of Canturburie, and Chancellor then of England. And then that I came to him, he stod in a great chamber and much people about him and I him, that he sawe me, he went all into a closet, bidding all secular men that followed him to goe forth from him sone, so that no man was left then in that closet but the Archbishop himselfe and a physitian that was called Palueren, parson of S. Dunstanes in London, and other two persons vnknowne to me, which were ministers of the law. And I standing before them, by and by the Archbishop said to me. William, I know well that thou hast this twentie winters and more, trauelled about busilie in the North countrey and in other diuers countries of England, soning about false doctrine, having great businesse if that might with thine untrue teaching and frewde will, for to infect and poison all this land. But through the grace of God thou art now withstanded and brought into my ward, so that I shall now sequester thee from thine euill purpose, and let thee to enuenime the theape of my prouince. Nevertheless S. Paul saith: If it may be, as much as in be is, we ought to haue peace with all men. Therefore (William) if thou wilt now meekily and of good heart, without any feining, kneele downe and lay thy hand vpon a booke and kisse it, promising faithfully as I shall here charge thee, that thou wilt submit thee to my correction, and stand to mine ordinance, and fulfill it dearly by all Lopetering pistolers, cauing & piking trauelling preachers.

The grace of God and of my lord of Cant. be two things.

Your goddesse, and why we Gods ambassance. If it please your grace.

al thy cunning and power, thou shalt yet find me gratious vnto thee. Then said I to the archbishop: Sir, since ye deem me an heretike, and out of beleeue, will ye giue me here audience to tell my beleeue? And he said yea, tell on. And I said: I beleeue that there is not but one God almightie, and in this Godhead, and of this Godhead, are three persons, that is: the father, the sonne, and the sothfast holy ghost. And I beleeue, that all these three persons are euen in power and in cunning, and in might, full of grace and of all godnesse. For whatsoeuer that the father doth, oz can oz will, that thing also the sonne doth and can and will: and in all their power cunning and will, the holy Ghost is equall to the father, and to the sonne.

What is the holy Church.

Over this I beleeue, that thorough counsell of this most blessed Trinitie, in most conuenient time before ordained for the saluation of mankind, the second person of this Trinitie was ordained to take the forme of man, that is, the kind of man. And I beleeue, that this second person our Lord Jesu Christ, was conceiued thorugh the holy Ghost, in the wombe of the most blessed virgin Marie, without mans sed. And I beleeue that after nine moneths Christ was borne of this most blessed virgine, without any paine oz breaking of the closter of her wombe, and without filth of her virginitie.

The true notes of the true Church.

And I beleeue, that Christour Sauiour was circumcised in the eight day after his birth, in fulfilling of the law, and his name was called Jesus, which was so called of the angell, before that hee was conceiued in the wombe of Marie his mother.

And I beleeue that Christ, as he was about xxx. yere old, was baptised in the flood of Jordane of Johan Baptist: and in the likenesse of a Doue the holy Ghost descended there vpon him, and a voice was heard from heauen, saying: Thou art my welbeloued sonne, in thee I am full pleased.

And I beleeue, that Christ was inowed then by the holy Ghost, for to go into the desert, and there he fasted 40. daies and 40. nights without bodily meat and drinke. And I beleeue that by and by after his fasting, when the manhod of Christ hungred, the fiend came to him, and tempted him in gluttonie, in vainglozie, and in couetisebut in all those temptations, Christ concluded the fiend, and withstod him. And then without tarrying, Jesu began to preach, and to say vnto the people: Do ye penance, for the realme of heauen is now at hand.

What herein is this beleefe, I pray you my Lord.

The old Testament and new.

I beleeue that Christ in all his time here liued most holilie, and taught the will of his father most truely: and I beleeue that he suffered therefore most wrongfully, greatell reproefes and doplings.

And after this when Christ would make an end here of this temporall life, I beleeue, that in the day next before that hee would suffer passion in the mone: in forme of bread and of wine, hee ordained the Sacrament of his flesh and his blood, that is, his owne precious bodie, and gaue it to his Apostles for to eate: commanding them, and by them all their after commers, that they should doe it in this forme that hee ordined to them, wie themselues, and teach and common forth to other men and women in this most worshipfull and holiest Sacrament, in mindfulnesse of his holiest liuing, and of his most true preaching, and of his willfull and patient suffering of the most painfull passion.

That is, bodie & blood, the creatures of bread and wine.

And I beleeue that this Christ our Sauiour, after that hee had ordained this most worthie Sacrament of his olone precious bodie: hee went forth willfullie against his enemies, and he suffered them most patiently to lay their hands most violently vpon him, and to bind him, and tolead him forth as a theefe, and to scorne him and buffet him, and all to blow oz file him with their spittings. Over this, I beleeue, that Christ suffered most meekly and patiently his enemies, for to bing out with sharpe scourges the blood that was betweene his skinne and his flesh: yea without grudging Christ suffered the cruell Jewes to crowne him with most sharpe thornes, and to smite him with a rod. And after, Christ suffered the cruell Jewes to hang him out vpon the crosse, and for to naile him thereupon hand and foot. And so thorugh his pitifull nailing, Christ shed out willfullie for mans life, the blood that was in his paines. And then Christ gaue willfully his spirit into the hands of power of his father. and so, as he would, and when hee would, Christ died willfullie for mans sake vpon the crosse. And notwithstanding that Christ was willfully, painefully, and most shamefully put to death, as the world there knew: yet water and water in his heart, as before ordained, that hee would shed out this blood and this water for mans saluation. And therefore he suffered the Jewes to make a blind knight to thrust him into the heart with a speare, and this the blood and water that was in his heart, Christ would shed out for mans loue: and after this, I beleeue that Christ was taken down from the crosse and buried. And I beleeue that on the third day by the power of his Godhead, Christ rose againe from death to life. And the forte day thereafter, I beleeue that Christ ascended vp into heauen, and that he there sitteth on the right hand of the father almightie. And the fiftie day after this vpgoing, he sent to his Apostles the holy Ghost, that he had promised them before: and I beleeue that Christ shall come and iudge all mankind, some to euerlasting peace, and some to euerlasting paines.

Doctors so to be followed, as they follow the word.

And as I beleeue in the father, and in the son, that they are one God almightie, so I beleeue in the holy Ghost that hee is also with them the same God almightie.

To sweare by a booke whether it be lawfull.

And I beleeue an holy Church, that is, all they that haue ben, and that now are, and alwaies to the end of the world shall be, a people the which shall endeuour them to know and to keepe the commandements of God, dreading ouer all thing to offend God, and louing and seking most to please him: and I beleeue, that all they that haue had, and yet haue, and all they that yet shall haue the foresaid vertues, surely standing in the beleefe of God, hoping stedfastly in his mercifull bounge, continuing to their end in perfect charitie, willfully, patientlie and gladly suffering perfecutions, by the example of Christ chiefly and his Apostles, all these haue their names written in the booke of life.

Therefore I beleeue, that the gathering together of this people, liuing now here in this life, is the holy Church of God, fighting here on earth against the fiend, the prosperitie of the world, and their fleshly lustes. Wherefore, seing that all the gathering together of this Church before said, and euery part thereof, neither coueteth, noz willeth, noz loueth, noz seeketh any thing but to eschew the offence of God, and to doe his pleasing will: meekly, gladly, and willfully, with all mine heart, I submit my self vnto this holy Church of Christ, to bee euer buxome and obedient to the ordinance of it, and of euery member thereof, after my knowledge and power by the helpe of God. Wherefore if knowledge now and euermore shall, if God will, that with all my heart, and with all my might, I will submit me only to the rule and gouernance of them, whom after my knowledge, I may perceiue by the haning and wing of the before said vertues, to be members of the holy Church. Wherefore these articles of beleefe and all other (both of the old law, and of the new, which after the commandement of God any man ought to beleeue) I beleeue verille in my soule, as a stedfast beap vnerch of my cunning and power, ought to beleeue: praying the Lord God for his holy name, for to increase my beleefe, and to helpe my vnbeleefe.

To whom, where, and when to sweare.

And for because to the praising of Gods name, I desire aboue all things to bee a faithfull member of holy church, I make this protestation before you all foure that are now here present, coueting that all men and women that now be absent knewe the same: that is, what thing soeuer before this time I haue said oz done, oz that thing here I shall do or say, at any time hereafter, I beleeue, that all the old law and new law giuen and ordained by counsell of the 3. persons of the Trinitie, were giuen and written to the saluation of mankind. And I beleeue, that these lawes are sufficient for mans saluation. And I beleeue euery article of these lawes, to the intent, that these articles ordained and commanded of these three persons of the most blessed Trinitie are to be beleeued.

And therefore to the rule and the ordinance of these Gods lawes, meekely, gladly and willfullie, I submit me with all mine heart: that whosoeuer can oz will by authozitie of Gods law, oz by open reason, tell me that I haue erred oz now erre, oz any time hereafter shall erre in any article of beleefe (from which inconuenience God keep me for his goodnesse) I submit me to be reconciled, and to be buxum and obedient vnto those lawes of God, and to euery article of them. For by authozitie specially of these lawes, I will through the grace of God, bee buxom charitable vnto these lawes. Yea sir, and euer this, I beleeue and admit all the sentences, authozities and reasons of the Saints and Doctors, according vnto holy scripture, and declaring it truely.

I submit me willfullie and meekely to bee euer obedient after my cunning and power, to all these saints and doctors, as they are obedient in worke and in word to God and to his law, and further not (to my knowledge) not for any earthly power, dignitie oz feare, through the helpe of God. Wherefore I pray you tell me after your bidding, I shall lap my hand vpon the booke, to that entent: to sweare thereby: And the archbishop said to me, yea, therefore else: And I said to him: Sir, a booke is nothing else but a thing coupled together of diuers creatures, and to sweare by any creature both Gods law and mans law is against it.

But sir, this thing I say here to you before these your clerks, with my forehead in reuerence, that how, where, when, and to whom, then am bound to sweare oz to obey in any wise after Gods law, and saints, and true doctors, according with Gods law: I will through Gods grace bee euer readie thereto, with all my cunning and power. But I pray you sir for the charitie of God, that ye will before that I sweare (as I haue here rehearsed to you) tell me how oz whereto, that I shall submit me: and shew me whereof that ye will correct me, and what is the ordinance that ye will thus oblige me to fulfill:

And the archbishop said vnto me: I will shortly that now thou sweare here to me, that thou shalt forsake al the opinions which the sect of Lollards hold, and is flandered with: so that after this time, neither priuilie noz apertly, thou hold any opinion which I shall (after thou hast sworne) rehearse to this here. Noz thou shalt fauour no man noz woman, young noz old, that holdeth any these forsaid opinions: but after thy knowledge and power, thou shalt force thee to withstand all such such disturbers of holy Church in every diocesse, that thou commest in: and them that will not leaue their false and damnable opinions, thou shalt put them vp, publishing them and their names, and make them knowne to the bishop of the diocés that they are in, or to the bishops ministers. And ouer this I will that thou preach no more vnto the time that I know by good witnesse and true, that thy conuersation be such, that thy heart and thy mouth accord truely in one, contrarying all the leaud learning that thou hast taught here before.

And I hearing these words, thought in my heart, that this was an vnlefull aduing: and deemed my selfe cursed of God, if I consented hereto, and I thought how Susan said: anguish is to me on euery side. And in that I stood still and spake not, the archbishop said to me: answere one wise or other: and I said, Sir, if I consented to you thus as yet haue here before rehearsed to me, I should become an appealer, or euery bishops espie, sommoner of all England. For and I should thus put vp, and publish the names of men and women, I should herein deceiue full many persons: yea sir, as it is likely by the dome of my conscience, I should herein be cause of the death both of men and women, yea both bodilie and ghostly. For many men and women shall stand now in the way of saluation: if I should for the learning and reading of their beleeue, publish them therefore vp to the bishops or to their vnpitcous ministers, I know some deale by experience that they should be so disturbed and diseased with persecution or otherwise, that many of them (I thinke) would rather chuse to forsake the way of truth then to be trauelled, groned, slandered, or punished, as bishops and their ministers now vse for to constraine men and women to consent to them.

But I find in no place in holie scripture, that this office that ye would now inferre me with, accordeth to any priest of Christes see, nor to any other Christian man: and therfore to doe this, were to me a full noious bond to be bounden with and euer grieuous charge. For I suppose, that if I thus did, many men and women would, yea sir, might iustly to my confusion say to me, that I were a traytor to God and to them: since (as I thinke in mine heart) many men and women trust so inlike in this case, that I would not for sauing of my life, doe thus to them. For if I thus should doe, full many men and women would (as they might full truly) say that I had falsly and cowardly forsaken the truth, and slandered thankfullie the word of God. For if I consented to you to doe here, after your will, for banchese or mischefe that may befall vnto me in this life, I deme in my conscience, that I were worthie hereforé to bee cursed of God and alle of all his Saints: for which inconuenience, kéep me and all christian people, almightie God now and euer for his holy name. And then the archbishop said vnto me: Oh, thine heart is full hard inducate, as was the heart of Pharao, and the diuell hath ouercomen thee, and peruerted thée, and hee hath so blinded thée in all thy wit, that thou hast no grace to know the truth, nor the measure of mercie that I haue profered to thee. Therfore, as I profer thee now by thy foolish answere, thou hast no will to leaue thine old erroes.

But I say to thee leaud losell, other quicklie consent thou to mine ordinance and submit thee to stand to my decrées: or by Saint Thomas thou shalt be degraded, and follow thy fellow into Smithfield. And at this saying, I stood still and spake not, but I thought in mine hart that God did to me great grace, if he would of his great mercie bring me to such an end. And in mine heart I was nothing afraid with this manasing of the archbishop. And I considered there two things in him. One, that he was not yet forsworn all to that hee made William Sautre wrongfully to bee burnt: and as I considered, that the archbishop threted yet after more shedding out of innocent bloud. And all therefore I was moued in all my wits, for to hold the archbishop neither for prelate nor for priest of God. And for that mine inward man was thus altogether departed from the archbishop, me thought I should not haue any dread of him. But I was right heauie and sorowfull, for that there was no audience of secular men by: but in my heart I prayed the Lord God, for to comfort me and strength me against them that there were against the sothfastnesse. And I purposed to speakere more to the archbishop and his clerks then me néed behoued: and all thus I praide God for his goodnesse to giue mee then and alway grace to speake, with a méke and an easie spirit: and whatsoeuer thing that I should speake, that I might thereto haue true authorities of Scriptures or open reason. And for that I stood thus still and nothing spake, one of the archbishops clerkes said vnto me: What thing muself thou? Do thou as my lord hath now commanded to thee here.

And yet I stood still and answered him not: and then some after, the archbishop said to me: Art thou not yet benthought, whether thou wilt to as I haue said to thee? And I said then to him: Sir, my father and my mother, on whose soules God haue mercie (if it bee his will) spent awhile more in diuers places about my learning for the intent to haue made mee a priest to God. But what I came to yeres of discretion, I had no will to be priest, and therefore my friends were right heauie to mee, and then mee thought their grudging against me was to painefull to mee, that I purposed therefore to haue left their companie. And when they perceiued this in me, they spake sometime full faire and pleasant words to mee: But for that they might not make me to consent of good heart to bee a priest, they spake to me full ofttentimes very grieuous words, and manased mee in diuers manners, shewing to mee full heauie there. And thus one while in faire manner, another while in grieuous, they were long time (as me thought) full busie about me, or I consented to them to be a priest.

But at the last, when in this matter they would no longer suffer mine ereuations, but either I should consent to them, or I should euer beare their indignation, yea, their curse (as they said:) then I seeing this, prayed them that they would giue me licence for to goe to them that were named wise priests, and of vertuous conuersation to haue their counsell, and to know of them the office and the charge of priesthood. And hereto, my father and my mother consented full gladly, and gaue me their blessing and good leaue to goe, and also money to spend in this iourney. And so that I went to those priests whom I heard to be of best name, and of most holy liuing, and best learned, and most wise of heauenly wisedome: and so I communed with them vnto the time, that I perceiued by their vertuous & continuall occupations, that their honest and charitable works passed their fame which I had heard before of them.

Wherefore sir, by the example of the doctrine of them and specialliè for the godly and innocent workes which I perceiued then of them, and in them: after my cunning and power, I haue exercised me then and in this time, to liue to perfectnesse Gods law, hauing a will and desire to line thereafter, which willeth that all men and women should exercise themselues faithfully thereabout. If then sir, either for pleasure of them that are neither to saue, nor of so vertuous conuersation to my knowledge, nor by common fame to any other mens knowledge in this land, as these men were of whom I tooke my counsell and information, I should now forsake thus suddenlie and shortlie, and vnwarned, all the learning that I haue exercised my life in these thirtie Winters and more, my conscience should euer be herewith out of measure vnquieted: and as sir I told you wel, that many men and women should be therthrough greatly troubled and slandered. And as I said sir, to you before for mine vntruth and false cowardnesse, many a one should bee put into full great repraue: yea sir, I dread that many one (as they might then iustly) would curse me full bitterlie: and sir I feare not, but the curse of God, which I should deserue herein, would bring me to a full euill end, if I continued thus. And if through remorse of conscience I repented me any time, returning into the way, which you do your diligence to constraine mee now to forsake: yea sir, all the bishops of this land, with full many other priests, would defame me, and pursue me as a relapse: and they that now haue (though I be vnworthy) some confidence in me, hereafter would neuer trust to me, though I could teach and liue neuer so vertuously, more then I can or may. For if after your counsell I left vtterly all my learning, I should hereby sticke wounde and defile mine owne soule, and also I should herethrough, giue occasion to many men and women of full sore hurting: yea sir as it is likely to mee, if I consented to your will, I should herein by mine euill example in it, as farre as in mee were, slea many soules ghostly, that I should neuer deserue for to haue grace of God, to the edifying of his Church, neither of my selfe, nor of none other mans life, and vndone both before God and man.

But sir, by example chiefly of some, whose names I will not now rehearse, of H. of I.P. and B. and also by the present doing of Philip Rampington, that now is become B. of Lincolne: I am now learned (as many moe hereafter through Gods grace shall be learned) to hate and to flée all such slander that these foresaid men chiefly haue defiled, principallie themselues with. And in it that in them is, they haue enuenomed all the church of God, for the slanderous reuoking at the crosse of Pauls, of H.P. and of B. and also now Philip Rampington pursueth Christs people. And the fayning that these men dissemble by worldly prudence, kéeping them couardlie in their preaching and communing with me the bonds & tearmes (which without blame may bee spoken and shewed out to the most worldly liuers) will not bee vnpunished of God. For to the point of truth that these men shewed out sometime, they will not now stretch forth their lines. But by example, each one of them as their words and their workes shew, busie them thereby their fayning, for to slander, and to pursue Christ in his members, rather then they will be pursued.

And the archbishop said to me: These men the which thou speakest of now, were soles and heretikes, when they were content vnto mine of this and other such soles. But now they are wise men, though thou and such other blame them vnwise. Neuertheles I will neuer none that right said, that any while were enuenomed with your contagiousnesse, that is, contaminated and spotted doctrine.

And I said to the archbishop: Sir, I thinke well that these men and such other are now wise as to this world: But as their words soundeth sometime, and their works shewed out-outwardly, it was like to inoue mee that they had enuick of the wisedome of God, and that they should haue deserued nie the grace of God, to haue saued their owne soules and many other mens, if they had continued faithfully in wilfull pouerte, and in other simple vertuous liuing: and specialliè if they had with these forsaid vertues continued in their busie feuitfull sowing of Gods word: as to many mens knowledge they occupied them a season in all their wits, full busily to know the pleasant will of God, trauelling al their members ful busilie for to do thereafter, purely and chiefly to the praising of the most holy name of God, and for grace of edification and saluation of christian people. But two worthy false conuicte, and euill counsellid and tyrannie, by which they and many men and women are led blindly into an euill end.

Then the archbishop said vnto mee: Thou, and such other losels of thy sect, would thaue your beards full nére for to haue a benefice. For by Iesu, I know none more couetous than ye are, when that ye haue a benefice. For loe, I haue shewed you a benefice but a mile out of this castle, gaue to John Purvie a benefice but a mile out of this castle, and I heard more complaints about his couetousnes for tithes and other mis doings, then I did of all men that were aduanced within my diocesse.

And I said to the archbishop: Sir, Purvie is neither with you now for the benefice that you gaue him, nor he holdeth faithfully with the learning that hee taught and writ before time: and thus hee the weth him self is neither to be hot nor cold, and therefore he and his fellowes, may soue dread, that if they turne not hastily to the way that they haue forsaken, peraduenture they be put out of the number of Christs chosen people.

And the archbishop said: Though Purvie bee now a false harlot, I quit mee now to him: But come hee more for such cause before me (or we part) I shall know with whom hee holdeth. But I say to thee: which are these holy men and wise, of whom thou hast taken thine information?

And I said: Sir, master John Wickliffe was holden of full many men, the greatest clerke that they knew then liuing, and therewith hee was named a parfit lerned man and an innocent in his liuing: and herefore, great men commoned oft with him, and they loued to his learning, that they writ it, and bustlie inforced them to rule themselues thereafter. Therefore sir, this forsaid learning of M. John Wickliffe, is yet the deed of full many men and women, the most agreeable learning vnto the liuing and teaching of Christ and of his Apostles, and most openly shewing and declaring how the church of Christ hath been and yet should bee ruled and gouerned. Therefore, if many men and women couet this learning, and purpose, though Gods grace, to conforme their liuing like to this learning of Wickliffe. M. John Ashton taught and writ accordingly, and full busily, where and when, and to whom that he might, and he wed it himselfe right perfectly vnto his liues end. And also Philip of Rampington, while he was a canon of Leicester. Nicolas Hereford, Dauie Gotrale of Pakring, monke of Wlland, and a maister of Dittinitie, and John Purueay, and many other which were holden right wise men and prudent, taught and writ bustlie this forsaid learning, and conformed them thereto. And with all these men I was right homely and communed with them long time and oft: and so before all other men I chose willingliè to be informed of them and by them, and specially of Wickliffe himselfe, as of the most vertuous and godly wise man that I heard of or knew. And therefore of him specialliè, and of these men I take the learning that I haue taught: and purpose to liue thereafter (if God will) to my liues end. For though some of these men be contrarie to the learning that they taught before, I wot well that their learning was true which they taught: and therfore with the helpe of God I purpose to hold and to vse the learning which I heard of them, while they sate on Moses chaire, and specially while that they sat on the chaire of Christ. But after the works that they now do, I will not do with Gods helpe. For they faine, and hide, and contrary the truth, which before they taught out plainely and truly. For as I know well, when some of those men haue been blamed for their slanderous doing: they grant not that they haue taught amisse or erred before time, but that they were constrained by paine to leaue to tell out the soth, and thus they chuse now rather to blaspheme God, then to suffer a while here persecution bodily, for sothfastnesse that Christ shed out his heart bloud for.

And the archbishop said: That learning that thou calleth truth and sothfastnesse, is open slander to holy Church, as it is proued of holy Church. For albeit, that Wickliffe youre author was a great clerke, and though that many men held him a perfect liuer: yet his doctrine is not approued of holy Church, but many sentences of his learning are damned as they well wote the are. But as touching Philip of Rampington, that was first Canon, and after abbat of Leicester, which is now bishop of Lincolne: I tell thee, that the day is commen, for which he failed the queen. For neither hee holdeth now, nor will hold, the learning that hee taught, when hee was a Canon of Leicester. For no kinde of this land pursueth now more sharpely them that hold thy way, then he doth.

And I said: Sir, full many men and women wonderely vp on him, and speaketh him milde shame, and holdeth him for a cursed enemie of the truth.

And the archbishop said to me: Therfore tarriest thou me thus here with such fables, wilt thou (shortly (as I haue said to thee) submit thee to me or no?

And I said: Sir, I tell you at one word: I dare not for the dread of God submit me to you, after the tenor and sentence that yet haue about rehearsed to me.

And thus as if they had been wroth, hee laid to one of his clerks: Fetch hither quickly, the certification that came to me from Shrewesburie vnder the bailiffes seale, witnessing the errors and heresies, which this losell hath venimously sowne there.

Then hastilie the clerke toke out and laid forth on a couple bord, diuers roles and writings, among which there was a little one, which the clerke deliuered to the archbishop. And by and by the archbishop read this roll containing this sentence.

The third Sunday after Easter, the yere of our Lord 1407. William Thorpe came vnto the towne of Shrewesburie, and though leaue granted vnto him to preach: hee said openly in S. Chads church in his sermon, that the sacrament of the altar, after the consecration, was material bread. And that images, should in no wise be worshipped. And that men should not goe on pilgrimages. And that priests haue no title to tithes. And that it is not lawfull for to sweare in any wise.

And when the archbishop had read thus this roll, he rolled it vp againe, and said to me. Is this wholsome learning to be among the people?

And I said to him: Sir, I am both assamed on their behalfe, and right sorowfull for them that haue certified you these things thus untruly: for I preached neuer, nor taught thus openly nor apertly.

And the archbishop said to me, I will giue credence to these worshipfull men which haue written to me, and witnessed vnder their seales there among them. Though now thou denie all this, wenest thou that I will giue credence to thee? Thou Losell, hast troubled the worshipfull communalties of Shrewesburie, so that the bailiffes and communalty of that towne haue written to me, praying me that an archbishop of Canturbury primat and chancellor of England, that I will vouchsafe to grant them, that if thou shalt be made (as thou art worthie) to suffer open iourelle for thine heresies, that thou mayst haue thy iourelle openly there among them: So that all they whom thou and such other losels haue there peruerted, may through feore of thy deed be reconciled againe to the vnitie of holie Church. And also they that stand in true faith of holy church, may through thy deed be more established therein. And as if this asking well pleased the archbishop, he said, Verily thine heartie prayer, and feruent request, shall be thought on.

But certainlie, nother the prayer of the men of Shrewesburie, nor the manasing of the archbishop made mee any thing afraid. But in rehearsing of this malice, and in the hearing of it, my heart greatly reioyced, and yet both. I thanke God for the grace that I then thought, and yet thinke shall come to all the church of God here thorow, by the specialì mercifull doing of the Lord. And as hauing no dread of the malice of tyrants, by trusting stedfastlie in the helpe of the Lord, with full purpose for to knowledge the sothfastnesse, and to stand therebye after my cunning and power: I said to the archbishop, Sir, if the truth of Gods word might now be accepted as it should be, I doubt not to proue by likelie euidence, that they that are fained to be out of the faith of holy church in Shrewesbury and in other places also, are in the true faith of holy church. For as their words sound, and their works shew to mans iudgement (dreading and loting faithfullie God) their will, their desire, their loue and their busines are moste set to dread to offend God, and to loue for to please him in true and faithfull keeping of his commandements. And again, they that are said to be in the faith of holy church in Shrewesburie and in other places, by open euidence of their proud, couious, malicious, couetous, lecherous, and other foule words and workes: neither know no haue will to know, nor to occupie their wits truelie and effectuouslie in the right faith of holie church. Wherefore all these, no: none that follow their manners, shall any time come verily in the faith of holy church, except they enforce them more truely to come in the way which now they despise. For these men and women that are now called faithfull and holden suff, nother know, nor will exercise themselfe to know (of faithfulnesse) one commandement of God.

And thus ful many men and women now, and specialie men that are named to bee principall lims of holie church for God to great wrath, and deserue his curse for that they call or hold them suff men, which are ful vnsuff as their vitious words, their great customable swearing, and their slanderous shamefull works shew openly and witnesse. And therefore such vitious men and vnsuff in their owne confusion, call them vnsuff men and women, which after their power and cunning bustle them selues to liue iustly after the commandement of God. And where sir ye say, that I haue disturbed the communalitie of Shrewesburie, and many other men and women with my teaching: If it thus bee, it is not to bee wondred of wise men, since since all the communalte of the Citie of Jerusalem was disquieted & troubled of Christs owne person, that was very God and man, and the most prudent preacher that euer was or shall be. And also all the synagogue of Nazareth was moued against Christ, and so full filled with ire towards him for his preaching, that the men of the synagogue rose vp and cast Christ out of their citie, and led him vp to the top of a mountaine for to cast him downe there headlong: also accordingly hereto, the Lord witnesseth by Moses, that he shall put dissension betwixt his people, and the people that contrarieth and pursueth his people. Thus sir is he, that shall preach the truth of Gods word to the vnfaithfull people, and shall let the faithfullnesse of the Gospell, and the prophecie of God alnighties to be fulfilled:

And the archbishop said to me: If followeth of these thy words, that thou and such other thinkest, that pe doe right wel for to preach and teach as pe doe, without authoritie of any bishop. For pou presume, that he lord hath chosen you only for to preach, as faithfull disciples and speciall followers of Christ.

The word of God ought first to be preached.

And I said: Sir by authoritie of Gods law, and also of saints and doctors I am learned to deeme, that it is euery priests office and dutie for to preach busily, freely and truely the word of God. For no doubt euery priest should purpose first in his soule, and couet to take the order of priesthood chiefly for to make knowne to the people the word of God, after his cunning and power; approuing his words euer to be true by his vertuous workes: and for this intent we suppose that bishops and other prelats of holy Church, should chiefly take and vse their prelacie, and for the same cause bishops should giue to priests their orders. For bishops should accept no man to priesthood, except that he had good will and full purpose, and were well disposed, and well learned to preach. Therfore sir, by the binding of Christ, and by the crample of his most holy living, and also by the witnessing of his holie Apostles and Prophets, wee are bound vnder full great paine, to exercise vs after our cunning and power (as euery Priest is likewise charged of God) to fulfill fully the office of priesthod. We presume not here of our selues for to be effeemed (neither in our owne reputation nor in none other mans) faithfull disciples, and speciall followers of Christ. But sir, as I said to you before, wee deeme this by authoritie chiefly of Gods word, that it is the chiefe dutie of euery priest, to bruse him faithfullie to make the law of God knowne to his people, and so to commune the commandement of God charitable, how that we may best, where, when, and to whom that euer we may, is our very dutie: and for the wil and businesse that wee owe of due debt to doe fulfille our office through the stirring and speciall helpe (as we trust) of God, hoping stedfastlie in his mercie: wee desire to be the faithfull disciples of Christ, and we pray this gratious Lord for his holie name, that he make vs able to please him with deuout prayers, and charitable priestly works, that we may obtaine of him to follow him thankefully.

If this lesson had been well followed, the world had not been brought to such darkenes by blind and dumb pastils.

An effectuous prayer. God grant it all men's hearts.

And the archbishop said to me: Leaud loyel, whereto makest thou such baune reasons to me? Alketh not Saint Paul, how should priests preach, except they be sent? But I sent thee neuer to preach. For thy venomous doctrin is so known throughout England, that no bishop will admit thee to preach by writnessing of their letters. Thy then leaud idiot, wilt thou presume to preach, since thou art not sent nor licenced of thy souereigne to preach? Saith not Saint Paul, that subiects ought to obey their Souereignes, and not onely good and vertuous, but also tyrants that are vitious?

Who he preacheth without the bishops licence.

And I said to the archbishop: Sir, as touching your letter of licence of other bishops, which pe say, wee should haue to witnesse that we were able to bee sent for to preach: wee know well that neither you sir, nor any other bishop of this land, will grant to vs any such letters of licence, but if we should oblige vs to you, and to other bishops by writefull othes, for to passe not the bounds and dermes which pe sir, or other bishops, will limit to vs. And since in this matter your termes bee come to large, and some too strait: wee bee not oblige vs thus to be bounden to you for to keepe the termes, which you will limit to vs, as you doe to friers and such other preachers: and therefore, though we haue not your letter sir, nor letters of any other bishops written with inke vpon parchment: wee dare not therefore leane the office of preaching (to which preaching, all priests after their cunning and power are bound, by diuers testimonies of Gods law, and great doctors) without any mention making of bishops letters. For as mikle as wee haue taken vpon vs the office of priesthod (though we are vnworthie thereto) wee ame purpose to fulfill it with the help of God, by authoritie of his olone law, and by witnesse of great doctors and saints, accordingly hereto trusting stedfastly in the mercie of God. For pat he hee commanded vs to doe the office of priesthood, he will be our sufficient letters and witnesse, if we by example of his holy living and teaching, speciallie occupie vs faithfullie to doe our office iustlie: yea the people to whom we preach (be they faithfull or vnfaithfull) shall be our letters, that is, our witnes-bearers: for the truth where it is found, may not be vnwitnessed. For all that are conuerted and saued by learning of Gods word, and by working thereafter, are witnesse-bearers; that the truth and stedfastnes which they heard and did after, is cause of their saluation. And again, all vnfaithfull men and women which heard the truth told out to them, and would not doe thereafter: also all they that might haue heard the truth, and would not heare it, because that they would not doe thereafter: all these shall beare witnes against themselues, and the truth which they would not heare. Or else heard it, and beleued to doe thereafter, through their vnfaithfulnesse, is and shall be cause of their damnation. Therefore sir, since this also stand witnessing of God, and of diuers Saints and Doctors, and of all the people good and euil, sufficeth to all true preachers: we thinke that we do not the office of priesthod, if that we leaue our preaching, because that wee haue not, or may not haue duly bishops letters, to witnesse that wee are sent of them to preach. This sentence answereth Saint Paul, where he speaketh of himself and of faithfull Apostles and disciples, saying thus: We need no letters of commendations as some preachers doe, which preach for couetousnesse of temporall goods, and for mens praysing. And there pe say sir, that Paul biddeth subiects obey their souereignes, that is soth, and may not be denied. But there is two manner of souereignes, vertuous souereignes and vitious tyrants. Therefore, to these last souereignes, neither men nor women that be subiect, owe to obey in two maners. To vertuous souereigns and charitable, subiects owe to obey willfully and gladlie, in bearing of their good counsell, in consenting to their charitable biddings, and in working after their fruitfull works.

Two maner of souereignes.

Yet this bishop plucketh him not by the hand, nor hurteth not of his hors as Peter did.

This sentence Paul answereth, where hee saith to subiects: We pe mindfull of your souereignes, that speake to you the word of God, and follow you the faith of them, whose conuersation you know to be vertuous. For as Paul saith after, these souereignes, to whom subiects owe to obey in following of their maners; we be buxlie in holy studying, how they may withstand and destroy vices, first in themselues, and after in all their subiects, and how they may best plant in them vertues. Also these souereignes make deuout and feruent prayers, for to purchase grace of God, that they and their subiects may ouercome all thing dread to offend him, and to loue for to please him. Also these souereignes to whom Paul biddeth vs obey, as it is said before, lure to vertuousnesse, that all they that will liue well, may take of them good example, to know and to keepe the commandements of God. But in this foreiaid wise, subiects ought not to obey nor to be obedient to tyrants, while they are vitious tyrants, since their will, their counsell, their biddings, and their works are so vitious, that they ought to be hated and left. And though such tyrants be masterfull and cruell in bosting and menacing, in oppressions & diuers punishings: Saint Peter biddeth the seruants of such tyrants, to obey meekely such tyrants, suffering patiently their malitious cruelnesse. But Peter counselleth not any seruant or subiect, to obey to any lord or prince, or souereigne in any thing that is not pleasing to God.

Two maner of obeying: 1. In following their doings and examples. 2. In suffering their tyranny.

Wicked rules are not to be followed in euill.

Well reasoned my lord and like a clerke.

And the archbishop said vnto me: If a souereigne bid his subiect doe that thing that is vitious, this souereigne herein is to blame: but the subiect for his obedience, deserueth meed of God. For obedience pleaseth more to God, then any sacrifice.

2. Parts of the Church.

And I said, Samuel the Prophet said to Saul the first king, that God was more pleased with the obedience of his commandement, then with any sacrifice of beasts. But David saith, and S. Paul, and S. Gregorie accordingly together, that not only they that doe euil, are worthie of death and damnation: but also they that consent to euill doers. And sir, the law of holy church teacheth in the decrees, that no seruant to his lord, nor childe to the father or mother, nor wife to her husband, nor monke to his abbat, ought to obey, except in lefull things, and lawfull.

Obedience not to be given, but in things lefull and lawfull.

And the archbishop said to mee: All these alleagings that thou bringest forth, are not else but proud presumptuousnesse. For hereby thou inforcest thee to preme, that thou and such other are so iuste, that pe ought not to obey to prelates. And thus against the learning of Saint Paul that teacheth you not to preach, but if pe were sent of your owne authoritie, pe will goe forth and preach, and doe that pe list.

All is pretension that he only against your masterfull ambition.

And I said: Sir, pe teach not euery priest the office of the Apostles, or the office of the disciples of Christ. And the archbi. said, yea. And I said, Sir, as the Chapter of Matth, and the last chapter of Marke witnesseth; Christ sent his Apostles for to preach. And the r. chapter of Luke witnesseth, that Christ sent his two and seuentie disciples for to preach, in euery place that Christ was to come to: and S. Gregorie in the common law saith, that euery man that goeth to priesthood, taketh vpon him the office of preaching: For as hee saith, that priest serueth God to great wrath, of whose mouth is not heard the voice of preaching. And as other more glosses vpon Ezechiel, witnesse: that the priest that preacheth not busilie to the people, shall be partaker of their damnation that perish through his default. And though the people be blame by other speciall grace of God, then by the priests preaching, yet the priests, in that they are ordained to preach, and preach not, as he bee God, they are manslayers. For as farre as in them is, such priests as preach not busilie and truely, slay all the people ghostly: in that they withhold from them the word of God, that is, the life and substance of mens soules. And S. Hilare said, Priests shall bee damned, for wickednesse of the people, if if they teach not them that are ignorant, or blame not them that are sinners. For all the workes of businesse of priests, standeth in preaching and teaching, that they confesse all men, as well by cunning of faith, as by discipline of works, that is vertuous teaching. And as the Gospel witnesseth: Christ said in his teaching: I am borne and comen into this world, to beare witnesse to the truth, and he that is of the truth, heareth my voice.

Priests not onlie sent to preach, but commanded to preach. Gregorius. Ezechielis. Whatsoeuer a man doth, leauing that vndone which he is chiefly bound to doe, is sin.

Then sir, since by the word of Christ specially, that is, his voice, priests are commanded to preach: whatsoeuer priest that it be, that hath not good will and full purpose to doe thus, and ableth not himselfe after his cunning and power to doe his office by the crample of Christ and of his Apostles; whatsoeuer other thing that he doth, displeaseth God. For lo, Saint Gregorie saith, that thing left, that a man is bound chiefly to doe, whatsoeuer other thing that a man doth, it is vnthankfull to the holy Ghost, and therefore saith Lincolne: The priest that preacheth not the word of God, though he be seene to haue none other default, he is Antichrist and Sathanas, a night theef, and a day theefe, a sleyer of soules, and an angell of light turned into darknesse. Wherefore sir, these authorities and other well considered, I deeme my selfe damnable, if I either for pleasure or displeasure of any creature, apply nree not diligently to preach the word of God. And in the same damnation I deeme all those priests, which of good purpose and will, enforce them not busilie to doe thus, and also all them that haue purpose or will to let any priest of this busineslie.

Yet the bishop plucketh him not by the hand, nor hurteth not of his hors as Peter did.

And the archbishop said to those three clerks that stood before him: Loe sirs, this is the maner and businesse of this losell and such other, to picke out such sharpe sentences of holy scripture and doctors, to maintaine their sect and loze against the ordinance of holy Church. And therefore I selle, it is thou that couetest to haue against the Psalter that I made to bee taken from thee at Canturbury, to record sharpe verses against vs. But thou shalt neuer haue that Psalter, nor none other booke, till that I know that thy heart and thy mouth accord fully, to be good subiect to holy Church.

Holy church.

And I said: Sir, all my will and power is, and euer shall be (I trust to God) to be gouerned by holy Church.

And the archb. asked me, what was holy Church?

And I said: Sir, I told you before, what was holy Church. But since pe aske me this demand: I call Christ and his saints holy Church.

And the archbishop said vnto me: I wot well that Christ and his Saints are holy Church in heauen, but what is holy church in earth?

And I said: Sir, though holy church be euery one in charitie, yet it hath two parts. The first and principall part, hath ouercomen perfectly all the wretchednesse of this life, and raigneth ioyfully in heauen with Christ. And the other part is here yet in earth, busily and continually fighting day and night against temptations of the fiend: forsaking and hating the prosperity of this world, despising and withstanding their fleshly lusts, which onely are the pilgrims of Christ, wanding toward heauen by stedfast faith and grounded hope, and by perfect charitie. For these heauenly pilgrimes, may not, nor will not, be letted of their good purpose, by the reason of any dooms discording from holy Scripture, nor by the floos of any tribulation temporall, nor by the wind of any pride, of boast, or of manalling of any creature: For they are all fast grounded vpon the sure stone Christ, hearing his word and louing it, exercising them faithfully and continually in all their wits to doe thereafter.

And the archbishop said to his clerks: See pe not how his heart is indurate, and how he is trauelled with the diuell occupping him thus busily to alleage such sentences to maintaine his errors and heresies? Certaine, thus he would occupie vs here all day, if we would suffer him.

Mr. Archdeac. Lund D. clerk.

Then said the archbishop to me: All these alleagings that thou bringest forth, are not else but proud presumptuousnesse. For hereby thou inforcest thee to preme, that thou and such other are so iuste, that pe ought not to obey to prelates. And thus against the learning of Saint Paul that teacheth you not to preach, but if pe were sent of your owne authoritie, pe will goe forth and preach, and doe that pe list.

To grant the reall being of the holy Sacrament but denieth as much as to grant the Accident to be without the subiect.

bodie is accident without subiect. But sir, for as mikle as your asking passeth my understanding, I dare neither denie it nor grant it, for it is schole matter, about which I busied nere nor neuer yet to know: and therefore I commit this terme accidens sine subiecto, to those clerkes which delight them so in curious and subtile sophistry, because they determine oft so difficult and strange matters, and wade and wander so in them from argument to argument, with pro & contra, till that they wot not where they are, and vnderstand not themselues. But the shame that these proud Sophisters haue to yeeld them to men, and before men, maketh them oft soles, and to be conclubed shamefully before God.

Against proud Sophisters. Temptans dominum.

Tentat non dominum.

And the archbishop said to me: I purpose not to oblige thee to the subtle arguments of clerks, since thou art vnable thereto: but I purpose to make thee obey to the determination of holy Church.

The Church could neuer find till the fiend broke loose.

And I said: sir, by open euidence and great witnesse, a. 30. yeere after the incarnation of Christ, the determination which I haue here before you rehearsed, was accept of holy Church as sufficient to the saluation of all them that would beleeue it faithfully, and worke thereafter charitable. But sir, the determination of this matter which was brought in since the fiend was loosed by frier Thomas againe, specially calling the most worshipfull Sacrament of Christs owne bodie an accident without subiect: which terme since I knew not that Gods law approueth it in this matter, I dare not grant, but vtterlie I denie to make this friers sentence, or any such other, my beleefe; doe with me God what thou wilt.

Transubstantiation brought in by frier Thomas Aquin.

It is happie he did not lie in his face as Bonner did.

And the archbishop said to me: Well, well, thou shalt say otherwise or that I leaue thee. But what saiest thou to this second point that is recorded against thee by worthie men of Shrewesburie, saying, that thou preachedst there, that Images ought not to be worshipped in any wise?

The second point touching images. Thirtie charged with an vntruth.

And I said: Sir, I preached neuer thus, nor through Gods grace I will not at any time consent to think not to say thus, neither pitifully nor openly. For loe, the Lord witnesseth by Moses, that the things which hee made were right good, and so then they were, and yet they are and shall be good and worshipfull in their kind. And therfore, to the end that God made them to, they are all praisable and worshipfull, and especiallie man that was made after the image and likenesse of God, is full worshipfull in his kind, yea, this holy image that is man, God worshipeth. And herefore euery man should worship other, in kind, and also for heauenly vertues that men vse charitably. And also I say, wood, tin, gold, siluer, or any other matter that images are made of: all these creatures are worshipfull in their kind, and to the end that God made them for. But the caruing, crafting, and painting of an imagery, made within mans hand, albeit þ this being be accept of ma of highest state and dignitie, and ordained of them to bee a calender to leaud men, that neither can, nor will be learned to know God in his word, neither by his creatures, nor by his wonderfull and diuers workings: yet this imagerie ought not to be worshipped in forme, nor in the likenesse of mans craft. Neuertheless, that euery matter the painters paint with, since it is Gods creature, ought to be worshipped in the kind, and to the end that God made and ordained it to, I true man.

Man a worshipfull image of God.

Though man accept the painting or carning of images, yet is it not the right way to leaue to serue God.

Then the archbishop said to me, I graunt well that no body, ought to doe worship to any such images for themselues. But a crucifix ought to be worshipped for the passion of Christ that is painted therein, and so brought thereby to mans mind: and thus the images of the blessed Trinitie, and of the Virgine Marie Christs mother, and other images of saints, ought to be worshipped. For lee, earthly kings and lords vse thus to send their letters enclosed with their armes, or with their priuie signet to them that are with them, are worshipped of these men. For when these men receiue their lords letters, in which they se and know the wils and biddings of the lords, in worship of their lords they doe off their capes to those letters. Why not then, since in images made with mans hand, we may read and know many diuers things of God, and of his Saints, shall we not worship their images?

The image of the Trinitie.

A similitude of the kings seale or letters to prooue the worship of images.

And I said, within my foresaid protestation I say, that these worldly vsages of temporall lawes that yee speake now of, may be done in calf without sinne. But this is no similitude to worship images made by mans hand, since that Moses, Dauid, Salomon, Baruch and other saints in the bible forbid so plainely the worshipping of such images.

No similitude to be made between earthly things and spirituall matters, when God would both prescribe to the contrary.

Then the archbishop said to me: I ean Iosell, in the old law before that Christ take manhind, was no likenesse of any person of the Trinitie, neither beloued to man, nor knowne of man: But now since Christ became man, it is lefull to haue images to shew his manhood, yea, though many men which are right great clerks and other also, held it an error to paint the Trinitie: I say it is wel done to make and to paint the Trinity in images. For it is great mouing of deuotion to men, to haue and to behold the Trinitie and other images of saints, carued, calf and painted. For beyond the sea, are the best painters that euer I saw. And sirs I tell you, this is their manner and it is a good manner: When that an image maker shall carue, caff in mold, or paint any images, he shall goe to a preest, and shriue him as cleane, as if he should then die: and take penance, and make some certaine vow of fasting or of praying or pilgrimages doing, praying the preest specialtie to pray for him, that he may haue grace to make a faire and a deuout image.

The Scripture sufficiencie of men, the diuell may worke miracles.

And I said: Sir, I doubt not if these painters that ye speak of, or any other painters vnderfood truly the text of Moses, of Dauid, of the wise man, of Baruch, and of other saints and doctors: these painters should be moued to shrine them to God with full inward sorrow of heart, taking vpon them to doe right sharpe penance for the sinfull and vaine craft of painting, carning, or casting they had vsed: promising God faithfully, neuer to doe so after: knowledging openly before all men their reprouable learning. And also sir, these priests that shriue (as you doe say) painters, and enioyne them to doe penance, and pray for their soed, promising to them helpe of their prayers for to be curious in their sinfull crafts: sinne herein more grieuously, then the painters. For these priests doe comfort and giue them counsell to doe that thing, which of great paine, yea vnder the paine of Gods curse, they should vtterly forbid them. For certes sir, if the wonderfull working of God, and the holy liuing and teaching of Christ, and of his Apostles and Prophets, were made knowne to the people by holy liuing and true, and lusse teaching of priests: these things (sir) were sufficient bookes and kalenders to know God by, and his saints, without any images made with mans hand. But certes, the vitious liuing of priests and their conetousnesse, are chiefe cause of this error, and all other vitiousnesse that raigneth among the people.

The Church hath power to ordeine and change rites and ceremonies.

Then the archbishop said vnto me, I hold thee a vitious priest and accurst, and all them that are of thy sect; for all priests of holy Church, and all images that moue men to deuotion thou and such other goe about to destroy. Loseli, were it a faire thing to come into the Church and see therein none image?

A better sight my lord thinketh he blind locke where to be worshipped.

And I said: sir, they that come to the church for to pray deuontly to the Lord God, may in their inward wits bee the more feruent, that all their outward wits bee close from all outward seeing and hearing, and from all disturbance and letting. And since Christ blessed them that saw him not bodily, and haue beleeued faithfully in him: it sufficeth them to all men (though hearing and knowing of Gods word, and to doe thereafter) for to beleeue in God, though they neuer see images made with mans hand after any person of the Trinitie, or of any other Saint.

The right seruice of a Christian.

And the archb. said to mee, with a feruent spirit: I say to thee Iosell, that it is right well done to make and to haue an image of the Trinitie: Yea, what saist thou: is it not a stirring thing to behold such an image?

Why Gods name, your grace, will not an Image Gods nay.

And I said: Sir, yee said right now that in the old law of Christ take manhind, no likenesse of any person of the Trinitie was shewed to men: therefore sir, yee said it was not then lefull to haue images, but now ye say, since Christ is become man, it is lefull to make and to haue an image of the Trinitie, and also of other saints. But sir, this thing would I learne of you: since the father of heauen, yea and euery person of the Trinitie was without beginning God almighty, and many holy prophets that were deadly men, were martyred violently in the old law, and also many men and women then died confessors: Why was it not then as lefull and necessarie as now to haue made an image of the father of heauen, and to haue made and had other images of martyrs, prophets, and holy confessors, to haue bin Kalenders to aduise men and moue them to deuotion, as ye say that images now doe?

Most this preachers and maintainers of Images.

The Synagogue of Antichrist hath authoritie.

And the archbishop said: The synagogue of the Iewes had not authoritie to appr oue these things as the Church of Christ hath now.

And I said: Sir, saint Gregorie was a great man in the new law, and of great dignitie, and as the common law witnesseth, he commanded greatly a bishop, in that he forbad vttetly the images made with mans hand should bee worshipped.

Euery good work is a good step to heauen.

And the archbishop said: Thogrations Iosell, thou fauourest no more truth then an hound. Since at the rood at the North doore at London, at our ladie at Walsingham, and many other diuers places in England, are many great and praisable miracles done: should not the images of such holy saints and places, at the reuerence of God and our ladie and other saints be more worshipped then other places and images, where no miracles are done?

The manner and examples of saints.

Great miracles done by images, but my lord doth not credit by whose power.

And I said: Sir, there is no such vertue in any imagerie, that any images should herefore bee worshipped: wherefore I am certaine that there is no miracle done of God in any place in earth, because that any images made with mans hand should be worshipped. And herefore sir, as I preached openly at Shrewesburie and other places, I say now here before you: That no bodie should trust that there were any vertue in imagery made with mans hand, and therefore no bodie should vow to them nor seeke them, nor kneele to them, nor bow to them, nor pray to them, nor offer any thing to them, nor kisse them, nor encense them. For loe the most worthie of such images, the brasen Serpent (by Moses made, at Gods bidding) the good king Ezechias destroyed worthily and thankfully, and all because it was encensed. Therfore sir, if men take godhed to Miracles seruing worthy to be done to Images may well be ascribed vnto the power of God.

to the writing and to the leauing of S. Augustine, of S. Gregorie, and of saint John Chrysostome, and of other saints and Doctors, how they spake and wrote of miracles, that shall bee done now in the last end of the world: It is to dread, that for the vnfaithfulnes of men and women, the fiend hath great power for to worke many of the miracles that now are done in such places. For both men and women delight now more to heare and know miracles, then they doe to know Gods word, or to heare it effectuouslie. Therefore, to the great confusion of all them that thus do; Christ saith: the generation of adulterers requireth tokens, miracles, and wonders. Neuertheless as diuers saints say, now when the faith of God is published in Christendome, the word of God sufficeth to mans saluation, without such miracles: and thus also the word of God sufficeth to all faithfull men and women, without any such images. But good sir, since the father of heauen, that is God in his godhead, is the most vnknowne thing that may bee, and the most wonderfull spirit, hauing in it no shape nor likenesse, and members of any deadly creature: in what likenesse or what image may God the father be shewed or painted?

The word of God sufficeth vs to saluation, without miracles.

Holy church of your owne building.

And the archbishop said, as holy church hath suffered the images of the Trinitie, and all other images to be painted and shewed; it sufficeth to them that are members of holy church. But since thou art a rotten member, cut away from holy church; thou fauourest not the ordinance thereof. But since the day passeth, leaue we this matter.

The 3. article. Pilgrimage.

Pilgrimage is pleasant to God.

Good will reserued in pilgrimage.

And then he said to me: What saiest thou to the third point that is certified against thee, preaching openly in Shrewsburie, that pilgrimage is not lefull: and ouer this thou saidest that the men and women that go on pilgrimages to Canturburie, to Beuerley, to Karlington, to Wallsingam, and to any such other places, are accursed and made foolish, spending their goods in waste.

And I said: Sir, by this certification I am accused to you that I should teach, that no pilgrimage is lefull. But I said neuer thus. For I know that there be true pilgrimages and lefull, and full pleasant to God; and therefore sir, howsoeuer mine enemies haue certified you of me, I told at Shrewsburie of two maner of pilgrimages.

Two maner of pilgrimages.

The true pilgrimage is to trauell in heauenly things.

And the archbishop said to me: whom callest thou true pilgrimes?

Well spoken my lord for Lincolnshire pilgrims. And why then blanket Bonner Philpot for singing in the locket?

And I said: sir, with my protestation I call them true pilgrimes trauelling toward the blisse of heauen, which in the state, degree, or order that God calleth them to, doe busie them faithfully for to occupie all their wits bodilie and ghostly, to know truely, and to kepe faithfully the biddings of God, hating and fleeing all the seuen deadly sins, and euery branch of them: Ruling them vertuouslie (as it is said before) with all their wits, doing discreetly, wilfully, and gladly, all the works of mercy, bodilie and ghostly, after their cunning and power, abiding them to the giftes of the holy Ghost, disposing them to receiue them in their soules, and to hold therin, the right blessings of Christ: busying them to know and to keepe the seuen principall vertues, and so then they shall obtaine here through grace, for to be thankfully to God, all the conditions of charitie. And then they shall be moued with the good spirit of God, for to examine oft and diligently their conscience, that neither wilfully nor wittingly they erre in any article of beleefe, hauing continually (as frailtie will suffer) all their businesse, to dread and to flie the offence of God, and to loue ouer all, and to seeke euer to doe his pleasant will. Of these pilgrimes I said, what soeuer good thought that they any time thinke, what vertuous word that they speake, and what fruitfull worke that they worke: Euery such thought, word & worke is a step number set toward him into heauen. These foresaid pilgrimes of God, delight sore when they heare of saints or of vertuous men and women, how they forsooke willfully the prosperitie of this life, how they withstood the suggestion of the fiend, how they restrained their fleshlie lusts, how discreete they were in their penance doing, how patient they were in all their aduersities, how prudent they were in coinselling of men and women, mouing them to hate all sinne, and to flie them, and to shame euer greatly thereof, and to loue all vertues, and to draw to them, imagining how Christ and his followers by example of him, suffered scornes and slanders, and how patiently they abode and take the wrongfull manacing of tyrants: How homely they were and serniceable to pore men to releeue and comfort them bodily and ghostly, after their power and cunning, and how deuout they were in prayers, how feruent they were in heauenly desires, and how they absented them from spectacles of vaine sayings and hearings, and how stable they were to let and destroy all vices, and how laborious and vsefull they were, to sow and to plant vertues: These heauenly conditions and such other, haue pilgrimes, or endeuor them for to haue: those pilgrimage God accepteth.

Organs in the church. A true comparison for my lords and like yourselues.

And againe, I said, as their workes shew, the most part of men and women that goe now on pilgrimages, haue not these foresaid conditions, nor loueth to busie them faithfully for to haue. For as I well know, since I haue full oft assaid, examine wholsoeuer will of these pilgrimes, and hee shall no find three men or women that know surely a commandement of God, nor can say their Pater noster, and Aue Maria, nor their Creed readile in any manner of language. And as I haue learned and also know somewhat by experience of these same pilgrimes, telling the cause, why that many men and women goe hither and thither now on pilgrimage: It is more for the health of their bodies, then of their soules: more for to haue riches and prosperitie of this world, then for to bee enriched with vertues in their soules: more to haue here worldly and fleshly friendship, then for to haue friendship of God, and of his saints in heauen, for whatsoeuer thing man or woman doth, the friendship of God, nor of any other saint cannot bee had, without keeping of Gods commandements. Further with my protestation, I say now as I said in Shrewsburie, though they haue fleshly wils, trauell sarre their bodies and spend mikle money, to seeke and to visit the bones or images (as they say they do) of this saint or of that: such pilgrimage going is neither praisable nor thankfull to God nor to any saint of God, since in effect, all such pilgrimes despise God and all his commandements and saints. For the commandements of God they will neither know nor keepe, nor conforme them to liue vertuouslie by example of Christ and of his saints. Therefore sir, I haue preached and taught openly, and so I purpose all my life time to do with Gods helpe, saying that such fond people wast blamefully Gods goods in their vaine pilgrimages, spending their goods vpon vitious holelers which are oft vnchaste women of their bodies: and at the least, those goods with the which they should doe workes of mercie after Gods bidding, to poore needie men and women.

The incommodiousness that commeth by pilgrimage.

These poore mens goods and their liuelode, these runneris about, offer to rich priests which haue mikle more liuelode then they need. And thus those goods they wast wilfully, and spend them vnlawfully against Gods bidding vpon strangers, with which they should helpe and releue, after Gods will their poore needie neighbours at home: yea and ouer this follie, oftentimes diuers men and women, of these runners thus madly hither and thither into pilgrimage; borrow hereto other mens goods, yea and sometime they steale mens goods hereto, and they pay them neuer againe. Also sir, I know well that when diuers men and women will goe thus after their owne wits, and finding out one pilgrimage; they will ordaine with them before, to haue with them both men and women, that can well sing wanton songs, and some other pilgrimes, will haue with them bagpipes: so that euerie towne that they come through, what with the noise of their singing, and with the sound of their piping, and with the iangling of their Canturburie bels, and with the barking out of dogs after them, that they make more noise, then if the king came there away, with all his clarions, and many other minstrels. And if these men and women be a moneth out in their pilgrimage, many of them shall be an halfe yeare after, great ianglers, taletellers, and liars.

Well spoken my lord.

And the archbishop said to me: Leaud Iosell, thou liest not far enough in this matter, for thou considerest not the great trauell of pilgrims, therfore thou blamest that thing that is praiseable. I say to thee, that it is right well done, that pilgrims haue with them both fingers and also pipers: that when one of them that goeth barefoote, striketh his toe vpon a stone, and hurteth him sore, and maketh him to bleed: it is well done that he or his fellow begin then a long, or else take out of his bosome a bagpipe, for to driue away with such mirth, the hurt of his fellow. For with such solace, the trauell and wearinesse of pilgrimes, is lightly and merely borne out.

Instruments and musicke of the old testament, how they are to be applied and vsed in the new testament.

And I said: sir, S. Paul teacheth men to weepe with them that weepe.

A new found way to preach by the Bishops making.

And the archbishop said, what ianglest thou against mens deuotion? Whatsoeuer thou or such other say, I say that the pilgrimage that now is vsed, is to them that doe it, a praiseable and a good meane to come the rather to grace. But I hold they vnable to know this grace, for thou enforcest thee to let the deuotion of the people: since by authozite of holy Scripture, men may lefully haue and vse such solace as thou reprouest. For Dauid in his last psalme, teacheth men to haue diuers instruments of musicke for to praise therewith God.

And I said: sir, by the sentence of diuers Doctors expounding the psalmes of Dauid, that musicke and minstrelsie that Dauid and other saints of the old law spake of, ought now nother to be taken nor vsed by the letter, but these instruments with their musicke ought to bee interpreted ghostly: For all those figures are called vertues and grace, with which vertues men should please God, and praise his name. For saint Paul saith all such things befell to them in figure. Therfore sir, I vnderstand, that the letter of this psalme of Dauid and of such other psalmes and sentences doth slay them that take them now litle: ally: This sentence as I vnderstand sir, Christ approueth himselfe, putting out the minstrels, or that he would quicken the dead damsell.

Organs in the church.

And the archbishop said to me: Leud Iosel, is it not lefull to vs to haue Organs in the church for to worship therewithall God? And I said, yea sir, by mans ordinance; but by the ordinance of God, a good sermon to the peoples vnderstanding were mikle more pleasant to God.

And the archbishop said, that Organs and good delectable songs, quickned and sharpened more mens wits then should a ny sermon.

But I said: Sir, lustie men and worldly louers, delight and count and trauell to haue all their wits quickned and sharpened with diuers sensible solace: But all the faithfull louers and followers of Christ, haue all their delight to heare Gods word, and to vnderstand it truely, and to worke thereafter faithfully and continually. For no doubt, to dread to offend God, and to loue to please him in all things quickneth and sharpeneth all the wits of Gods chosen people; and able them so to grace, that they ioy greatly to withdraw their eares and all their wits and members, from all worldly delight, and from all fleshly solace. For saint Hieronime (as I thinke) saith: No body may ioy with this world and reigne with Christ.

And the archbishop, as if he had beene displeased with mine answere, said to his clerks: What gelle ye that this idiot will speake there, where he hath no dred: since he speaketh thus now here in my presence? Well, well, by God thou shalt bee ordained for. And then he spake to me all angerly.

WHat saiest thou to this fourth point, that is certified against thee, preaching openly and boldly in Shrewsbury, that priests haue no title to tithes?

And I said: Sir I named there no word of tithes in my preaching. But more then a moneth after that I was arested: there in prison, a man came to me into the prison, asking me what I said of tithes. And I said to him: Sir, in this towne are many clerks and priests, of which some are called religious men, though many of them be seculars: Therefore aske ye of them this question. And this man said to me: Sir, our prelats say, that we also are obliged to pay our tithes of all things that re true to vs: and that they are accursed that withdraw any part wittingly fro them of their tithes. And I said (sir) to that man, as with my protestation I say now before you: that I wote not that any priest dare say, men to bee accursed, without the ground of Gods word. And the man said: Sir, our priests say, that they curse men thus by the authoritie of Gods law. And I said: Sir, I know not where this sentence of cursing is authorised now in the Bible. And therefore sir, I pray you that ye will aske the most cunning clerke of this towne, that yee may know where this sentence of cursing them that tithe not, is now written in Gods law: for if it were written there, I would right gladly be learned where. But shortly this man would not goe from me to aske this question, of an other body: But required me there, as I would answere before God, if in this case, that cursing of priests were lawfull and approued of God? And shortly herewith came to my mind the learning of saint Peter, teaching priests specially to hallow the Lord Christ in their hearts: being euermore readie (as far as in them is) to answere through faith and hope to them that aske of them a reason. And this lesson Peter teacheth men to vse with a meeke spirit and with dread of the Lord. Therefore sir, I said to this man in this wise: In the old law, which ended not fully, till the time that Christ rose vp againe from death to life, God commanded tithes to be giuen to the Leuites, for the great business and battle trauell that pertained to their office. But priests, because their trauell was milde more easie and light, than was the office of the Leuites: God ordained the priests should take for their liuelode to doe their office, the tenth part of those tithes that were giuen to the Leuites. But now (I said) in the new law, neither Christ nor any of his apostles take tithes of the people nor commanded the people to pay tithes, neither to priests nor to deacons. But Christ taught the people to doe almes, that is, workes of mercie, to poore meeke men of surplus, that is, superfluous of their temporall goods) which they had, more then them needed reasonable to their necessarie liuelode. And thus (I said) not of tithes, but of pure almes of the people, Christ liued and his apostles, when they were so busie in preaching of the word of God to the people, that they might not trauell otherwise for to get their liuelode. But after Christs ascension, and when the apostles had received the holy Ghost, they trauelled with their hands, for to get their liuelode, when that they might thus doe for busie preaching. Therefore by example of himselfe, S. paul teacheth all the priests of Christ for to trauell with their hand, when for busie teaching of the people they might thus doe. And thus, all these priests whose priesthood God accepteth now, or will accept, or did in the apostles time, and after their decease: will doe to the worlds end. But (as Cisterciensis telleth) in the thousand yeare of our Lord Iesus Christ 1111. yeare, one pope Gregorie the tenth ordained new tithes first to bee giuen to priests now in the new law. But saint Paul in his time, whose race or example all Priests of God enforce them to follow, seeing the couetousnesse that was among the people, desiring to destroy the foule sinne through the grace of God and true vertuous liuing and example of himselfe: wrought and taught all priests for to follow him as he followed Christ, patiently, willingly and gladlie in high pouerte: Therefore Paul saith thus: The Lord hath ordained that they that preach the Gospell, shall liue of the Gospell. But we (saith Paul) that couet and busie vs to be faithfull followers of Christ, we not this power. For to (as Paul witnesseth afterward) when he was full poore and needie, preaching among the people he was not chargeous vnto them, but with his handes he trauelled not onely to get his owne liuing, but also the liuing of other poore and needie creatures. And since the people was neuer so couetous, nor so snarous I gesse (as they are now) it were good counsell that all priests take good heed to this heauenlie learning of Paul, following him here in wilfull pouertie, nothing charging the people for their bodilie liuelode. But because that many priests be contrarie to Paul in this foresaid doctrine, Paul bidde th the people take heed to those priests that follow him as he had giuen them example. As if Paul would say thus to the people: Accept yee none other Priests then they, that liue after the forme that I haue taught you. For certaine, in what soeuer dignitie or order that any priest is in, if hee conforme him not to follow Christ and his apostles in wilfull pouertie, and in other heauenly vertues, and specially in true preaching of Gods word: though such a one be named a priest, yet he is no more but a priest in name, for the worke of a verie priest, in such a one wanteth. This sentence approueth Augustine, Gregorie, Chrysostome, and Lincolne plainely.

And the archbishop said to me: Thinkest thou this wholesome learning for to solue openly, or yet priuilie among the people? Certaine, this doctrine contrarieth plainely the ordinance of holie fathers, which haue ordained, granted, and licenced priests to be in diuers degrees, and to liue by tithes and offrings of the people, and by other duties.

And I said: sir, if priests were now in measurable measure and number, and liued vertuouslie, and taught builtie and truelie the word of God, by example of Christ and of his apostles, without tithes, offerings, and other duties that priests now challenge and take: the people would giue them freely sufficient liuelode.

And a clerke said to me: How wilt thou make this good, that the people will giue freelie to priests their liuelode; since that now by the lawe euerie priest can scarcelie constraine the people to giue them their liuelode?

And I said: sir, it is now no wonder though the people grudge to giue priests the liuelode that they aske: Priest people know now, how that priests should liue, and how that they liue contrarie to Christ & to his apostles. And therfore the people is full heauie to pay (as they do) their temporall goods to parsons and vnto other vicars and priests, which should be faithfull dispensators of the parishes goods: taking to themselues no more, but a scarce liuing of tithes, nor of offrings, by the ordinance of the common law. For what soeuer priests take of the people (be it tithe or offring, or any other dutie or seruice) the priests ought not to haue therof no more, but a bare liuing, and to depart the residue to the poore men and women specially of the parish of whom they take this temporall liuing. But the most deale of priests now waste th their parishes goods, and spendeth them at their owne will after the world, in their baine lusts: So that in few places poore men haue direly (as they should haue) their owne sustenance, nother of tithes nor of offrings, nor of other large wages and foundations that priests take of the people in diuers maners aboue that they nede for needefull sustenance of meate and clothing: But the poore needie people are forsaken & left of priests to be sustained of the parishioners, as if the priests took nothing of the parishioners to help the people with.

And thus sir, into our great charges of the parishioners they pay their temporall goods twice, where once might suffice, if priests were true dispensators. Also sir, the parishioners that pay their temporall goods (be they tithes or offrings) to priests that do not their office among them iustly are partners of euerie sinne of those priests: because that they sustaine those priests follie in their sin, with their temporall goods. If these things bee well considered: what wonder is it then sir, if the parishioners grudge against these dispensators?

Then the archbishop said to me: Thou that shouldest bee iudged and ruled by holy church, ye sumptuouslie thou deemest holie church to haue erred in the ordinance of tithes and other duties to be payed to priests. It shall be long ere thou thrine Lord, that thou despisest thy ghostly mother. How darest thou speake this (I said) among the people? Are not tithes giuen to priests for to liue by?

And I said: sir, saint Paul saith, that tithes were giuen in the old law to Leuites and to priests, that came of the linage of Leui. But our priests be saith, came not of the linage of Leui, but of the linage of Iuda, to which Iuda no tithes were promised to be giuen. And therefore Paul saith, since the priesthood is changed from the generation of Leui to the generation of Iuda: it is necessarie that changing also bee made of the law. So that priests line now without tithes and other duetie that they claime, following Christ and his apostles in wilfull pouerty, as they haue giuen them example. For since Christ lined (all the time of his preaching) by pure almes of the people: and by example of him, his apostles lined in the same wise, or else by the trauel of their hands, as it is said aboue: euerie priest, whose priesthood Christ approueth, knoweth well, and confesseth in word and in worke, that a disciple ought not to be aboue his master, but it sufficeth to a disciple to bee as his master, simple, and pure, meeke and patient: and by example specially of his master Christ, euery priest should rule him in al his liuing: & so after his cunning and power, a priest should busie him to enforme and to rule, whomsoeuer he might charitablie.

And the archbishop said to me with a great spirit, Gods curse haue thou and mine for this teaching: for thou wouldest hereby make the old law more free & perfect then the new law. For thou saiest that it is lefull to Leuites and to priests to take tithes in the old law, and so to enioy their priuiledges: but to bs priests in the new law, thou saiest it is not lawfull to take tithes: and thus thou giuest to Leuites of the old law, more freedome then to priests of the new law.

And I said: sir, I marueil that yee vnderstand this plaine text of Paul thus. Ye wot well, that the Leuites and priests in the old law that take tithes, were not so free nor so perfect, as Christ and his apostles that take no tithes. And sir, there is a Doctor, I thinke that it is saint Hierome, that saith thus: The priests that challenge now in the new law, tithes; say in effect, that Christ is not become man, nor that he hath yet suffered death for mans loue. Wherefore this Doctor saith this sentence: Since tithes were the hires and wages limited to Leuites and to priests of the old law for bearing about of the tabernacle, and for slaying and sleing of beasts, and for burning of sacrifice, and for keeping of the temple, and for tromping of battell before the host of Israel, and other diuers obseruances that pertained to their office: those priests that will challenge or take tithes, denie that Christ is come in the flesh, and doe the priests office of the old law, for whom tithes were granted: for else (as this Doctor saith) priests take now tithes wrongfully.

And the archbishop said to his clerkes: Heard you euer Lofel speake thus? Certaine this is the learning of them all, that where soeuer they come, and they may be suffered, they enforce them to expugne the freedome of holy church.

And I said: sir, why call ye the taking of tithes, and of such other duties that priests challenge now (wrongfully) the freedome of holy church: since neither Christ nor his apostles, challenged nor take such duties? Wherefore these takings of priests now are not called iustly the freedome of holy church, but all such gruing and taking ought to be called and holden, the flanderous couetousnesse of men of the holy church.

And the archbishop said to me: Thy Lofell, wilt not thou and other that are confederat with the, forbeare out of holy Scripture and of the sense of Doctors, all sharpe authorities against lords, knights, and squires, and against other secular men, as thou doest against priests?

And I said: sir, what soeuer men or women, lords or ladies, or any other that are present in our preaching specially, or in our commoning, after our cunning, we tell out to them their office and their charges: But sir, since Chrysostome saith, that priests are the stomacke of the people, it is needfull in preaching, and also in commoning, to be most busie about this priesthood: Since by the vitiousnesse of priests both lords and commons are most sinfully infected and led into the worst. And because that the couetousnesse of priests and pride, and the boast that they haue and make of their dignitie and power: defaceth not onely the vertues of priesthod in priests themselues, but also ouer this, it sheereth God to take great vengeance both vpon the lords, and vpon the commons, which suffer these priests charitable.

And the archbishop said to me: Thou iudgest euery priest proud that will not goe arraied as thou doest: by God I deeme him to be more meeke that goeth euery day in a scarlet gowne, then thou in thy third-hare blew gowne. Whereby knowest thou a proud man?

And I said: sir, a proud priest may be knowne, when he deniethe to follow Christ and his apostles, in wilfull pouertie and other vertues: and coueteth worldly worship, and taketh it gladlie, and gathereth together with pleading, manasling, or with flattering, or with simonie any worldly goods: And most, if a priest busie him not chiefly in himselfe, and after in all other men and women after his cunning & power to withstand sin.

And the archb. said to me: Though thou knewest a priest to haue all these vices, and though thou sawest a priest louely lie now by a woman knowing her fleshly: wouldest thou therfore denme this priest damnable? I say to thee that in the turning about of thy hand, such a sinner may be verily repented.

And I said: sir, I will not damne any man for any sinne that I know done or may bee done, so that the sinner leaueth his sinne. But by authoritie of holy Scripture, he that sinneth thus openly as ye shew here, is damnable for doing of such a sin: and most specially a priest that should be example to all other for to hate and flie sinne. And in how short time that euer ye say that such a sinner may be repented: he ought not of him that knoweth his sinning, to be iudged verily repentant, without open euidence of great shame and heartie sorie for sinne. For two thinges euer (and specially a priest) that vseth pride, enuie, couetousnesse, lecherie, simonie, or any other vices; the which not as open euidence of repentance as hee hath y wont: will example and occasion of sinning if he continue in any such sinne as long as he may: it is likely that sinne leaueth him, and he not sinne. And as I vnderstand, such a one sinneth vnto death, for whom no body oweth to pray, as saint John saith.

And a clerke said then to the archbishop: sir, the lenger that ye appose him, the worse he is: and the more ye busie you to a mend him, the waywarder he is. For he is of so thrward a kind that he chaunceth not onely to be himselfe a foule neil, but without shame he busieth him to make his nest fouler.

And then the archbishop said to his clerke: Smeer a while; for I am at an end with him, for there is another point certified against him, and I will heare what he saith thereto.

And so then he said to me: Loe it is here certified against thee that thou preachest openly at Shrewsburie, that it is not lawfull to sweare in any case.

And I said: sir, I preached neuer so openly, nor I haue taught in this wise in any place. But sir, as I preached in Shrewsburie, with my protestation I say to you now here: that by the authoritie of the Gospel of saint Iames, and by writings of diuers saints and doctors: I haue preached openly in one place or other, that it is not lefull in any case to sweare by any creature. And ouer this sir, I haue also preached and taught by the foresaid authorities: that no body should sweare in any case, if that without oth in any wise hee that is charged to sweare might excuse him to them that haue power to compell him to sweare, in lefull thing and lawfull. But if a man may not excuse him without oth, to them that haue power to compell him to sweare, then he ought to sweare onely by God, taking him only, that is, sothfastnesse, for to witnesse to sothfastnesse.

And then a clerke asked me if it were not lefull to a subiect at the bidding of his prelate, for to kneele downe and touch the holy Gospell booke, and kisse it, saying: So helpe me God and this holy booke: for he should after his cunning and power do all things that his prelate commandeth him.

And I said to them: sirs, ye speake here full generally or largely. That if a prelate commaunded his subiect to doe an vnlawfull thing: should he obey thereto?

And the archbishop said to me: A subiect ought not to suppose, that his prelate will bid him doe an vnlawfull thing. For a subiect ought to thinke that his prelate will bid him doe nothing but that hee will answere for before God, that it is lefull: And then, though the bidding of the prelate be vnlawfull, the subiect hath no perill to fulfill it, since that he thinketh and iudgeth, that that soeuer thing his prelate biddeth him doe, that it is lefull to him for to do it.

And I said: sir I trust not thereto. But to our purpose: Sir, I tell you, that I was once in a gentlemans house, and there were then two clerkes there, a maister of diuinitie, and a man of law, which man of law was also communing in diuinitie. And among other things, these men spake of othes, and the man of law said: at the bidding of his soueraigne, which had power to charge him to sweare, hee would lay his hand vpon a booke, and heare his charge: and if his charge to his bounden standing were vnlefull hee would haltily withdraw his hand vpon the booke, taking there onely God to witnesse, that hee would fulfill that lefull charge, after his power. And the maister of diuinitie said then to him thus: Certaine, hee that layeth his hand vpon a booke in this wise, and maketh there a promise to do that thing that he is commanded; is obliged there by by a booke oth, then to fulfill his charge. For no doubt, he that chargeth him to lay his hand thus vpon a booke (touching the booke, and sweating by it, and kissing it, promising in this forme to doe this thing or that) will say and witnesse, that hee that toucheth thus a booke, and kisseth it, hath sworne vpon that booke. And all other men that see that man thus doe, and also all those that heare hereof, in the same wise will say and witnesse, that this man hath sworne vpon a booke. Wherefore, the maister of diuinitie said, it was not lefull neither to giue nor to take any such charge vpon a booke: for euery booke is nothing else, but diuers creatures, of which it is made of. Therefore to sweare vpon a booke, is to sweare by creatures. And this swearing is euer vnlefull. This sentence witnesseth Chrysostome plainely, blaming them greatly that bring forth a booke for to sweare vpon, charging clerkes that in no wise they constraine any body to sweare, whether they thinke a man to sweare true or false.

And the archbishop and his clerkes scorned me, and blamed me greatly for this saying. And the archbishop manalled me with great punishment and harpe, except I left this opinion of swearing.

And I said: sir, this is not mine opinion, but it is the opinion of Christ our Sauiour, and of saint Iames, and of Chrysostome, and of other diuers saints and doctors.

Then the archbishop bad a clerke reade this homilie of Chrysostome: which homilie, this clerke held in his hand written in a roll: which roll the archbishop caused to be taken from my fellow at Canterburie. And so then this clerke read this roll, till he came to a clause where Chrysostome saith, that it is sin to sweare well.

And then a clerke (Malureen, as I gesse) said to the archbishop: sir, I pray you wote of him, how he vnderstandeth Chrysostome here, saying it to be sin to sweare well.

And so the archbishop asked me, how I vnderstood here Chrysostome.

And certaine, I was sometime affraid to answere hereto:

Christ permitteth simple and plaineth mouth and vtterance.

For I had bulled me to studie about the sense thereof, but lifting vp my mind to God, I prayed him of grace. And as fast as, I thought how Christ said to his apostles: When ye my name ye shall be brought before iudges, I shall giue into your mouth, wisedome that your aduersaries shall not against say. And trusting faithfully in the word of God, I said: sir, I know well that many men and women, haue now swearing so in customs, that they know not, nor will not know, that they do euill to sweare as they doe: But they thanke and say, that they doe well for to sweare as they do, though they know well that they sweare vntruely. For they say, they may by their swearing (though it be falle) bode blame or temporall harme, which they should haue if they sweare not thus. And sir, many men and women maintaine strongly that they sweare well, when that thing is soth that they sweare for. Also full many men and women say now, that it is well done to sweare by creatures, when they may not, as they say, otherwise be beleued. And also, full many men and women now say, that it is well done to sweare by God, and by our Ladie, and by other saints, for to haue them in minde. But since al these sayings are but recreations, and saine: me thinketh sir, that this sense of Chrysostome may be alleaged well against all such swearers: witnessing that all these saine grieuousnesse, though they thinke themselues for to sweare it this foresaid wise, well: For it is euill done, and great sin for to sweare truth, when in any maner a man may excuse himselfe without oth.

The place of Chrysostome expounded, by how it is lawfull to sweare well. What it is to Forsweare well.

And the archbishop said, that Chrysostome might bee thus vnderstood.

And then a clerke said to me: wilt thou tarrie my lord no longer, but submit thee here meekely to the ordinance of holy church, and lay thy hand vpon a booke, touching the holy Gospel of God, promising not onely with thy mouth, but also with thine heart to stand to my lordes ordinance?

Pope holy church.

And I said: sir, haue I not told you here, how that I heard a maister of Diuinitie say: that in such case it is all one to touch a booke, and to sweare by a booke?

To touch a booke is to sweare by a booke.

And the archbishop said: There is no maister of Diuinity in England so great, that if he hold this opinion before me, but I shall punish him as I shall doe the, except thou sweare as I shall charge thee.

And I said: sir, is not Chrysostome an ententife Doctor? And the archbishop said, yea.

Chrysostome an ententife Doctor and did of Constance.

And I said: if Chrysostome proueth him worthie great blame, that bringeth forth a booke to sweare vpon: it must needs follow, that hee is more to blame that sweareth on that booke.

It is lawfull that Christ-sense to sweare not if it be vtterly be vsed in time and place by the booke. Matthew vsed cannot be confuted. Therefore it is not to forsweare.

And the archbishop said: if Chrysostome meant accordingly to the ordinance of holy church, we will accept him.

And then said a clerke to me: Is not the word of God and God himselfe equipollent, that is, of one authoritie?

And I said, yea.

Then he said to me, why wilt thou not sweare then by the Gospell of God, that is, Gods word, since it is alone to sweare by the word of God and by God himselfe?

And I said: sir, since I may not now other wise be beleued, but by swearing: I perceiue (as Austine saith) that it is not spedefull that ye that should be my brethren should not beleue me: therefore I am redie by the word of God (as the Lord commanded me by his word) to sweare.

Then the clerke said to me: Lay then thine hand vpon the booke, touching the holie Gospell of God and take thy charge.

And I said: sir, I vnderstand that the holy Gospell of God may not be touched with mans hand.

And the clerke said I lerned, and that I said not truth.

And I asked this clerke, whether it were more to reade the Gospell then to touch the Gospell.

And he said, it was more to reade the Gospell.

Whether the booke be the Gospell. Whether saith the Gospell is not the Gospell for reading of the letter, but for the beleefe that men haue in the word of God. That it is the Gospell that we beleeue, and not the letter that we reade: for because the letter that is touched with mans hand, is not the Gospell, but the sentence that is verily beleeued in mans heart, is the Gospell. For: S. Hierome saith: The Gospell, that is the vertue of Gods word, is not in the leaues of the booke, but it is in the tree of reason. Neither the Gospell he saith, is in the writing aboue of the letters, but the Gospell is in the marking of the sentence of Scriptures. This sentence approueth S. Paul, saying thus: The kingdome of God is not in word, but in vertue. And Dauid saith: The voice of the Lord, that is, his word, is in vertue. And after Dauid saith: Through the word of God the heauens were formed, and in the spirit of his mouth is all the vertue of them. And I pray you sir, vnderstand you well how Dauid saith: then in the spirit of the mouth of the Lord, is all the vertue of angels and of men.

Dauid.

This clerke was wyll learned in the Bible booke.

And the clerke said to me: Thou wouldest make vs to fond with thee. Say we not that the Gospell is written in the Masse booke?

And I said: sir, though men vse to say thus, yet it is an vnperfect speech. For the principall part of a thing is properly the whole thing. For lo, mans soule that may not now bee seene here nor touched with any sensible thing, is properly man. And all the vertue of a tree is in the root therof that may not be seene, for doe away the rote, and the tree is destroyed. And sir, as ye said to me right now, God and his word are of one authoritie: And sir, saint Hierome witnesseth, that Christ (very God and very man) is vp in the letter of the law: thus also sir, the Gospell is vp in the letter. For sir, as it is full likely many diuers men and women here in the earth, touched Christ and saw him, and knew his bodily person, which neither touched, nor saw, nor knew ghostly his godhead: right thus sir, many men now touch and see, and write, and reade the Scriptures of Gods law, which neither see, touch nor reade effectually the Gospell. For as the godhead of Christ (that is, the vertue of God) is knowne by the vertue of beleefe, so is the Gospell, that is Christs word.

The Gospell is not the letter, but vp in the letter.

And a clerke said to me: These be full mickle matters and vnlaweie that thou shewest here to vs.

Mickle matters for your blind eyes.

And I said: sir, if ye that are masters, know not plainely this sentence, ye may lose bread that the kingdome of heauen be taken from you, as it was from the princes of priests and from the elders of the Iewes.

And then a clerke, as I gesse, Malverew, said to me: Thou knowest not thine equiuocations: for the kingdome of heauen hath diuers vnderstandings. What calleth thou the kingdome of heauen in this sentence, that thou shewest here?

The kingdome of God taken for the vnderstanding of Gods word. This saie was somewhat rob sharpe for, their rotten flesh to abide.

And I said: sir, by good reason and sentence of Doctors the realm of heauen is called here, the vnderstanding of Gods word.

And a clerk said to me: From whom hinkest thou that this vnderstanding is taken away?

And I said: sir, by authoritie of Christ himselfe; the effectuall vnderstanding of Christs word is taken away from all them chiefly, which are great lettered men, and presume to vnderstand high things, and will be holden wise men, and desire mastership and high state and dignitie: but they will not consome them to the liuing & teaching of Christ & of his apostles.

Then the archbishop said: Well, well, thou wilt iudge thy soueraignes. Iby God, the king doth not his dutie, but he suffer thee to be condemned.

And then another clerke said to me: Why (on friday that last was) confessedst thou a man of my lords, that hee should not shriue him to no man but onely to God?

Peter denied Christ with his fellow John.

And with this asking I was abashed: And then by and by I knew that I was subtillie betraied of a man that came to me in prison on the friday before, communing with me in this matter of confession. And certaine, by his words I thought, that this man came then to me of full feruent and charitable will: But now I know he came to tempt me and to accuse me; God forgiue him if it be his will. And with all my heart then I had thought thus, I said to this clerke: Sir, I pray you that ye would fetch this man hither: and all the words as neare as I can repeate them, which that I spake to him, on friday in the prison, I will cheerfully now here before you al, and before him.

Note here the exacte practise of this holy church.

And (as I gesse) the archdeacon said then to me: They that are now here, suffice to repeat them. Holy faidst thou to him?

A false brother.

And I said: sir, that man came and asked me in diuers things, and after his asking, I answered him (as I vnderstood) that god was: And as he shewed to me by his words, he was one of his liuing in court, and right heauie for his owne vicious liuing, and also for the viciousnes of other men, and specially of priests euill liuing: and herefore he said to me with a sorowfull heart (as I gessed) that hee purposed fully within short time for to leaue the court, and to busy him to know Gods law, and to confesse all his life thereafter. And when hee had said to me these words and moe other which I would to heartie and he were present, he prayed me to heare his confession. And I said to him: sir, wherefore come ye to me, to bee confessed of me? ye wote well that the archbishop putteth and holdeth mee here, as one vnworthy either to giue or to take any Sacrament of holy church.

Auricular confession.

And he said to me: Brother I wote well, and so wote many other moe, that you and such other are wrongfully verst, and therfore I commune with you the more gladly. And I said to him: Certaine I wote well that many men of this court, and specially the priests of this household would be full euill apaid both with you and me, if they will that ye were confessed of me. And he said, that he cared not therefore, for he had full little affection in them: And as me thought, hee spake these words and many other, of so good will and of so high desire, for to haue knowne and done the pleasant will of God. And I said to him, as with my foresaid protestation I say to you now here: sir, I counsell you, for to absent you from al cuil companie, & to draw you to them that loue and buske them to know and to keepe the precepts of God: And then the good spirit of God will moue you for to occupie busily all your wits in gathering together of all your sins, as far as ye can bethinke you, thanking greatly of them and sorowing heartily for them: Yea sir, the holy Ghost will then put in your heart a good will and a feruent desire for to take and to hold a good purpose, to hate euer: & to flie, (after your cunning and power) all occasion of sinne: and so then, wisedome shall come to you from aboue, lightening (with diuers beames of grace and of heauenly pesire) all your wits, enfouning you how ye shall trust stedfastly in the mercy of the Lord knowknowledging to him onely all your vicious liuing, praying to him euer deuoutly of charitable counsell and continuance, hoping without doubt, that if yee continue thus, busping you faithfully to know and to keepe his biddings, that he will (for he onely may) forgiue you all your sins. And this man said to me: Though God forgiue men their sinnes, yet it behoueth men to be assoiled of priests, and to doe the penance that they enioyne them.

And I said to him: sir, it is all one to assoile men of their sinnes, and to forgiue men their sinnes. Wherefore since it pertaineth onely to God to forgiue sinne: it sufficeth in this case, to counsell men and women for to leaue their sinne, and to comfort them that busie them thus to do, for to hope stedfastly in the mercy of God. And againe ward, priests ought to tell sharpely to customable sinners, that if they will not make an end of their sinne, but continue in diuers sinnes while that they may sinne, all such deserue paine without any end. And herefore, priests should euer busie them to liue well and holily, and to teach the people busily and truely the word of God, shewing to all folke in open preaching and in priuie counselling, that the Lord God onely forgiueth sinne. And therfore, those priests that take vpon them to assoile men of their sinnes, blaspheme God: since that it pertaineth onely to the Lord, to assoile men of all their sinnes. For no doubt a thousand yeare after that Christ was man, no priest of Christ durst take vpon him to teach the people, neither priuily nor apertly, that they behoued needes to come to be assoiled of them, as priests now doe. But by authoritie of Christs word, priests bound indurate customable sinners to euerlasting paines, which in no time of their liuing would busie them faithfully to know the biddings of God, nor to keepe them. And againe, all they that would occupy all their wits to hate and to flie all occasion of sin, dreading ouer all things to offend God, and louing for to please him continually: to these men and women priests shewed how the Lord assoiled them of all their sinnes; and thus Christ promised to confirme in heauen, all the binding and loosing that priests by authoritie of his word, bind men in sin that are indurate therein, or loose them out of sin here vpon earth, that are verily repentant. And this man hearing these words said, that he might well in conscience consent to this sentence. But hee said: Is it not needefull to the lay people that cannot thus doe, to goe shrieue them to priests? And I said, If a man feele himselfe so disrobled with any sinne, that he cannot by his owne wit auoide this sin without counsell of them that are herein wiser then he: in such a case, the counsell of a good priest is full necessarie. And if a good priest faile, as they do now commonly, in such a case, saint Augustine saith, that a man may lawfully commune and take himself of a vertuous secular man. But certaine, that man or woman is ouerladen and too beastly, which cannot bring their owne sinnes into their mind, busping them night and day for to hate and to forsake all their sins, doing a figh for them after their cunning and power. And sir, full accordingtie to this sentence vpon Midlent Sundap (two yeare as I gesse now agone) I heard a monke of Feuersham, that men called Morden, preach at Canterburie at the crosse within Christ church abbey, saying thus of confession: That as though the suggestion of the feend without counsell of any other body, of themselues many men and women can imagine and find meanes and waies enough to come to pride, to theft, to lecherie, and other diuers vices: in contrariwise this monke said, Since the Lord God is more readie to forgiue sinne then the feend is or may be of power, to moue any body to sinne: then whosoeuer will shame and sorow heartily for their sins, knowledging them faithfully to God, amending them after their power and cunning, without counsell of any other body then of God and of himselfe (though the grace of God) all such men and women may find sufficient meanes to come to Gods mercy, and for to be cleane assoiled of all their sinnes. This sentence I said for to this man of yours, and the selfe words as neere as I can gesse.

A good secular man may be counsellor, but not a priest lasted, by S. Augustine.

Modern monk of Feuersham preaching of confession.

Hearty repentance to God needeth no confession to a priest.

And the archbishop said: Holy Church approueth not this learning.

No new thing els that is good.

And I said, sir, holy church of which Christ is head in heauen and in earth, must needs approue this sentence. For loe, hereby all men and women may, if they will, be sufficiently taught to know and keepe the commandements of God, and to hate and to flie continually all occasion of sinne, and to loue and to seeke vertues busilie, and to beleeue in God stablie, and to trust in his mercie stedfastly, and so to come to perfect charity and continue therin perseuerantly. And more ouer the Lord assureth not of any man here now in this life. And certaine, since Jesu Christ died vpon the crosse busilly to make men free: men of the church are to bold and to busie, to make men thrall, binding them vnder the paine of endles curse (as they say) to doe many obseruances and ordinances, which neither the liuing nor teaching of Christ nor of his apostles approueth.

Shrift gluerth freedome, the pope gluerth thraldome.

And a clerke said then to me: Thou shewest plainely here thy deceit, which thou hast learned of them that trauell to sow the popple among the wheat. But I counsell thee to goe away cleane from this learning, and submit thee lowly to my Lord, and thou shalt find him yet to be gratious to thee.

And as fast then, an other clerke said to me: How walt thou to bold at Pauls Crosse in London, to stand there hard with thy tippet bounden about thine heade, and to repeate in his sermon the worthie clerke Aikerton, drawing away all that thou mightest: yea, and the same day at after noone, thou meeting the worthie Doctor in Watlingstreet, calledst him false flatterer and hypocrite.

And I said: sir, I thinke certainely that there was no man nor woman that hated verily sinne, and loued vertues (hearing the sermon of the clerke at Oxford, and also Aikertons sermon) but they said or might iustly say, that Aikerton reproued that clerke vntruly, and slandered him wrongfully and vncharitablie. For no doubt: if the liuing and teaching of Christ chiefly and of his apostles bee true, no body that loueth God and his law, will blame any sentence that the clerke then preached there: since by authority of Gods word, & by approued Saints and Doctors, and by open reason, this clerke approued all things clerely that he preached there.

And a clerke of the archbishops said to me, his sermon was false, and that hee the weth openly, since hee dare not stand forth and defend his preaching that he then preached there.

And I said: sir, I thinke that he purposeth to stand stedfastly thereby, or else he slandereth foully himselfe, and also many other that haue great trust that hee will stand by the truth of the Gospell. For I wote well, this sermon is written both in Latine and English, and many men haue it and they set great price thereby. And sir: If yee were present with the archbishop at Lambeth when this clerke appeared and was at his answer before the archbishop, ye wote well that this clerke denied not there his sermon, but two daies hee maintained it before the archbishop and his clerks.

And then the archbishop or one of his clerks said (I wote not which of them) that harlot shall bee met with, for that sermon. For no man but he and thou, and such other false harlots, praiseth any such preaching.

And then the archbishop said: Pour cursed sect is busie, and it openly right greatly to contrary and to destroy the priuiledge and freedome of holy church.

The true freedome of holy church not destroyed but increased by true preachers.

And I said sir, I know no men that trauell so busilie as they sect doth (which you reproue) to make rest and peace in holy church. For pride, couetousnesse, and simonie, which dissrouble most holy church; this sect hateth and sleeth, and trauelleth busilie to moue all other men in like maner, vnto meeknesse and wilfull pouertie, and charitie, and free ministring of the Sacraments: this sect loueth and vseth, and is full busie to moue all other folks thus to doe. For these vertues, owe all members of holy church, to their head Christ.

Then a clerke said to the archbishop: sir, it is farre daies, and we haue farre to ride to night; therefore make an end with him, for he will none make: but the more sir, that ye busie you for to draw him toward you, the more contumace he is made and the further fro you.

Take my lord blessing and haue vp.

And then Malverew said to me: William, kneele downe, and pray my lord of grace, and leaue all thy fantasies, and become a child of holy church.

And I said: sir, I haue prayed the archbishop oft, and yet I pray him for the loue of Christ, that hee will leaue his indignation that he hath against me: and that he will suffer me after my cunning and power, for to doe mine office of priesthood, as I am charged of God to doe it. For I couet nought else but to serue my God to his pleasing in the state that I stand in, and haue taken me to.

And the archbishop said to me: If of good heart thou wilt submit thee now here meekely, to be ruled from this time forth by my counsell, obeying meekely and wilfully to my ordinance, thou shalt find it most profitable and best to thee for to do thus. Therefore tarrie thou me no longer, grant to doe this that I haue laid to thee now here shortly, or deny it vtterly.

My lord hath bulled for being benighted.

And I said to the archbishop: sir, owe wee to beleeue that Jesu Christ was and is, very God and very man?

And the archbishop said, yea.

And I said: sir, owe we to beleeue that all Christs liuing and his teaching is true in euery point?

And he said, yea.

And I said: sir, owe we to beleeue that the liuing of the apostles, and the teaching of Christ, and all the prophets, are true which are written in the Bible, for the health and saluation of good people?

And he said, yea.

And I said: sir, owe all christian men and women after their cunning and power, for to conforme all their liuing, to the teaching specially of Christ, and also to the teaching and liuing of his apostles and of prophets, in things that areplea-sant to God, and edification of his church?

And he said, yea.

And I said: sir, aught the doctrine, the bidding, or the counsell of any body, to be accepted or obeyed vnto; except this doctrine, these biddings or this counsell, may be granted and affirmed by Christs liuing and his teaching specially, or by the liuing and teaching of his apostles and prophets?

And the archbishop said to me: Other doctrine ought not to bee accepted, nor wee owe not to obey to any mans bidding or counsell, except we can perceiue that his bidding or counsell,

And why commeth you this man to the contrarie?

according with the life and teaching of Christ, and of his apostles and prophets.

Thorpe commeth to the bishop his life to examine and counsell.

And I said: sir, is not all the learning, and biddings and counsels of holy church, meanes and healefull remedies, to know and to withstand the privie suggestions, and the apert temptations of the fiend: and also waies and healefull remedies, to slap pride and all other deadly sinnes, and the branches of them, and soueraigne meanes to purchase grace for to withstand and ouercome all the fleshly lusts and mouings.

And the archbishop said, yea.

And I said: sir, what soeuer thing ye or any other body bid or counsell me to doe, according to this foresaid learning, after my cunning and power, through the helpe of God, I will meekely with all my heart obey thereto.

And the archbishop said to me: Submit thee then now here meekely and willfully, to the ordinance of holy church, which I shall shew to thee.

And I said: sir, accordingly as I haue here now before you rehearsed, I will now be readie to obey full gladly to Christ the head of the holy church, and to the learning and biddings and counsels of euery pleasing member of him.

If Thorpe had been there, he would not haue taken them vp cupboord.

Then the archbishop striking with his hand secretly vpon a cupbord, spake to me with a great spirit saying: By Jesu, but if thou leaue not such additions, obliging thee now here without any exception to mine ordinance (or that I goe out of this place) I shall make thee as sure, as any theefe that is in the pin fan of Lanterne: aduise thee now what thou wilt doe. And then as if he had beene angred, hee went fro the cupbord where hee stood, to a window.

The multitude is not to be followed in euill.

And then Malueren and an other clerke came nearer me, and they bade to me many words full pleasantly, and an other while they manaced me, and counselled full busilie to submit me, or else they said I should not escape punishing ouer measure: for they said, I should be degraded, cursed, and burned, and so then damned. But now they said, thou maiest eschew all these mischiefes, if thou wilt submit thee willfully and meekely to this worthie prelate, that hath cure of thy soule. And for the pittie of Christ said they) bethinke thee, how great clerks the bishop of Lincolne, Herford, and Purucy were, and yet are, and also Sir, that is a well vnderstanding man. Which also haue forsaken and troubled all the learning and opinions, that they and such other hold. Therefore, since each of them is milde twise then thou art, we counsell thee for the best: that by the example of these foure clerks, thou follow them, submitting thee as they did.

Sore what man he is, God giueng him thy so thinkelle.

And one of the bishops clerks said then there, that he heard Nicol. Herford say: that since he forsooke and trucked all the learning and Lollards opinions, he hath had mikle greater fauour and more delight to hold against them, then euer hee had to hold with them, while he held with them.

Malueleane fleam thinke as seem time.

And therefore Malueren said to me: I vnderstand and thou wilt take the to a priest, and forsake thee cleane, forsake all such opinions, and take the penance of my lad here, for the holding and teaching of them: within short time, thou shalt bee greatly comforted in this doing.

And I said to the clerks, that thus busilie counselled me to fellow these foresaid men: Sirs, if these men of whom ye counsell me to take example, had forsaken benefices of temporall profit, and of worldly worship, so that they had absented them, and eschewed from all occasions of couetousnesse and of fleshly lust, and had taken vpon them simple liuing, and willfull pouertie: they had herein giuen good example to me and to many other, to haue followed them. But naie, since all these foure men, haue slanderously and shamefully done the contrarie, consenting to receiue and to haue and to hold temporall benefices, liuing now more worldly, and more fleshly then they did before, conforming them to the maners of this world: I forsake them herein, and in all their foresaid slanderous doing. For I purpose with the helpe of God (into remission of my sinnes, and of my soule cursed liuing) to hate and to flee priuily and openly, to follow these men, teaching and counselling whomsoeuer that I may, for to flee and to eschew the way that they haue chosen to goe in, which well leade them to the worst end, (if in conuenient time they repent them not) verily forsaking and renoking openly the slander that they haue put, and euery day yet put, to Christs church. For certaine, so open blasphemy and slander as they haue spoken and done, in their renoking and forsaking of the truth, ought not nor may not priuily be amended, duly. Wherefore sirs, I pray you that you busse not for to moue me to follow these men, in renoking and forsaking the truth, and loathfulnes as they haue done, and yet do: wherein by open euidence they flire God to great wroth, and not onely against themselues, but also against all them that fauor them, or consent to them herein, or that communely with them, except it be for their amendment. For whereas these men first were pursued of enemies, now they haue obliged them by oth for to slander and pursue Christ in his members. Therefore (as I trust stedfastly in the goodnesse of God) the worldly couetousnesse, and the lustie liuing and the sliding from the truth of these runagates; shall be to me and to many other men and women, an example and an euidence, to stand more stiffie by the truth of Christ.

Other men ex-amples are for to be followed, and they here forsaken of Christ.

For certaine, right many men and women do marke and abhor the foulenesse and couardnesse of these foresaid untrue men, how that they are ouercome and stopped with benefices, and withdrawne from the truth of Gods word, forsaking directly to suffer therefore bodily persecution. For by this vnfaithfull doing and apostasie of them (specially that are great lettered men) and haue knowledged openly the truth: and now (either for pleasure or displeasure of tyrants, haue taken hire and temporall wages to forsake the truth, and to hold against it, slandering and pursuing them that court to follow Christ in the way of righteousnes, many men and women therefore are now moued. But many moe thorow the grace of God, shall be moued herby for to learne the truth of God, to doe thereafter, and to stand boldly thereby.

Then the archbishop said to his clerks: Waste you no longer about him, for he and other such as he is, are conformed together that they will not sweare to be obedient, and to submit them to prelats of holy church. For now since I stood here, his fellow also sent me word that he will not sweare, and that this fellow counselled him that he should not sweare to me. And lo sell, in that thing that in thee is, thou hast bulled thee to lose this young man, but blessed be God, thou shalt not haue thy purpose of him. For he hath forsaken all the learning, submitting him to bee buxum and obedient to the ordinance of holy church, and inespeth full bitterly, and curseth the full heartily for the beneomous teaching which thou hast shewed to him, counselling him to do thereafter.

Thorpe refuseth to sweare to the prelate.

And for thy false counselling of many other and him, thou hast great cause to be right sore. For long time thou hast bused thee to peruert whomsoeuer thou mightest. Therefore, as many deathes thou art worthie of, as thou hast giuen euill counsels. And therefore by Jesu, thou shalt goe thither, where Nicol. Herford and Thomas Purucy were harbored. And I undertake, or this day bind daies, thou shalt be right glad for to do what thing that euer I bid thee to do. And Losell, I shall assay, if I can make thee there as sorowfull (as it was told me) thou wast glad of my last going out of England. By S Thomas, I shall turne thy ioy into sorow.

Arundell the Archb. going out of England.

And I said: sir, there can no body plone lawfully that I ioyed euer, of the maner of your going out of this land.

The gentlenes of the bishop of London to Thorpe.

But sir, to say the sooth, I was sorfull when ye were gone: for the bishop of London in whole prison yee left me, found in mee no cause for to hold mee longer in his prison, but at the request of my friends, he deliuered me to them, asking of me no maner of submitting.

So promised Winchester in queene: Wardes time, but that passed his power to put to me.

Then the archbishop said to me: Therefore that I pede sist of England, is vnknowne to thee: But bee this thing well knowne to thee, that God (as I wote well) hath called me a gaine, and brought me into this land, for to destroy thee and the false sect that thou art of: as by God, I shall purlue you so narrowly, that I shall not leaue a slip of you in this land.

A notable answer of Thorpe to the bishop, promising to destroy all the Gospellers.

And I said to the archbishop: sir, the holy prophet Jeremy said to the false prophet Anany: Then the wood, that is, the prophecie of a prophet is knowne or fulfilled: then it shall bee knowne, that the Lord sent the prophet in truth.

Such praties would better beseeme my L. your goldin spoon.

And the archbishop (as if he had not beene pleased with my saying) turned him alwayward hitherto and thither, and said: By God, I shall set vpon thy thinnes a paire of pearles, that thou shalt be glad to change thy voice.

As ill clamabant dicentes, esse talle rum esse eum. Luke 23.

These and many moe wondrous and contrarious words, were spoken to me, manassing me: and all other of the same sect, for to be punished and destroyed into the vttermost.

And the archbishop called then to him a clerke, and rowned with him: and that clerke went forth, and some he brought in the Constable of Walwood castle, and the archbishop rowned a god while with him: and then the constable went forth, and then came in diuers seculars, and they seazed me on euery side, and manassed me greatly. And some counselled the archbishop to burne me by and by, and some other counselled him to drowne me in the sea, for it is neare hand there.

How we are made the temple of God.

And a clerke standing beside me, there kneeled downe to the archbishop, praying him that hee would deliuer me to him for to say matens with him: and hee would vndertake, that within three daies I should not resist any thing that were commanded me to do of my prelate.

And the archb. said, that he would ordaine for me himselfe.

And then after, came againe the Constable and spake priuilie to the archbishop: and the archbishop commanded the constable to lead me forth thence with him, and so he did. And when we were gone forth thence, wee were sent after againe. And when I came in againe before the archbishop: a clerke bad me kneele downe and aske grace, and submit me lowly, and I should find it for the best.

Marke what he haue by Christ.

And I said then to the archbishop: Sir, as I haue said to you diuers times to day, I will willfully and lowly obey and submit me to bee ordained euer after my cunning and power, to God and to his lain, and to euery member of holy church, as far forth as I can perceiue that these members accord with their head Christ, and will teach me rule me, or chastise me by authoritie, specially of Gods lain.

The property of a square stone.

Obedience to God and to his law would not serue.

And the archbishop said: I will well he would not without such additions submit him.

And

And then I was reuiled, scorned, and manassed on euery side: and yet after this, diuers persons cried vpon me to kneele downe and submit me; but I stood still, and spake no word. And then there was spoken of me, and to me, many great words, and I stood and heard them manasse, curse, and scorne me: but I said nothing.

In patience and silence possesse your soules.

And a while after, the archbishop said to me: Wilt thou not submit thee to the ordinance of holy Church?

And I said: Sir, I will full gladly submit me; as I haue shewed you before.

And then the archbishop bad the Constable to haue me forth thence in haste.

Thorp cast into prison.

And so then I was led forth, and brought into a foule vnhoneſt prison, where I came neuer before. But thanked be God, when all men were gone forth then from me, and had sparred fast the prison doue after them, by and by after, I therein by my selfe, bussed me to thinke on God, and to thanke him for his goodnesse. And I was then greatly comforted in all my wits, not onely for that I was then deliuered for a time from the sight, from the hearing, from the presence, from the scorning, and from the manassing of mine enemies: but much more I rooted in the Lord, because that thorough his grace he kept me so, both among the flattering specially, among the manassing of mine aduersaries, that without beasinesse and anguish of my conscience, I passed away from them. For as a tree laid vpon another tree, ouerthwart or crosse wise, so was the archbishop and his three clerks alwaies contrary to me, and I to them.

Thorpe comforted and strengthened of the Lord, after his conflict with the bishop.

Now good God for thine holy name, and to the praising of thy most blessed name, make vs one together, if it be thy will, (by authority of thy word, that is true perfit charity) and else not. And that it may this be, all that this writing reade or heare, pray heartily to the Lord God, that hee for his great goodnesse that cannot bee with tongue expressed, grant to be, and to all other which in the same wise, and for the same cause specially, or for any other cause be at distance, to be knit and made one in true faith, in stedfast hope, and in perfit charitie. Amen.

Vide supra, pag. 472.

Besides this examination here aboue described, came an other treatise also to our hands of the same William Thorpe, vnder the name and title of his testament: which rather by the matter and handling thereof, might seeme to be counted a complaint of vicious priests: which treatise or testament, in this place we thought not meet to be left out.

When priests forget Gods truth, rest will they run headlong. Ex. great vnlocke the small.

MAtthew an Apostle of Christ, and his Gospeller, witnesseth truly in the holy Gospell, the most holy liuing and the most wholsome teaching of Christ. He rehearseth how that Christ likeneth them that heare his words and keep them, to a wise man that buildeth his house vpon a stone, that is, a stable and a sure ground. This house is mans soule, in whom Christ delighteth to dwell, if it be grounded, that is, stablished faithfully in his liuing and in his true teaching, adorned or made faire with diuers vertues, which Christ vsed and taught without any medling of any error, as are chiefly the conditions of charitie.

Fleshly priests cannot alway hurt those things.

Christ dwelleth in a faithfull soule.

This foresaid stone is Christ, vpon which euery faithfull soule must be builded, since vpon none other ground, then vpon Christs liuing and his teaching, no body may make any building or housing, wherein Christ will come and dwell. This sentence witnesseth Saint Paul to the Corinthians, shewing to them that no body may set any other ground then is set, that is, Christs liuing and teaching. And because that all men and women should giue all their businesse here in this life, to build them vertuously vpon this sure foundation; Saint Paul knowledging the feruent desire, and the good will of the people of Ephesie, wrote to them comfortably, saying: Now ye are not strangers, guests, nor yet comelings, but ye are the citizens and of the houshold of God, burlded aboue vpon the foundement of the Apostles and Prophets. In which foundement, euerie building that is builded or made through the grace of God, it increaseth or groweth into an holy temple: that is, euery bodie that is grounded or builded faithfully in the teaching and liuing of Christ, is there-through made the holy temple of God.

Christ is the stone whereon we must build.

They hunt after their owne wrath, tooth and naile.

This is the stable ground and stedfast stone Christ, which is the sure corner stone, fast ioyning and holding mightily together two walles. For through Christ Jesu, meane or middle person of the Trinitie, the Father of heauen is pitious or mercifully ioyned and made one together to mankind. And through dread to offend God, and feruent loue to please him, men bee vnseparably made one to God, and defended surely vnder his protection. Also, this foresaid stone Christ, was figured by the square stones of which the temple of God was made. For as a square stone, wheresoeuer it is cast or laid, it abideth and lieth stably; so Christ, and euery faithfull member of his church by example of him, abideth and dwelleth stably in true faith, and in all other heauenly vertues in all aduersities that they suffer in this valley of teares.

Attestation to all hearers, to see yerst-hood amended.

For loe, when these foresaid square stones were hewen and wrought for to be laid in the walles or pillers of Gods temple, no noise or stroke of the workman was heard. Certaine, this silence in working of this stone, figureth Christ chiefly and his faithfull members, which by example of him haue been, and yet are, and euer to the worlds end shall be so meeke and patient in euery aduersity, that no sound, nor yet any grudging shall any time be perceiued in them.

Christ to an example of all perfect meekenes.

Neuertheleſſe, this chiefe and most worshipfull corner stone, which only is the ground of all vertues, proud beggers reproued: but this despight & reproofe Christ suffered most meekly in his own person, for to giue example of all meekenes and patience to all his faithfull followers. Certaine, this world is now so full of proud beggers, which are named priests: but the very office of working of priesthood which Christ approueth true, and accepteth, is far from the multitude of priests that now raigne in this world.

Priests seek the pleasures of this world.

For from the highest priest to the loweſt, all (as who say) study; that is, they imagine and trauell busily, how they may please this world and their flesh. This sentence and many such other dependeth vpon them, if it be well considered: either God the Father of heauen hath deceiued all mankind by the liuing specially and teaching of Jesu Christ, and by the liuing and teaching of his Apostles and prophets: or else all the popes that haue been since I had any knowledge or discretion, with all the colledge of cardinals, archbishops, and bishops, monks, canons, and friers, with all the contagious flocke of the comminalty of priesthood, which haue (all my life time, and mikle longer) reigned and yet raigne, and increase damnably from sinne into sin, haue been, and yet bee proud obstinate heretikes, couetous simoners, and defouled adulterers in the ministring of the sacraments, and specially in the ministring of the sacrament of the altar. For as their works sheweth, whereto Christ biddeth vs take heed; the highest priests and prelats of this priesthood, challenge and occupy vnlefull temporall lordships. And for temporall fauor and need, they sell and giue benefices to vnworthy and vnable persons; yea, these simoners sell sinne, suffering men and women in euery degree and estate, to lie & continue from yeare to yeare, in diuers vices slanderously. And thus by euill example of high priests in the church, lower priests vnder them are not onely suffered, but they are maintained to sell full deare (to the people for temporall need) all the sacraments.

Gient ode beware the life of the popes, and Christ and his Apostles.

And thus all this foresaid priesthood is blowne so high, and borne vp in pride and vaine glory of their estate and dignity, and so blinded with worldly couetousnesse, that they disdaine to follow Christ in very meeknesse and wilfull pouerty, liuing holily, and preaching Gods word truly, freely, and continually, taking their liuelihood at the free will of the people of their pure almes, where and when they suffice not for their true and busie preaching to get their sustenance with their hands. To this true sentence grounded on Christs owne liuing and teaching of his Apostles, these foresaid worldly and fleshly priests will not consent effectually. But as their works, and also their words shew, boldly and vnshamefastly these fornamed priests and prelats, couet and inforce them mightily and busily, all all holy Scripture were expounded and drawne accordingly to their manners, and to their vngrounded vsages and findings. Fourthly they will not (since they hold it but folly and madnesse) conforme their manners to the pure and simple liuing of Christ and his Apostles, nor they will not follow freely their learning. Wherefore all the emperors and kings, and all other lords and ladies, and all the common people in euery degree and state, which haue before time knowne, or might haue knowne, and also all they that now yet know, or might know this foresaid witnesse of priesthood, and would not, nor yet will inforce them after their cunning and power, to withstand charitably, the foresaid enemies and traitors of Christ, and of his church: All these stande with antichrist against Jesu, and they shall heare the indignation of God almighty without end, if in conuenient time they amend them not, and repent them verily, doing therefore due mourning and sorrow, after their cunning and power. For through presumptuousnesse and negligence of priests and prelats (not of the church of Christ, but occupying their prelacie vndily in the church) and also flattering and false couetousnesse of other diuers named priests: Louesengers and loinderers, are wrongfully made and named Heremites, and haue leaue to defraud poore and needy creatures of their liuelode, and to liue by their false winning and begging, in sloth and in other diuers vices. And also of these prelats, these coker noses, are suffered to liue in pride and hypocrisie, and to defoule themselues both bodily and ghostly. Also by the suffering and counsell of these foresaid prelats and other priests, are made both vaine brotherhoods and sisterhoods, full of pride and enuie, which are full contrary to the brotherhood of Christ, since they are cause of mickle dissention, and they multiply and sustaine it vncharitably: for in lusty eating and drinking vnmeasurably and out of time, they exercise themselues. Also this vaine confederacy of brotherhoods, is permitted to be of one clothing, and to hold together.

Priests vnly priests neglecting in their duties.

And in all these vngrounded and vnlefull doings, priests are partners, and great medlers and counsellers: and ouer this vicionsnesse, heremites and pardoners, ankerers, and strange beggers, are licensed and admitted of prelats and priests, for

to

to beguile the people with flatterings and leasings slanderously against all good reason and true belieue; and so to increase diuers vices in themselues, and also among all them that accept them, or consent to them.

And thus, the viciousnesse of these foresaid named priests and prelats, hath been long time, and yet is, and shall be cause of wars both within the realme and without. And in the same wise these vnable priests haue been, and yet are, and shall bee chiefe cause of pestilence of men, and murren of beasts, and of barrennesse of the earth, and of all other mischiefes, to the time that lords and commons able them through grace, for to know and to keep the commandements of God, inforcing them then faithfully and charitably by one assent, for to redresse and make one this foresaid priesthood, to the wilfull, poore, meeke, and innocent liuing and teaching, specially of Christ and his Apostles.

Therefore all they that know, or might know the viciousnesse that raigneth now cursedly in these priests, and in their learning, if they suffice not to vnderstand this contagious viciousnesse: let them pray to the Lord heartily for the health of his church, abstaining them prudently from these indurat enemies of Christ and of his people, and from all their sacraments, since to them, all that know them, or may know them, they are but fleshly deeds and false: as S. Cyprian witnesseth in the first question of decrees, and in the first cause, Ca. Si quis inquit. For as this Saint and great Doctor witnesseth there, that not onely vicious priests, but also all they that fauour them, or consent to them in their viciousnesse, shall together perish with them, if they amend them not duly, as all they perished that consented to Dathan and Abiron. For nothing were more confusion to these foresaid vicious priests, then to eschew them prudently in all their vnlaw full sacraments, while they continue in their sinfull liuing slanderously, as they haue long time done, and yet doe. And no body need to be afraid (though death did follow by one wise or other) for to die out of this world without taking of any Sacrament of these foresaid Christs enemies, since Christ will not faile for to minister him selfe all lefull and healfull Sacraments, and necessary at all time (and specially at the end) to all them that are in true faith, in stedfast hope, and in perfect charitie.

But yet some mad fooles say (for to eschew slander) they will be shriuen once in the yeere, and communed of their proper priests, though they know them defouled with slanderous vices. No doubt, but all they that thus doe or consent priuily or apertly to such doing, are culpable of great sinne: Since Saint Paul witnesseth, that not only they that doe euill, are worthy of death and damnation, but also they that consent to euill doers. Also for their slanderous works (wittenesse) these foresaid vicious priests, despise and cast from them heauenly cunning, that is given of the holy Ghost. Wherefore the Lord throweth all such despisers from him, that they vse nor doe any priesthood to him.

No doubt then, all they that wittingly or wilfully take or consent that any other body should take any sacrament of any such named priest, sinneth openly and damnably against all the Trinitie, and are viable to any sacrament of health.

And that this foresaid sentence is altogether true, into remission of all my sinfull liuing, trusting stedfastly in the mercie of God, I offer to him my soule.

And to proue also the foresaid sentence true, with the help of God, I purpose fully for to suffer meekly and gladly my most wretched body to be tormented, where God will, of whom he will, and when he will, and as long as he will, and what temporall paine and death he will, to the praising of his name, and to the edification of his church.

And I that am a most vnworthy and wretched caitiffe, shal now through the speciall grace of God, make to him pleasant sacrifice with my most sinfull and vnworthy body. Beseeching heartily all folke that reade or heare his end of my purposed testament, that through the grace of God, they dispose verily and vertuously all their wits, and able in like manner all their members for to vnderstand truly, and to keepe faithfully, charitably, and continually all the commandements of God, and so then to pray deuoutly to all the blessed Trinity, that I may haue grace with wisdome and prudence from aboue, to end my life here in this foresaid truth, and for this cause, in true faith and stedfast hope, and perfect charitie. Amen.

The end of Ed. Thorpe vncertaine.

What was the end of this good man and blessed seruant of God William Thorp, I finde as yet in no story specified. By all coniectures it is to be thought, that the archbishop Thomas Arundel, being so hard an aduersary against those men, would not let him goe. Much lesse it is to be supposed, that he would euer retract his sentence and opinion, which here so valiantly maintained before the bishop; neither doth it seeme that he had any such recanting spirit. Againe, neither is it found that he was burned. Wherefore it remaineth most like to be true, that hee being committed to some strait prison (according as the archbishop in his examination before did threaten him) there (as Thorp confesseth himselfe) was so straitly kept, that either he was secretly made away, or else there hee died by sicknesse.

The like end also I finde to happen to John Ashton, another good follower of Wicklisse, who for the same doctrine of the sacrament was condemned by the bishops, and because he would not recant, he was committed to perpetuall prison, wherein the good man continued till his death: An. 1382.

¶ John Purucy.

John Purucy.

FUrthermore, in the said examination of William Thorpe, mention was made (as ye heard) of John Purucy, of whom also something we touched before: promising of the said John Purucy, more particularly to intreat in order and processe of time. Of this Purucy, Tho. Walden writeth thus in his second tome: John Purucy, saith he, was the vicary of Lollards, and glosier vpon Wicklisse. He said, that the worshipping of Abraham was but a salutation. And in his third tome hee saith: This John Purucy, saith Walsyd a doctor of Diuinity, were grieuously tormented and punished in the prison of Saltwod, and at the length recanted at Pauls crosse at London (Thomas Arundel being then archbishop of Canturbury.) Afterward againe, he was imprisoned vnder Henry Chichele archbishop of Canturbury, in the yere of our Lord 1421. Thus much writeth Walden. The workes of this man which hee wrote, were gathered by Richard Lauingham his aduersarie, which I thinke worthy to be remembred. First, as touching the sacrament of the last supper, the sacrament of penance, the sacrament of orders, the power of the keies, the preaching of the Gospel, of marriages, of vowes, of possessions, of the punishing and correcting of the clergy, of the lawes and decrees of the church, of the state and condition of the pope and the clergie: of all these generally, he left diuers monuments grauely and exactly written, part whereof, here in the end of his story we thought to exhibit, being translated out of Latine into English.

John Purucy published after his recantation.

The articles which he taught, and afterward was forced to recant at Pauls crosse, were these hereafter following:

Articles of John Purucy recanted.

1. That in the sacrament of the altar, after the consecration, there is not, neither can be any accident without the subiect: but there bodily remaineth the same substance and the verie bodie and corruptible bread, and likewise the verie same wine the which before the consecration were set vpon the altar to bee consecrat of the priest: likewise as when a Pagan or Infidell is baptised, he is spiritually conuerted into a member of Christ through grace, and yet remaineth the very same man which he before was in his proper nature and substance.

2. Auricular confession or priuat penance, is a certaine whispering, destroying the liberty of the Gospel, and newly brought in by the pope and the clergy, to entangle the consciences of men in sinne, and to drawe their soules into hell.

He preacheth of priests here, and out of publike ministers appointed in the church.

3. Euery lay man being holy, and predestinate vnto euerlasting life (albeit he be a lay man) yet is he a true priest before God.

4. That diuers prelats and other of the clergy doe liue wickedly, contrary to the doctrine and example of Christ and his Apostles. Therefore they which so liue, haue not the keies neither of the kingdome of heauen, neither yet of hell: neither ought any christian to esteeme his censure any more then as a thing of no force. Yea, albeit the pope should peraduenture interdict the realme, yet could he not hurt, but rather profit vs, forsomuch as thereby we should be dismissed from the obseruation of his lawes, and from saying of seruice, according to the custome of the church.

Clowes.

5. If any man doe make an oth or vow, to keepe perpetuall chastitie, or doe any thing else vnto which God hath not appointed him, giuing him grace to performe his purpose: the same vow or oth is vnreasonable and indiscreet, neither can any prelat compell him to keepe the same, except he will doe contrary vnto Gods ordinance. But he ought to commit him vnto the gouernance of the holy Ghost and of his owne conscience: forsomuch as euery man which will not fulfill his vow or oth, cannot doe it for that cause.

The charge of priests.

6. Who so taketh vpon him the office of priesthod, although he haue not the charge of soules committed vnto him according to the custome of the church: not onely they may, but ought to preach the gospel freely vnto the people; otherwise he is a theefe, excommunicated of God, and of the holy Church.

Against transubstantiation.

7. That Innocentius the third pope, and six hundred bishops, and a thousand other prelats, with all the rest of the clergie, which together with the same pope agreed and determined: that in the sacrament of the altar, after the consecration of the bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ, that the accidents of the said bread and wine doe remaine there, without any proper subiect of the same: the which also ordained, that all christians ought to confesse their sinnes once a yere vnto a proper priest, and to receiue the reuerent sacrament at Easter, and made certaine other lawes at the same time: All they, saith he, in so doing were fooles and blockheads, heretikes, blasphemers, and seducers of christian people. Therefore we ought not to beleeue their determinations, or of their successors, neither ought we to obey their lawes or ordinances, except they bee plainly grounded vpon the holy Scripture, or vpon some reason which cannot be impugned.

Articles out of Purueyes bookes, collected by R. Lauingham.

AS touching the sacrament of thankes giuing, he saith: That that chapter of repentance and remission Omnis vtriusque sexus: wherein it is ordained that euery faithfull man ought once euery yere at the least, that is to say, at Easter, to receiue the sacrament of the Eucharist; is a beastly thing, heretical and blasphemous.

The sacrament of the popish altar.

Item, that Innocentius the third pope, was the head of antichrist, who after the letting loose of Satan, inuented a new found article of our faith, and a certaine fained verity touching the sacrament of the altar: That is to say, that the sacrament of the altar is an accident without a substance, or else an heape of accidences without a substance. But Christ and his Apostles doe teach manifestly, that the sacrament of the altar is bread and the body of Christ together, after the manner that he spake. And in that he called it bread, he would haue the people to vnderstand as they ought with reason, that it is very and substantiall bread and no false nor fained bread.

Pope Innocentius head of antichrist.

And although Innocentius that antichrist doth alledge, that in the councell at Lions, where this matter was decided, were six hundred bishops with him, and one thousand prelats, which were in one opinion of this determination: All those notwithstanding he calleth fooles, according to that saying of Ecclesi. Of fooles there are an infinit number. And so in like maner he calleth them false Christs, and false Prophets, of whom Christ speaketh in the 24. of Matthew: Many false Christs and false Prophets shall arise and deceiue many. And therefore euery christian man ought to beleeue strongly, that the sacrament of the altar is very bread indeed, and no false nor fained bread. And although it be very bread indeed, yet notwithstanding it is the very body of Christ in that sort hee spake and called it his body; and so it is very bread, and the very body of Christ. And as Christ concerning his humanitie, was both visible and passible, and by his Diuinitie was inuisible and impassible: so likewise, this sacrament in that it is very bread, may be seene with the corporall eye, and may also abide corruption. But although a man may see that sacrament, yet notwithstanding cannot the body of Christ in that sacrament be seene with the corporall eye, although it be the body of Christ in that manner hee spake it: for that notwithstanding, the body of Christ is not incorruptible in heauen. So the sacrament of the cup is very wine, and the very blood of Christ, according as his manner of speaking was. Also Innocentius the third, with a great multitude of his secular clerkes, made a certaine new determination, that the sacrament of the altar is an accidence without a substance, whereas neither Iesus Christ, nor any of his Apostles taught this faith; but openly and manifestly to the contrary; neither yet the holy Doctors for the space of a thousand yeeres and more, taught this faith openly.

The sacrament is substance bread, in signification the body of Christ.

Transubstantiation not openly taught 1000. yeeres after Christ.

Therefore, when antichrist or any of his shauelings doth aske of thee that art a simple christian, whether that this sacrament be the very body of Christ or not: affirme thou it manifestly so to bee. And if hee aske of thee whether it be materiall bread, or what other bread else: say thou, that it is such bread as Christ vnderstood and meant by his proper word: and such bread as the holy Ghost meant in Saint Paul, when he called that to be very bread which he bake; and made thou no further herein. If hee aske thee how this bread is the body of Christ: say thou, as Christ vnderstood the same to be his body, which is both omnipotent and true, and in whom is no vntruth; say thou also, as the holy doctors doe say, that the terrestriall matter or substance, may bee conuerted into Christ, as the Iagar or infidell may bee baptised: and hereby spiritually to bee conuerted and to be a member of Christ, and so after a certaine manner to become Christ, and yet the same man to remaine still in his proper nature. For so doth Saint Augustine grant, that a sinner forsaking his sinne, and being made one spirit with God by faith, grace, and charitie, may be conuerted into God, and to bee after a manner God: as both Dauid and Saint John doe testifie, and yet to be the same person in substance and nature, and in soule and bertue to be altered and changed. But yet, men of more knowledge and reason, may more plainly conuince the falsity of antichrist both in this matter and in others, by the gift of the holy Ghost working in them. Notwithstanding, if those that be simple men will humbly hold and keepe the manifest and apparant words of the holie Scripture, and the plaine sense and meaning of the holy Ghost, and proceed no further, but humbly to commit that vnto the spirit of God, which perfectly their vnderstanding: then may they safely offer themselues to death, as true martyrs of Iesus Christ.

The sacrament bith bread, and the body in diuers respects.

Secular confession and penance.

As touching the sacrament of penance; that chapter Omnis vtriusque sexus, by which a certaine new found auricular confession was ordained, is full of hypocrisie, heresie, couetousnesse, pride, and blasphemy, he saith, and reproueth the same chapter verbatim, and that by the sentences of the same processe. Also, that the penance and paines limitted by the canons, be vnreasonable and vniust, for the austerity and rigorousnesse which they containe, more then are tared by Gods law. He also doth exemplifie, of the solemne and publike denial of penitents to be receiued into orders, according to the decree of the generall councell, Distinctione 50. cap. Expenitentibus. Also of the seuen-fold penitence of a priest committing fornication, according to the chapter, Presbyter Distinct. 82. And further theweth another example of the penitence of priests, according to that chapter, Qui presbyter enim &c. Whereas the Decretall of the generall councell saith, that such a one ought to remaine continuing his life in the wantes, and not to marry.

Tonsure maketh not a priest.

And how Innocentius the third, brought in a new found confession, whereby the priests doe oppresse the simple lay men. And that many other things they doe, compelling them to confesse themselues to blinde and ignorant priests, in whom is nothing else then pride and couetousnesse, hauing such in contempt as are learned and wise. Also, that the Decretall of Innocentius the third, touching the forsaid auricular or vocall confession, was brought in and inuented, to intricate and intangle mens conscience with sinne, and to draw them downe to hell. And furthermore, that such manner of confession destroieth the Euangelicall liberty, and doth let men to inquire after, and to retaine the wise counsell and doctrine of such as be good priests, which know faithfully how to obserue his precepts and commandements, and which would willingly teach the people the right way to heauen. For which abuse, al christian men, and specially all Englishmen, ought to erclaime against such wicked lawes.

The order of priesthood.

As touching the sacrament of order, hee saith: That all good christians are predestinate and bee ordained of God, and made true priests to offer Christ in themselues, and to Christ, themselues: as also to teach and preach the Gospell to their neighbours, as well in word, as in example of liuing. That the worldly shauelings doe more magnifie the naked and bare signes of priesthood (inuented by sinfull men) then the true and perfect priesthood of God, grounded by a true and liuely faith, annexed with good works. Also, if it were needfull to haue such shauelings, God knoweth how, and can make when it pleaseth him, priests (without mans working and sinfull signes: that is to say, without either sacraments or characters) to be knowne and discerned of the people, by their vertuous life and example, and by their true preaching of the laws of God. For so made hee the first made priests and elders before the law of Moyses: and so made he Moyses a priest before Aaron, and before the ceremonies of the law, without mans operation at all: and euen so hath God made all such as are predestinate, to be his priests. But such as be true christians, receiue none such as priests, but vnlesse they follow Christ and his Apostles; neither doe they beleeue that they make the sacrament of the altar (which they affirme to bee Gods body) when it pleaseth them, lest happily God bee not with them, forasmuch as that they doe this thing for couetousnesse sake, or else to brag of their owne power. And therefore such as be simple men, will worship that sacrament in this doubtfulnesse, with a silent condition; that is, if it be made by Gods authority, and to haue their deuotion to the body of Christ in heauen. Also, that such as bee elders, if they be Gods priests, be bishoppes, prelats, and curats of their christian brethren, whom they may leade to heauen by the example of their holy conuersation, and by preaching of the Gospell, although they make no sacrifice to that antichrist of Rome for their confirmation: neither bee they dedicated to the world by secular diuine things, and by continuing the liuings of the pope, as be those secular bishops, prelats, and curats. Also, that although there were no pope, according as the custome of the church is, yet Christ which is the head of his church, both ordaine such a pope as pleaseth him: and that is, whosoeuer is most humble and louely, and best doth the office of a true priest, although hee be vnknowne to the world: and although there were no such proud bishoppe aboue all the rest, as the church doth vse; yet all the priests might well gouerne the church by common assent, as once they did, before such worldly pride crept in amongst the bishoppes, &c. And admit that no such priests were according as the accustomed vse now of receiuing of order and tonsure, by such a mitred bishop and his tonsure: yet Christ knoweth both how to make and chuse such as shall well please him, both in conuersation of life, and sincere preaching of the Gospell, in ministring to his people all necessary sacraments. And euery holy man which is a minister of Christ, although hee be not thaten, is a true priest ordained of God, although no mitred bishop euer lay his character vpon him. So that the pope and prelats doe make more estimation of their characters (as tonsures and crownes by them inuented) then of the true and perfect priesthood ordained of God: whereas all those that are predestinate, are true priests made of him.

He meaneth of priuat preaching to their neighbours. True ministers may be made without tonsuring.

Priests here haue a priuat, not a publike vnderstanding.

What if there were no pope known to the church could stand.

The popes crosse fitteth for the blast of Lucifer.

As touching the authority of the keies and censures, no christian man ought to esteeme satan (whom men call the pope) and his vniust censures, more then the filling of a serpent, or the blast of Lucifer. Also, that no man ought to trust or put confidence in the false indulgences of couetous priests, which indulgences doe draw away the hope which men ought to repose in God, to a sort of sinfull men, and doe rob the poore of such almes as is giuen to them. Such priests be manifest betrairers Paules priests following the steps of them, but rather of Lucifer.

betrainers of Christ and of the whole church, and by satans owne stewards to beguile christen soules by their hypocrisie and fained pardons. Also, forasmuch as the prelates and clergy men liue so execrable a life, contrary to the Gospell of Christ, and examples of his Apostles, and teach not truly the gospel, but onely lies & the traditions of sinful wicked men: it appeareth most manifestly, that they haue not the keies of the kingdome of heauen, but rather the keies of hell. And they may be right well afeared, that God neuer gaue vnto them authority to make and establish so many ordeyn ces and traditions, which be contrarie to the liberte of the Gospel, and are blocks in christen mens waies, that they can neither know nor obserue the same his Gospell, in liberty of conscience, and so attaine a ready way to heauen.

The pope and his cleargie purpose not to reforme this.

Also, that all manner of religious men, notwithstanding the chapter Religiosi, touching the priuiledges in the Clementines may lawfully minister all sacraments to them that are worthy the same: so also as the same is a worke of charity, which auaileth the will and ordinance of the pope in his fautors in this case is to hinder and let. Item, if the pope shall interdict this our realme; that cannot hurt vs, but much profit vs, because that thereby hee should separate vs from all his wicked lawes, and from the charges of sustaining of so many thousand thaurlings, which with small deuotion, or none at all, patter and chatter a new found sang, secundum vsum Sarum. So that not withstanding the pope in his generall councell bindeth on earth, is bound of God in heauen, either for that hee bindeth vnreasonably, and contradictorily both against himselfe, or else for that hee hath forsaken the iudgement of God.

Scripture not sufficient cause to extraine matrimonie.

As touching the preaching of the Gospell: Whatsoeuer reuerence or taketh vpon him the office of a priest, or of a bishop, and discharge th not the same by the example of his good conuersation and faithfull preaching of the Gospell, is a theefe, excommunicat of God, and of holy church. And further, if the curats preach not the word of God, they shall be damned: and if they know not how to preach, they ought to resigne their benefices. So that those prelates which preach not the Gospell of Christ (although they could resolue themselues from the doting of any other cuill) are dead in themselues, are antichrists, and satans, transfigured into Angels of light, night theeues, manquellers by day light, and betrayers of Christ his people.

The first mariage (if there be no impediment) is made with the words of the present tence, and is more auailable than the second.

Concerning the sacrament of Matrimony: Notwithstanding any spirituall kinred or gossoppie, a man and woman may lawfully marry together by the law of God, without any dispensation papisticall. And in the same place hee saith, that if our realme dor admit one not borne in matrimony or legitimate to the imperiall crowne, so that he doth well bilegetimate to the imperiall crowne, so that he doth well bilegetimate to the office of a king, God maketh him a king, and by consequence doth reiect another king or heire of the kingdome, being borne in matrimony and legitimate: So, for such spirituall kinred there ought no impediment to be made. Also notwithstanding the Cap. Si inter desponsalibus: If any man shall make any contract with any woman by the words of the future tence, by an oth taken, and afterwards shall with another woman make the like contract by the words of the present tence: that then the second contract standeth. Also, if a man make any contract with a woman by the words of the future tence vpon his oth taken, and maketh afterwards the like contract with another not altering the words, and hath carnall copulation vpon the same, the first contract maketh the matrimony good, and not the second. Also, if a man before witnesse, assure himselfe to a woman by a contract made in the present tence, and hath children by the same woman, and afterward the same man marrieth another woman, with the like words in the present tence, before witnesse; although the first witnesses be dead, or else by bribes corrupt, and the second bring his witnesses before the Iudge to proue the second contract, the first contract yet standeth in force, although the pope (allowing the second contract) doth compell them to line in adulterie against the commandement of God. Also, hee condemneth the Decreall of the restitution of things stollen, Cap. Literas tuas: which willeth, that a man and woman hauing carnall copulation in the degree of consanguinity forbidden, and hath no witnesse hereof: if the woman will depart from the man, she shall be compelled by the censures to remaine with him, and to yeeld her debt. Also, in case where a man hath made contract with two women, with one secretly hauing no witnesse, and with the other openly hauing witnesse, then were it better to acknowledge the insufficiencie of the law, and to suffer men to bee ruled by their consciences, then by the censures to compell them to commit and line in adultery.

Swearing and making of vowes.

As touching the swearing and making of vowes: That vow or oth is lesse vnto, and is without all discretion made, which to performe and keepe, a man hath no power but by grace giuen him of God: because that some such there be, whom God doth not accept to persuere in the state of chastitie and perpetuall virginitie: and such a one cannot keepe his vow, although hee make the same. Also, that euery one making a vow of continencie or chastitie, when making the same, hee shall not be accepted of God, doth erre vndiscretly, and as one without all reason maketh the same, when he is not able of himself without the gift of God to fulfill his promise, according to that saying of the wise man, cap. 8. No man hath the gift of continencie, vnlesse that God giue it vnto him. Forsothe wise, if God helpe not such a one to perfo;me the vow or oth which he hath made and taken, no prelat can compell him, vnlesse he do contrary to Gods ordinance; but he ought to commit himselfe to the gouernment of Gods holy spirit, and his owne conscience.

Possessions of the church.

For the possessions of the church: In another treatise it is declared, how the king, the lords and commons may without any charge at all, keep fifteen garrisons, and finde 15000. souldiers, hauing sufficient landes and reuenewes to line vpon; out of the temporalties gotten into the handes of the clergy and fained religious men, which neuer do that, which pertaineth to the office of curats to doe, nor yet to secular lords. And moreouer, the king may haue euery yere 20000. pound to come freely into his coffers, and aboue. Also may finde or sustaine fifteene colledges more, and 15000. priests and clerks, with sufficient liuing, and an hundred hospitals for the sick, and euery house to haue one hundred marks in landes. And all this may they take of the foresaid temporalties, without any charge to the realme wherein to the king, the lordes, and the commons are to be inuited. For otherwise, there seemeth to hang ouer our heades a great and marueilous altercation of this realme, vnlesse the same be put in execution. Also, if the secular priests and fained religious, which bee Simonacks and heretikes, which faine themselues to say masse, and yet say none at all, according to the canons, which to their purpose they bring and alledge, 1.q. 3. Audiuimus, & cap. Pudenda, & cap. Schisma; by which chap. such priests and religious doe not make the sacrament of the altar; that then all christians, especially all the founders of such abbies, and indowers of bishoprickes, priories, and churteries, ought to amend this fault and treason committed against their predecessors, by taking from them such secular dominions, which are the maintenance of all their sinnes. And also, that christian lords and princes are bound to take away from the clergy, such secular dominion as nouselleth and nourisheth them in heresies and ought to reduce them vnto the simple and poore life of Christ Iesus and his Apostles.

1.q.3.§.q.i. Cap. Audiuimus.

Good kings ought to depose euill priests.

Pe confessa-tion, dist 2. cap. Scelera.

Why cheefe of all disposed princes, and of inferiour magistrates, not to be nourished with temporalities and dignities.

And further, that all christian princes (if they will amend the malediction and blasphemy of the name of God) ought to take away their temporalties from that shamefull generation, which moste of all doth nourish them in such malediction. And so in likewise, the fat tithes from churches appropriat to rich monks and other religious fained by manifest liuing, and other vnlawfull vsurues, likewise ought to bebarre their gold to the proud priest of Rome, which doth poison all Christendome with simony and heresie. Further, that it is a great abomination that bishoppes, monks, and other prelats, be so great lords in this world, whereas Christ with his Apostles and Disciples, neuer tooke vpon them secular dominion, neither did they appropriate vnto them churches, as these men doe, but led a poore life, and gaue a good testimony of their priesthood. And therefore, all christians ought to the vttermost of their power and strength to sweare that they will reduce such shauelings, to the humilitie and pouerty of Christ and his Apostles: and likewise thus doth not, consenteth to their heresie. Also, that these two chapters of the immunitie of churches, are to be condemned, that is, cap. Non minus, and cap. Aduersus. Because they doe decree, that temporall lords may neither require tallages nor tenths of any ecclesiasticall persons.

The popes lawes contrary to themselues.

Correction of the clergy.

Now to the correction of the clergy. By the law of God and by reason, the king and all other christians may take reuenge of Italy, and of all the false priests and clerks within the same, and to reduce them vnto the humble ordinance of Iesus Christ. Also, that the lads of Suffolke the pope, which is declared in 2.q.7. cap. Presul, and cap. Nullam, is contrary to the law of Christ and either testament. And that proud and ambitious Sulleyter by his law, so defended two cardinals which were not to be defended by the law of Christ, that by no means they might be conuinced, although they were both vicious and euil. And although Christ sustained and suffered the iudgement of vntrust temporall Iudges; our mitred prelats in these dates, so magnifie themselues beyond Christ and his Apostles, that they refuse and will none of such iudgements. Also, that those Decretals of accusations, cap. Quando & Qualiter: which doe prohibit that any clerks should be brought before a secular Iudge to receiue iudgement, doe containe both heresie, blasphemie, and error, and bringeth great gaine and commodity to antichrists coffers.

The pope and his cardinals blasphemers of the true church.

2.q.7. Presul. Ibid. Nullam.

Punishing of ministers before recourse to secular magistrates in their spirituall causes.

Furthermore, that all christian kings and lords, ought to reclaime against the pope and those that bee his fautors, and banish them out of their lands, till such time as they will obey God and his Gospell, kings and other ministers of Gods iustice. Also, that bishops and their fautorers, that say it appertaineth not to kings and secular lords (but vnto them and their Officials) to punish adultery and fornication, doe fall into manifest treason against the king, and heresie against the Scripture. Also, that it appertaineth to the king, to to haue the order both of priests and bishops, as these kings, Salomon and Iosaphat had.

Furthermore, that chapter Nullus iudicium de foro competenti, by the which secular iudges, are forbidden without the bishops commandement, to condemne any clerke to death, is manifestly against the holy Scripture, declaring that kings haue power ouer clerks and priests, to punish them for their deserued crimes. Also, that the decree of Boniface de penis in 6. cap. Ecclesiis, made against the professors, scribers, and inquisitors of cardinals, is contrary both to the holy Scripture, and to all reason. Also, that by the law of God and reason, a secular lord may lawfully take a cardinall, and put him in prison for committing the crime of open simony, aduitery, and manifest blasphemie. Also that the chapter Si Papa dist. 40. which saith, that the pope ought to be iudged of none, vnlesse he be deuius a fide, is contrary to the Gospell, which saith: If thy brother sinne against thee, correct him. Also, whereas S. Gregory and S. Augustine called themselues the seruants of Gods seruants, this proud bishop of Rome, which will not be iudged by his subiects (which be in very deed his lords, if they be iust and good men) doth destroy the order of Gods law, and all humilitie, and doth extoll himselfe aboue God and his Apostles. Also, that christian kings ought not onely to iudge this proud bishop of Rome, but also to depose him by the example that Cestrensis, lib. 6. cap. 8. declareth of Otho the emperor, which deposed Iohn the twelfth, and did institute Leo in his place. And further, hee maketh an exhortation to the princes to iudge the church of Rome, which hee calleth the great and cursed strumpet, of whom S. Iohn writeth in the Apocalyps, chap. 17.

Lastly, touching the lawes and determinations of the church; christians haue reasonable excuses and causes to repell the statutes of the pope and of his hauelings, which be not expressly grounded on the holy Scriptures, or else vpon reason ineuitable. Also he saith, that that law which is set forth of consecration distinctione 2. cap. Seculares, & cap. Omnis homo, & cap. Et si non frequentius, & cap. In cena domini: That such secular men as do not receiue the sacrament of the altar at Christmas, Easter, and Whitsontide, are not to be counted amongst the number of christians, nor are to be esteemed as christians: whereby it followeth, that all clerks and lay men that obserue not the same, it seemeth they goe straight to hell. But if this law be of no force, for that the custome and vse in receiuing is contrary to the same: then may we blesse such rebellion and disobedience to the pope and his law: for otherwise we should flee to hel without any stay or let. Whereby we may conclude, that all christians ought well to practise this schole of disobedience against the pope and all his lawes (not founded vpon the holy Scripture) which doe let men to climbe to heauen by the keeping of charity, and the libertie of the Gospell. Also, that christian men haue great cause to refuse the lawes & statutes of these worldly clerks, which the people call the papall lawes and bishoplike statutes, for the couetousnes and voluptuousnes of them; without the which, the church and congregation of God might safely run towards heauen by the sweet yoke of the Lord, as it did 1000. yeres before the said lawes were prescribed and sent to the Vniuersities, and withdrawn men from studying of the holy Scripture, for the desire of benefices and worldly goods. Also, that simple men doe reuerently receiue the sentences of the doctors and other lawes, so far forth as they be expressly grounded vpon the holy Scripture or good reason. Also, that whereas the popes lawes, and lawes of his ministers and clerks, be both contrary to themselues, and haue not their foundation neither vpon the Scripture, nor yet vpon reason, simple men ought to bid them farewell. Also, that when all the Apostles faith failed them in the time of the Lords passion, faith then rested in the blessed virgin: much more might that proud priest of Rome with all his rabble, easily erre in the faith; and yet is the christian faith preserued whole and safe, in the faithfull members of Christ which are his true church: but the pope and all his crabblement cannot proue that they be any part of his church. Also, that the pope with all his fautors, may as well be deceiued by a lying spirit, as was Achab and all his prophets: and that one true prophet, as was Michias, may haue the verity shewed vnto him contra concilium. Also, that all good christians ought to call from them the popes lawes, saying: Let vs breake their bands in sunder, and let vs cast from our neckes those heauy pokes of theirs. Also, that where these prelats doe burne one good booke, for one error perhaps contained in the same, they ought to burne all the bookes of the canon law, for the manifold heresies contained in them.

The canon law full of heresie.

¶ And thus much out of a certaine old written booke in parchment, borowed once of T. N. which booke containing diuers ancient records of the Vniuersity, seemeth to belong sometimes to the library of the Vniuersity, bearing the yere of the compiling thereof. 1296. Which computation if it be true, then was it written of him, or that he recanted before Thomas Arundel archbishop at Saltwood, where he was imprisoned. Whereunto I thought also to annex a certain godly and most fruitfull sermon of like antiquity, preached at Pau's crosse much about the same time, which was in the yere of our Lord 1388. by a certaine learned clerke, as I finde in an old monument, named R. Wimbeldon. Albeit, among the ancient registers and records belonging to the archbishop of Canturbury, I haue an old worne copy of the said sermon, written in very old English, and almost halfe consumed with age, purporting the said author hereof, being also the forsaid name. The true copy of which sermon, in his owne speech wherein it was first spoken, and preached at the crosse on the Sunday of Quinquagesima, and after exhibited to the archbishop of Canterbury (being then as it seemeth William Courtney) here followeth.

28. A Sermon no lesse godly then learned, preached at Pauls crosse on the Sunday of Quinquagesima, an. 1389. by R. Wimbeldon.

Redde rationem villicationis tuæ. Luc. xvi.

The Sermon of R. Wimbeldon.

Matth. 20.

My dere frends, ye shulden vnderstond, that Christ auntso and doctor of truth, in his boke of the Gospel (likening the kingdome of heauen to an houlholder) saith on this manner: Like is the kingdome of heauen to an houlholding man, that went out first on the morow to hire workmen into his vine. Also, about the third, sixth, ninth and eleuenth houres he went out, and found men standing idle: and said to them: Go ye into mine vineyard, and that right is, I will giue you. When the day was ago, he cleped his stiward, and bigh to giue eche man a pente.

The calling of God is diuerse.

The spirituall vnderstonding of this householder, is our Lord Iesu Christ, that is head of the housholde of holy church. And thus clepith men in diuerce houres of the day, that is in diuerce agees of the werld. As in time of law of kind, he cleped by enspiring, Abel, Ennok, Noe, and Abraham. In time of the old law, Moses, Dauid, Isay, and Ieremy: and in time of grace, Apostles, martyrs, and confessors and virgins. Also he cleped men in diuers agees, some on childhode, as Iohn Baptist; some in flate of manhode, as Peter and Andrew; and some in old agee, as Gamaliel, and Ioseph of Arimathie. And all these he clepeth to trauaile in his vine, that is the church, and that in diuers maner. For right as yee seeth, that in tilling of the materiall vine, there ben diuers labours, for some kutten awey the void branches, some maken forkis and railes to beren vp the vine, and some diggen away the old earth fro the rote, and leyn there fatter. And all this offices ben so necessary to the vine, that if any of them faile, it shall harme greatly, other destroy the vine. For but if the vine be kut, he shall wax wilde; but if he be railed, he shall be ouergo with nettles and wedis: but if the rote be fatted with dong, she for febleuis shuld wax barraine.

Right so in the Church beth nedefull these three offices, priesthode, knythode, and labourers. To priests it falleth, to kut away the void braunches of sins with the fwerd of her tong. To knighthode it falleth to letten wrongs and thefts to ben done, and to maintaine Goddis law, and them that ben teachers therof, and also to kepe the lond from enemies of other lords. And to labourers it falleth, to trauail bodelich, and with their fore fwete, geten out of the earth bodilech lifelode for hem, and other parties. And these flates beth also nedefull to the church, that none may well ben without other: for if priesthod lacked, the people for default of knowing of Gods law, shuld waxe wilde in vices, and deyen gostely: and if the knithod laked, and men to rulin the puple by law and hardinesse, theeues and enemies shulden so encres, that no man shuld liue in peace. And if the labourers were nought, both knights and priests must become acre men and herdis, and else they shuld for defaut of bodily sustenance dey. And therefore saith clerke Auicenne, that euery vereasonable beast, if he haue that kind hath ordained for him, as kind hath ordained it, he is suffisance to liue by himselfe without any helpe of other of the same kind. As if there were but one horse other one fwepe in the world, yet if he had grasse and corne, as kind hath ordained for such beasts, he shuld liue well inow. But if there ne were but O man in the world, though he had all that good that is therein, yet for defaut he shuld dey, or his life shuld be wors then if he were naught; and the cause is this, for that thing that kind ordaineth for a mans sustenance, without other arraieng then it hath of kind, accordeth nought to him. As though a man haue corne as it commeth from the earth, yet it is no meat according to him, vnto it be by mans craft, changed into bread: and though he haue flesh other fish, yet while it is raw, as kind ordained it, till it be by mans trauaile sodden, rosted, or baken, it corded not to mans lifelode. And right so, wolle that the fweepe beareth, not by mannis diuers craftis and trauailes be chaunged or it be able to cloth any man: and certis O man by himselfe shuld neuer doe all these labours. And therefore, saith this clerke, it is need that some be acre men, some bakers, some makers of cloth, and some marchaunts to fetch that, that one lond fetcheth from another there it is plenty.

And certis this shuld be a cause why euery state shuld loue other. And men of o craft shuld not despise ne hate men of none other craft, sith they beso nedefull euerich to other. And oft thelke crafts that ben most vthonest, might worst ben forbore: and o thing I dare well say, that he that is neither trauailing in this world, on studying, on praiers, on preaching, for helpe of the people as it falleth to priests, neither ruling the people, people, maintaining me defending fro enemies, as it falleth to knights, neither trauelling on the earth, in diuers crafts, as it falleth to labourers: What the day of rekening commeth, that is, the end of this life, right as he liued here without trauaile, so he shall there lack the reward of the pennie, that is, the endelesse ioy of heauen. And as he was here liuing after none state ne order, so he shall be put than in that place that no order is in, but euerlasting horror and sorrow, that is, in hell. Herfore, euerich man see to what state God hath cleped him, and dwel he therein by trauaile, according to his degree. Thou that art a laborer or a craftie man, doe this truly. If thou art a seruant or a bondman, besigger and low in dredeof displeasing of thy Lord. If thou art a marchaunt, disceiue nought thy brother in chaffering. If thou art a knight or a lord, defend the poore mā & needy fro hands that will harme thē. If thou art a Justice or a Iudge, goe not on the right hand by fauor, neither on the left hand, to punish any man for hate. If thou art a priest, vndermine, pray, and reprehende, in all manner patience and doctrine. Vndermine thilke that ben negligent, pray for thilke that ben obedient, reproue tho that ben vnobedient to God. So euery man trauaile in his degree. For whan the euen is come, that is, the end of this world, than euery man shall take reward, good or euill, after that he hath trauailed here.

1 Cor. 7. 1 Pet. 2. 1. Thes. 4.

Rom. 8. 2 Tim. 4.

The words that I haue taken to make of my sermon, be thus much to say: Yeld rekoning of thy baily. Christ, autor of pitie and louer of the saluation of his people, in the processe of this gospell, enformeth euery man what is his baily, by maner of a parable of a baily that he speaketh of, to array him to answer of the goods that God hath taken him, when the day of strait reckoning shall be come, that is, the day of dome. And also at this time, through the helpe of God, following him that is so great a maister of autority, because that I know nothing that should more draw away mans vnreasonable loue fro the passing ioy of this world, then the mind of the dreadfull reconing: As much as suffice, I shall shew you how yee shall dispose you to auoid the vengeance of God, when there shall be time of so straight doome, that we shall geue reconing of euery idle word that we haue spoken. For than it shal be said to vs, and we shall not flee it: Yeld reconing of thy baily.

Note.

But for forther processe of this first party of this sermon, ye shall wete that there shall be three bailiffes that shall be cleped to this strait reconing. Twaine to answer for themselfe and for other, that ben priests that haue cure of mens soules, and temporall men that haue gouernaile of people: and the third bailiffe shall account onely for himselfe, and that is euery christen man, of that he hath receiued of God. And euery of these shall answere to three questions. To the first question, how hast thou entred? The second, how hast thou ruled? And to the third, how hast thou liued? And if thou canst well assoile these three questions, was there neuer none earthly lord that euer so well rewarded his seruant without comparison, as thy Lord God shall reward thee, that is, with blisse, and ioy, and life that euer shall last. But on that other side, and thou wilt now be recheles of thine owne welfare, and take none heed of this reconing: If that day take thee sodainly, so that thou passe hence in deadly sinne (as thou wost neuer what shall fall thee) all the tongues that euer were, or euer shall be, mow not tell the sorrow and wo that thou shalt euer be in, and suffer. Therefore the desire of so great ioy, and the dread of so great paine, though loue ne dread of God were not in thine heart, yet should that make thee afeard to sinne, for to thinke that thou shalt giue reconing of thy baily. Therefore as I say to thee, the first question that shall be proposed to the first baily, that is a prelat ether a curat of mens soules, is this: How hast thou entred? Matth. 22. Friend, how entredst thou hether? Who brought thee into this office? Truth or Simony? God or the Diuell? Grace or mony? The flesh or the spirit? Giue thou thy reconing if thou canst. If thou canst not, I rede that thou tary for to learne. For vp hap ere night thou shalt be cleped. And if thou stand dombe for vnkunning, or else for confusion of thy conscience, thou fall into the sentence that anon followeth: Binde his hands and his fete, and cast him into the vter ward of darknesse, there shall be weeping and grenning of teeth. Therefore I rede thee, that thou adresse thee how thou shalt answer to this question: How hast thou entred? whether by cleping, or by thine owne procuring: for that thou wouldest trauaile in Gods gospell, other for thou wouldest be richly arraied? Answer now to thy owne conscience as thou shalt answere to God, thou that hast take now the order of priest, whether thou be curat or none: who stirred thee to take vpon thee so high an estate? Whether for thou wouldest liue as a priest ought to doe, studying of Gods law to preach, and moll heartily to pray for the people: or for to liue a delicious life vpon other mens trauaile, and they selfe trauaile nought. Why also setten men their sonnes, either their cosins to schoole? Whereto, but for to get them great auancements, or to make them the better to know how they shulden serue God? This men may see openly by the sciences that they set them to. Why I pray you put men their sonnes to the law ciuell, or to the kings court to write letters and writs, rather then to Philosophie or Diuinitie, but for the hope that these occupacions should be euer meanes to make them great in the world? I hope that there will no man say, that they ne should better learne the rule of good liuing in the booke of Gods law, then in any bookes of mans worldly wisdome. But certes now it is sothe, that Iohn Chrysostom saith: Mothers be louing to the bodies of their children, but the soule they despise; they desire them to welfare in this world, but they take none heed what they shall suffer in the tother: some ordeinen fees for their children, but none ordeine them to Godward: the lust of their bodies they wol deere by, but the health of their soule they recke nought of. If they see them poore or sicke, they sorrow and sigheth, but though they see them sinne they sorrow not. And in this they shew that they brought forth the bodies, but not the soules. And if we take heed truly, what abominations be scattered and spread abroad in holy church now adaies among priests, we shul wel wit, that they come not all to the fold of Christ by Christs cleping for to profit, but by other waies to get them worldly welth, and this is the cause of lesing of soules, that Christ bought so deare, & of many errors among the people: and therefore it is iwrit in the booke of mourning, where Prophet speketh thus to God, Thre. 1. The enemy hath put his hand to all things desireable to him: for he hath let lawlesse folke enter into the sanctuary, of the which thou hadst commanded, that they should not enter into the church. This enemie is Sathanas, as his name sowneth, that hath put his hand to all that him liketh. What sinne I pray you will the fiend haue sow on men, that nis now yvied? In what plenty is now pride, enuy, wrath, and couetise? whan were they so great as they be now? and so of all other sinnes. And why trowest thou? But for there be a lawlesse people entred into thy sanctuary, that neither keepe in themselfe the law of God, ne lonne teachen other: and to euery such, saith God by the Prophet: Ose. 4. For that thou hast put away cunning, I shall put thee away, that thou shalt vse no priesthood to me. Lo that God expredly here in holy writ, forbiddeth men to take the state of priesthood on them, but they haue cunning, that needeth them. Thou than that canst neither rule thy selfe, ne other, after the law of God, beware how thou wilt answere to God, at his dreadfull dome, when he shall say to thee, that which I tooke to my theame:

Solution. Iohannes Chrysostomus homilia 27.

Note.

Ose. 4.

Yeld the reckening of thy baily, how thou hast entred.

The second question that euery curat and prelat of holy church shall answer to, is this: How hast thou ruled? That is to say, the soules of thy suggets, & the goods of poore men: Geue now thine account. First, how thou hast gouerned Gods folke that were take thee to keepe? Whether art thou an herd or an hired man, that doost all for loue of bodelich hire? As a father, or as a wolfe that eaten his sheepe, and keepeth them nought? Say, whom hast thou turned from his cursed liuing, by thy deuout preaching? Whom hast thou taught the law of God that was earst vncunning? There shall ben heard a grieuous accusing of fatherlesse children, and a hard alledging, that priests haue liueden by their wages, and not done away their sins. Yeld also reconing how thou hast ruled, and spended the goods of poore men. Harke what S. Bernard saith: Dread clerks, dread the ministers of the church, the which ben in the place of Saints, that they doe so wickedly, nought holding them apaid with such wages that were sufficient to them: That ouerplus that needy men should be sustained by, they be not ashamed to waste in the house of their pride and lechery, and withbolden to themselfe wickedly and cursedly that which should be the lifelode of poore men. With double wickednesse truly they sinne. First, for they reeuen other mens goods, and saith they misuse holy things in their vanities and in their riches. Euery curat baily therfore beware, for whom, to the last farthing he shall reckon with Christ. Trowest thou not then, that thou ne shalt be disallowed of God, of that thou hast mispended in feeding of fat palfreys, of hounds, of hawkes, and if it so be, that is worst of all, on lecherous women? Heare what is said of such. They had led their daies in wealths: And in a point they ben gone downe into hel. Think therefore I rede thee, that thou shalt yeeld reckening of thy baily.

How hast thou ruled.

Bernardus.

Deut. 9.

Iob 21.

The third question that this baily shall answere to, is this: How hast thou liued? What light of holinesse hast thou shewed in thy liuing to the people, or what mirror hast thou ben of holinesse to them? Geue now thy reconing how thou hast liued, as a priest, or as a leude man, as a man, or as a beast. That is to wonder truly how the life of priests is chaunged. They be clothen as knights, they speaken as vnhonestly as carles; other of winning as Marchaunts; they riden as princes, and all that is thus spended, is of the goods of poore men, and of Christs heritage. Therefore saith an holy doctor: The clay of Egypt was tough and stinking, and medled with bloud. The slaues were hard to be vndone, for they were baked with fire of couetise, and with the light of lust. In this trauaileth rich men, in this they wake, awaiting pecunien. In these trauaileth prelats, that ben too much blent with too much shining of riches, that make them houses like churches in greatnesse, that with diuers paintries, coloren their chambers, that with diuers clothings of colours, make images gay: but the poore man for default of clothes, beggeth, and with an empty wombe crieth at the doore. And if I shall the sooth say, saith this doctor, oft time poore men be robbed for to clothe the trees and stones. Of such speaketh the Prophet: How art thou here? or as who art thou? Here thou art occupying the place of Peter and of Poule, or of Thomas or of Martine: But how, as Iudas among the apostles, as Symon Magus among the disciples, as a candle new quenched amongst thilke all the house in steed of a light lanterne, as a smoke that blindeth mens eien, in place of cleane fire? If thou contrary thus the forme of liuing that Christ and his disciples left to priests: Loe what saith the prophet Ieremy. They haue entred, and they haue had and nought ben obedient. They hauen with false title or with their false and corrupt intention, had poore mens goods to their misusing, and they haue not be obedient to the law of God in their owne liuing. Therefore it is writ, that the hardest dome shall fall on such. An hard dome, for they haue misentred. An harder dome, for they haue misruled: and the hardest dome, for they haue so curtedly liued. Thinke therefore I rede, how thou wilt giue reckning of thy baily.

Kings, princes and magistrates admonished. How thou hast entred.

The second bailiffe, that accounteth at this dome for himselfe and also for other, is hee: that keeping hath of any communite, as kings, princes, maiers, and shireues, and iustices. And these shull also answere to the same three questions. The first question, how hast thou hentred, that is to say, into thine office? Other for helpe of the people to destroy falshed and fortheren truth? Other for defire of winning of worldly worship? If thou take such an office, more for thine owne worldly profit, than for helpe of the communite, thou art a tyrant as the philosopher saith. For it is to feare left there ben too many that desiren such states, that they may the rather oppresse thilke that they hateth, and take gifts to spare to punish thilke, that hauen trespassed, and so maketh them partners of their sinnes. And many such, when they ben so high, they recke nought that they beth poore mens brethren, but they wene to passe them in kind, as they passeth in worldly worshippe, that is but winde: of which God saith by the prophet, they hauen raigned, but nought of me, they haue bene princes but I know nought. So we read of Roboam, that was the son of king Salomon, what time he was first king, the people of Israel comen to him, and said: Thy father in his last daies, put on vs great charge. Wee pray thee some deale make it lighter, and we willen serue thee. And the king tooke counsell of the old wise men, & they counsailden to answere them faire, and that should bee for the best. But he left these old wise mennis counsaile, and did after the counsaile of children that were his playferen, and said to the people when they came againe. My left finger is greater than my fathers riegge. My father grieued you somewhat, but I will echen more thereto. And the people heard this, and rebeleden to him, and tooke them another king: and sith, the kingdome came neuer whole againe: and therefore it is good, that euery ruler of communalties, that they be not lad by follies, ne by none other eare rowner, that he ne haue an eygh of loue to the commonty that he hath to rule. For weteye well, bee he neuer so high, that he shall come afore his higher, to yeeld reconing of his baily.

How hast thou ruled.

The second question is, How hast thou ruled the people, & the office that thou haddest to gouerne? Thou that hast bene a iudge in causes of poore men, how hast thou kept this heft of God? Thou shalt not take heede to the person of a poore man, to be to him the harder for his pourety, ne thou shalt not behold a rech mans semblance, to spare or to fauour him in his wrong for his riches. O Lord, what abusion is there among officers of both lawes now a daies: If a great man pleadeth with a poore man, to haue ought that he holdeth, euery officer shall be ready to hie all that hee may, that the rich man might haue such an end as he desired. But if a poore man plead with a rich man, then there shall be so many delaies, that though the poore mans right be open to all the countrie, for pure fault of spending, he shall be glad to cease. Shrieues and bailiffes, willen retourne poore mens writs, with tarde venit, but gif they feelen meed in their hands. And yet I here say, men that hauen seyen both lawes, that ilke court that is cleped Christs court, is much more cursed. Therefore it is writ, giftes they taken out of mens bosomes, to ouerturne the right way of dome. But it is to dread the word of Christ: In what dome ye deeme, ye should be deemed when ye comen to yeeld a reckoning of your baily.

Deut. 9.

Matth. 7.

How hast thou liued.

The third question that is, How hast thou liued, thou that deemest and punishest other men for their trespas? A great doctor saith: thee behoueth to flee the wickednesse of other men that thou chastiest them for their trespas. For if thy selfe do vnlawfullich in deming other men, thou damnest thy selfe, syth thou doest that thou damnest. And Poule saith, why teachest thou nought thy selfe, that thou teachest other? Why stealest thou, that teachest nought other men to steale? Sain Gregory saith: He shall not take gouernaile of other, that cannot goe before them in good liuing. And when any man stand before him in dome, he must take heede to fore what iudge he shal stand himselfe, to take his dome after his deeds. But it is to dread, that many fareth as twe false priests that woulden haue damned to death holie Susan? for she would not assent to their leacherie. Of the which it iswrit, they turned away their eyen, for they would not see heauen, ne heue mind of rightfull domes. So it happeth oft, they that were more worthie to be hanged, damneth them that be lesse worthie, as a clerke telleth of Socrates the Philosopher, saith he, vpon a day a man asked of him why he laughed. And he said, for I see great theeues leaden a little theefe to hanging. I pray thee, whether is hee a greater theefe that beareth a man his house and his land from him and from his heires for euermore, other he that for making of great need, stealeth a sheepe or a calfe? Whether trowe ye nought, that it happeth such extortioners to bee otherwhile iudges, and demeth men thus: but I read thee that thus deceiueth other, thinke on that dome thou shalt come to, to yelde the reckening of thine baily.

Valerius Maximus libro 6.

The third Bailiffe that shall be cleped to this dreadfull account shall be euery christian man, that shall geue reckening to his Lord God, for goods that he hath had of his. And heere I will speake but of the first question, that is this: How entrest thou? And here by the way, yee that haue gotte any worldly good, other take by extortion, by rauine, by visirie, other by diuest: We shall be to him at this dreadfull day as saincte Austen sayth. If he be cast into the fire that hath nought giuen of his owne good: where trowest thou shall he be cast in, that hath reued other mens from them? And he shulle been with the fend that hath nought clothed the naked, where trowest thou shall hee bren that hath made him naked that was earst clothed? But as S. Gregory saith, two things maketh men to liue thus by rauaine of other neighbors, that they desire heynes and dread pouerty, and what vengeance falleth of this sinne of couetise, I may see by figure in holy writ, when the angell said to prophet Zacharie. Reare vp thine eien, and see what is that goeth out. And the prophet said what is it? Then the angell said, this is the potte going out, this is the eize of hem on all the earth, and there was a waight of leade I bore, and there was a woman sitting in the middle of this pot. And the angell said, this is Impiety: and he tooke her and cast her into the middle of this pot, and he tooke the gobbette of leade and cast it into the pots mouth. And the prophet lift vp his eie, and hee saw two women coming out, and spirits in her wingis like two kytes other gledes, and they arerid vp this pot betweene heauen and the earth, and than the prophet spake to the angell, whider wol these beare this pot? And hee said, into the lond of Sennaar: This pot is couetise. For, right as a pot hath awide open mouth, so couetise gapeth after worldly good: and right as the licour in the pot, profiteth nought to the pot, but to men that drawen and drinketh therof: so worldly good oft profiteth not to churles, but to other that commeth after, as it is written. He that hath money shall haue no fruit of it: and this couetise is the eie of couetous men, for they ben blind to see how they should see to goe to heauen, but to winning of worldly thinges they see many waies, like to owles and night crowes, that seene better by night than by day. The gobbet of leade, is the sinne of obstination. The woman that sat in the pot, is vnpitie, as the angell said, that followeth vnrighteousnesse and auarice. For through auarice, a man leeseth the pity that he should haue of other, and his soule. For oft time, men leese the life of their soule, by deadly sin that they do to haue the worldly winning, and also they leese the pitie that they should haue of their body, putting themselues to many great bodilie trauayls and perils both by sea and land, and all maketh couetise. This pot is stopped with the gobbet of lead, when vnpitie is thus by sinne of obstination closed in couetise, that hee may not goe out of the chinches hart by penance. For as Iob saith: when he is fulfilled, he shall be stopped. The two women that bare vp this pot, are pride and lust of flesh, that bee cleped in holy writ the twe daughtren of the water Lethe, crying, bring, bring. And they had wings: the first wing is grace spirituall, as cunning, wisedome, and counsell, with such other many. For which gifts many men wexe proud. The second wing is bodily grace, as strength, fairehood, gentrie, and many other such, whereof men wexe proud. The wings of the second woman, that is, fleshly desire, beth gluttony and sloth. Of gluttony speaketh saint Gregorie: when the wamb is fulfilled, the prickes of lecherie beth meued. And of sloth saint Austine saith: Lot the while he dweled in businesse among shrewes in Sodome, hee was a good man. But when he was in the hill slowe, for sykernes, he in his drunkennes lay by his daughtren. And these women had wings like kytes, that with a crying voice feecheth their meate, as Bartholomeus saith. And thus fareth couetise of men: Witnessing saint Austine, what is the greedines of fleshlie desire. Inasmuch as the rauenous fysshes haue sometime measure, yet when they hunger, they rapine, and when they fulfill, they spare: But onely couetise of men may not be fulfilled. For euer he taketh, and neuer hath inough. Neither hee dreadeth God, neither shame of men. He ne spareth his father, ne knoweth his mother, ne accordeth with his brethren, ne ether keepeth truth with his friend. He ouerpresseth widowes and fatherlesse children. Free men he maketh bond, and bringeth forth false witnes, and occupieth dead mens things, as he should neuer die. What manhode is this, saith this Doctour, thus to leese life and grace, and get death of soule? Win gold, and leese heauen? And herefore saith the prophet, haue trauaile in the midst, and leaue vnrighteousnesse. Also innocent speaking of the harmes that come of couetoise, saith thus; O how manie men haue couetise deceiued and spilt! When couetise Balaam would for gifts that the king profered him, haue cursed Gods people, his owne asse reproued him, and hurt his foote against a wall. Achor was stoned to death: for couetise made him stale gold and clothes, against the commandement of God. Giezi was smit with meselrie, for he sold Naamans heal, that came of Gods grace. Iudas for couetise sold Christ, and afterward he sang himselfe. Anany and Zaphira his wife were dead sodainely, for they forsoken to giue Peter their money that they had. And couetise maketh also that rich men eate the poore, as bestes: done their seruis holding them low. This may we well day, in deed I dread. For if a rich man haue a field, and a poore man haue in the middest or in the side thereof one acre, and a rich man haue all a street saieth O house, that some poore brother of his ow eth, he ceaseth neuer till hee get it out of the poore mans hand, either by praier, or by bying, or by pursuing of deceit. Thus fared it by king Achab, that through his false queenes giune, slow e the poore man Naboth, for that he would not sell him his vineyard that was nigh to the kings palace. Vppon which proces, thus saith saint Ambrose: How farre will yee rich men stretch your couetise? Will yee dwell alone vpon the earth, and haue no poore man with you? Why put ye out your fellow by kind, and challenge to your selfe the possession comen by kind? In comuune to all rich and poore the earth was made. Why will ye rich chalenge proper right herein? Kind knoweth no riches, that bringeth forth all men poore. For we be not got with rich clothes, ne borne with gold ne with siluer. Naked hee bringeth them to this world, needie of meate and of drinke and clothing. Naked the earth taketh vs, and the naked brought vs hither. Shee cannot close with vs our possession in the sepulchre, for kinde maketh no difference betweene poore and rich, in comming hither, ne in going hence. All in o manner the bringeth forth, all in o manner she closeth in graue. Who so wil make difference of poore and rich, abyde till they haue a little while leyne in the graue. Than open and looke among dead bones who was rich, and who was poore, but if it be thus that mo clothes rotteth with the rich then with the poore, and that harmeth to them that both on lue, and profit net to them that beene deade: Thus saith the doctour of such extortion as it is writ. Other mens fields they repeth, and fro the vine of him that the harme oppresed, they plucke away the grapes: they leueth men naked, and taketh away her clothes that hath nought wherewith to helle them in cold, and liften vp this pot bytweene heauen and earth. For couetous men nother haueth charity to their brethren vpon earth, neyther to God in heauen: and they bare this pot into the lond of Senaar, that is to say, into the lond of Stenche, that is hell, for there shall be stench, in stead of sweet smelling as Isay saith. Beware I reade, that yee nought haue to doe with this pot, ne with the woman therein: and on all manner that ye be nought weddid to hir, for than ye must be both one. This is thilke foule lecherous woman: the kings and marchaunts of the earth haue done lecherie, an i of their venue they haueth be made rich, whose damnation is written in the booke of prinities in these words. In o day, shall come all this vengeances of her death, weping and hunger and fire shall breine her, for strong is God that shall venge him on her, and than shulleth weepe and howle vppe on her; the kings of the earth, that haueth done lecherie with her, and haueth liued in delices when they shull see the smoke of her brenning, stonding afere weeping and weyling and saying. Alas, alas, thilke great city that was clothed with bis and purpre, and brasile, and ouergult with gold and pretious stones and pearle. For in one houre all these great riches shall be destroyed, then shall they sey that shall be damned with her. We haue erred fro the way of trouth and right wisnes, light haue not shined vs vs, and the sonne of vnderstonding haue not resen to vs: we haue be made weery in euerich way of wickednes and of lust, and haue gone hard waies, but the waies of God we knew nought: what hath pride profited to vs, or the boast of riches what hath it brought to vs? All this is as a shadow of death, and we mow now shew no token of holinesse, in our wickednes we be wasted away. Thinke therefore I read, that thou shalt yelde rekening of thy bayly. Here endeth the first part of this sermon, and beginneth the second part.

Luke 16. Ambros. tract. de Nabuth. Iob 14. Mat. 25. 1. Sapientiæ. 1. Sapientiæ. Death.

And sumne, ye the most part that deyeth now a dales, deyeth byfore her kind agee of deeth: therefore I say, that the first that clepeth to this special reckning is sicknesse, that followeth all mankind, so that euery man hath it: and sumne is sicknesse that sumne men haueth but nought all. Yet the first sicknesse is double, for sume is within in the mightes of the soule, and sume is without in feeblenesse of the body that needis mo bee stroyed, whan time by hemselfe is cause of corruption as philosophie saith, that thereby feeblenesse and sicknes. And so may we see hereby, though that a man shut out of the house of his heart all manner of worldly and flesshlie thoughts, yet vneth shall a man for ought that he can doo, thinke on God only, the space of o Pater noster, but that some other thing that is passing, entreth into the soule, and draweth her from contemplation. But O Lorde God, what seekenesse is this, an hesuie burden on the sonnes of Adam, that on soule moocke and sen of the world we may thinke long ynow. But on that the soule shoulde moste delectation haue by kinde mow wee nought thinke so little a space, but if the cokle enter among the wheate. Of this seekenes speaketh Poul, where hee saith: I see a law in my limmes fighting agenes the law of my spirit, and taking me into the law of sinne. So that it fares by vs, as by a man that would looke ageyns the sunne, and may nought do it long for nothing. And forsooth that is for no default that is in the sunne, for thee is most cleere in her selfe, and so by reason beft should bee seyn, but it is for feeblenes of mans eye. Eyght so, syth Adam our first fader was put out of Paradise, all his offspring haue ben thus sicke, as the prophet seyth. Our faders haue eate a bytter grape, and the teeth of the children be wexe an edge. The second sicknesse, that is commune to all mankind, commith of feeblenes of the body, as hunger and thorst, colde and heate, sorrowe and wearines, and many other as Iob 18. saith. A man that is ybore of a woman, lyuing a little while, is fulfilled with many miseales. Yet there is other sicknesse that commeth to some men, but not to all, as Lepyr, Palsey, Feuer, Dropsie, Blindnesse, and many other, as it was seyden to the people of Israell, in holy writ. But thou keepe the commandements that be writ in this booke, God shall achen the sicknesse of thee and of thy seede, great sicknesse and long abiding. Yet yee shall vnderstond, that God sendeth otherwhile, such sicknesse to good menne, and other while to shrewes. To good men God dooth it for two causes, and that is sooth. Of sicknesse I wol to be vnderstond also, of all maner of tribulations. The first cause, for they shoulde alway euer know, that they haue none perfection of themselfe, but of God only, and to echen their meekenes. And thus saieth Poule, least the greatnesse of reuelations rere mee vp into pride, is giuen a pricke of my flesh, the angell of Sathanas to smite me on the necke, wherefore I haue thrice prayed God, that he should go fro me, and he answered mee: My grace is sussisant to thee, for vertue is fulfilled in sicknes, where on thus sayn the glose. The send axing Iob to bee tempted, was heard of God, and nought the apostle axing his temptation to bee removed. God heard him that should be damned, and he heard nought him, that he should saue. For oft the sicke man axit many things of the leche, that hee wol not geue him, and that is for to make him whole of sicknes. Also God sendeth saincts oft sicknesse and persecution, to giue vs sinnefull wretches example of patience: For if he suffer his saindts to haue such tribulation in this world, and they thankin him thereof, much more wretchis that God sendeth not the hundred apartie of their sorrowe, shoulden beare it meekely, sith we haue deserued a thousand so much as they haueth. Whereof, Tobie that one day when he was wearie of burying of poore men, the which shulden haue ley vnburied, and haue be eteene of houndis, and foules, as carynes, of other vnreasonable beasts, when for werinesse he had leyde him to rest, through Goddis sufferance the swallowes that bredden aboue on his hous, maden ordure into his eyen, and he wexet blind. Thus it is writ of this temptation for sooth: Therefore God suffered to come to him, matter to them that coinen after, should be giuen ensample of patyence, as by the temptation of holy Iob. For sith from his childhod, euermore hee dreade God, and euer kept his hestes: Hee was not agreeued ayenst God that the mischiefe of blindnesse fell to him: but vnmoueable dwelled in the dread of GOD, thanking him all the daies of his life. Loe that holy writ sayth expressely, that God suffered this holy man to haue that sicknesse, to giue them that should come after him ensample of patience. Also otherwhile, God sendeth sicknesse and tribulation to wicked men, and for two causes. First, for that they shoulde the rather dread God, and leaue their sinne. As it is writ: their sicknesse hath beene multiplied, and after, they haue hyed to Godward. For we see oft men in sicknesse know their God, that neuer would haue turned to him while they hadde beene whole. Also God sendeth them sicknes oft to agast other men, least they followe their sinne. As the sicknesse of king Antioche, whom God smote with such a sickines, that worme fell out of his body while he liued, in so far forth, that he stanke so fowle, that his friends were so weary of it, that they might not suffer it. And at the last, when he himselfe might not suffer his owne stinch, then he began to know himselfe, and said: It is rightfull to be subiect to God, and a deadly manne not to hold hold himselfe only euen with God, and the storie saith he asked mercie of God, and made a vow to God, that he would make the citie of Ierusalem free, and the Iewes to make them as free as the men of Athens: and that he would honour Gods temple with pretious ary, and multiplie the holy vessels, and finde of his owne rent and spences pertening to the sacrifice. And he would become a Iewe, and goe ouer all the lond to preach Gods might. And yet God gate him not such mercie as he desired. And I trow certein that it was for good. In as much as God knew he would not after wand hold his couenant, or els for he axket it too late. What meede was it for him to forsake his wickednes? when he was vnmighty to do good or euill. Neuerthelesse, I trow he was not damned, in asmuch as he had such repentance, for repentance in this life come neuer too late if it be true. But by this vegeance that GOD tooke on this king, should men see, what it is to be vnobedient to God. And also it is to take heede, that when euer sicknesse commeth, euer it sheweth, that he that suffereth this deadlie, shall nedes die. For though he may skape of his sicknes, yet he may not skape death. And so thou must needes come giue rekening of thy bayly. The second sumnour that shall clepe thee to this particular dome, is elde or age. And the condition of him is this, though that he tarie with thee, he will not leaue thee, till he bring thee to the third, that is death. But there be many that though they haue this somnor with them, they take none hede, though they see ther heare hore, her backe crooke, her breth stynke, her teeth faile, her yen derk, her visage riuely, her crene wexit heuy to her. What meaneth all this, but that age sumneth to the dome?

But what more madhead may be than a man to bee cleped, and drawe to so dreadfull a reckening there, where but he answere well he forseeth both body and soule to damnation for euer? If seing a litle worldly mirth on the way, he thinketh so meskil therein, that he forgetteth who drayeth him, or whether he draweth: So doth he that is smitten with age & liketh so on the false world is wealth, that he forgetteth whether hee is away: Herefore saith an holy Doctour, that among all abusions of the world most is of an olde man that is obstinate: for he thinketh not on his out going of this world, ne of passing into the lyfe that is to come: he beareth messengers of death, and he leeueth hem not, and the cause is this, for the threefolde cord that such an old man is bounden with, is hard to breke. This cord is custome, that is of three plightes, that is, of ydle thought, vnhoneft speach, and wicked deedsthe which if they groweth in a man from the childhoode into mans age, they maketh a treble cord to binde the old man on custome of sin. Herefore sayth Esay, breake the bondes of sin. Thinke herfore whosoeuer that thou be that art thus sumned, that thou might not scape, that thou ne shalt yeld the rekening of thy baily.

The third somner to this reckening, is death. And the condition of him is, that whan euer he come, first, other the second, other the last houre he ne spareth, neyther power, ne yough, ne he dreadeth no thretning, ne he ne taketh hede of no prayer, ne of no gift, ne he graunteth no respit, but withouten delay he bringeth forth to the dome. Herefore seyth saint Austen: Well ought euery man drede the day of his death. For in what state a mans laft day findeth him, in the same state he bringeth him to his dome. Herefore seyth the wiseman: Sonne thinke on thy last daye, and thou shalt neuer sinne. Therefore I rede that thou thinke, that thou shalt geue reconing of thy bayly. I said also, that there shall be another doome, to the which all men shall come together, and this shall be vniuersall. And right as to the other dome, euery man shall bee cleped with these three sumnours: so to this dome all this world shall be cleped with three generall clepers. And right as the other three messengers tell a mans end, so these tell the end of the world. The first cleper is the worldlie sicknesse, the second cleper is feeblenesse, and the thirde is the end. The sicknesse of the world thou shalt know by charity a cooling. His elde and feblenes thou shalt knowe by tokens sulfilling, and his end thou shalt know by Antichristes pursuing. First I said, thou shalt know the worldes sicknes by charitie a cooling. Clerkes that treate of kinde sayne: that a bodie is sicke, when his bodilie heate is too lite, or when his vnkindelie heate is too much. Sythe then all mankind is one bodie, whose kindlie heate is charity (that is loue to God and to our neighbors) vnkindly heate is iustfull loue to other creatures. VVhen therefore thou seest that the loue of men to Godwarde and to their neighbour is little and faint, and the loue of worldlie things and lustes of the flesh is great and feruent: then wit thou well, that vnkindly heate is too great, and kindly heate is too litele. That this be acknowlech of this sicknesse, I may prooue by autoritie of Christ. For he himselfe gaue them as a signe of the drawing to the ende of the worlde: For that wickednesse shall be in plentie, charitie shall a coole. Therefore when thou seest charitie this litele in the worlde, and wickednes encrease, know well that this worlde passeth and his wealth, and that this sumner is come. And thus seyth seynt Poule, VVit ye well, that in the last daies shall come perillous times, and there shall be men louing themselfe, that is to say, their bodies, couetous by pride, vnobedient to father and mother, vnkynde fellons, withouten affection; withouten peace, blamers, incontinent, vnmilde withouten benignitie, traytors, rebels, swelling, louers of lustes, more than of God, hauing a likenesse of pietie, and denying the vertue thereof. And these flee thou. If thou seest the people busied with such conditions, wit thou well that the first sumnour warneth all the world, that the day of reconing draweth toward.

The second sumnour, that warneth all the world, is elde or age of the world and his feblenesse, and sheweth tokens fulfilling. But I know well, that we be nought sustisaunt to know the tunes other the whiles that the Father in Trinitie hath put on his owne power, to shewe certeinelie the day, yeare, other houre of this dome, sith this know lech was hud fro the privy Apostles of Christ, and from Christs manhoode as to shewe it to vs. Nathlesse, we inough by authoritie of holy writ, with reasons, and expositions of saintes well and openly shewe, that this day of wrath is nigh: But yet least any man sey in his hart as it is written of follie baylies, that they shall seien, my Lord, that is, tarryeth to come to the dome, and vpon hope hereof hee taketh to smite seruaunte and hynen of God, eate and drinke and make him dronke: I shall shewe that this day is at the bonde: howe ny neuerthelesse, can I not seie ne wele. For the holie sayde nowe for a thousande and three hundred yeere, and passed moe: wee ben thilke, into whom the endis of the worlde ben come, much rather may wee seie the same that been so much neere the end than he was. Also saint Chrysostome from sayth: thou seest ouer all darknes, & thou douteest that the day is go, first on the valeys is darknes whan the day draweth downward: whan therefore thou seest the valeies yderked, why douteest thou whether it be nigh euen, but if thou see the sun so low that derkenes is vpon the hils, thou wolt seie doutles, that it is night. Right so if thou see first in the seculars and the lewd Christen men beginneth derkenesses of sinnes and to haue the maistrie, it is token that this world endeth. But when thou seest priestes that ben put on the high toppe of spirituall dignities, that shulden be as hilles abouen the commune people in perfect liuing, that derkenesse of sinnes hath taken them, who douteth that the world nis at the end? And also Abbot Ioachim in exposition of Ieremye seyeth: Fro the yeare of our Lord 1200. all times beth suspected to me, and wee ben passed on this suspect time nigh 200. yeare. Also mayden Hyldegare in the booke of her prophesie the thirde partie, the xi. vision the seuenth chap. meueth this reason. Right as on seauendaies God made the world, so in 7000. yeare the world shall passe And right as in the sixt day man was made and fourmed: so in 6000. yeares he was brought againe and reformed. And as in the seuenth daye the worlde was full made, and God lesse off his working, right so in the 7000. yeare, the number of them that shullen be saued shall be fulfilled, and rest shall be to seyntes full in bodie and soule. If that it be so as it seemeth to followe of this maydens words, that 7000. in passing of the world accordeth to seauen daies in his making it, see what lacketh that these 7000. yeares ne beth fulfilled. For if wee reken the number of yeeres fro the natiuitie of Christ, to the yeares fro the beginning of the world, to Christ, & thou wolt followe Austine, Bede, and Orosie, and most probable doctors Augustine. treating of this matter, are passed now almoft, sixe thousande and fiue hundred, as it is open in a booke that is cleped Speculum Iudiciale. So it sueeth that this laste day is more than a halfe agoe, if we shulden giue credence to this maydens reason: But if we shull lene to the Gospell, than we shall finde in the Gospell of Matthew, that the Disciples axiden of Christ three questions. First, what time the citie of Ierusalem should be destroyed. The second, what token of his comming to the dome. And the third, what signe of the ending of the world. And Christ gaue them no certaine time of these thinges when they shoulden fall, but hee gaue them tokens, by which they might know when they drew nighe, and so as to the first question of the destruction of Ierusalem he saide: when the Romaines come to besiege that citie, then soone after shee shall be destroied.

Chrysostome. Anopere simulitudine. Ioachim. Gualt. Hyldegar. Matth. 24. Note.

And as to the second and the thirde, he gaue manie tokens, that is to say; That the Realme shall rise against Realme, and people against people, and pestilences and earthquakinges, the which we haue seene in our daies. But the last token that he gaue, was this; when ye seene the abhomination of elegnesse sayd of Danyell the Prophet, standing on the Sanctuarie: then who so readeth, vnderstond. Vppon which text, thus argueth a Doctour in a booke that hee maketh of the end of the world. If the wordes of Danyel hauen authoritie (as God sayth that they hauen) it sufficeth of the number of the yeares of the ende of the world, that Danyel hath written. Now Danyel in the twelfth chapter, speaking of this abhommination, putteth betweene the ceasing of the busie sacrifice of the Iewes, the which fell, when by Titus and Vespasianus, Ierusalem was destroyed, and the people of the Iewes were disparkled into all the world. And this abhomination that doctours sayne, shall be in the great Antichristes daies, 1290. Now prooueth this doctour, that a day must be taken for a yeare, both by autoritie of holy writ in the same place and in other, and also by reason: So it seemeth to this clerke, that the great Antichrist should come in the 1400. yeare fro the birth of Christ, the which number of yeares is nowe fulfilled, net fully twelue yeares and a halfe lacking. And this reason put not I as to shew any certaine time of his comming, sith I haue not that knowledge: but to shew that he is nye, but how nygh I wot neuer. But take wee heede to the fourth part of the second vision of saint Iohn, put in the booke of Reuelations, in the which vnder the opening of the seauen seales, is declared the state of the Church, from the time of Christ into the ende of the worlde. The opening of the foure first seales, shew the state of the Church, fro the time of Christ, to the time of Antichrist and his foregoers, the which is shewed in the opening of the other three seales. The opening of the first seale, telleth the state of the Church in the time of the preaching of Christ and of his Apostles. For the first, that is, the Lyon, gaue his voice, that betokeneth the preachers of Christes resurrection and his ascension. For then yede out a white horse, and he that sate vpon him had a bowe in his hande, and hee yede out ouercomming and to ouercome. By this white horse we vnderstande, the cleane life and conuersation that these preachers laden: and by the bow, their true teaching, pricking sorrowe in mennes hearres for their sinnes without en flattering. And they wenten out of Iewry that they comen of, ouercomming some of the Iewes, and maken them to leaue the trust that they hadden in the olde lawe, and to beleeue in Iesus Christ, and shewen his teaching. And they wenten out to ouercome the Paynemes, shewing to them that their Images were no Gods, but mens workes, vnmightie to saue them selue or any other, drawing them to the belief of Iesus Christ God and man. In the opening of the second seale, there cried the second beast, that is, a calfe, that was a beast wonted to be slaine, and offered to God in the olde law. This sheweth the state of the Church in the time of Martyrs, that for their stedfast preaching of Gods true lawe, shed their bloud, that is signified by the redde horse that went out at this seale opening; and this estate began at Nero the cursed Emperour, and dured vnto the time of Constantine the great, that endowed the Church. For in this time many of Christes seruantes, and namely the leaders of Gods flocke were slaine. For of two and twenty bishops of Rome that were betweene Peter and Siluester the first, I reade but of foure, but that they were Martyrs for the law of Christ. And also in the time of Diocletian the Emperour, the persecution of the Christen men was so great, that in thirtie daies weren slaine 22. thousande men and women in diuers countreyes, for the lawe of God.

The 3. seale.

The opening of the third seale, telleth the state of the Church in time of heretikes that beth figured by the blacke horse, for false vnderstonding of holy write: for than cayed the thirde beast that is a man, for at that time was it needfo preache the mysterie of Christes incarnation, and his passion ayenst these erretikis that felden mis of these pointis: howe Christ tooke verrayly mans kinde of our Lady, him being God as he was bifore, and his moder being mayden bysore and after. The opening of the fourth seale, telleth the state of the Church in the time of ypocritis, that beth signified by the pale horse, that beth signes of penaunce with outfoorth to blinde the people. And he that sate vpon this horse his name was death, for they shulle slee gostly them that they leden, and tesdeth to trust vpon other thing than God: and helle followeth him, for helle receiued thilke that these diden eth. At that time shall it need, that the fourth beast that is the Egle make his cry, that slyeth highest of soules to reare vp Gods Gospell, and to praise that lawe aboue other, least mens witte, and their traditions ouergone and treden downe the lawe of God, by enforming of these ypocrites, and this is the last state, that is, other shall be in the Church, bysore the comming of the great Antichrist. The opening of the fift seale, telleth the state of the Church that than God shall followe, and desire that louers of Goddis law shulleth haue after the ende of this world to be deliuered of this wo. The opening of the sixt seale telleth the state of the Church in time of Antichristis time, the which state yee may knowe to be in the Church whan ye seth fulfilled, that saint Iohn prophesieth to fall in the opening of this, where he saith thus: After this I sawe foure Angelles stonding vpon foure corners of the earth, holding the foure windes of the earth that they blowen nought vpon the earth, ne vpon the sea, ne vpon eny tree. These foure Angels beth the number of all the Deuils ministers, that on that time shulleth in the pleasaunce of their Lord Antichrist, stoppe the foure windis that beth the foure Gospelles to be preached, and to let the breth of the grace of the holy Ghost to fall vpon men morning for sinne, & calling them to amendement, and to other that wolden encrease in vertues, other vpon perfit men? What is there after this to fall, but that the mysterie of the seauenth seale bee shewed, that he come in his owne person. That Iesu Christ shall slee with the spirite of his mouthe, when the fiend shall shewe the vtmost persecution, that he and his seruantis may doo to Christis limmes, and that shall be the third warning that the world shall haue to come to this dreadfull dome.

The 4. seale. Expositio.

The 5. seale.

The 6. seale.

In all this matter haue I nought seid of my selfe, but of other doctors that beth prooued, I seyd also in my second principall part, that it were to wete sofore what Iudge we shall reken. Wherefore we shulleth wite that God himselfe shall heere this rekening, he that seeth all our dedis, and all our thoughts fro the beginning of our life to the ende, and he shall shew there the hid thingis of our hert, opening to all the world the righfulnes of his dome. So that with the might of God, euery mans dedis to all the world shall be shewed, and so it seemeth by the wordes of Seint Iohn in the booke of preuities, there he seith thus: I sawe dede men litel and great, stonding in the sight of the throne, and bookes weren opened: and an other booke was opened that was of life, and dede men weren iudged after the thinges that weren written in the bookes after their worchings. These bookes beth mens consciences that now beth closed. But than they shulleth bee opened to all the world to reden therein both dedis and thoughtes. But the booke of life, is Christs luing and doctrine, that is nowe hidde to men that shulleth be damned through their owne malice, that deemeth men to serue the world, rather than God: In the first booke shall be writ all that we haueth doe, in that other booke, shall bee write that wee shulden haue doo, and than shulle dede men bee demyd of thilke thingis that ben written in the bokis: For if the dedis that wee haue doe, the which ben written in the bookis of our conscience, be according to the booke of Christes teaching and his liuing, the which is the booke of life, we shulle be saued, and else wee shulle bee damned, for the dome shall be giuen after our workis. Looke therefore now what thing is written in the booke of thy conscience, while thou art here; and if thou findest ought contrarie to Christis life, other to his teaching, with the knife of penaunce and repentance, scrape it away and write it better, euermore herby thinking that thou shalt yelde rekening of thy bayly.

Apoca.

Also I saide principallie that it were to witen, what reward shall be geue on that doome, to wise seruantes and good, and what to false seruantes and wicked. For the which it is to wite, that our Lorde Iesu Christ, shall come to the dome here into this world, in the same body that hee tooke of our Ladye, hauing thereon the woundis that he suffred for our againe bieng. And all that euer shullen bee saued, taking againe their bodies clyuing to their head Christ, shull be rauished metyng him in the ayre as Paule saith: They that shall be damned syen vpon the earth, as in a tonne of wine the dreggis dwellen byneth and the cliere wine houeth aboue. Than shall Christ axe rekening of the deedes of mercy, reprouing false christen men for the leuyng of them, rehearsing the deedes of the same, and other truthis by the which his true seruantes than followed him: than shulle thilke false seruauntes goe with the deuill, whom they haue serued in the earth, then hwallowing into the endlesse fire. And rightfull men shullen goe into euerlasting life, then shall be fulfilled that is written in the booke of prinities: Woe, woe, woe, to hem that dwellen in the earth. Woe to the paynym that gate that worship to dead Images wroght of mans handes, and to other creatures that hee shoulde haue goue to God that him wrought: Woe to the Iewe that trusteth so muchil in the olde Lawe, than shall he see Maries sondemning the world whom he despised and set on the crosse: Woe to the false christen man that knew the will of his Lorde and fulfilled it nought.

Also woe for sinne of thinking to thee, that thou hast shyt out the meine of God, that is minde of his passion, holy contemplation, of his goodnesse and memorie of his benefites, fro the chaumber of thine hert; and hast made it an house of swyn and a denne of theeues, by vncleane thoughtes and delightes. As thou here hast sperd God out of thine hert, so he shal spere thee out of heauen: Thou hast herberwid the meine of the fiend, and with them in hell thou shalt euer abide: woe also for sinne of speach, for thou might nought open thy foule and stinking mouth with the which thou hast spoken vnhonestly, cursing, fraud, deceit, leasinges, forswearing, scorning, and backbiting, to praise God in the fellowship of saints. For louing is nought comynlych in mouthes of sinners. For in the which gif thou haddest kept thy mouth cleane, thou shouldest haue songen in fellowship of Angelles this blessed song: Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus, Dominus Deus omnipotens: Holie, holy, holy, Lorde God almighie. Then yelling and weeping thou shalt cry in company of deuils. Ve, ve, ve, quanta sunt tenebre: Woe, woe, woe, how great beth these darknes: woe also for sinne of feede. Thou hast bene proud, thy pride shall be drawne to hell, as Esay sayth, or thou hast bene brent with enuie of the deuill. Enuy entred into the world, and they shoulden folowen him that ben on his side, as Salomon sayth: Or thou hast be stirred with wrath, and euerich man that beareth wrath to his brethren, is gilty in dome, as Christ in the gospell sayth of Matthew. Or thou hast be slow to good deedes, mysfawe shall come to thee as a wayfaring man: and thy pouertie as a man armed, as the booke of Prouerbes sayth. Or thou hast haunted lecherie, glotonie, or couetise. That forsooth wete ye, that euerych auouterer, or vncleane man, that is a glutton, other chynych, shall neuer haue heritage in the realme of Christ and of God, as Poule saith. But fire, brimstone, and the spirit of tempestes, that is the fiend of hell, shulen bee a parte of their paine, as it is written in the Psaulter when these damned men bee in this woe, they shullen sing this reuful song that is ywritten in the booke of mourning. The ioy of our hart is a go, our quiet is turned into woe, the crowne of our heade is Allo ioy for their trauell is brought to so gracious an end. Ioy, for they scape the paine of hell: Ioy, for their blisse that they han in the sight of God: Cui sit honor & gloria, in secula seculorum, Amen.

Conclusion.

And thus much concerning this worthie & fruitfull sermō, which as by the ancientnesse of the phase seemeth to be preached much about the time of Iohn Wicklisse: so I thought here, by the occasion of William Thopes examination, best to place the same: for the apt coherence both of the spirit, and of the matter. Especially hauing before our eyes, the publike vtilitie of the Reader, to whom by the studious reading thereof, might rise plentifull matter of true christian information, both of the wholesome fearing of God, and of the right guiding of euery christian mans life.

Whereunto I thought good to annere further in our storie, after the examination of William Thorpe, and the martyrdome of William Sautrey, and of Iohn Badby thus described (as ye haue heard) which was about the yeare 1409. By the way here is to be considered, at least to bee admonished, that all this while the schisme in the church of Rome did yet continue, and so indured till the councell of Constance, which was in whole, the space of twentie and nine yeares. The originе whereof (as was said pag. 399.) first began at Urbanus the fifth: which Urbanus being dead, An. 1389. next followed pope Boniface the ninth, who sate fourteene yeares. Hee in selling his pardons was so impudent and so past shame, that he brought the keyes of Peter (as saith Platina) in contempt. After him succeded Innocentius the seuenth, and sate two yeares: who being dead, the cardinals consulting together, and seeing the soule enormitie and inconuenience growing vpon this contentious schisme in their church of Rome (minding to prouide some remedie for the same, after the best deuice they could) in their conclaue where they were assembled for a new election of the pope, tooke this order, promising among themselues with solemne vow made to God, to Marie the blessed virgin, to Peter and Paul, and to all the blessed companie of saints: That if any of them within the college or without the college, should be called to that high place of apostolicall preeminence, he should effectuouslie renounce the first diction and title of his popedome, if or whensoeuer the contrarie pope for the time being, would in like maner renounce his place and title, and his cardinals in like maner to condescend to the other cardinals of Rome. So that both these two colledges of cardinals agreeing together, one chiefe bishop might be chosen and taken out of them both, to bee made the true pope. Prouided moreouer, that none should seeke any releasement or absolution from the said promise, vow, and bond, once passed among them: Vnto all which things furthermore euery one subscribed with his hand. These things thus proffred and ratified vpon the same, they proceeded to the election. In which was chosen Gregorius the twelfth, who the same day of his election, in the presence of all the cardinals, confirmed the vow, sacrament, and promise made, subscribing the same with his hand in forme as followeth. And I Gregorie, this day being the last of Nouember, in the yeare of our Lord, 1407. chosen and elected for bishop of Rome: doe sweare, vow, and promise, and confirme all the premises aboue contained, &c. This being done, shortly after he was crowned, being of the age of 80. yeares. In the time thus passed, the people and cardinals were in great expectation, waiting when the pope according to his oth would giue ouer, with the other pope also. And not long after, the matter began indeed betweene the two popes to be attempted, by letters from one to another: assigning both day and place, where and when they should meet together; but yet no effect did follow.

Ex chron. D. Albani.

The oth and bond of pope Gre. 12.

This so pattling on, great murmuring was among the cardinals, to see their holy pertured father, so to neglect his oth, and vow so agreed. Insomuch, that at length, diuers of them did forsake the pope, as being pertured (as no lesse bee was) sending moreouer to kings and princes of other lands, for their counsell and assistance therein, to appease the schisme. Amongst the rest, cardinall Viturientis was sent to the king of England: who publishing diuers propositions and conclusions (remaining in the registers of Thomas Arundell) disputeth, that the pope ought to be subiect to lawes and councels. Then king Henry (moued to write to Gregorie the pope) directeth his letter here vnder ensuing, which was the yeare of our Lord, 1409. The contents of the letter be these.

The letter of king Henrie the fourth, to pope Gregorie the twelfth.

MOst blessed father, if the discreet prouidence of the Apostolike see, would call to mind with what great perils the vniuersall world hath been damnified hitherto vnder pretence of this present schisme: and especially would consider, what slaughter of christian people to the number of two hundred thousand (as they say) hath beene through the occasion of war raised vp in diuers quarters of the world, and now of late, to the number of thirtie thousand souldiers, which haue beene slaine through the dissension mooued about the bishopricke of Leodium, betweene two set vp, one by the authority of one pope, the other by the authoritie of the other pope, fighting in campe for the title of that bishopricke: Certes ye would lament in spirit and bee sore grieued in mind for the same. So that with good conscience yee would relinquish rather the honor of the see apostolike, then to suffer such horrible bloodshed hereafter to ensue, vnder the cloke of dissimulation, following herein the example of the true mother in the booke of kings: who pleading before Salomon for the right of her child, rather would depart from the child, then the child should bee parted by the sword. And although it may be vehemently suspected by the new creation of nine cardinals, by you last made, contrarie to your oth (as other men doe say) that you doe but little heede or care for ceasing the schisme: Yet fame bee it from the hearing and noting of the world, that your circumspect feate should euer be noted and disdained with such an inconstancie of mind: whereby the last errour may be worse then the first. Ex Chron. D. Alb. mis: part the second.

King Henry the fourth to the cardinals.

AND to the cardinals likewise, the said king directeth another letter with these contents here following: Wee desiring to shew what zeale we haue had and haue, to the reformation of peace of the church; by the consent of the states of the realme, haue directed to the bishop of Rome our letters after the tenour of the copie herewith in these presents enclosed to be executed effectually: wherefore wee seriously beseech your reuerend colledge, that if it chance the said Gregorie to bee present at the councell of Pise, and to render vp his popedome, according to your desire, and his owne oth; you then so ordaine for his state totally, that chiefie God may be pleased thereby, and that both the said Gregory and also wee which intirely loue his honour and commoditie, may haue cause to giue you worthily condigne thankes for the same: Ibid.

To the which assemblie, a great multitude of prelats and bishops being conuented, a new pope was chosen, named Alexander the fifth. But to this election, neither Gregorius, nor Benedictus did fully agree. Whereby there were 3. popes together in the Romaine church (that is to vnderstand) not three crownes vpon one popes head, but three heads in one popish church together.

Pope Alexander 5.

This Alexander being newly made pope, scarcely had well learned his triple crowne; but straight guiltie not full remission, not of a few, but of all maner of sinnes what soeuer: to all them that conferred any thing to the monasterie of saint Bartlemew by Smithfield, resorting to the said church any of these daies following: to wit, on Maundie thursday, good friday, Easter euen, the feast of the Annunciation, from the first euensong to the latter. But this pope which was so liberall in giuing remission of many yeares to other, was not able to giue one yeare of life to himselfe, for within the same yeare he died. In whose stead crept vp pope Iohn 23.

Pope Iohn 23.

In the time of this Alexander, great strife began in the countrie of Bohemia, by the occasion of the bookes of Iohn Wicklisse, which then comming to the hands of Iohn Husse, and of other both men and women, especially of the lay sort, and artificers, began there to doe much good. Insomuch, that diuers of them not onely men, but women also, partly by the reading of those bookes translated into their tongue, partly by the setting forward of Iohn Husse, a notable learned man, and a singular preacher at that time in the Vniuersitie of Prage; were in short time so ripe in iudgement, and prompt in the Scriptures, that they began to mone questions, yea and to reason with the priests, touching matters of the holy Scriptures.

The boldnesse of the Bohemians to take roote in Bohemia.

By reason whereof, complaint was brought to the said pope Alexander the fifth, who caused eftsoones the forenamed Iohn Husse to be cited vp to Rome. But when hee came not at the popes citation, then the said pope Alexander addressed his letters to the archbishop of Suinco. Wherein hee straitly charged him to prohibit and forbid, by the authority apostolicall, all maner of preachings or sermons to bee made to the people, but onely in cathedrall churches or colleges, or parish churches, or in monasteries, or else in their churchyards. And that the articles of Wicklisse, should in no case of any person of what state, condition or degree soeuer, bee suffered to bee holden, taught, or defended, either priuily or apertly. Commanding moreouer and charging the said archbishop, that he with foure bachelers of Diuinitie, and two Doctors of the canon law ioyned vnto him; should proceede vpon the same, and so proude that no person in churches, schooles, or any other place, should teach, defend, or approue any of the foresaid articles. So that whosoeuer should attempt the contrary should be accounted an heretick, & vnlesse he shall reuoke solemnly & publikely the said articles, and shall for euer abiure the bookes wherein the foresaid articles be contained. In that open may be vtterly abolished out frō the eyes of the faithfull: the same to be apprehended and imprisoned, all appellation set apart, the helpe also of the secular arme being called thereunto, whatsoeuer shall require, &c. These were the contents of this mightie and fierce bull of pope Alexander.

Iohn Hus. exclaimeth against the popes cruell bull.

Against the which bull on the other side Iohn Husse swiftly complaining, excepteth against and obiecteth many things, as appeareth in his booke intituled De ecclesia cap. 18. Where he declareth this mandate of the pope to stand directly against the doings and sayings both of Christ and of his apostles: considering, how Christ him self preached to the people, both in the sea, in the desert, in fields, in houses, in synagogues, in villages: and the apostles also in all places did the same, the Lord mightily working with them. He declared moreouer, the said mandate a bull of the pope to redound vnto the great detrīment of the church in binding the word of God, that it might not haue his free passage. Also, the same to bee preiudiciall vnto chapels newly erected for the word of God to bee preached in them. Wherefore (saith hee) from this commandement or mandate of pope Alexander, I did appeale vnto the said Alexander being better informed and aduised. And as I was persecuting my appeale, the lord pope (saith Husse) immediately died.

The miserable iudgement of God in striking the bull & the author of the Gospell.

Then the archbishop of Suinco aforesaid, to whom this present bull was directed, when he saw the pieces, buls and mandates of the bishop of Rome, to bee thus contemned of Iohn Husse and his fellowes, neither hauing any hope of redresse in Wincesslaus the king, which seemed to neglect the matter; went out of his countrie into Hungarie, to complaine vnto Sigismund king of Hungarie, and brother to the said Wincesslaus. But this quarrelling archbishoppe, whether before (as the Bohemians say) or after (as Sabinus saith) that he had spoken with Sigismund: immediately there (by the iust iudgement of God) died in Hungarie, as the story saith for sorrow. Whereby a little more libertie and quiet was giuen by the Lord vnto his Gospell, newly beginning to take roote among the Bohemians. Albeit, this tranquillitie there did not long continue without trouble and persecution, neither could it in those furious daies and reigne of Antichrist. For after this Meander aforesaid succeeded pope Iohn 23. Who likewise playing his part in this tragedie, bent all his might and maine to disturbe the Bohemians, as more hereafter (Christ willing) shall be declared in further processe of our historie, comming to the yeare of our Lord, 1413.

The Gospell falleth some times into quiet.

D. Iohn 23.

Thus the poore christians (as pe see) like to the sillie Israelites vnder the tyranny of Pharao, were vniustly and oppressed in euery place, but especially here in England: and that so much the more here, because that the king, not like to Wincesslaus, went full and whole with the pope and his prelats against the Gospellers.

The pride and glory of the clergie of England in those daies.

By reason whereof, the kingdome of the pope and his members here in this realme began to be so strong, that none durst stirre or once mute against them. The bishops hauing the king so full on their side armed moreouer with lawes, statutes, punishments, imprisonments, sword, fire, and fagot: reigned and ruled as they listed, as kings and princes within themselues. So strong were they of power, that no humane force was able to stand against them: so exalted in pride and pompe in glorie, that they thought all things to be subiect to their reuerend maiesties. Whatsoeuer they set forth or decreed, it must of all men be receiued and obeyed.

And such was their superstitious blindnesse and curious vanitie, that whatsoeuer toy came once in their fantasie; it was straightwaies determined and stablished for a law of all men to be obserued: were it neuer so friuolous or superstitious; as well appeareth by Thomas Arundell archbishop of Canterbury and other, who hauing now a little leisure from slaying and killing the innocent people, Martyrs and Confessours of the Lord, and hauing now brought their enemies (as they thought) vnder feet; began to set vp themselues, and to inuent new traditions, as the guise is of the popes church, likewise to trade into the church of God, some ceremony or custome of their owne making, whereby the church of Christ hath beene hitherto exceedingly pestred: So likewise this Thomas Arundel, thinking the church yet not sufficiently stuffed with ceremonies and vaine traditions of men; bringeth in a new found gaud, commonly called the tolling of Aues, in honor of our lady, with certaine Aues to be said, and daies of pardon to be giuen for the same. For the ratification whereof, vnder the presence of the kings regall, he directeth his mandate to the bishop of London, well stuffed with words of Idolatrie as by the reading thereof may appeare, in forme of tenures as followeth.

Fortie daies of pardon geuen by Sr. Arundel archbishop.

A mandate of Thomas Arundel, directed to the bishop of London, to warne men to say certaine prayers at the tolling of the Aues, or ringing of Curfew.

THomas, &c. To the right reuerend our brother, the lord Robert, by the grace of God bishop of London, greeting, &c. While we lift our eyes round about vs, and behold attentiuely with circumspect consideration, how the most high word that was in the beginning with God chose to him an holy and immaculate virgin of the kingly stocke: in whose wombe he tooke true flesh by inspirall inspiration, that the mercifull goodnesse of the sonne of God that was vncreate, might abolish the sentence of condemnation, which all the posteritie of mankind that was created, had by sinne incurred. Amongst other labours in the vine of the Lord of Sabbaoth, we sung to God our sauiour with great ioy in him carefully thinking, that though all the people of the christian religion did excell with voices of praises so worthy a virgine, by whom we receiued the beginnings of our redemption, by whom the holy day starre shined to vs, which gaue vs hope of saluation. And although all the same people were drawen to reuerence her, which being a happie virgin, conceiued the sonne of God, the king of heauen, the redeemer and sauiour of all nations, ministring light to the people that were miserable drowned in the darkenesse of death: Wee truely as the seruants of her owne inheritance, and such as are written of, to bee of her peculiar dower, as we are by euery mans confession acknowledged to be: we I say ought more watchfully then any other, to shew the endeauours of our deuotion in praising her. Who being hitherto mercifull to vs, yea being euen couragis, would that our power, being as it were spred abrode euery where through all the coasts of the world, should with a victorious arme, feare all forren nations: That our power being on all sides so defended with the buckler of her protection, did subdue vnto our victorious standards, and made subiect vnto vs, nations both neare at hand and farre off.

* It ys to be not blasphemous and iniurious to Christ, for the creator to pray.

Likewise our happie estate (all the time that we haue passed since the beginning of our liues) may be well attributed onely to the helpe of her medicine: to whom also we may worthily ascribe not only in these our times vnder the mighty gouernment of our most christian king, our deliuerance from the rauening wolues, and themouthes of cruell beasts: which had prepared against our bankers, a messe of meate mingled full of gall, and hated vs vniustly, secretly lying in waite for vs, in recompence of the good will that we shewed to them. Wherefore, that she being on high sitting before the throne of the heauenly maiestie, the defendresse and patronesse of vs all, being magnified with all mens praises; may more plentifully exhibite to vs the sonnes of adoption the teates of her grace, in all those things that we shall haue to doe: At the request of the speciall deuotors of our Lord the king himselfe, we command your brotherhood, straitly enioyning you, that you command the subiects of your citie and dioceese, and of all other suffragans, to worship our lad, Mary the mother of God and our patronesse and protectresse, euermore in al aduersity: with such like kind of praier and accustomed maner of ringing, as the deuotion of Christs faithfull people is wont to worship her at the ringing of Coure le feu. And when before day in the morning yee shall cause them to ring, that with like maner of praier and ringing, she be euery where honoured deuoutly by the aforesaid our and your suffragans, and their subiects as well religious as secular, in your and their monasteries and collegiate churches: That we so humble calling vpon the mercy of the heauenly father, the right hand of the heauenly piety, may mercifully come to the helpe, the protection, and defence of the same our lord the king, who for the happie remedie of quietnesse, and for our succour from tempestuous floods, is ready to applie his hands to worke, and his eyes with all his whole desire to watching. Wherfore couetīg more earnestly to stirre vp the minds of all faithfull people to so deuout an exercise of God, &c. We grant by these presents, to all and euery man, &c: that shall say the Lords praier and the salutation of the angell fiue times at the morning peale with a deuout mind, pateno apatiens, how oft soeuer, 40. daies of pardon by these presents. Giuen vnder our seale in our manor of Lambeth the tenth day of Februarie, An. nostre transl. 9. Ex regist. Thom. Arundel.

Ringing & Curphew.

The papists would fayne haue our Ladies paps.

Why the bell is called Curphew.

Fortie daies pardon, for fiue Aues.

By this friuolous and barbarous constitution with many other of like sort heaped into the church by the papists: appeareth the proper nature and condition of this catholike generation. Who being themselues not greatly exercised nor experienced in any serious cogitation of spirituall matter (as seemeth) take vpon them to gouerne the spirituall church of Christ, wherof indeed they haue no skill or very little. And therefore according to their vnskilfull working, they leade and rule the church after such outward sights and ceremonies, seemely perhaps to their owne grosse affection: but not agreeing (nay rather cleane contrarie) to the right nature and condition of the spirituall house and kingdome of the Lord. And like as in their inuentions they swarue vtterly from the right handling of all spirituall gouernment: so in their maners and forme of life likewise, they do resemble little or no part almost, of such as are and ought to be true pastors and ministers of the mysticall body of Christ.

Decaying by ceremonies in the church.

Examples hereof are plentie and plaine, in these Romane prelats to be noted: who so well considering the humble state and lowly spirit which ought to bee in pastorall leaders of the the church, will compare the same with the vsuall pomp of these glorious potestates.

The poeme of the popes church noted.

As for example; what can be more conuenient for a true pastor of ecclesiasticall, then humilitie of heart and spirit, according to the example of the head bishoppe himselfe? So what greater shew of arrogancie and pride could there bee, then in this, whom I haue oft named before, Thomas Arundel archbishop of Canturbury: who passing by the high street of London, did not only take and wait for the ringing of the bels, for a triumph of his comming, but take great snuffe, and bid suspend all such churches in London (not only with the steeple and bels, but also with the organs) so many as did not receiue his comming with the noise of bels: according as out of his owne registers may appeare: the words whereof written to his owne Somner, I haue hereto annexed in his owne forme, as followeth.

Churches of London suspended for not ringing at the comming of the archbishop.

A Commission directed to the Somner, to suspend certaine churches of London, because they rung not their bels at the presence of my lord the Archbishop of Canturbury.

THomas by the permission of God, &c. To our welbeloued Thomas Wilton, our Somner sworne, health, grace, and blessing. The comelinesse of our holy church of Canturbury, ouer which we beare rule, desireth and requireth, that while we passe through the prouince of the same our church (hauing our crosse carried before vs) euery parish church in their turnes, ought and are bounden in token of speciall reuerence that they beare to vs, to ring their bels. Which notwithstanding, yea on tuesday last past, when we betwixt eight and nine of the clocke before dinner, passed openly on foote as it were, through the midst of the citie of London, with our crosse carried before vs: Diuers churches, whose names are here beneath noted, shewed towards vs willingly (though they certainly knew of our comming) vnreuerence rather then reuerence, and the dutie that they owe to our church of Canturbury, ringing not at all at our comming. Wherefore we being willing to reuenge this iniury, for the honour of our spouse as we are bounden: command you, that by our authoritie, you put all those churches vnder our interdicement, suspending Gods holy organs and instruments in the same. Which we also suspend by the tenor of these presents, till the ministers of the aforesaid churches be able hereafter to attaine of vs the benefit of more plentifull grace. Giuen, &c.

These iniurie maker a Bella-na of our Lady.

False hope longed and fed vp of the papists.

a Oh iniurious mettle to Christ his humilitie.

b The papists would sucke our Ladies paps.

What great reason was in this, why this archbishoppe either should thus take for the ringing of the bels, or why he should be thus displeased with not ringing, I doe not see. Vnlike his mind in the meane time was greatly occupied with some great muse, as feeling of Gods feare, with repentance and remembrance of his sinnes, with zealous care and solicitude for his flocke, with the earnest meditation of the passion and life of our Sauiour, who in this world was so despised: or else was set vpon some graue thing, while he so fretted for the ringing of the bels, which were wont to be so noisom to all the dents. And why were not the trumpetters also shent as well, because they did not sound before his person? But and though the bels did not clatter in the steeples, and therefore his thunderbolt should haue fallen vpon the steeples which had deserued: why should the bodie of the church therefore be suspended? At least, the poore organs (me thinketh) had some part of wrong to be put to silence in the quier, because the bels rang not in the tolure.

Will ye seeme to ecle doctrine or catholikes? Spitt blasphemy against the mother of Christ.

Ringing of Curphew.

Organs suspended in the church because the bels did not ring.

Of the like matter also we read in the said regesters, falling betweene the bishop of Worcester, and the prior of the same towne, for not ringing at the bishops comming into the church. Whereupon much sute and contention was betweene them, till at length the archbishop of Canturbury toke vp the matter, moderating it, as in the said regesters, fol. 441. appeareth to be seene as followeth.

Fortie daies pardon, for fiue Aues.

Ex Regist. Tho. Arundell. Variance betwixt the bishop and prior of Worcester, for not ringing at the bishops comming.

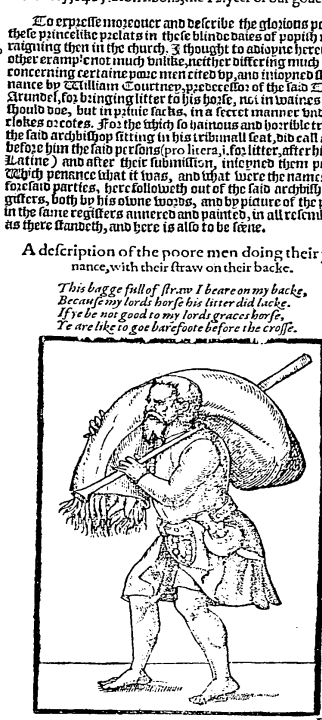
VNiuersis, &c. Thomas, &c. Whereas there happened variance lately between our reuerend brother the lord bishop of Worcester on the one party, and the religious and discreete men the Prior and Couent of the same church on the other partie, for not ringing of belles at the comming of our said brother to his foresaid church, at length the parties (considering the great inconuenience that might come thereof) at our instance and request did agree on this manner: that as often as it shall happen our reuerend brother to goe to his aforesaid church, either to celebrate orders, or to visit his church in the head or in the inferiours, or to make creame and oyle in the same church: Also in the feast of the assumption of the blessed virgin Mary, which is the chiefest feast in the abby aforesaid: then the Prior and the Couent, and their successours for the time being, shall ring solemnly against his comming, or shall cause to be rung solemnly without all contradiction, or any reclaiming hereafter to bee made against the same. Which agreement that it may be more firmely kept, we let you all vnderstand by these presents, sealed with our seale. Giuen at our palace of Canturbury 12. July, the 10. yeer of our gouernment.

The like ser for belringing and for processions, had almost hapned betweene the archbishop of Canturbury, successor to this Thomas Arundel, named Henry Chichley on the one party, and the abby of S. Albons on the other party, had not the abbat in time submitting himselfe to the archbishop, to prouided, that the ringing of their bels at his comming, might not redound to any derogation of their liberties. Whereunto the archbishop granted by these his letters as followeth.

Ringing for the archbishop at S. Albons.

Ex Regist. Henr. Chichesley fol. 365.

HEnry, &c. to the religious men, the abbat and couent of the monastery of Saint Albons in the dioceese of Lincolne, health, &c. When as of late there happened a matter of variance betweene vs, and you the abbat and couent, by reason of not giuing reuerence to vs, being due to our province of Canturbury, that is, for not ringing the bels, and meeting vs with processions when we passed by diuers places of our prouince as well due of common custome as of old vse, and for the prerogatiue of the church of Canturbury, as also being due of euery one being within the compasse of this our said prouince, when and as often as we shall passe by their places: at length your lord abbat (comming personally to vs) did grant both for you and the couent aforesaid, to doe and to giue of your gentlenesse all reuerence and honour, with such reuerence both to vs and our church of Canturbury, as often as we passe by your monastery, or the places nigh or adioyning thereto, or shall hereafter goe by: so that it might not be preiudicial to your exemption, and nothing be attempted to the violating of your priuiledge: and that it might not be challenged for dutie hereafter. Wherefore we desiring to keepe you from damage, let you vnderstand by these presents, that it is not our intent to derogate your exemptions or priuiledge whatsoeuer herein: nor by any meanes to be preiudicial to you by these your reuerences or other duties, whatsoeuer you haue or shall grant to vs of your deuotion and liberality, both by you, and in places vnder your dominion. In witnesse whereof, &c Dated the 28. day of Ianuary, 1425. at S. Albons, the 12. yeer of our gouernment.



To expresse moreouer and describe the glorious pompe of these princelike prelats in these blinde daies of popish religion raigning then in the church. I thought to adioyne hereunto an other example not much vnlike, neither differing much in time, concerning certaine poore men cited vp, and inioyned strait penance by William Courtney, predecessor of the said Thomas Arundel, for bringing litter to his house, not in waines as they should doe, but in pittie sacks, in a secret manner vnder their closes or coates. For the which so hainous and horrible trespasse, the said archbishop sitting in his tribunall seat, did call and cite before him the said persons (pro litera, i. for litter, after his owne Latine) and after their submission, inioyned them penance. Which penance what it was, and what were the names of the foresaid parties, here followeth out of the said archbishops registers, both by his owne words, and by picture of the persons in the same regesters annexed and painted, in all resemblance, as there standeth, and here is also to be seene.

William Courtney, predecessor of the bishops of Canturbury.

Ex Regist. W. Courtney.

A description of the poore men doing their penance, with their straw on their backe.

This bagge full of straw I beare on my backe,
Because of my lords horse his litter did lacke.
If ye be not good to my lords graces horse,
Ye are like to goe bare foote before the crosse.

The picture of them drawne in all proportion according to the ceremoniar standing in the Register.

Penance imposed upon the bailife of Wengham for driving his carriage into the palace.

In English:

Ignorance the mother of error, so much had blinded and deceiued certaine persons, to wit, Hugh Pennie, John Forstall, John Boy, John Wanderton, William Hayward, and John White, tenants of the lord of Wengham: that against the comming of the aforesaid archbishop to his palace of Canterbury on Palmes sunday euen, the yere of our Lord 1390, where they being warned by the bailife, to conuey and carry hay, straw, and other litter to the aforesaid palace, as they were bound by the tenor of their lands, which they held of the see of Canterbury: refusing and disdaining to doe their due seruice, as they were accustomed, brought their straw and other litter, not in carts and waines openly and sufficiently, but by peece meale, and closely in bags or sacks, in contempt of their lord, and derogation of the right and title of the see of Canterbury. Whereupon they being attched and presented before the archbishop, sitting in iudgement at his manor of Stratcheud, pardon and submitted themselues to his lordships pleasure, humbly craueing pardon of their trespasse. Then the aforesaid archbishop abolished the abane named Hugh Pennie, &c. they sweareing to obey the lawes and ordinances of holy church, and to doe the punishment that should be appointed them for their deserts: that is, that they going leasurely before the procession, euery one of them should carry openly on his shoulder, his bagge stuffed with hay and straw; so that the said hay and straw should appeare hanging out, the mouthes of the sacks being open.

Excommunication and absolution abused.

Notes of certaine parliament matters passed in this kings daies.

Matters of this kings parliaments.

TO proceed now further in the raigne of this king, and to intreat also something of his parliaments, as we haue done of other before. First, we will begin with the parliament holden in the first yere of his comming in.

Moreouer, forsomuch as our catholike papists will not beleeue yet the contrary, but that the iurisdiction of their father the pope, hath euer extended throughout all the world, as well here in England, as in other places: Here therefore speaking of the parliaments holden in this kings daies concerning this matter, I refer them to the parliament of the said king Henry in his first yere holden, and to the 27. article of the same. Where they may reade in the tenth obiection laid against king Richard in plaine words: how that, forasmuch as the crowne of this realme of England, and the iurisdiction belonging to the same, as also the whole realme it selfe, at all times lately past hath been at such liberty, and inioied such prerogatiue, that neither the pope, nor any other out of the same kingdome ought to intrude himselfe, nor intermeddle therein: it was therefore obiected vnto the forenamed king Richard the second, for procuring the letters Apostolicall from the pope, to the confirming and corroborating of certaine statutes of his, and that his enimies might be prouoked against the breakers thereof. Which seemed then to the parliament, to tend against the crowne and regall dignity, as also against the statutes and liberties of this the said our realm of England. Act. parl. An. 11. Reg. Henrici 4. Act. 27.

The popes iurisdiction excluded out of this realme.

Further more, in the second yere of the said king, this was in the parliament required, that all such persons as shall be arrested by force of the statute made against the Lollards in the second yere of Henry the fourth, may be bailed, and freely make their purgation: that they be arrested by none other then by the Sheriffes or such like officers, neither that any hanocke be made of their goods. The king granted to take aduice therein.

Ex Regist. Archiep. Cantuar.

Stat. 2. Reg. Henrici 4. cap. 15.

Anno 8. Reg. Hen. 4. act. 126.

In the eighth yere moreouer of this kings raigne, it was like wise propounded in the parliament, that all such persons as shal practise, or sue in the court of Rome, any processe touching any benefice, collation, or presentation of the same, shall incur the paine of the statute of præmunire made in the thirteenth yere of Richard 2. wherevnto the king granted, that the statutes herefore prouided, should be obserued.

Anno 8. Reg. Hen. 4. act. 114.

Item, in the said parliament it was required, that the king might inioy halfe the profits of euery parsons benefice, who is not resident thereon. Thereunto the king answered; that the Ordinaries should doe their duties therein, or else hee would prouide further remedie to stay their pluralities.

Ibidem act. 37.

Item, in the said parliament it was required; that none doe sue to the court of Rome for any benefice, but onely in the kings Courts.

¶ In the next yere following, which was the ninth of this king, another petition of the commons was put vp in parliament against the court of Rome, which I thought good here to expresse, as followeth.

Ex Rotulo Parliamentario. 9. Henrici 4.

The Commons doe beseech, that forasmuch as diuers promises of the benefices of holy church, dwelling in the court of Rome, through their singular couetousnesse now newly imagined to destroy those that haue been long time incumbents in diuers their benefices of holy church peaceably, some of them by the title of the king, some by title ordinary, and by the title of other true patrons thereof, by colour of promotions, collations, and other grants made to the same promisors by the Apostoll of the said benefices, doe purchse processes in the said court by citation made beyond the sea, without any citations made within the realme in deed against the same incumbents, whereby many of the said incumbents, though such pursuits and crafty processes and sentences of priuation and inhabilitation, haue lost their benefices, and others put in the places of the said incumbents before the publication of the same sentences, they not knowing any thing; and many are in great hazard to lose their benefices through such processes, to their perpetuall destruction and mischiefe. And forasmuch as this mischiefe cannot be holpen without an especiall remedy bee had by parliament: Pleaseth it the king to consider the great mischiefe and danger that may so come into diuers his subiects without their knowledge, through such citations out of the realme, and thereupon to ordaine by the aduice of the lords of this present parliament, that none presented, bee receiued by any Ordinary into any benefice of any such incumbent for any cause of priuation or inhabilitation, whereof the processe is not founded vpon citation made within the realme, and also that such incumbents may remaine in all their benefices, vntill it be proued by due inquest in the court of the king, that the citations whereupon such priuations and inhabilitations are granted, were made within the realme: and that if such Ordinaries, or such presented, or others, doe pursue the contrary, that then they and their procurators, fautors and counsellers, doe incurre the paines contained in the statute made against prouisos in the thirteenth yere of the raigne of the late Richard king of England the second, by processes to be made, as is declared in the statute made against such prouisors in the 27. yere of the raigne of king Edward, predecessor to our lord the king that now is, any roiall licences or grants in any manner to the contrary notwithstanding; and that all other statutes made against prouisors, and not repealed before this present parliament, be in their full force, and be firmely kept in all points.

The bishops of Rome haue euer practised to bring the kings of this realme into subiection.

That the kings counsell haue power by authority of parliament, in case that any man finde himselfe greeued in particular, that he may pursue: and that the said counsell by the aduice of the Iustices, doe right vnto the parties. This to indure vntill the next parliament, referring alwaies vnto the king his prerogatiue and liberty.

Anno 9. Regis Hen. 4. cal. 43.

Item, that no popes collector thenceforth should leuy any mony within the realme, for first fruits of any ecclesiasticall dignity, vnder paine of incurring the statute of prouisions.

Ex Chronic. D. Alban. Fabian. &c. & alij.

Besides, in the said parliament holden the eleuenth yere of this king, is to be noted; how the commons of the land put vp a bill vnto the king, to take the temporall lands out from spirituall mens hands or possession. The effect of which bill was, that the temporalities, wherein they swelled by men of the church, might suffice to finde to the king fifteene earles, fifteene hundred knights, six thousand two hundred esquires, and a hundred houses of almose, to the relief of poore people, mo then at those daies were within England. And ouer all these foresaid charges, the king might put yerly in his cofers 20000. pound.

Prouided, that euery earle should haue of yerely rent three thousand mark, euery knight a hundred mark, foure plough lands: euery esquire forty mark by yer, with two plough lands, and euery house of almose a hundred marke, with ouer plus of two true seculars vnto euery house: and also with prouiso, that euery township should keep all poore people of their own dwellers, which might not labour for their liuing; with condition, that that if mo fell in a towne then the towne might maintaine, then the said annes houses to releue such townships.

A computation of church goods, to what such they doe mount.

And for to beare these charges, they alledged by their said bill, that the temporalties, being in the possession of spirituall men, amounted to iii. C. and xvii. M. marke by yere. Whereof they affirmed to be in the see of Canturbury, with the abbies of Christs church, of S. Augustines, Shrewsbury, Coggeshale, and S. Osus, xv. M. marke by yere. In the see of Yorke and abbies there, xv. M. marke. In the see of Winchester, and abbies there, xv. M. marke. In the see of London, with abbies and other houses there, xv. M. marke. In the see of Lincolne, with the abbies of Peterbrow, Ramsey and other, xv. M. marke. In the see of Norwich, with the abbies of Bury and other, xv. M. marke. In the see of Ely, Spalding and other, xv. M. marke. In the see of Bathe, with the abby of Glinbourne and other, xv. M. marke. In the see of Worcester, with the abbies of Euesham, Abingdon and other, xv. M. marke. In the see of Chester, with the precincts of the same, with the see of S. David, of Salisbury, and Exeter, with their precincts, xv. M. marke. The abbies of Rauens or Reuans, of Fountaines, of Gernons, and diuers other to the number of fiue mo, xv. M. marke. The abbies of Leicester, Waltham, Golborne, Merton, Tiecetir, Olney and other, vnto the number of six mo, xv. M. marke. The abbies of Dowers, Batil, Lewys, Couentry, Dauentre, and Courtney, xv. M. marke. The abbies of Northampton, Boston, Bilsbow, Billingworth, Winchcombe, Hales, Parchillo, Frideswide, Notly, and Osmunsby, xv. M. marke.

The abbies of Rauens or Reuans, of Fountaines, of Gernons, and diuers other to the number of fiue mo, xv. M. marke. The abbies of Leicester, Waltham, Golborne, Merton, Tiecetir, Olney and other, vnto the number of six mo, xv. M. marke. The abbies of Dowers, Batil, Lewys, Couentry, Dauentre, and Courtney, xv. M. marke. The abbies of Northampton, Boston, Bilsbow, Billingworth, Winchcombe, Hales, Parchillo, Frideswide, Notly, and Osmunsby, xv. M. marke.

The abbies of Rauens or Reuans, of Fountaines, of Gernons, and diuers other to the number of fiue mo, xv. M. marke. And so the odde of xvii. M. mark, they appointed Hartford, Rochester, Huntingdon, Swinshed, Crowland, Malmesbury, Burton, Croukesbury, Dunstable, Shirborn, Taunton, and Biland.

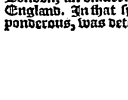
And ouer this, they alledged by the said bill, that ouer and aboue the said sum of iii. C. and xvii. M. marke, diuers houses of religion in England, possessed as many temporalties as might suffice to finde yerly xv. M. priests and clerks, euery priest to be allowed for his stipend vii. marke by the yere.

To the which bill no answer was made, but that the king of this matter would take deliberation and aduisement, and with that answer ended, so that no further labor was made.

Anno 1413

These things thus hitherto discoursed, touching such acts and matters as haue been incident in the life time of this king, followeth next the 13. yere of his raigne. In the which yere, the said king Henry the 4. after that he had sent a little before a certaine company of captaines & souldiers to aid the duke of Burgundy in France (among whom was the lord Cobham) keeping his Christmas at Eltham, fell grieuously sicke. From thence he was conueied to London, where he began to call a parliament, but tarried not the end. In the meane time, the infirmity of the king more and more increasing, he was taken and brought into a bed in a faire chamber at Westminster. And as he lay in his bed, he asked how they called the same chamber: and they answered and said, Jerusalem. And then he said it was his prophecie, that he should make his end in Jerusalem. And so disposing himselfe toward his end, in the foresaid chamber he died: vpon what sickenesse, whether of leprosie, or of some other sharpe disease, I haue not to affirme. Ex vetust. Chron. Anglico, cuius initium: That all men called.

The king had a prophecy that he should make Jerusalem. Prophecies detestable.



Ex vetust. chron. Anglico, cuius initium est, That all men called.

The like prophecy of pope Silluester 2.

The like prophecy was reade of pope Silluester 2. pag. 151. to whom being inquisitiue for the time and place where he should die, it was answered that he should die in Jerusalem. Who then seeing masse in a chapell (called likewise Jerusalem) perceiued his end there to be neere, and died. And thus king Henry the 4. succeeded to the lawfull king Richard 2. finished his life at Westminster, and was buried at Canturbury by the tombe of Thomas Becket, &c. An. 1413.

King Henry the fifth.

King Henry 5.

AFter this Henry the fourth, raigned Henry the fifth his sonne, which was borne at Monmouth in Wales, of whose other vertues and great victories gotten in France, I haue not greatly to intermeddle; especially seeing the memorie of his worthy prowesse, being sufficiently described in other writers in this our time, may both content the reader, and vnburden my labor herein: especially seeing these latter troubles and perturbations of the church offer me so much, that vnneth any vacant leasure shal be left, to intermeddle with matters prophane.

After the coronation then of this new king, which was the ninth day of April, called then passion Sunday, which was an preceding Sonny day, and so tempestuous, that many did wonder at the portent thereof: not long after the same, a parliament began to be called, and to be holden after the feast of Easter, at Westminster, an. 1413. At which time, Thomas Arundel the archbishop of Canturbury, collected in Pauls church at London, an vniuersall synod of all the bishops and clergy of England. In that synod among other weighty matters and ponderous, was determined; that the day of S. George, and also of S. Dunstan should be double feast, called Duplex Festum, in holy kitchen, in holy church I would say.

S. George and S. Dunstans day made double feast.

And because the order and maner of those pope-holy feasts, either yet is not sufficiently knowne to some rude and grosse capacities, or may peraduenture grow out of vse, and to be straunge and vnknowne to our posterity hereafter: therefore to giue a little memorandum thereof (by the way for erudition of times hereafter to come) touching this impiticall science of the popes dœpe and secret diuinity: here is to be noted, that the feasts of the popes holy mother catholike church, be diuided into sundry members: Like as a plentifull tree in a fruitfull field, riseth vp and burgeoneth into manifold armes, and the armes againe doe multiply into diuers and sundry branches, out of the which moreouer, although no fruit doe come, yet both leaues and flowers do bud and blossome in most copious wise, right beautifull to behold: Euen so this Festum, containing a large matter of great variety of dates and feasts, groweth in it selfe and multiplieth, being thus diuided: First, into Festum duplex, and into Festum simplex, that is, into feast double, and to feast simple. Againe, this Festum duplex brancheth foure fold wise, to wit, into Festum principale duplex: into Maius duplex: into Minus duplex, and inferius duplex: that is, in principall double, in greater double, in lesser double, and inferior or lower double. Vnto these seuerall sorts of feasts what daies were peculiarly affigned, it were too long to recite. For this present purpose it shall suffice to vnderstand, that as vnto the principall double feast only belonged eight daies in the yere; so the Maius duplex festum, had giuen vnto him by this conuocation, the day of S. George and of S. Dunstan, as is afore rehearsed: albeit by constitution it was so decreed, but by custome it was not to vsed. Item, to be noted, that these two feasts, to wit, Principale duplex, and Maius duplex, did differ and were knowne from all other by foure notes; by seruice in the kitchen, and by seruice in the church, which was both double, by ringing in the steeple, which was with double peale: by copes in the quier, and by thurifeying or censing the altars. For in these two principall and greater double feasts, the seuenth, eighth, and ninth lesson must bee read with silken copes. Also at the first lesse in the time of the lessons, the altars in the church must be thurifired, that is, smoked with incense, &c. And likewise the Minus duplex, and Inferius duplex had also their peculiar seruice to them belonging.

Festum duplex. Principale duplex, Maius duplex, Minus duplex. Inferius duplex.

Constitution against it counsel. Ex tab. festorum.

Secondly, the Simplex festum, which is the second arme springing of this diuision, is thus diuided: Either hauing a triple inuitatop, or a double, or else a single inuitatop. Of the which moreouer, some haue three lessons, some haue nine, &c.

Simplex festum in the popes church.

And thus much by occasion for popish feasts; not that I doe so much deride them, as I lament, that so much and manifest idolatry in them is committed, to the great dishonor of our Lord God, which is only to be honoured.

The trouble and persecution of the Lord Cobham.

The trouble of Syon Cobham. Ex Chron. Mellonc. Albanensis.

BVt to let this by-matter passe, againe to returne to the foresaid vniuersall synod assembled by Thomas Arundell at S. Pauls church in London, as is before remembred: the chiefe and principall cause of the assembling thereof (as recordeth the chronicle of S. Albons) was to represse the growing and spreading of the Gospell, and especially to withstand the noble and worthy lord Cobham, who was then noted to be a principall fauorer, receiuer, defender and maintainer of them, whom the bishop miscalled to be Lollards, especially in the dioceses of London, Rochester and Hereford, setting them vp to preach whom the bishops had not licensed, and sending them about to preach, which was against the constitution prouincial, before remembred, pag. 483. holding also and teaching opinions of the sacraments, of images, of pilgrimage, of the relics and church of Rome, contrary and repugnant to the receiued determination of the Romish church, &c.

Vide pag. 483.

In the meane time, as these were in talke amongst them, concerning the good lord Cobham, resorted vnto them the 12. inquisitors of heresie, (whom they had appointed at Orford the yere afore, to search out heretikes, with all Wicklifists bookes) who brought 200. and 46. conclusions, which they had collected as heresies out of the said bookes. The names of the said inquisitors were these:

Walden. in fascic. Zizaniorum Wicklefi.

1. John Witnam, a maister in the new Colledge.
2. John Langedon, monke of Christ church in Canturbury.
3. William Vford, regent of the Carmelites.
4. Thomas Claxton, regent of the Dominicks.
5. Robert Gilbert, 9. Richard Fleming.
6. Richard Earthisdale, 10. Thomas Rotborne.
7. John Lucke, 11. Robert Ronbery.
8. Richard Snedisham, 12. Richard Grafdale.

These things thus done, and the articles being brought in, further they proceeded in their communication, concluding among themselues, that it was not possible for them to make whole Christs coat without seame (meaning thereby their patched popish synagogue) vnlesse certain great men were brought out of the way, which seemed to be the chiefe maintainers of the said laid disciples of Wickliffe. Among whom this noble knight sir John Oldcastle the lord Cobham, was coupled of by the generall pontons to be the chief principall. Him they accused, first, for a mighty maintainer of suspected preachers in the diocesse of London, Rochester, and Hereford, contrary to the minds of the ordinaries. Not only they affirmed him to have sent thether the said preachers, but also to have assisted them there by force of armes, notwithstanding their synodall constitution made afore to the contrary. Last of all, they accused him that he was far otherwise in beliefe of the sacrament of the altar, of penance, of pilgrimage, of unage worshipping, and of the ecclesiasticall power, then the holy church of Rome had taught many yeres before.

In the end it was concluded among them, that without any further delay, processe should be awarded out against him, as against a most pernitious heretike.

Some of that fellowship which were of more crafty experience then the other, thought it not best to haue the matter so rashly handled, but to some preparation made thereunto before. Considering the said Lord Cobham was a man of great birth, and in fauor at that time with the king, their counsell in vse to know first the kings mind to saue all things upright. This counsell was well accepted, and thereupon the archbishop Thomas Arundell with his other bishops, and a great part of the clergy, went straightwaies unto the king, then remaining at Kenningston, and there laid forth most grieuous complaints against the said Lord Cobham, to his great infamy and blemish, being a man right godly. The king gently heard those blasphemy prelats, and farre otherwise then became his princely dignitie: notwithstanding requiring, and instantly desiring them, that in respect of his noble stocke and knighthood, they should per fauourable deale with him. And that they would, if it were possible, without all rigour or extreme handling, reduce him againe to the churches vnity. He promised them also, that in case they were contented to take faure deliberation, his self would seriously commune the matter with him.

Anon after, the king sent for the said Lord Cobham. And as he was come, he called him secretly, admonishing him betwixt him and him, to submit himselfe to his mother the holy church, and as an obedient child to acknowledge himselfe culpable. Unto whom the christian knight made this answer: Most worthy prince, saith he, I am always prompt and willing to obey, so farre forth as I know you a christian king, and the appointed minister of God, bearing the sword to the punishment of euill doers, and for safegard of them that be vertuous. Unto you (next my eternall God) owe I my whole obedience, and submit thereunto (as I haue done euer) all that I haue, either of fortune or nature, ready at all times to fulfill what soeuer you shall in the Lord command me. But as touching the pope and his spiritualty, I owe them neither sute nor seruice, forsomuch as I know him by the scriptures to be the great antichrist, the sonne of perdition, the open aduersary of God, and the abomination standing in the holy place. Then the king had heard this, with such like sentences more, he would talke no longer with him, but left him so vtterly.

And as the archbishop resolued againe unto him for an answere, hee gaue him his full authority to cite him, examine him, and punish him according to their diuelish decrees, which they called the lawes of holy church. Then the said archbishop by the counsell of his other bishoppes and clergy, appointed to call before him sir John Oldcastle the Lord Cobham, and to cause him personally to appeare, to answere to such inuect Articles as they should lay against him. So he sent forth his chiefe Summoner, with a very sharpe citation unto the castell of Cowling, where as he at that time dwelt for his solace. And as the said Summoner was come thither, he durst in no case enter the gates of so noble a man without his licence, and therefore hee returned home againe, his message not done.

Then called the archbishop one John Butler unto him, which was then the doue keper of the kings priuy chamber: and with him he couenanted through promises and rewards, to haue this matter craftily brought to passe under the kings name. Thereupon, the said John Butler tolde the archbishops Sumner with him, and went unto the said lord Cobham, shewing him, that it was the kings pleasure that he should obey the citation, and so cited him fraudulently. Then said hee to them in few words, that hee in no case would consent to those most diuelish practises of the priests. As they had informed the archbishop of that answer, and that it was for no man priuate to cite him after that without peril of life, he decreed by and by to haue him cited by publike processe or open commandement. And to all the same possible, upon the wednesday before the nitiuity of our Lady, in September, he commanded letters citatorie, to be set upon the great gates of the cathedrall church of Rochester (which was but three English miles from thence) charging him to appeare personally before him at Lebis the eleuenth day of the same month and yere, all excuses to the contrary set apart. Those letters were taken downe anon after, so farre forth as hee knew unto the Lord Cobham, and so conueied aside. After that caused the archbishop new letters to be set up on the nativity day of our Lady, which also were rent downe and vtterly ordained.

Then forsomuch as he did not appeare at the day appointed at Lebis (where he sate in consistory, as cruell as euer was Caiphas, with his court of hypocrits about him) he iudged him, denounced him, and condemned him of most deepe contumacie. After that, when he had been fully informed by his hired spies, and other glosing glauerers, that the said lord Cobham had laughed him to scorne, disdained all his doings, maintained his old opinions, contemned the churches power, the dignity of a bishop, and the order of priesthood (for all these was he then accused of) in his moby madnes without iust cause, did he openly excommunicat him. Yet was not with all this his fierce tyranny satisfied, but commanded him to be cited afresh, to appeare before him the saturday before the feast of S. Matthew the Apostle, with these cruell threatnings added thereunto, that if he did not obey at the day, he would more extremely handle him. And to make himselfe more strong towards the performance thereof, he compelled the lay power by most terrible menacings of curses and interdictions, to assist him against that seditious apostata, schismatike, and heretike, the troubler of the publike peace, that enemy of the realme, and great aduersary of all holy church, for all these hatefull names did he giue him.

This most constant seruant of the Lord, and worthy knight sir John Oldcastle, the Lord Cobham, beholding the vnpeaceable fury of antichrist thus kindled against him, perceiuing himselfe also compassed on euery side with deadly dangers; he take paper & pen in hand, and so wrote a christian confession or reckoning of his faith (which followeth hereafter) both signing and sealing it with his owne hand. Wherein he also answered to the foure chiefest articles that the archbishop had against him. That done, he take the copie with him, and went therewith to the king, trusting to finde mercy and fauor at his hand.

None other was that confession of his, then the common beleefe or sum of the churches faith, called the Apostles Creed, of all christian men then vsed, with a briefe declaration vpon the same, as here under ensueth.

The Christian beliefe of the Lord Cobham.

The creation of the christians.

I Beleeue in God the father almighty, maker of heauen and earth. And in Jesus Christ his only Sonne our Lord, which was conceiued by the holy Ghost, borne of the virgin Mary, suffered vnder Ponce Pilat, crucified, dead and buried, went down to hell, the third day rose againe from death, ascended vp to heauen, sitteth on the right hand of God the father almighty, and from thence shall come againe to iudge the quicke and the dead. I beleeue in the holy Ghost, the vniuersall holy church, the communion of Saints, the forgiuenesse of sins, the vprising of the flesh, and euerlasting life. Amen.

A declaration of his beliefe.

And for a more large declaration (saith he) of this my faith in the catholike church, I stedfastly beleeue, that there is but one God almighty, in and of whose Godhead are three persons, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost, and that those three persons are the selfesame God almighty. I beleeue also that the second person of this most blessed Trinity, in most conuenient time appointed thereunto afore, take flesh and blood of the most blessed virgin Mary, for the safegard and redemption of the vniuersall kind of man, which was afore lost in Adams offence.

1. Joh. 5. Gala. 4. Heb. 2. Luke 2.

Christ is the only head of his church.

Moreouer I beleeue, that the same Jesus Christ our Lord thus being both God and man, is the only head of the whole christian church, and that all those that haue been, or shall be saued, be members of this most holy church. And this holy church I thinke to be diuided into three sorts or companies:

The church diuided into three parts.

Whereof the first sort be now in heauen, and they are the saints from hence departed. These as they here here conuersant, conformed alwayes their liues to the most holy lawes and pure examples of Christ, renouncing Satan, the world, and the flesh, with all their concupiscence and euils.

Contrary were her, ad parliamentū Lateranense.

The second sort are in purgatory (if any such place be in the scriptures) abiding the mercy of God, and a full deliuerance of paine.

The third sort are here vpon the earth, and be called the church militant. For day and night they contend against crafty assaults of the diuell, the flattering prosperities of this world, and the rebellious filthinesse of the flesh.

The church militant deuided in three.

These latter congregation by the iust ordinance of God is also seuered into three diuers estates, that is to say, into priesthood, knighthood, and the commons. Among whom the will of God is, that the one should aide the other, but not destroy the other. The priests first of all secluded from all worldlinesse, should conforme their liues vtterly to the examples of Christ and his Apostles. Secondly should they be occupied in preaching and teaching the scriptures purely, and in giuing wholesome examples of good liuing to the other two degrees of men. More ouer also, more louing, gentle, and lowly in spirit, should they be, then any other sorts of people.

What the priests should be.

In knighthood are all they which beare sword by law of office. These should defend Gods lawes, and see that the gospell were purely taught, confouning their liues to the same, and excluding all false preachers: yea those ought rather to hazard their Knighthood what it should do.

their liues, then to suffer such wicked decrees as either blemisheth the eternall Testament of God, or yet letteth the free passage thereof, whereby heresies and schismes might spring in the Church. For of none other arise they, as I suppose, then of erroneous constitutions, craftily first creeping in under hypocriticall lies, for aduantage. They ought also to preserue Gods people from oppressors, tyrants and theeues, and to see the clergie supported so long as they teach purely, pray rightly, and minister the Sacraments freely. And if they see them do otherwise, they are bound by the law of office to compell them to change their doings; and to see all things perseuered according to Gods perfect ordinance.

Who be they that make spirituall lawes.

What the commons people ought to do.

The latter fellowship of this church, are the common people: whose duetie is, to beare their good mindes and true obedience, to the foresaid ministers of God, their kings, ciuill gouernours and Priests. The right office of these, is iustly to occupie euerie man his faculte, be it marchandise, handicraft, or the tithe of the ground. And so one of them to bee as an helper to another, following alwaies in their steps the iust commandements of the Lord God.

Sure and besides all this, I most faithfully beleeue that the Sacraments of Christs church are necessarie to all christian beleeuers: this alwaies seene to, that they be truely ministred according to Christes first institution and ordinance. And forasmuch as I am maliciously and most falsly accused of a mis beliefe in the sacrament of the aultar, to the hurtfull slander of many: I signifie here vnto all men, that this is my fauth concerning that. I beleeue in that sacrament to be contained very Christes bodie and bloud vnder the similitudes of bread and wine, yea the same bodie that was conceiued of the holy ghost, borne of the virgin Mary, done on the crosse, died, that was buried, arose the third day from the death: and is now glorified in heauen. I also beleeue, the vniuersall lawe of God to bee most true and perfect, and they which do not so followe it in their fauth and workes (at one time or another) can neuer be fauied: Whereas he that seriously it in fauth, accepted it, learneth it, delighteth therein, and perseuereth it in loue, shall take for it the felicitie of euerlasting vnsearcheable.

A signe of notes vnderstanded.

Finally, this is my fauth also, that God will aske no more of a christian beleeuer in this life, but onely to obey the precepts of that most blessed lawe. I fany Prelates of the church require more, or els any other kinde of obedience, then this to be bled: hee contemneth Christ, exalting himselfe aboue God, and so becommeth an open Antichrist. All the premisses I beleeue particularlie, and generally all that God hath left in his holy Scripture, that I should beleeue; instantly desiring you my liege Lord and most worthy king, that this confession of mine, may be willy examined by the most godly wise and learned men of your realme. And if it be found in all points agreeing to the verite, then let it be so allowed: and I thereupon hasten no more other then a true christian. If it bee found otherwise, then let it be vtterly condemned: pronded alwaies, that I be taught a better beliefe by the word of God: and I shall most reuerently at all times obey thereunto.

Obedience vnto the king.

Images.

This briefe confession of this fauth, the L. Cobham wrote (as is mentioned afore) and so take it with him to the court, offering it with all meekenesse vnto the king to reade it ouer. The king would in no case receive it, but commanded it to be deliuered vnto them that should be his iudges. Then desired he in the kings presence, that an hundred knightes and squires might be suffered to come in vpon his purgation, which hee knew would cleare him of all heresies. Moreouer hee offered himselfe after the lawe of armes, to fight foote or beath with any man liuing, christian or heathen, in the quarrell of his fauth, the king and the Lords of his counsell excepted. Finally with all gentlenesse hee protested before all that were present, that he would refuse no manner of correction that should after the lawes of God be ministred vnto him, but that he would at all times with all meekenesse obey it. Notwithstanding all this, the king suffered him to bee summoned personally in his owne priuy chamber. Then said the L. Cobham to the king that he had appealed from the Archbishop to the pope of Rome, and therefore hee ought be fauth, in no case to be his iudge. And hauing his appeale there at hand readie written, hee shewed it with all reuerence to the king. Wherewith the king was then much more displeased then afore, and said angerly vnto him, that he should not pursue his appeale: but rather he should tarry in hold, till such time as it were of the Pope allowed. And then, would he, or nild he, the archbishop should bee his iudge. Thus was there nothing allowed that the Lord Cobham had afore required. But forsomuch as hee would not bee sworne in all things to submit himself to the church, and so take that penance the Archbishop would enioyne him: Hee was arrested againe at the Kings commandement, and so led forth to the Tower of London, to keepe his day (so was it then spoken) that the archbishop had appointed him afore the kings chamber.

L. Cobham appealeth from the archb. to the pope.

Straight handling of the king.

L. Cobham laid prisoner to the Tower.

Then caused hee the foresaid confession of his fauth to bee copied againe, and the answere also (which hee had made to the foure articles propounded against him) to be written in maner of an Inventure in two sheets of paper: That when hee should come to his answer, he might giue the one copie vnto the archbishop, and reserue the other to himselfe. As the day of examination was come, which was the 23. day of September the Saterday before the feast of S. Matthew: Thomas Arundel the archbishop, sitting in Cayphas roome in the Chapterhouse of Paules, with Richard Clifford Bishop of London, and Henry Bolingbroke Bishop of Winchester: sir Robert Morley knight and lieftenant of the Tower, brought personally before him the said L. Cobham, and there led him for the same vnto whom the archbishop said these wordes.

The confession and answere of the L. Cobham rehearsed.

The first examination of the Lord Cobham.

Parliament was held at Leicester.

SIr John, in the last generall conuocation of the clergie of this our Province, yee were detected of certaine heresies, and by sufficient witnesses found culpable. Whereupon yee were by forme of spirituall lawe cited, and would in no case appeare. In conclusion, upon your rebellions contumacie, ye were both priuately and openly excommunicated. Notwithstanding wee neither yet shewed our selues vnreadie to haue given your absolution (nor yet doe not to this houre) would ye haue meekely asked it. Unto this the L. Cobham shewed, as though he had given no care, hauing his minde otherwise occupied, and so desired no absolution. But said he would gladly before him and his brethren make rehearsall of that fauth which hee held and intended alwaies to stand to, if it would please them to license him thereunto. And then hee take out of his bosome a certaine writing inuented, concerning the articles wherof he was accused, and so openly read it before them, giuing it vnto the archbishop as per had made thereof an end. Wherefor this is the copie.

The fauth of the L. Cobham concerning the articles.

I John Oldcastle knight, L. of Cobham, will that all Christian men twert and vnderstand: that I clepe almighty God into witnesse, that it hath been, now is, and euer will the help of God, that I be mine intent and my will, to leue stedfastly and fully all the Sacramentes that euer God ordained to be vsed in holy church: and moreouer to declare me in these foure points, I beleeue that the most worshipfull Sacrament of the aultar is Christes body in forme of bread, the same body that was borne of the blessed virgin our Lady Saint Mary, done on the crosse, dead and buried, the third day rose from death to life, the which body is now glorified in heauen.

Also as for the sacrament of penance I beleeue, that it is needfull to euery man that shalbe saued to forsake sinne, and doe due penance for sinne before done, with true confession, very contrition, and due satisfaction as Gods lawe limitteth and teacheth, and els may hee not bee saued: which penance I declare all men to doe.

Penance.

And as of Images, I vnderstand, that they be not of beleeue, but that they were ordained first they beleeue was zeale of Christ, by sufferance of the Church, to be Calenders to lewd men, to repentent and bring to minde the passion of our Lord Jesu Christ, and martyrdome and good liuing of other Saints: And that who so it be, that doth the worship to dead Images that is due to God, or putteth such hope or trust, in helpe of them, as hee should doe to GOD, or hath affection in one more then in an other, he doth in that the greatest sinne of mammetrie.

Also I suppose this fully, that euery man in this earth is a pilgrime toward blisse, or toward paine: and that hee that knoweth not, ne will not know ne keepe the holy commandementes of God in his liuing here (albeit that he be go on pilgrimages to all the world, and hee die so: hee shalbe damned: he that knoweth the holy commandements of God, and keepeth them to his end, hee shalbe saued though hee neuer in his life go on pilgrimage, as men now vse to Canterbury or to Rome, or to any other place.

The answere examined.

This answer to his articles thus ended and read, he deliuered it to the Bishops as is said afore. Then counselled the Archbishop with the other two Bishops, and with diuers of the doctors, that was to be done in this matter: commanding him for the time to stand aside. In conclusion by their assent and information, hee said thus vnto him: Come hither sir John. In this your writing are many good things contained, and right catholicke also, wee deny it not: but yee must confesse that this day was appointed you to answer to other points concerning thole articles, whereof as yet no mention is made in this your bill. And therefore yee must yet declare vs your minde more plainely.

Cause ill picked where none was given.

And thus, whether that ye hold, affirme, and beleeue, that in the sacrament of the aultar, after the consecration rightly done by a priest, remaineth material bread, or not? Moreouer, whether ye be bold, affirme and beleeue, that as concerning the sacrament of penance (where as a competent number of priests are) euery christian man is necessarily bound to be confessed of his sinnes to a priest ordained by the church, or not.

The waste was hanged with red bayes.

After certaine other communication, this was the answer of the good Lord Cobham. That none other wise would hee declare his minde, nor yet answere vnto his articles, then was crpreſſely in his writing there contained. Then ſaid the archb. againe vnto him: Sir Iohn, beware what yee bee. For if yee anſwere not clearely to thoſe thinges that are here obiected a-gainſt you eſpecially at the time appointed you only for that purpoſe) the law of holy church is, that compelled once by a iudge, we may openly proclaime you an heretick. Vnto whom hee gaue this anſwer: Doe as ye ſhall thinke beſt, for I am at a point. What ſoeuer hee or the other biſhops did after him after that, he had them reſort to his bill: for thereby would he ſtand to the verie death. Other anſwere would hee not giue that day, wherewith the biſhops and prelates were in a maner amazed and wonderfully diſquieted.

His anſwere not to their minds.

At the laſt the Archb. counſeled againe with his other Biſhops and Doctors, and in the end thereof declared vnto him, wi't the holy church of Rome (following the ſaying of S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, S. Ambroſe, and of other holy Doctors) had determined in theſe matters, no manner of mention once made of Chriſt. Which determination (ſaith he) ought all chriſtian men both to beleeue and to follow.

Antichriſtes ſect-taining diuine God.

Then ſaid the Lord Cobham vnto him, that he would gladly both beleeue and obſerue whatſoeuer holy church of Chriſtes inſtitution had determined, or yet whatſoeuer God had willed him either to beleeue or to do. But that the pope of Rome with his Cardinals, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other prelates of that church had lawfull power to determine ſuch matter as ſtood not with his word throughly: that would he not (he ſaid) at the time affirme. With this the archb. bad him to take good aduiſement till the munday next following (which was the 25. day of September) and then fully to anſwere, ſpecially vnto this point: whether there remained matterial bread in the ſacrament of the aultar, after the words of conſecration or not? He promiſed him alſo, to ſend vnto him in writing thoſe matters clearely determined, that he might then bee the more perfect in his anſwere making. And all this was nought: els, but to blinde the multitude with ſomewhat. The next day following, according to his promiſe, the archbiſhop ſent vnto him into the Tower, this ſelfiſh and blaſphemous writing, made by him and by his vnlearned clergy.

What could be in the prelates hart, ſeeing they had reſolued to perſecute it.

A doctrine of diuelles to blind the ſimple.

The determination of the Archbiſhop, and Clergie.

Ex magno prologo Thome Aquinatis.

THe faith and determination of the holy Church touching the bliſſfull ſacrament of the aultar, is this: that after the Sacramentall words be once ſpoken by a prieſt in his maſſe, the materiall bread, that was before bread, is turned into Chriſtes very body. And the materiall wine, that was before wine, is turned into Chriſtes very bloud. And ſo there remaineth in the ſacrament of the aultar, from thenceforth, no materiall bread, nor materiall wine, which were there before the ſacramentall words were ſpoken: How beleeue ye this article?

The 1. article.

Chriſt ordained S. Peter the Apoſtle to be his vicar here in earth, whoſe ſee is the holy church of Rome: And he granted, that the ſame power which he gaue vnto Peter, ſhould ſucceed to all Peters ſucceſſors, which wee call now Popes of Rome: by whoſe power in Churches particular be ordained prelates, as Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Perſons, Curates, and other degrees more. Vnto whom chriſtian men ought to obey after the lawes of the church of Rome. This is the determination of holy church. How ſeele ye this article?

The 3. article.

Holy Church hath determined, that it is meritorious to a chriſtian man, to goe on pilgrimage to holy places: and there ſpecially to worſhip holy reliques and Images of ſaints Apoſtles, and Martyrs, Confeſſors, and all other Saints beſides, appoued by the church of Rome. How ſeele ye this article?

The 4. article.

And as the Lord Cobham had read ouer this moſt wretched writing, he marueiled greatly of their made ignorance. But that he conſidered againe, that God had giuen them ouer for their vnbeleefes ſake, into moſt deep errours and blindneſſe of ſoule. Againe, he perceiued hereby, that their vttermoſt malice was purpoſed againſt him, howſoeuer he ſhould anſwere. And therefore hee put his life into the hands of God, deſiring his onely ſpirit to aſſiſt him in his next anſwere. Then the ſaid 25. day of September was come (which was alſo the munday before Michaelmas in the 13. yeare of our Lord 1413.) Thomas Arundell the Archbiſhop of Canterbury commanded his iudiciall ſeate to be remoued from the chapter houſe of Paules to the Dominicke Friers within Ludgate at London. And as hee was there ſet with Richard Biſhop of London, Henry the Biſhop of Winchcſter, and Beuiet the biſhop of Bangor: he called in vnto him his counſell and his officers, with diuers other Doctors and Friers, of whom theſe are the names here following, maiſter Henry Ware, the Officiall of Canterbury: Philip Morgan, Doctor of both lawes: Howell Kiffin, Doctor of the Canon lawe: Iohn Kempe, doctor of the Canon lawe: William Carleton, doctor of the Canon lawe: Iohn Witnam, of the newe College in Oxforde: Iohn Whithead, doctor in Oxford alſo, Robert Wombewell, vicar of S. Laurence in the Iewry: Thomas Palmer, the Warden of Simons: Robert Chamberlaine, Prior of the Dominickes: Richard Dodington, Prior of S Auguſtines: Thomas Walden, Prior of the Carmelites, all doctors of Diuinitie. Iohn Stevens alſo, and Iames Cole, both Notaries, appointed there purpoſely to write all that ſhould be either ſaid or done. All theſe with a great fort more of Prieſtes, Monkes, Canons, Friers, Parith Clarkes, Belringers, Pardoners, diſdained him, with innumerable mockes and ſcoffes, reckoning him to bee an horrible hereticke, and a man accurſed afore God.

Among the Archbiſhop called for a Maſſe booke, and cauſed all thoſe prelates and doctors to ſweare thereupon, that euerie man ſhould faithfully doe his office and ducties that day. And that neither for fauour nor feare, loue nor hate of the one partie nor the other: any thing ſhould there be witneſſed, ſpoken or done, but according to the trueth, as they would anſwer before God and all the world at the day of doome. Then were the two forſaid Notaries ſworne alſo, to write and to witneſſe the proces that there ſhould be vttered on both parties, and to ſet their mindes (if they otherwiſe knew) before they ſhould regiſter it. And all this diſſimulation was but to colour their miſchiefes, before the ignorant multitude.

All done to deceiue the ignorant.

Conſider herein (gentle reader) what this wicked generation is, and how far wide from the true feare of God, for as they were then, ſo are they yet to this day.

After that, came forth before them, Sir Robert Pooley knight and lieftenant of the Tower, and he brought with him the good L. Cobham, there leauing him among them as a lamb among Wolues, to his examination and anſwere.

Lord Cobham commeth again before them.

An other examination of the Lord Cobham.

Ex veriſsimis exemplari Londinenſium.

THen ſaid the archb. vnto him: Lord Cobham ye be aduiſed (I am ſure) of the words and prores which wee had vnto you vpon Saterday laſt paſt in the chapter houſe of Paules: which proces were now too long to be rehearſed againe: I ſaid vnto you then, that you were accurſed for your contumacie and diſobedience to holy church, thinking that yee ſhould with meekneſſe haue deſired your abſolution.

The curſe of Antichriſt.

Then ſpake the L. Cobham with a chearfull countenance, and ſaid, God ſaid by his holie Prophet, Maledicam benedictionibus veſtris, which is as much to ſay as, I ſhall curſe where you bleſſe.

Malachi 2.

The archb. made then as though hee had continued forth his tale and not heard him, ſaying: Sir, at that time I gently profered to haue abſolued you if you would haue aſked it. And yet I doe the ſame if ye will humbly deſire it in due forme and manner, as holy church hath ordained.

A wouldy offer of guiltineſſe.

Then ſaid the Lord Cobham. Nay forſooth will I not, for I neuer yet treſpaſſed againſt you, and therefore I will not doe it. And with that he kneeled downe on the pauement, holding vp his hands towards heauen, and ſaid: I thinke me here vnto the my eternall liuing God, that in my fraile youth I offended the (O Lord) moſt greeuouſly in pride, wrath, & gluttony: in couetouſneſſe, and in letcherie. Many men haue I hurt in mine anger, and done many other horrible ſins, good Lord I aſke thee mercie. And therewith weepingly hee ſtode vp againe and ſaid with a mighty voice. Loe, good people, loe: For the breaking of Gods lawe and his great commandements, they neuer yet curſed me. But for their owne lawes and traditions, moſt cruelly doe they handle both me and other men. And therefore, both they and their lawes, by the promiſe of God, ſhall vtterly be deſtroied.

L. Cobham confeſſeth him ſelfe vnto God.

Mans lawe is before Gods lawe poſtponed. Hiere. 51.

At this the archb. and his company were not a little blemiſhed. Notwithſtanding, hee tooke ſtomacke vnto him againe after certaine words had, in excuſe of their tyrannie, and examined the Lord Cobham of his chriſtian beliefe.

An hereſie after the papiſts making.

Thereunto the L. Cobham made this godly anſwere, I beleeue (ſaith he) fully and faithfully in the vniuerſall lawes of God. I beleeue that all is true which is contained in the holy ſacred ſcriptures of the Bible. Finally I beleeue, all that my Lord God would I ſhould beleeue. Then demanded the archbiſhop an anſwere of that bill which he and the clergy had ſent him into the Tower the day afore, in maner of a determination of the church concerning the foure articles thereof hee was accuſed, ſpecially for the ſacrament of the aultar, how hee beleeued therein.

1. Cor. 10.

The ſacrament is called bread.

The determination of the Church muſt ſtand, whatſoeuer Paul ſaith.

Paul chriſtian beleeue.

The iudgement of the Lord Cobham concerning the determination of the Church.

Thereunto the L. Cobham ſaid, that with that bill he had nothing to doe. But this was his beliefe (he ſaid) concerning the ſacrament. That his Lord and Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt, ſitting at his laſt ſupper with his moſt deare diſciples, the night before hee ſhould ſuffer tooke bread in his hand: And giuing thanks to his eternall father, bleſſed it, brake it, and ſo gaue it vnto them, ſaying: Take it vnto you, and eate thereof all, this is my body which ſhall be betraied for you: Doe this hereafter in my remembrance. This doe I throughly beleeue (ſaith he) for this faith am I taught in the Goſpell of Mathew, in Marke, and in Luke, and alſo in the firſt Epiſtle of S. Paule to the Corinthians. chap. 11.

Thereto the L. Cobham ſtyed, that with that bill he had nothing to doe. But this was his beliefe (he ſaid) concerning the ſacrament. That his Lord and Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt, ſitting at his laſt ſupper with his moſt deare diſciples, the night before hee ſhould ſuffer tooke bread in his hand: And giuing thanks to his eternall father, bleſſed it, brake it, and ſo gaue it vnto them, ſaying: Take it vnto you, and eate thereof all, this is my body which ſhall be betraied for you: Doe this hereafter in my remembrance. This doe I throughly beleeue (ſaith he) for this faith am I taught in the Goſpell of Mathew, in Marke, and in Luke, and alſo in the firſt Epiſtle of S. Paule to the Corinthians. chap. 11.

Matth 26. Marke 14. Luke 22. 1. Cor. 11.

Antichriſt altogether not this faith.

Then aſked the Archbiſhop, if he beleeued that it were bread after after the conſecration of ſacramentall words ſpoken ouer it.

The Lord Cobham ſaid: I beleeue that in the ſacrament of the altar is Chriſtes very bodie in forme of bread, the ſame that was borne of the virgin Marie, done on the croſſe, dead, and buried, and that the third day aroſe from death to life, which now is glorified in heauen.

The ſacrament of the altar.

Then ſaid one of the Doctors of the law: After the ſacramentall words be vttered, there remaineth no bread, but onely the bodie of Chriſt.

John Whitehead gone from his opinion. All this would not helpe.

The Lord Cobham ſaid then to one maiſter John Whitehead: You ſaid once vnto me in the caſtle of Cowling, that the ſacred hoſt was not Chriſtes bodie. But I held then againſt you, and proued that therein was his bodie, though the ſeculars and friers could not therein agree, but held each one againſt other in that opinion. Theſe were my words then, if yee remember it.

A blaſphemous breed. Quarel pickers

Then thouted a ſort of them together and cried with great noiſe: We ſay all, that it is Gods bodie.

And diuers of them aſked him in great anger, whether it were materiall bread after the conſecration or not?

Then loked the lord Cobham earneſtly vpon the archbiſhop, and ſaid: I beleeue ſurely that it is Chriſtes bodie in forme of bread. Sir beleeue not you thus?

And the archbiſhop ſaid, yes mary doe I.

Then aſked him the doctors, whether it were onely Chriſtes bodie after the conſecration of a prieſt, and no bread, or not?

The ſacrament of Chriſts body is both the body and bread. Neither will ſcripture nor reaſon ſerue. This opinion hath S. Auguſtine.

And he ſaid vnto them, it is both Chriſtes bodie and bread: I ſhall proue it as thus: For like as Chriſt dwelling here vpon the earth, had in him both Godhead and manhood, and had the inuiſible Godhead couered vnder that manhood, which was onely viſible and ſeene in him: So in the ſacrament of the altar, is Chriſtes very bodie and bread alſo, as I beleeue the bread is the thing that we ſee with our eies, the bodie of Chriſt (which is his fleſh and his bloud) is there vnder hid, and not ſeene, but in faith.

Gelaſius contra Eutychen.

And moreouer, to proue that it is both Chriſtes bodie and alſo bread after the conſecration, it is by plaine words expreſſed by one of your owne doctors writing againſt Eutyches, which ſaith: Like as the ſelfe ſame ſacraments doe paſſe by the operation of the holy Ghoſt, into a diuine nature, and yet notwithſtanding keepe the propertie ſtill of their former nature: ſo, that principall myſterie declareth to remaine one true, and perfect Chriſt, &c.

The Popes diuinitie.

Then ſmiled they each one vpon other, that the people ſhould iudge him taken in a great hereſie. And with a great brag diuers of them ſaid: It is a foule hereſie.

Then aſked the archbiſhop what bread it was: And the doctors alſo inquired of him whether it were materiall or not?

Materiall.

The lord Cobham ſaid vnto them: The ſcriptures make no mention of this word materiall, and therefore my faith hath nothing to doe therewith. But this I ſay and beleeue, that it is Chriſtes bodie and bread. For Chriſt ſaid in the 6. of Johns Goſpell, Ego ſum panis viuus, qui de cœlo deſcendi: I which came downe from heauen, am the liuing and not the dead bread. Therefore I ſay now againe as I ſaid afore, as our Lord Ieſus Chriſt is very God, and very man, ſo in the moſt bleſſed ſacrament of the altar, is Chriſtes very body and bread.

John 6.

Then ſaid they all with one voice: It is an hereſie.

One of the biſhops ſtood vp by and by, and ſaid: What? it is an hereſie manifeſt, to ſay that it is bread after the Sacramentall words be once ſpoken, but Chriſtes body onely.

The lord Cobham ſaid: S. Paul the Apoſtle was (I am ſure) as wiſe as you be now, and more godly learned, and he called it bread, writing to the Corinthians: The bread that we breake, faith he, is it not the partaking of the body of Chriſt? Lo, he called it bread and not Chriſtes body, but a meane where-by we receiue Chriſtes body.

Then ſaid they againe: Paul muſt be otherwiſe vnderſtood. For it is ſure an hereſie to ſay that it is bread after the conſecration, but only Chriſtes body.

The lord Cobham aſked, how they could make good that ſentence of theirs?

They anſwered him thus: For it is againſt the determination of holy church.

Then ſaid the Archbiſhop vnto him: Sir John, we ſent you a writing concerning the faith of this bleſſed Sacrament, clearely determined by the church of Rome our mother, and by the holy Doctors.

Then he ſaid againe vnto him, I know none holier then is Chriſt and his Apoſtles. And as for that determination, I wote it is none of theirs: for it ſtandeth not with the Scriptures, but manifeſtly againſt them. If it be the Churches, as yee ſay it is, it hath beene hers onely ſince ſhe receiued the great poiſon of worldly poſſeſſions, and not afore.

The Doctours confounded in the plaine ſection.

Then aſked they him, to ſtop his mouth therewith: If he beleeued not in the determination of the church?

And he ſaid vnto them: No ſoothly, for it is no God. In all our creede, this word (in) is but thrice mentioned concerning beleefe: In God the Father, in God the Sonne, in God the holy Ghoſt, three perſons and one God. The birth, the death, the buriall, the reſurrection and aſcenſion of Chriſt, hath none (in) for beleefe, but in him. Neither yet hath the Church, the ſacraments, the forgiuenelle of ſinne, the latter reſurrection, nor yet the life euerlaſting, nor any other (in) then in the holy Ghoſt.

Then ſaid one of the Lawyers: Tuſh, that was but a word of office. But what is your beleefe concerning holy Church?

The lord Cobham anſwered: My beliefe is, (as I ſaid afore,) that all the Scriptures of the ſacred Bible are true. All that is grounded vpon them I beleeue throughly. For I know, it is Gods pleaſure that I ſhould ſo doe. But in your lozdly lawes and idle determinations, haue I no beliefe. For yee be no part of Chriſts holy church, as your open deeds doe ſhew: But yee are very Antichriſtes, obſtinately ſet againſt his holy law and will. The lawes that yee haue made, are nothing to his glozy, but onely for your vaine glozy and abominable couetouſneſſe.

The Lord Cobham beleeueth not in the pope.

An hereſie after the papiſtes.

Then ſaid they, this was an erreding hereſie (& that in a great ſume) not to beleeue the determination of holy Church.

Then the Archbiſhop aſked him, what he thought of holy Church.

Holy Church defined.

He ſaid vnto him, my beliefe is, that the holy church is the number of them, which ſhall be ſaued, of whom Chriſt is the head. Of this church, one part is in heauen with Chriſt, another in purgatozie (you ſay:) and the third is here in earth. This latter part ſtandeth in three degrees, in knighthood, priedhood, and the communalty, as I ſaid afore plainely in the confeſſion of my beliefe.

Conſider him to be then in ſtrong handling.

Then ſaid the Archbiſhop vnto him: Can you tell me who is of this church?

The lord Cobham anſwered: Yea truely can I.

Then ſaid Doctor Walden the Prior of the Carmelits: It is doubt vnto you who is thereof. For Chriſt ſaith in Matthew, Nolite iudicare, preſume to iudge no man. If yee be here forbidden the iudgement of your neighbour or brother, much more the iudgement of your ſuperiour.

Walden contra Wiclifiſtas. liar. 2. Cap. 63.

How we may iudge or not iudge by the ſcriptures.

The lord Cobham made him this anſwere: Chriſt ſaith alſo in the ſelfe ſame chapter of Matthew, that like as the euill tree is knowne by his fruit, ſo is a falſe Prophet by his workes. Matth. 7.

Appeare they neuer ſo glozious: But that yee left behind yee. And in Iohn the ſixth text: Operibus credite, beleeue you the outward doings. And in an other place of Iohn: Iuſtum iudicium iudicate; when we know the thing to be true, we may ſo iudge it, and not offend. For Dauid ſaid alſo: Recte iudicate filij hominum: Iudge rightly alwaies yee children of men. And as for your ſuperioritie, here yee of Chriſt, yee ſhould be meeke miniſters, and no proud ſuperiours.

Diuerſitie of iudgements.

Then ſaid Doctor Walden vnto him, Yee make here no difference of iudgements: Yee put no diuerſitie betweene the euill iudgements which Chriſt hath forbidden, & the good iudgements, which he hath commanded vs to haue. Rath iudgement, and right iudgement, all is one with you. So ſwift iudges all waies are the learned ſcholars of Wicklifite.

Vnto whom the lord Cobham thus anſwered: It is well ſophiſtred of you ſoothly. Prepoſterouſne are your iudgements euermore. For as the Prophet Eſay ſaith, Yee iudge euill good, and good euill: and therfore the ſame Prophet concludeth, that your waies are not Gods waies, nor Gods waies your waies. And as for that vertuous man Wickliffe, whole iudgements yee ſo highly diſdaine, I ſhall ſay here of my part, both before God and man, that before I knew that deſpiſed doctrine of his, I neuer abſtained from ſinne. But ſince I learned therein to feare my Lord God, it hath otherwiſe I truſt beene with me: ſo much grace could I neuer find in all your glozious inſtructions.

Wicklen in profeſſione d. Trinit. 7.

Then ſaid Doctor Walden againe yet vnto him: If there not well with me (ſo many vertuous men liuing, and ſo many learned men teaching the Scripture, being alſo ſo open, and the examples of fathers ſo plenteous,) if I then had no grace to amend my life, till I heard the dwell preach. S. Hieronme faith, that he which ſeeketh ſuch ſuſpected makers, ſhall not find the midday light, but the midday dwell.

A great abſurdite.

Hieron. in breuiar. in miſſa.

The lord Cobham ſaid: Your fathers the old Phariſies, aſcribed Chriſtes miracles to Belzebub, & his doctrine to the dwell. And you as their naturall children, haue ſtill the ſelfe ſame iudgement concerning his faithfull followers. They that rebuke your vicious liuing muſt needs be heretickes, & that muſt your doctors proue, when you haue no ſcripture to doe it. Then ſaid he to them all: to iudge you as you be, we neede no further goe then to your owne proper acts. Where doe yee find in all Gods law, that yee ſhould thus ſit in iudgement of any chriſtian man, or yet giue ſentence vpon any other man vnto death as yee doe here daily? no ground haue yee in all the Scriptures ſo lozdly to take it vpon you, but in Annas and Caiphas, which ſat thus vpon Chriſt, and vpon his Apoſtles after his aſcenſion. Of them only haue yee taken it to iudge Chriſtes members as yee doe, and neither of Peter nor Iohn.

Doctours when the ſcripture faile, they begin to raile.

The clergie to ſit on life or death, hath no ground in the ſcriptures. Followers of Caiphas.

Then ſaid ſome of the Lawyers: Yes ſoothly ſir, for Chriſt iudged Iudas.

The Lord Cobham ſaid: No. Chriſt iudged him not, but he iudged himſelfe, and there vpon went forth, and ſo did hang himſelfe: But indede Chriſt ſaid: Woe vnto him, for that tortious act of his, as he doth yet still unto many of you. For since the venime of him was shed into the Church, ye never followed Christ, neither yet have ye stood in the perfection of Gods law.

Then the Archbishop asked him, what he meant by that meanes?

The lord Cobham said: your possessions and Lordships. For then cried an Angell in the aire (as your owne Chronicles mention) Woe, woe, woe, this day is venime shed into the Church of God. Before that time, all the Bishops of Rome were Martyrs in a manor. And since that time, we read of very few. But indede since that same time, one hath put down another, one hath poisoned an other, one hath cursed another, and one hath slaine another, and done much more mischiefe besides, as all the Chronicles tell. And let all men consider well this, that Christ was meeke, and mercifull; the Bishop is proud, and a tyrant: Christ was pore and forgaue; the pope is rich and a malicious manslaier, as his daily acts doe prooue him. Rome is the very nest of Antichrist, and out of that nest commeth all the Disciples of him. Of them, Prelates, Priests, and Monkes, are the body, and these pild Friers are the taile which coureth his most filthy part.

Then said the Prior of the Friers Augustines, Alack sir, why doe you say so? that is vncharitably spoken.

And the lord Cobham said: Not only is it my saying, but also the Prophet Esayas, long afore my time. The Prophet, saith he, which preacheth lies, is the taile behind. For as you Friers and Monkes be (like Pharisies) divided in your outward apparell and blages, so make ye division among the people. And thus, you with such other, are the very naturall members of Antichrist.

Then said he vnto them all: Christ saith in his Gospell, Woe vnto you Scribes and Pharisies, hypocrites; for ye close up the kingdome of heaven before men, neither enter ye in your selues, nor yet suffer any other that would enter into it, but ye stop up the waies thereunto with your owne traditions, and therefore are ye the children of Antichrist; ye will not permit Gods verite to have passage, nor yet to be taught of his true ministers, fearing to have your wickednesse reproued. But by such flatterers as vphold you in your mischiefes, ye suffer the common people most miserably to be seduced.

Then said the Archbishop: By our Lady sir, there shal none such preach within any dioces (and God wil) nor yet in my iurisdiction (if I may know it) as either maketh diuision, or yet dissension among the pore commons.

The lord Cobham said: Both Christ and his Apostles were accused of sedition making, yet were they most peaceable men. Both Daniel and Christ prophecied that such a troublous time should come, as hath not beene yet since the worlds beginning. And this prophecie is partly fulfilled in your daies and doings; for many haue ye slaine already, and more will ye slay hereafter, if God fulfill not his promise. Christ saith also, if those daies of yours were not shortned, scarcely should any elect be saued: therefore looke for it swiftly, for God will shorten your daies. Moreouer, though Priests and Deacons for preaching of Gods word, and for ministring the sacraments, with provision for the pore, be grounded on Gods law, yet haue these other seas no manor of ground hereof, so farre as I haue read.

Then a Doctor of law, called maister John Kempe, plucked out of his bosome a copy of the bull which they had afore sent him into the tower, by the Archbishops counsell, thinking thereby to make shorter worke with him. For they were amazed with his answeres (not all vnlike to them which disputed with Stephen) that they knew not well how to occupie the time, their wits and sophistrie (as God would) so failed them that day.

My Lord Cobham (saith this Doctor) we must briefely know your minde concerning these foure points here following. The first of them is this: And then he read vpon the bill: The faith and determination of holy Church touching the blessed sacrament of the altar is this: That after the sacramentall words be once spoken of a Priest in his masse, the materiall bread that was before bread, is turned into Christs very body: and the materiall wine is turned into Christs blood. And so there remaineth in the sacrament of the altar from thence forth no materiall bread nor materiall wine, which were there before the sacramentall words were spoken. Sir beleeue ye not this?

The lord Cobham said: This is not my beliefe. But my faith is (as I said to you afore) that in the worshipfull sacrament of the altar, is Christes very bodie in forme of bread.

Then said the Archbishop: Sir John, ye must say other wise.

The lord Cobham said: Nay, that I shall not, if God be vpon my side as I trust he is, but that there is Christs body in forme of bread, as the common beliefe is.

Then read the doctour againe.

The second point is this: Holy church hath determined, that euery Christian man living here bodily vpon earth, ought to be shriuen of a Priest ordained by the church, if he may come to him. Sir what say you to this?

The lord Cobham answered and said: A diseased or sore wounded man, hath need to haue a sure wise Chirurgian and a true, knowing both the ground and the danger of the same: yet necessarie were it therefore to be first shriuen vnto God with only knowech our diseases, and can helpe vs. I denie not in this the going to a priest, if he be a man of good life and learning: For the lawes of God are to be required of the priest, which is godly learned. But if he be an idiot, or a man of vitious liuing that is my Curate, I ought rather to flie from him then to seeke vnto him: For sooner might I catch euill of him that is naught, then any goodnesse towards my soules healthy.

Then read the doctour againe.

The third point is this: Christ ordained S. Peter the Apostle to be his vicar here in earth, whole sea is the church of Rome. And he granted that the same power which he gaue vnto Peter, should succeed to all Peters successours, which we call now Popes of Rome. By whose speciall power in churches particular, be ordained prelates and Archbishops, parsons, curates, and other degrees moe, vnto whom Christian men ought to obey after the lawes of the church of Rome. This is the determination of holy church. Sir beleeue ye not this?

To this he answered and said: He that followeth Peter most nighest in pure liuing, is next vnto him in succession: But your Lordly order esteemeth not greatly the lowly behauiour of poore Peter, that soueer pee prate of him. Neither care yee greatly for the humble maners of them that succeded him, till the time of Siluester, which for the more part were Sarpents, as I told you before. Yee can let all their good conditions goe by you, and not hurt your selues with them at all. All the world knoweth this wel enough by you, and yet yee can make boast of Peter.

With that, one of the other doctors asked him; Then what do ye say of the Pope?

The lord Cobham answered: As I said before: He and you together maketh whole the great Antichrist. Of whom he is the great head, you bishops, priests, prelates, and monkes are the body, and the begging friers are the taile, for they couer the filthinesse of you both with their subtile sophistrie: Neither will I in conscience obey any of you all, till I see you with Peter follow Christ in conuersation.

Then read the doctor againe.

The fourth point is this: Holy church hath determined, that it is meritorious to a christian man, to goe on pilgrimage to holy places, and there specially to worship the holy reliques and images of Saints, Apostles, Martyrs, Confessours, and all other Saints besides, approued by the church of Rome. Sir what say ye to this?

Wherunto he answered: I owe them no seruice by any commandement of God, and therefore I minde not to seeke them for your courtousnesse. It were best ye swept them faire from cobwebs and dust, and so laid them vp for catching of scathe: or else to burie them faire in the ground as ye doe other aged people which are Gods images.

It is a wonderfull thing, that Saints now being dead, should become so courteous and needy, and thereupon so bitterly beg, which all their life time hated all couetousnesse and begging. Yea, if this I say vnto you, I would all the world should marke it, that with your iewes and wols, your fained absolutions and pardons, ye draw vnto you the substance, wealth, and chiefe pleasures of all christian Realmes.

Why sir (said one of the clerkes) will ye not worship good images?

What worship should I giue vnto them? said the lord Cobham.

Then said Frier Palmer vnto him: Sir, will ye worship the crosse of Christ, that he died vpon?

Where is it, said the lord Cobham?

The Frier said: I put you the case sir, that it were here euen now before you.

The lord Cobham answered: This is a great wise man, to put me an earnest question of a thing, and yet he himselfe knoweth not where the thing it selfe is. Yet once againe I aske you, what worship I should doe vnto it?

A clerke said vnto him: Such worship as Paul speaketh of, and that is this: God forbid that I should iop, but only in the crosse of Iesu Christ.

Then said the Lord Cobham, & spread his armes abroad: This is a very crosse, yea, and as much better then your crosse of wood, in that it was created of God: Yet will not I seeke to haue it worshipped.

Then said the Bishop of London: Sir, yee wote well that he died on a materiall crosse.

The lord Cobham said: Yea, and I wote also that our saluation came not in by that materiall crosse, but alone by him which died thereupon. And well I wote, that holy Saint Paul reioiced in none other crosse, but in Christs passion and death only, and in his owne sufferings of like persecution with him, for the selfesame verite that he had suffered for afore.

Another clerke yet asked him: Will yee then doe none honour to the holy crosse?

He answered him: Yes, if it were mine owne. I would lay him vp honestly, and see vnto him that he should take no more Slandered with the truth.

Then said the archbishop vnto him: Sir John, ye haue spoken here many wonderfull words to the slanderous rebuke of the whole spiritualtie, giuing a great euill example vnto the common sort here, to haue vs in the more disdaine. Much time haue we spent here about you, and all in vaine so far as I can see. Well, we must now be at this point with you, for the day passeth away: We must otherwise submit your selfe to the ordinance of holie church, or else throw your selfe (no remedie) into most deepe danger. See to it in time, for anon it will be else to late.

Euell men seeme to stand only vpon their opinion amongst the people.

The lord Cobham said, I know not to what purpose I should otherwise submit me. Much more haue you offended me, then euer I offended you, in thus troubling me before this multitude.

Then said the archbishop againe vnto him, Wee once againe require to remember your selfe well, and to haue none other manner opinion in these matters, then the vniuersall faith and belefe of the holie church of Rome is. And so like an obedient child returne againe to the vnitie of your mother. See to it I say in time, for yet yee may haue remedie, whereas anon it will be to late.

A wofull office for a gentle minde.

The lord Cobham said erpresse before them all: I will none otherwise beleeue in these points, then that I haue told you here afore. Do with me what ye will.

Finallie, then the archbishop said; Well, then I see none other but we must needes do to the law: we must proceed forth to the sentence definitiue, and both iudge you, and condemne you for an heretike.

Bloodie ministers.

And with that, the archbishop stood vp, and read there a bill of his condemnation, all the clergie and lattie hailing their bonets. And this was the tenor thereof.

¶ The definitiue sentence of his condemnation.

Suffered of God as a plague.

An horrible sin punished with blindnesse.

IN the name of God: So be it. We Thomas by the sufferance of God, archbishop of Canturburie, Metropolitan, and primate of all England, and legat from the apostolike See of Rome, willeth this to be knowne vnto all men. In a certaine cause of heresie and vpon diuers articles, whereupon sir John Oldcastle knight, and lord Cobham, after a diligent inquisition made for the same, was detected, accused, and presented before vs in our last conuocation of all our prouince of Canturburie, holden in the cathedrall church of Pauls at London: At the lawfull denouncement and request of our vniuersall clergie in the said conuocation, we proceeded against him according to the law (God to witnesse) with all the fauour possible. And following Christs example in all that we might, which willeth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he be conuerted and liue: we tooke vpon vs to correct him, and fought all other waies possible to bring him againe to the churches vnitie, declaring vnto him what the holy and vniuersall church of Rome hath said, holden, determined, and taught in that behalfe. And though we found him in the catholike faith farre wide, and so stifnecked, that he would not confesse his error, nor purge himselfe, nor yet repent him thereof: We yet pitying him of fatherlie compassion, and entirely desiring the health of his soule, appointed him a competent time of deliberation, to see if hee would repent and seeke to be reformed: but since that time we haue found him worse and worse. Considering therefore, that he is not corrigible, we are driuen to the verie extremitie of the law, and with great heauinesse of heart, we now proceed to the publication of the sentence definitiue, against him.

The wofull office of Christes vicar.

¶ Then brought he forth another bill, containing the said sentence, and that he read also in his beggerlie Latine. Christi nomine inuocato, ipsumq; solum præ oculis habentes. Quia per acta inacitata, and so forth. Which I haue also translated into English, that men may vnderstand it.

Ex registro præfat. Thomæ Arundell.

¶ Christ we take vnto witnesse, that nothing else we seeke in this our whole enterprise, but his only glorie. For as much as we haue found by diuers acts done, brought forth and exhibited by sundrie euidences, signes and tokens, and also by manie most manifest proofes, the said sir John Oldcastle knight, and lord Cobham, not only to be an euident heretike in his owne person, but also a mightie maintainer of other heretikes against the faith and religion of the holie and vniuersall church of Rome: namely about the two Sacraments (of the altar, and of penance) besides the popes power, and pilgrimages: And that hee as the child of iniquitie and darknesse, hath so hardened his heart, that he will in no case attend vnto the voice of his pastor: Neither will he be allured by strait admonishments, nor yet be brought in by fauourable words: The worthinesse of the cause first weighed on the one side, and his vnworthinesse against him considered on the otherside, his faults also aggrauated or made double through his damnable obstinacie (Wee being loth that he which is nought should be worse, and so with his contagiousnesse infect the multitude, by the sage counsell and assent of the very discreet fathers, our honorable brethren and lords, bishops heere present, Richard of London, Henrie of Winchester, and Bennet of Bangor, and of other great learned and wise men heere, both doctors of diuinitie, and of the lawes canon and ciuill, seculars and religious, with diuers other experimen assisting vs: we sententially and definitiuely by this present writing, iudge, declare and condemne the said sir John Oldcastle, knight, and lord Cobham, for a most pernicious and detestable heretike, conuicted vpon the same, and refusing vterly to obey the church againe, committing him heere from henceforth as a condemned heretike to the secular iurisdiction, power and iudgement, to do him thereupon to death. Furthermore, we excommunicate and denounce accursed, not only his heretike heere present, but so many else besides, as shall hereafter in fauour of his error, either receiue him or defend him, counsell him or helpe him, or any other way maintaine him as verie fautors, receiuers, defenders, counsellers, aiders, and maintainers of condemned heretikes.

As Satanas did Christ.

Christ is condemned in his faithfull ministers.

And that these premisses, may be the better knowne of all faithfull christian men: we commit it here vnto your charges, and giue you strait commandement thereupon by this writing also: That ye cause this condemnation and definitiue sentence of excommunication, concerning both this heretike and his fautors; to bee published throughout all diocesses, in cities, townes and villages by your curats and parish priests, at such times as they shall haue most recourse of people. And see that it be done after this fort: As the people are thus gathered deuoutly together, let the curat euerie where goe into the pulpit, and there open, declare, and expound, this excesse in the mother tongue, in an audible and intelligible voice, that it may be perceiued of all men: and that vpon the feare of this declaration also, the people may fall from their euill opinions conceiued now of late by seditious preachers. Moreouer we will, that after wee haue deliuered vnto each one of you bishops which are heere present, a copie hereof, that ye cause the same to be written out againe into diuers copies, and to besent vnto the other bishops and prelats of our whole prouince, that they may also see the contents thereof solemnely published within their diocesses and cures. Finally, we will that both you and they signifie againe vnto vs seriously and distinctly by your writings as the matter is, without fained colour in euerie point performed: the day whereon ye receiued this processe, the time when it was of vs executed, and after what sort it was done in euerie condition, according to the tenour hereof, that we may know it to be iustly the same.

A copie of this writting sent Thomas Arundell the archbishop of Canturburie afterward from Maidstone the tenth day of October, within the same yeere of our Lord 1413. vnto Richard Clifford the bishop of London, which thus beginneth: Thomas permissione diuina, &c.

The Walden. in fasciculo Zizaniorum Wicleui.

The said Richard Clifford sent another copie thereof, enclosed within his owne letters, vnto Robert Gnalhall a Carmelite frier, which was then bishop of Hereford in Wales, written from Haddam the 23. day of October in the same yeere, and the beginning thereof is this: Reuerende in Christo pater, &c.

Richard Clifford.

This Robert Gnalhall directed another copie thereof from London the 27. day of Nouember in the same yeere, inclosed in his owne commission also, vnto his archdeacon and deanes in Hereford and Shrewsburie. And this is the tenor of the beginning: Venerabilibus & discretis viris, &c. In like maner did the other bishops within their dioceses.

Robert Gnalhall.

After that the archbishop had thus read the bill of his condemnation, with most extremitie before the whole multitude; the lord Cobham said with a most cheerefull countenance: Though ye iudge my bodie (which is but a wretched thing, yet am I certaine and sure, that ye can do no harme to my soule, no more then could Satan vpon the soule of Iob. For that created that, will of his infinite mercie and promise saue it, I haue therein no maner of doubt. And as concerning these articles before rehearsed, I will stand to them euen to the verie death, by the grace of my eternall God.

Ex verosimo exemplari.

Iob 1.

And therewith he turned him vnto the people, casting his hands abroad, and saying with a verie lowde voice: Good christian people, for Gods loue be well ware, of these men, for they will else beguile you, and lead you blindeling into hell with themselues. For Christ saith plainly vnto you: If one blind man leadeth another, they are like both to fall into the ditch.

Matth. 10.

After this, he fell downe there vpon his knees, and thus before them all prayed for his enemies, holding vp both his hands and his eies towards heauen and saying: Lord God eternall, I beseech thee of thy great mercies sake, to forgiue my persecuters, if it be thy blessed will. And then he was deliuered to sir Robert Morlie, and so led forth againe to the tower of London. And thus was there an end of that dayes worke.

He prayeth for his enemies.

Exemplari Londinense.

While the lord Cobham was thus in the Tower, he sent out publike bils to his friends. And they at his request wrote this little bill here following, causing it to be set vp in diuers quarters of London, that the people should not beleeue the flanders and lies that his enemies the bishops seruants and priests had made on him abroad. And thus was the letter.

A testimoniall made by his friends.

FOr as much as sir John Oldcastle knight, and lord Cobham, is vntrewlie conuicted and impeached, falsely reported and and slandered among the common people by his aduersaries, that he should otherwise both thinke and speake of the Sacraments of the church, and specialie of the blessed Sacrament of the altar, then was written in the confession of his belefe, which was indented and taken to the clergie, and so set vp in diuers open places in the citie of London: knowne be it here to all the world, that he neuer since, varied in any point therefro, but this is plainlie his belefe, that all the sacraments of the church be profitable and expedient also to all them that shall be saued, taking them after the intent that Christ and his true church hath ordained. Furthermore he believeth, that the blessed sacrament of the altar is verilie and truly Christs bodie in forme of bread.

To stop lying mens mouthes.

A confession of his belefe. The forme of bread, but not in that bread he meaneth.

After this, the bishops and priests were in much great discredit both with the nobilitie and commons, partlie for that they had so cruellie handled the good lord Cobham: and partlie against, because his opinion (as they thought at that time) was perfect concerning the sacrament. The prelats feared this to grow to further inconuenience towards them both waies, wherefore they met in their heads together, and at the last consented to vse another practise somewhat contrarie to that they had done afore. They caused it by and by to be blowne abroad by their sad seruants, friends, and babling sir Johns, that the said lord Cobham was become a good man, and had lowlie submitted himselfe in all things vnto holy church, vtterly changing his opinion concerning the sacrament. And thereupon, they counterfeited an abiuration in his name, that the people should take no hold of that opinion by any thing they had heard of him before, and so to stand the more in awe of them, considering him so great a man, and by them subdued.

This is the abiuration (say they) of sir John Oldcastle knight, sometime the lord Cobham.

✠ An abiuration counterfeited of the bishops.

Archbishop Arundels counterfeit abiuration.

IN Dei nomine: Amen. I John Oldcastle denounced, detected and conuicted, of and vpon diuers articles sauouring both heresie and errour, before the reuerend father in Christ and my good lord, Thomas by the permission of God, lord archbishop of Canturburie, and my lawfull and rightfull iudge in that behalfe, expreslie grant and confesse, that as concerning the effate and power of the most holy father the pope of Rome, of his archbishops, his bishops, and his other prelats, the degrees of the church, and the holy sacraments of the same, specially of the sacraments of the altar, of penance, and other obseruances besides of our mother holie church, as pilgrimages and pardons: I affirme (I say) before the said reuerend father archbishop and elsewhere, that I being euill seduced by diuers seditious preachers, haue grieuouslie erred, and hereticallie persisted, blasphemouslie answered, and obstinatelie rebelled. And therefore I am by the said reuerend father, before the reuerend fathers in Christ also, the bishops of London, Winchester, and Bangor, lawfullie condemned for an hereticke.

Marke from whence this geare commeth.

First vnwholesome stuffe I trow.

Nieuertheless, yet I now remembring my selfe, and conceiting by this meane to auoid that temporall paine which I am worthie to suffer as an heretike, at the allegnation of my most excellent christian prince and liege lord, king Henrie the fifth, now by the grace of God most worthie king both of England and of France: minding also to preferre the wholesome determination, sentence and doctrine of the holie vniuersall church of Rome, before the vnwholesome opinions of my selfe, my teachers, & my followers, I freelie, willinglie, deliberat lie, and throughlie confesse, grant, and affirme, that the most holie fathers in Christ, Saint Peter the Apostle and his successors bishops of Rome, specialie now at this time, my most blessed lord pope Iohn, by the permission of God, the three and twentith pope of that name, which now holdeth Peters seat (and each of them in their successi on) hath full strength and power to be Christs vicar in earth, and the head of the church militant. And that by the strength of his office (what thought he be a great sinner, and afore knowne of God to be damned) he hath full authoritie and power to rule and gouerne, bind and lose, saue and destroy, accurse and assoile all other christian men.

Mary good man indeede thanke him.

And agreablie vnto this, I confesse, grant, and affirme all other archbishops, bishops, and prelats in their prouinces, dioceses, and parishes (appointed by the said pope of Rome, to assist him in his doings or businesse) by his decrees, canons, or vertue of his office; to haue had in times past, to haue now at this time, and that they ought to haue in time to come, authorities and power to rule and to gouerne, bind and lose, accurse and assoile the subiects or people of their aforesaid prouinces, dioceses, and parishes, and that these said subiects or people ought of right in all things to obey them. Furthermore, I confesse, grant, and affirme that the said spirituall fathers, as our most holie father the pope, archbishops, bishops, and prelats, haue had, haue now, and ought to haue hereafter, authoritie and power for the effate, order and gouernance of their subiects or people, to make lawes, decrees, statutes and constitutions, rect and to publish, enioin and, and compell their said subiects and people to the obseruation of them.

Who hath set the Bishops to worke.

Moreouer, I confesse, grant, and affirme, that all their foresaid lawes, decrees, statutes and constitutions made, published and commanded, according to the forme of spirituall law, all christian people, and euerie man in himselfe is frailly bound to obserue, and meekelie to obey, according to the diuerssitie of the foresaid powers. As the lawes, statutes, canons and constitutions of our most holie father the pope, incorporated in his Decrees, Decretals, Clementines, Codes, Charts, Rescripts, Sextiles, and Extrauagants ouer all the world: and as the prouincial statutes of archbishops in their prouinces, the Synodall acts of bishops in their dioceses, and the commendable rules and customes of prelats in their Colledges, and custs in their parishes, all christian people are both bound to obserue, and also most meekelie to obey. Ouer and besides all this, I John Oldcastle vtterlie forsaking and renouncing all the aforesaid errors and hereties, & all other errors and hereties like vnto them, lay my hand here vpon this booke of holie Euangelie of God, and sweare, that I shall neuer more from hencefoorth hold these aforesaid hereties, nor yet anie other like vnto them vntruelie. Neither shall I giue counsell, aid, helpe, nor fauour at anie time, to them that shall hold, teach, affirme, or maintaine the same, as God shall helpe me, and these holie Euangelies.

No Scripture I can trye to stand by.

Intollerable places lay they.

Neuer made it such an oath.

And that I shall from hencefoorth faithfully obey and inuiolablie obserue all the holie lawes, statutes, canons, and constitutions of all the popes of Rome, archbishops, bishops, and prelats, as are contained and determined in their holie Decrees, Decretals, Clementines, Codes, Charts, Reiercrips, Sertiles, Sums papall, & Extrauagants, statutes prouinciall, acts synodall, & other ordinarie regules and customes constituted by them, or that shall chance hereafter diuerse to be determined or made. To these and all such other, will I my selfe with all power possiblie applie. Besides all this, the penance which it shall please my said reuerend father the lord archbishop of Canturburie hereafter to enioyne me for my sinnes, I will meekelie obey and faithfullie fulfill. Finallie, all my seducers and false teachers, and all other besides, whom I shall hereafter knowe suspected of hereste or errors, I shall effectuallie present, or cause to be presented vnto my said reuerend father, lord archbishop, or to them which haue his authozitie, so soone as I can conuenientlie do it, and se that they be corrected to my vttermost power.

And that I shall from hencefoorth faithfully obey and inuiolable obserue all the holie lawes, statutes, canons, and constitutions of all the popes of Rome, archbishops, bishops, and prelats, as are contained and determined in their holie Decrees, Decretals, Clementines, Codes, Charts, Reiercrips, Sertiles, Sums papall, & Extrauagants, statutes prouinciall, acts synodall, & other ordinarie regules and customes constituted by them, or that shall chance hereafter diuerse to be determined or made. To these and all such other, will I my selfe with all power possiblie applie. Besides all this, the penance which it shall please my said reuerend father the lord archbishop of Canturburie hereafter to enioyne me for my sinnes, I will meekelie obey and faithfullie fulfill. Finallie, all my seducers and false teachers, and all other besides, whom I shall hereafter knowe suspected of hereste or errors, I shall effectuallie present, or cause to be presented vnto my said reuerend father, lord archbishop, or to them which haue his authozitie, so soone as I can conuenientlie do it, and se that they be corrected to my vttermost power.

And thus he hath holden, and doth hold opinion, and teach as touching the Sacraments of the altar, of penance, of pilgrimage, of the worshipping of Saints, and of the keyes, contrarie to that which the vniuersall church of Rome doth teach and affirme.

And this maintaine they still. The pope-holy bishe of papists.

This charge giue they commonly.

Marke this babbling.

Wherefore, on the behalfe of the said prelats and clergie, we were then required that we would vouchsafe to proceed against the said sir John Oldcastle vpon the premisses. Notwithstanding, for the reuerence of our lord the king, in whose fauour the said sir John at that present was, and no lesse also for honor of his knighthood: we with our fellow brethren, and suffragans then present, with a great part of the clergie of our prouince, comming personallie before the presence of our lord the king, being then at his Manor of Kenington, put vp against the said sir John, a complaint, and partlie reciting the defaults of the said sir John. But at the request of our lord the king, we defrring to reduce the said sir John to the vnitie of the church, without any reproch, we deferred all the execution of the premisses for a great time. But at the last, for so much as our said lord the king, after his great trauels taken about the reformation of him, did nothing at all profit, as our said lord the king vouchsafed to certifie vs both by word and writing: Wee immediatlie decreed to call forth the said sir John personally to answere before vs at a certaine time alreadie passed, in and vpon the premisses, and sent our messengers with these our letters of citation to the said sir John, then being at his castle of Cowling, vnto the which messenger we gaue commandement that he should in no case go into the castle, except he were licensed. But by the meane of one John Butler, porter of the kings chamber, he should require the said sir John, that he would either license the said messenger to come into the castle, or that he would cite him, or at the least that he would suffer himselfe to be cited without his castle. The which sir John openly answered vnto the said John Butler, declaring the premisses vnto him on the behalfe of our lord the king: that hee would by no meanes be cited, neither in anie case suffer his citation. Then we being certified of the premisses, lawfully proceeded further.

Sir John Oldcastle in fauour with the king.

For confutation of this diuerse.

First, hauing faithfull report made vnto vs, that he could not be apprehended by personall citation, we decreed to cite him by an edict, to be openly set vp in the porches of the cathedrall church of Rochester next vnto him, little more then three English miles distant from the said castle of Cowling. As we had thus caused him to be cited, and our edict aforesaid to bee publikely and openly set vpon the porches of the said church, that he should personally appeare before vs the eleuenth day of September last past to answere vnto the premisses, and certaine other things concerning hereste: The which day being come, wee sitting in the tribunall seat in our greater chapell within the castle of Leeds of our diocesse, the which we then inhabited, and where as we then kept residence with our court, and hauing taken an oth which is requisite in the premisses, and the information by vs heard and receiued, as the common report goeth: In the parts where as the said sir John dwelleth (fortifying himselfe in his said castle, defending his opinions manifoldlie, contemning the keyes of the church and the archbishops power:) We therefore caused the said sir John cited, as is aforesaid, to be openly with a loud voice called by the crier: and so being called, long looked for, and by no meanes appearing, we iudged him (as he was no lesse worthie) obstinate, and for his punishment of his said obstinacie, we did then and there excommunicat him. And for so much as by the order of the premisses, and other euident tokens of his doings, we vnderstand that the said sir John for the defence of his error doth fortifie himselfe, as is aforesaid, against the keyes of the church, by presence whereof, a vehement suspition of hereste and schisme riseth against him: We haue decreed, if he may be apprehended, against personally to cite him, or else, as before, by an edict, that he should appeare before vs the Saturday next after the feast of Saint Matthew the Apostle and Euangelist next comming, to shew some reasonable cause if he can, why we should not proceed against him, to more grieuous punishment, as an open heretieke, schismatike, and open enemie of the vniuersall church. And personally to declare why he should not be pronounced such a one, or that the aid of the secular power should not be solemnely required against him. And further to answere, do, and receiue as touching the premisses, whatsoeuer iustice shall require. The which time being come, that is to say, the Saturday next after the feast of Saint Matthew being the 24. day of September, sir Robert Morley knight, Lieftenant of the tower of London, appeared personally before vs, sitting in the chapter-house of the church of Saint Paul at London, with our reuerend fellow brethren and lords, Richard by the grace of God bishop of London, and Henrie bishop of Winchester, and brought with him sir John Oldcastle knight, and set him before vs (for a little before he was taken by the kings seruants, and cast into the Tower) vnto which sir John Oldcastle so personally present, we rehearsed all the order of the processe, as it is contained in the acts of the day before passed, with good and modest words and gentle meanes: That is to say, how he the said sir John was detected and accused in the conuocation of the prelats and clergie of our said prouince, as is aforesaid, vpon the articles before rehearsed, and how he was cited, and for his contumacie excommunicat. And when we were come to that point, we offered our selues readie to absolue him. Notwithstanding, the said sir John, not regarding our offer, said that he would willingly rehearse before vs, and my said fellow brethren, the faith which he held and affirmed. So he hauing his desire, and obtaining licence, tooke out of his bosome a certaine Schedule indented, and there openly read the contents of the same, and deliuered the same Schedule vnto vs, and the Schedule of the articles whereupon he was examined, which was as in forme following.

Nothing thought right necessarie that the lord Cobham should humble out of the wan, or else not possible for papisticke flesh.

The lord Cobham cast into the Tower.

✠ The catholike faith and confession of the lord Cobham.

I John Oldcastle knight, Lord of Cobham, desire to make manifest vnto all christians, and God to be taken to witnesse, that I neuer thought otherwise or would thinke otherwise (by Gods helpe) then with a stedfast and vndoubted faith to embrace all those his Sacraments which he hath inkituted for the vse of his church.

The Sacrament of the altar.

Furthermore, that I may the more plainly declare my mind in these foure points of my faith: First of all I beleeue the Sacrament of the altar to be the bodie of Christ vnder the forme of bread, the verie same bodie which was borne of his mother Marie, crucified for vs, dead and buried, rose again the third day, sitteth on the right hand of his immortall father, now being a triumphant partaker with him of his eternall glorie.

Of penance.

Then as touching the Sacrament of penance, this is my beliefe, that I do thinke the correction of a sinfull life to be most necessarie for all such as desire to be saued, and that they ought to take vpon them such repentance of their former life by true confession, vnfained contrition, and lawfull satisfaction, as the word of God doth prescribe vnto vs: otherwise, there will be no hope of saluation.

Of images.

Thirdly, as touching images, this is my opinion, that I do iudge them no point of faith, but brought into the world after the faith of Christ by the sufferance of the church, and so growne in vse, that they might serue for a kalendar for the lay people and ignorant. By the beholding whereof they might the better call to remembrance the godly examples and martyrdome of Christ and other holy men: but if any man doe otherwise abuse this representation, and giue the reuerence vnto those images, which is due vnto the holy men whom they represent, or rather vnto him whom the holy men themselues owe all their honor, setting all their trust and hope in them which ought to be referred vnto God: or if they be so affected toward the dumbe images, that they be in any behalfe addict vnto them, either be more addicted vnto one Saint then another, in my mind they do little differ from idolatrie, grieuously offending against God the author of all honor.

The keyes of the church falsly wrested.

Of pilgrimages.

Last of all, I am thus perswaded, that there be no inhabitants here in earth, but that we shall passe straight either to life or punishment: for whosoeuer doth to order his life that he stumble at the commandements of God, which either he knoweth not, or he will not be taught them, it is but in vaine for him to looke for saluation, although he ran ouer all the corners of the world. Contrariwise, he which obserueth his commandements cannot perish, although in all his life time he walked no pilgrimage, neither to Rome, Canturburie, nor Compostella, or to any other place, whither as the common people are accustomed to walke.

The lord Cobham excommunicated.

This Schedule with the articles therein contained being read (as is aforesaid) by the said sir John, we with our fellow brethren aforesaid, and many other doctors and learned men had conference vpon the same, and at the last by the counsel and consent of them, we spake these words following vnto the said sir John there present. Behold sir John, there are many good and catholike things contained in this schedule. But pouhaue this time to answere vnto other matters which sauor of errors and hereses. Whereunto, by the contents of this schedule, it is not fully answered, and therefore you must answere thereunto, and more plainelie expresse and declare your faith and opinions as touching those points in the same bill. That is to say, whether you hold, beleeue and affirme, that in the Sacrament of the altar, after the consecration rightlie done, there remaineth materiall bread or not.

Here whether these men preche truth, or els where they need not.

Item, whether you hold, beleeue and affirme, that it is necessarie in the Sacrament of penance for a man to confesse his sinnes vnto a priest appointed by the church.

The which articles in this maner deliuered vnto him, amongst manie other things he answered plainelie, that he would make no other declaration or answere thereunto then was contained in the said Schedule. Whereupon we fauoring the said sir John, with benigne and gentle meanes we spake vnto him in this manner. Sir John take hæd, for if you doe not plainly answere to these things, which are obiected against you within a lawfull time now granted you by the Iudges, we may declare you to be an heretike: but the said sir John persisted as before, and would make no other answere. Consequentlie notwithstanding, we together with our said fellow brethren, and others of our counsell tooke aduice and by their counsell declared vnto the said sir John Oldcastle, that the said holy church of Rome in this matter following the saying of blessed S. Augustine, Ieroome, Ambrose and other holie men, hath determined the which determinations euery catholike ought to obserue. Whereupon the said sir John answered, that he would beleeue and obserue whatsoeuer the holy church determined, and that soeuer God would he should obserue and beleeue. But that he would in no case affirme that our lord the pope, the cardinals, archbishops, and bishops, or other prelats of the church haue anie power to determine any such matters. Whereunto, we yet fauouring him, vnder hope of better aduisement, promised the said sir John, that we would giue him in writing certaine determinations vpon the matter aforesaid, whereunto he should more plainly answere, written in Latine, and for his better vnderstanding translated into English: whereupon we commanded, and hearelie desired him, that against monday next following, he should giue a plaine and full answere; the which determinations we caused to be translated the same day, and to be deliuered vnto him the Sunday next following. The tenor of which determinations here follow in this maner.

There is no mention made of the word of God.

Workes clothed in sheepes skins.

The faith and determination of the holy church vpon the holy Sacrament of the altar is this: That after the consecration done in the Masse by the priest, the materiall bread shall be changed into the materiall bodie of Christ, and the materiall wine into the materiall blod of Christ; therefore after the consecration there remaineth no more any substance of bread and wine, which was there before. What doe you answere to this article?

The famine of the people by lacke.

Confession.

Also the holy church hath determined, that euery christian dwelling vpon earth, ought to confesse his sinnes vnto a priest ordained by the church, if he may come vnto him. How thinke you by this article?

The popes supremacie.

Christ ordained S. Peter his Vicar in earth, whose seat is in the church of Rome, giuing and granting the same authoritie which he gaue vnto Peter, also to his successours which are now called popes of Rome, in whose power it is to ordaine and institute prelats in particular churches, as archbishops, bishops, curats and other ecclesiasticall orders, vnto whom the christian people owe obedience, according to the tradition of the church of Rome. This is the determination of the holie church. What thinke you by this article?

Pilgrimage.

Besides this, the holy church hath determined, that it is necessarie for euery christian to go on pilgrimage to holy places, and there specially to worship the holy reliques of the apostles, martyrs, confessors, and all saints, whomsoeuer the church of Rome hath allowed. What thinke you of this article?

Vpon which monday being the 25. day of the said moneth of September before vs and our fellow brethren aforesaid, hauing also taken vnto vs our reuerend brother, Benedict by the grace of God, bishop of Bangor, and by our common assent our counsellers and ministers, maister Henrie Ware official of our court of Canturburie, Philip Morgan Doctor of both lawes, Poinel taffin Doctor of the decretals, John Kemp, and William Carlton, doctors of law, John Witnam, Thomas Palmer, Robert Wombewell, John Withe, and Robert Chamberlaine, Richard Dotington, and Thomas Walden, professors of Diuinitie: Also Iames Cole, and John Steuens our notaries appointed on this behalfe. They all and euerie one being sworne vpon the holy Gospell of God, laying their hands vpon the booke, that they should giue their faithfull counsell in, and vpon the matter aforesaid, and in euery such cause, and to the whole world. By and by appeared sir Robert Morley knight, Lieutenant of the tower of London, and brought with him the foresaid sir John Oldcastle, setting him before vs. Vnto whom we gently and familiarly rehearsed the acts of the day before passed. And as before we told him that he both is and was excommunicate, requiring and intreating him that he would desire and receiue in due forme the absolution of the church. Vnto whom the said sir John then and there plainly answered, that in this behalfe he would require no absolution at our hands, but only of God. Then afterward by gentle and soft meanes we desired and required him to make plaine answere vnto the articles which were laid against him. And first of all, as touching the Sacrament of the altar. To the which article, besides other things he answered and said thus: That as Christ being here on earth had in him both Godhead and manhood: notwithstanding, the Godhead was couered and inuisible vnder the humanitie, the which was manifest and visible in him: so likewise in the Sacrament of the altar there is the verie bodie and verie bread, bread which we do see, the bodie of Christ hidden vnder the same which we do not see. And plainly denied, that the faith as touching the said Sacrament determined by the Romish church and holy Doctors, and sent vnto him by vs in the said Schedule, to be the determination of the holy church. But if it be the determination of the church, he said that it was done contrarie vnto the Scriptures, after the church was endowed, and that poison was powred into the church, and not afore. Also, as touching the Sacrament of penance and confession, he plainly said and affirmed then and there, that if any man were in any grieuous sinne, out of the which he knew not how to rise, it were expedient and good for him to go vnto some holy and discreet priest to take counsell of him: But that he should confesse his sin to any proper priest, or to any other, although he might haue the vse of him, it is not necessarie to saluation, for so much as by onely contrition such sinne can be wiped away, and the sinner himselfe purged. As concerning the worshipping of the crosse, he said and affirmed, that the only bodie of Christ which did hang vpon the crosse is to be worshipped. For so much as that bodie alone was and is the crosse, which is to be worshipped.

The Sacrament both bodie and bread in diuers respects.

Is the will to sinne.

He did the Romishe deliuerer Christ vnto Pilate.

How confession is to be allowed.

And being demanded what honor he would do vnto the image of the crosse: Hee answered by expresse words that he would only do it that hereby that he would make it cleane and lay it by sale. As touching the power and authoritie of the keies, the archbishops, bishops and other prelats, he said that the pope is very Antichrist, for this, that he, the archbishops, bishops, and other prelats to be his members, and the friers to be his taile.

What honor is to be done to the crosse.

The pope is Antichrist, the bishops are his members, and friers his taile.

The which pope, archbishops and bishops, a man ought not to obey, but so far forth as they be followers of Christ and of Peter, in their life, maners, and conuersation, and that he is the successor of Peter, which is best and purest in life and maners. Furthermore, the said sir John spreading his hands, with a loud voice said thus to those which stood about him: These men which iudge and would condemne me, will seduce you all and themselues, and will lead you into hell; therefore take hed of them. When he had spoken those words, we againe as oftentimes before with lamentable countenance, spake vnto the said sir John, exhorting him with as gentle words as were might, that he would returne to the vnitie of the church, to beleeue and hold that which the church of Rome doth beleeue and hold. Who expresly answered that he would not beleeue or hold otherwise then he had before declared. Wherefore, we perceiuing, as it appeared by him, that we could not preuaile, at the last with a heauie heart, we proceeded to the pronouncing of a definitiue sentence in this maner.

The holy ruler of the holy Catholike church.

¶ In the name of God, Amen: We Thomas by the permission of God archbishop and humble minister of the holy church of Canturburie, primat of all England, and legat of the apostolike see, in a certaine cause or matter of heresie vpon certaine articles, whereupon sir John Oldcastle knight, lord Cobham, before vs in the last conuocation of our clergie of our prouince of Canturburie, holden in the church of S. Paul in London after diligent inquisition had thereupon made, was detected and accused, and by our said prouince notoriously and openly defamed. At the request of the whole clergie aforesaid thereupon made vnto vs in the said conuocation, with all fauor possible that we might (God we take to witnesse) law fully proceeding against him, following the footsteps and example of Christ, which would not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should be conuerted and liue, we haue indeuoured by all waies and meanes we might or could to reforme him, and rather reduce him to the vnitie of the church, declaring vnto him what the holy vniuersall church of Rome doth teach, hold and determine in this behalfe. And albeit that we found him wandring astray from the Catholike faith, and so stubborne and stifnecked, that he would not confesse his error or cleare himselfe therof, so detest the same; Notwithstanding, we fauouring him with a fatherly affection, and hartily wishing and desiring his preseruation, prefixed him a certaine competent time to deliberate with himselfe, and if he would, to repent and reforme himselfe. And last of all, for so much as we perceiued him to be vnreasonable, obseruing chiefly those things which by the law are required in this behalfe, with great sorow and bitternes of heart, we proceeded to the pronouncing of the definitiue sentence in this maner.

They call their selues humble which rule ouer kings, and exercise the tyranny of the world.

The vniuersall church, meaning by a figure the part for the whole.

The name of Christ being called vpon, setting him onlie before our eyes. For so much as by acts enacted, signes exhibited, euidences and diuers tokens, besides sundrie kind of proofes, we find the said sir John to be, and haue been an heretike, and a follower of heretikes in the faith, and obseruation of the sacred vniuersall church of Rome, and specially as touching the sacraments of the Eucharist and of penance. And that as the sonne of iniquitie and darknesse hee hath so hardened his heart, that hee will not vnderstand the voice of his shepheard, neither neither wil be allured with his monitions, or couerted with any faire speech. Hauing first of all searched and sought out, and diligently considering the merits of the cause aforesaid, and of the said sir John, his deferts and faults aggrauated through his damnable obstinacie: Not willing that hee that is wicked, should become more wicked and infect other with his contagion, by the counsell and consent of the reuerend men of profound wisdome and discretion, our brethren the lords, Richard bishop of London, Henrie bishop of Winchester, and Benedict bishop of Bangor, and also of many other doctors of diuinitie, the decretals and ciuill law, and of many other religious and learned persons our assistants, we haue iudged and declared sententially, and definitiuely condemned the said sir John Oldcastle knight, lord Cobham, being conuict in and vpon that most detestable guilt, not willing penitently to returne vnto the vnitie of the Church, and in those things which the sacred vniuersall Church of Rome doth hold, teach, determine, and shew forth. And specially as one erring in the articles aboue written, leauing him from henceforth as an hereticke vnto the secular iudgement.

Moreouer, we haue excommunicated, and by these writings doe pronounce and excommunicate him as an heretike, and all other which from henceforth in fauour of his error, shall receiue, defend, or giue him counsell, or fauour, or helpe him in this behalfe, as fauourers, defenders, and receiuers of heretikes. And to the intent that these premises may be knowne vnto all faithfull Christians, we charge and command you, that by your sentence definitiue you doe cause the Curates which are vnder you, with a loud and audible voice in their Churches, when as most people is present, in their mother tongue, through al your cities and diocesse to publish, and declare the said sir John Oldcastle as is before said, to be by vs condemned as an heretike, schismaticke, and one erring in the articles aboue said: and all other which from henceforth in fauour of his errors shall receiue or defend him, giuing him any counsell, comfort, or fauor in this behalfe, to bee excommunicate as receiuers, fauourers, and defenders of heretikes: As is more effectually contained in the proces. That by such meanes the erroneous opinions of the people, which peraduenture hath otherwise conceiued the matter) by those declarations of the truth, how the matter is, may be cut off. The which thing also we will and commande bee written and signified by you, word for word, vnto al our fellow brethren: that they all may manifest, publish, and declare throughout all their cities and diocesse, the manner and forme of this our processe, and also the sentence by vs giuen, and all other singuler the contents in the same. And likewise cause it to bee published by their Curates which are vnder them as touching the day of the receit of these presents, and what you haue done in the premisses, how you and they haue executed this our commandement. We will that you and they duly and distinctly certifie vs the businesse being done, by you and their letters patents, according to this tenour. Dated in our manor of Maidstone, the 10. of October an. 1413. and in the 18. yeere of our translation.

Thus haue you here the iudicial processe of the bishops against this most noble christian knight, described by their owne letters and stile. After all this, the sentence of death being giuen, the lord Cobham was sent away, sir Robert Morley carrying him againe vnto the tower: where as after he had remained a certaine space, in the night season, (it is not knowne by what meanes) he escaped out and fled into Wales, where as he continued by the space of foure yeres.

A defence of the Lord Cobham, against Nicolas Harpsfield, set out vnder the name of Alanus Copus.

AS I was entring into this storie of the lord Cobham, after the tractation of all the former histories hitherto passed, hauing next to set vpon this present matter, luckilie, and as God would, in such opportunitie of season, as may seeme, God to worke himselfe for defence of his Saints; connecth to my hands a certaine booke of new found dialogues, compiled in Latine by Nicolas Harpsfield, set out by Alanus Copus, an Englishman, a person to me vnknowne, and obscure hitherto vnto the world, but now to purchase himselfe a name with Erasmus, or with the Gnomes of Cranchim, commeth out not with his fiue eggs, but with his fire raising dialogues. In the which dialogues the said Alanus Copus Anglus (whether hee vnder the armor of other, or other vnder title of his name, I know not, nor passe not) vncourteously behauing himselfe, intemperately abusing his time, stodie, and pen, forgetting himselfe, neglecting all respect of honestie, and milde modestie, neither dreading the stroke of God, nor passing for shame, neither fauouring the liuing, nor sparing the dead, who being alriue as they neuer offended him, so now cannot answere for themselues being gone: thus prouoking both God and man against him, after an vnseemely sort, and with a foule mouth, and a stinking breath, rageth and fareth against dead mens ashes, taking now the spoile of their good name, after their bodies lie slaine in the field. His gall and choler being so bitter against them, that he cannot abide any memozie after them to remaine vpon earth. In so much that for the hatred of them, he spurneth also against me, and sheth in my face, for that in my Acts and Monuments, describing the bishop of the church, I would say any thing in the fauor of them, whom the Romish Catholikes haue so vnmercifully put to death. The answer to whose booke although it would require a seuerall treatation by it selfe (as if Christ grant space and leisure, hereafter it shall not be forgotten) yet because such opportunitie of the booke is offered to me at this present comming now to the matter of the lord Cobham, Sir Roger Acton and other, with whom he first beginneth to quarrell, it shall be requisite a little by the way to cope with this Cope, what soeuer he be, so much as truth shall giue me for their defence to say something. And here to cut off all the offalles of his railing talke and vnhonest rebukes, which I leaue to scolds and men of his profession against they list to bawle, let vs byrely and quietly consider the matter, for discussing of the truth. Wherein first I shall desire the Reader with equalitie and indifferencie to heare both the parties to speake, as well what the Martyrs hence gone and slaine could say for themselues, if they were present, as also what this man here both obiect against them now being gone. And so according to the same to iudge both vpon them as they deserue, and of me as they shall please.

Answere to Alanus Copus.

Indifferencie of the reader required.

Now to the scope of maister Copes matter, which is this: whether this for said sir John Oldcastle, lord Cobham (first to begin with him) is rather to be commended for a Martyr, or to be reproued for a traitor. And whether that I in writting of him, and of Sir Roger Acton, with other moe in my former edition, haue dealt fraudulently, and corruptly in commending them in these Acts and Monuments or no? Touching the discussion whereof, first I trust the gentle maister Cope my friend, neither will, nor well can deny any part of all that hitherto touching the story of the lord Cobham, hath been premised: who yet all this while was neither traitor to his country, nor rebell to his prince, as by the course of his history hitherto the reader may well vnderstand. First, in the time of king Henry the fourth, hee was sent ouer to France to the duke of Orliance; he did obey. Afterward king Henry the fift, comming to the crowne, he was of him likewise well liked and fauoured, vntill the time that Thomas Arundell with his clergy complaining to the king, made date betweene them. Then the lord Cobham being cited by the archbishop, at his citation would not appeare. But sent for by the king, he obeied and came. Being come, that lowly subiection he shewed there to the king, the 294. 1.2. declareth. After he yeelded an obedient confession of his faith: it would not be received. Then did he appeale to the b. shop of Rome, for the which the king tooke great displeasure with him and so was he reuealed by the king to the archbishop, and committed to the tower; which also he did obey. From thence he was brought to his examination once or twice: there like a constant martyr, and witnesse of the truth, hee stood to his confession, and that vnto the very sentence of death defined against him. If this be not perfect of a true Martyr, let Alanus Copus say what he will, or what he can: This I say, at least I doubt, whether the said Alanus Copus Anglus, put to the like triall himselfe, would venture so narrow a point of martyrdome for his religion, as this Christian knight did for his. Certes it hath not yet appeared.

The lord Cobham a true and obedient subiect to king Henry the 5.

The lord Cobham in the beginning fauoured of king Henry the 5.

The kings displeasure preconceiued against the lord Cobham by popish practises.

The lord Cobham obedient to the king.

The lord Cobham constant in his faith to the sentence of death.

Proceede, after this deadly sentence was thus awarded against him, the said lord Cobham was then returned againe vnto the tower; which he with patience and meekenesse did also obey: from the which tower if hee afterward by the lords prouidence did escape, whether hath Alanus Copus, herein more to praise God for offering to him the benefit, or to blame the man for taking that which was offered. What catholike in all Rome hauing his house ouer his head on fire, will not be glad to haue it, he might, the doore set open to flee the perill? or els why did Alanus Copus flie his countrie, hauing to little need, if this man, bleeding almost vnder the butchers axe, might not enioy so great an offer of so luckie deliuerance?

Thus hitherto I trust, the cause of the lord Cobham standeth firme and strong against all danger of iust reprehension. Who being (as he haue heard) so faithfull and obedient to God: so submisse to his king: so sound in his doctrine: so constant in his cause: so afflicted for the truth: so readie and prepared to death: as we haue sufficiently declared, not out of vncertaine and doubtfull chronicles, but out of the true originals and instruments remaining in ancient records: What lacketh now or what should let to the contrarie, but that he declaring himselfe such a martyr, that is, a witnes to the veritie (for the which also at last hee suffered the fire) may therefore worthily be crowned with the title of a martyr, which is in Greke as much as a witnesse bearer.

The lord Cobham worthily the name of a martyr.

The name of a martyr what it signifieth.

But here now stepped in dame Inuidia, with her colon scold Alecto, &c. who neither learning to hold her tongue, nor yet to speake well, must needs find here a knot in a rush, and beginning now to quarrell interreth thus: But after (saith hee) that the lord Cobham was escaped out of the tower, his fellowes and confederates conuented themselues together, seditiously against the king, and against their countrie. A great crime no doubt maister Cope, if it be true; so if it be not true, the greater blame returneth vnto your selfe, so to enter this action

Calumnia.

tion of such a murder, vnlesse the ground whereupon he stand, be sure. First, that fellowes of the lord Cobham were these you meane of: Sir Roger Acton he say, maister Browne and I. Beuerly, with 36. other hanged and burned in the said field of S. Giles. A maruellous matter, that such a great multitude of 20000. specified in storie, should rise against the king, and yet but 3. persons only knowne and named. Then to proceede further, I would aske of maister Cope what was the end of this conspiracie, to rebell against the king, to destroy their countrie, and to subuert the Christian faith, for so purported the storie. As like true the one as the other. For euen as it is like, that they being Turkes, went about to destroy the faith of Christ wherein they died, and to subuert their country where in they were bred: euen so like it is that they went about to destroy the king, whom God and their conscience taught to obey.

Sir Roger Acton knight, maister John Browne esquire. Iohn Beuerley yeoman.

Yet further proceedeth this famous promoter in his accusation, and saith moreouer: that these forsaid fellowes and adherents of the lord Cobham, were in the field assembled and there incamped in a great number against the king: and how is this proued? by Robert Fabian. Which appeareth to be as true, as that which in the said Robert Fabian followeth, in the same place where affirmeth that John Cledon, and Richard Turmin, were burnt in the same yere, being 1413. When indeed by the true Registers, they were not burnt before the yere of our Lord, 1415. But what will maister Cope say, if the originall copie of the inditement of these pretended conspirators do testifie, that they were not there assembled or present in the field as your accusation pretendeth: But they purposed (will you say) and intended to come. The purpose and intent of a mans mind is hard for you and me to iudge, where as no fact appeareth. But giue their intent was so to come: Yet might they not come to those thickets neere to the field of S. Giles, hauing Beuerley their preacher with them (as pee say your selfe) as well to play and to preach in that woddy place, as to fight? Is this such a strange thing in the Church of Christ, in time of persecution, for Christians to resort in desolate woods, and secret thickets, from the sight of enemies, when they would assemble in praying and hearing the word of God? In Queene Maries time was not the same colour of treason obiected against George Egle and other moe, for frequenting and vsing into backsides and fields, and suffered for that, whereof he was innocent and guiltlesse? Did not Adam Damplip die in like case of treason, for hauing a French crowne giuen him, at his departure out of Rome by Cardinal Pole? What cannot cankred Calumnia inuent, when she is disposed to calumniate? It was not the Cardinals crowne that made him a traitour, but it was the hatred of his preaching, that stirred vp the accuser.

Robert Fabian proued with an vntruth.

An vntruth in Alanus Copus.

Playing and preaching in back corners a common thing in time of persecution.

In France what assemblies haue there been in late yeres of good and innocent Christians, congregating together in backe fields and couerts in great troups to heare the preaching of Gods holy word, and to pray yea and not without their weapon also, for their own safegard, and not without a stout and minded any rebellion against their king? Wherefore in cases of Religion it may and doth happen many times that such congregations may meet without intent of any treason ment. But howsoeuer the intent and purpose was of these forsaid confederates of the L. Cobham, whither to come, or what to do (seeing this is plaine by records, as is aforesaid, that they were not yet come vnto the place) how will maister Cope now iustifie his words, so confidently affirming, that they were there assembled seditiously together in the field of Saint Giles against the king? And marke here I beseech the (gentle Reader) how vntrue and vntidely the points of this tale are tied and bung together. I will not say without all substance of truth, but without all fashion of a cleanly lie); where in these accusers in this matter seeme to me, to lacke some part of Simons art, in conueying their narration so vnartificially. First (say they) the king was come first with his garrison, vnto the field of S. Giles. And then after the king was there incamped, consorted vnto the fellowes of the lord Cobham (the captaine being away) came and were assembled in the said field where the king was, against the king: and yet not knowing of the king to the number of 25. thousand: and yet neuer a stroke in that field giuen. And furthermore of all this 25. thousand aforsaid, neuer a mans name knowne, but onely three, to wit, sir Roger Acton, sir John Browne, and John Beuerley a preacher. How this geare is clampered together let the Reader iudge, and beleeue as he seeth cause.

Another vntruth in Alanus Copus.

So vnlikely a tale.

But giue all this to be true, although by no demonstration it can be proued, yet by the popes dispensation (which in this earth is almost omnipotent be it granted: that after the king had taken S. Giles field before, the companions of the L. Cobham afterward comming and assembling in the thickets neere to the said field, to fight seditiously against the king, against their countrie, and against the faith of Christ, to the number of 25. thousand, where no stroke being giuen, so many were taken, that all the prisons of London were full, and yet neuer a mans name knowne of all this multitude, but only three: All this, I say, being imagined to be true, then followeth to be demanded of Sr. Cope, whether the Lord Cobham was here present with this company in the field, or not? Not in person (saith Cope) but with his mind and with his counsell he was present, and addeth this reason, saying: And therefore he being brought againe, after his escape, was conuict both of treason and heresie, and therefore suffaining a double punishment was both hanged and burnt for the same, &c. And how is all this proued? By Robert Fabian, he saith: Whereunto briefly I answer, that Robert Fabian in that place maketh no such mention of the lord Cobham assisting or consenting to them either in mind or in counsell. His words be these: That certaine adherents of Sir John Oldcastle assembled in the field neere to S. Giles, in great number: of whom was sir Roger Acton, sir John Browne, and John Beuerley. The which with 36. mo in number were after conuict of heresie and treason, and for the same were hanged and burnt, within the said field of S. Giles, &c. Thus much in Fabian touching the commotion and condemnation of these men: but that the lord Cobham, was there present with them in any part, either of consent or counsell, as Alanus Copus Anglus pretendeth, that is not found in Fabian but is added of his liberall conu copie, whereof he is so copious and plentifull, that he may keepe an open shop of such vnwritten vntruths, which he may afford very good cheap I think, being such a plentifull artificer.

Alanus Copus.

Alanus Copus taken with an other vntruth.

But here will be obiected against me the words of the statute made the second yere of king Henry the fift, whereupon this aduersarie triumphing with no little glozie, [illegible] thinketh himselfe to haue double vantage against me: first, in prouing these forsaid complices and adherents of the L. Cobham, to haue made insurrection against the king, and so to be traitors. Secondly, in conuicting that to be untrue, where as in my former booke of Acts and Monuments I doe report: how that after the death of sir Roger Acton, of Browne and Beuerley, a Parliament was holden at Leicester, where a statute was made to this effect: that all and singuler, such as were of Wicklieffes learning, if they would not giue ouer (as in case of felony and other trespasses, losing all their goods to the king) should suffer death in two maner of kinds, that is, they should first be hanged for treason against the king, and then be burned for heresie against God.

Ex Statut. Reg. Hen. 5. an. 2. cap. 7.

The former relation of Acts and Mons. pag. 175.

Whereupon, remaineth now in examining this obiection and answering to the same, that I purge both them of treason, and my selfe of vntruth, so far as truth and veritie in Gods cause shall assist me herein. Whcit in beginning first my historie of ecclesiastical matters, wherein I hauing nothing to do with debatement of causes iudicial, but only following the simple narration of things done and executed; neuer suspected that euer any would be so captious with me, or so neere nosed, as to presse me with such narrow points of the law, in trying and discussing euery cause and matter so exactly, and straining (as pee would say) the bowels of the statute law so rigorously against me. Perfor so much as I am thereunto constrained now by this aduersarie, I will first lay open all the whole statute made the second yere of this forsaid Henrie the fifth, after the death of the forsaid sir Roger Acton and his fellowes, at the Parliament holden at Leicester, an. 1415. That done, I will note vpon the words thereof, so as by the circumstances of the same may appeare what is to be concluded, either for the defence of their innocencie, or for the accusation of this aduersarie. The tenor and purport of the statute here vnder ensueth.

The words and contents of the statute made an. 2. Henrici 5. cap. 7.

The preface or preamble of the statute.

FOr so much as great (A) rumors, congregations, and insurrections here in England by diuers of the king his malefices lege people haue bin made here of late, as well by those which were of the sect of heresie called Lollardie, as by other of their confederation, cerritations, and abetment: to the intent (B) to annull and subuert the christian faith and the law of God with in the same Realme, as also to (C) destroy our soueraigne lord the king himselfe, and (D) all manner of estates of the same his Realme, as well spirituall as temporall (E) and also all maner policy, and the lawes of the land: Finally the same our Lord the king, to the honour of God, in conseruation and fortification of the Christian faith, and also in saluation of his royall estate, and of the estate of all his Realme, willing to prouide a more open and more due punishment against the malice of such heresities and lollardies, then hath been had or vsed in that case heretofore, to that for the feare of the same lawes and punishment, such heresies and Lollardies may the rather cease in time to come.

Here it appeareth at whose sute and singular cation this Statute was set forward, as also the cause why.

By the aduice and assent aforesaid, and at the prayer of the said commons hath ordained and established: that especially the Chancellor, the Treasurer, the Iustice of the one bench and of the other, Iustices of Assise, Iustices of peace, Sheriffes, Maiors, and Bailiffes of cities and townes, and all other officers, hauing the gouernment of people either now present or which for the time shall be, doe make an oth in taking of their charge and offices, to attend their vhole paine and diligence to put out, to doe to put out, cease and destroy, all manner of heresies and errors commonly called Lollardies within the places in which they exercise their charges and offices, from time to time, with all their power: and that they assist, fauor, and maintaine the ordinaries and their commissaries so often as they or any of them shall be thereunto required by the said ordinaries or their commissaries: So that the said officers and ministers, when they trauell or ride to arrest any Lollard, or to make any assistance at the, finstance and request of the ordinaries or their commissaries, by vertue of this statute: that the same ordinaries and commissaries be (G) pay for their costs reasonably. And that the seruices of the king (vnto whom the officers be first sworne) be preferred before all other statutes for the libertie of holy Church and the ministers of the same: And especially for the correction and punishment of heretickes and Lollards, made before these daies and not repealed, but being in their force. And also that all persons conuict of heresie, of whatsoeuer estate, condition or degree they be, by the said ordinaries or their commissaries left vnto the secular power according to the lawes of holy Church, shall lese and forfeite all their lands and tenements, which they haue in fee simple, in maner and forme as followeth: That is to say, that the king shall haue all the lands and tenements, which the said conuict haue in fee simple and which be immediatlie holden of him, as forfeited: And that the other lords of whom the lands and tenements of such conuicts be holden immediatly, after that the king is thereof seized and answered of the (H) yere, day, and wast: shall haue liuerie thereof out of the hands of the king of the lands and tenements aforesaid, so of them holden, as hath been vsed in case of attainder of felonies, except the lands and tenements, which be holden of the ordinaries or their commissaries, before whom any such impeach d of heresie be conuict, (I) which lands and tenements shall wholly remaine to the king as forfeit. And moreouer, that all the goods and cattels of such conuicted, be forfeit to our right soueraigne lord the king, so that no person conuict of heresie, and left vnto the secular power (according to the lawes of holie Church) doe forfeit his lands before that hee bee dead. And if any such person so conuicted bee enfeoffed, whether it be by fine, or by deed, or without deed, in lands and tenements, rents, or seruices, in fee or otherwise in whatsoeuer maner, or haue any other possessions or cattels by gift or grant of any person or persons, to the vse of any other then only to the vse of such conuict: That the same lands, tenements, rents, or seruices, nor other such possessions, nor cattels shall not be forfeit vnto our soueraigne lord the king in no manner wise.

(F) (G) (H) (I)

And moreouer, that the iustices of the kings bench, the Iustices of peace, and iustices of Assise, haue full power to inquire of all such, which hold any errors or heresies, as Lollards, and who bee their maintainers, receiuers, fautors, and sustainers, common writers of such bookes, as well of their sermons as schooles, conuenticles, congregations and conferderacies, and that this clause bee put in the commissions of the Iustices of peace. And if any persons be inuited of any points aboue said, that the said Iustices haue power to award against them a Capias, and that the Sheriffe be bound to arrest the person or persons so inuited as soone as hee can find them, either by himselfe, or by his officers. And for so much as the cognisance of heresies, errors, or Lollardies, appertaine to the iudges of holie Church, and not vnto the secular Iudges; that such persons inuited (K) be deliuered vnto the Ordinaries of the places, or to their commissaries by Indentures betweene them to bee made, within ten daies after their arrest, or sooner if it may bee done, to be thereof acquitted, or conuict by the lawes of holy church in case such persons be not inuited of any other thing, the cognisance whereof appertaineth to the iudges and secular Iudges, in which case after they shall be acquited, or deliuered before the secular Iudges of such things as appertaineth to the secular iudges, they shall be sent in safe custodie vnto the said Ordinaries, or their commissaries, and to them to be deliuered by Indentures, as is aforsaid, to be acquitted or conuicted of the same heresies, errors and Lollardies, as is aforesaid, according to the lawes of holy Church, and that within the terme abouesaid. Prouided, that the said inditements bee not taken in euidence (L) but only for information before the iudges spiritual, against such persons inuited: but that the Ordinaries begin their processe against such persons inuited, in the same manner, as though no such iudgement were hauing no regard to such inditements. And if any bee inuited of heresie, error, or Lollardie, and taken by the Sheriffe, or any other officer of the king, he may be let to maineprise within the said ten daies, by good suretie, for whom the said Sheriffes, or other officers will answere, so that the person so inuited bee readie to be deliuered vnto the said Ordinaries, or to their commissaries, before the end of the tenth day aboue here recited, if hee may by any meanes for sickneſſe. And that euery Ordinarie haue sufficient commissaries or commissarie, abiding in euery Countie in place notable, so that if any such person inuited bee taken, that the said commissaries, or commissarie may bee warned in the notable place of his abiding, by the Sheriffe, or any of his officers to come vnto the kings gaile within the said Countie, there to receiue the same person so inuited by Indenture, as is aforesaid: And that in the Inquests in this case taken, the Sheriffes and other officers vnto whom it appertaineth, do impanell good and sufficient persons, not suspected, nor procured, that is to say, such as haue at the least, euery one of them that shall bee so impannelled in such inquests, within the realme, a hundred shillings by the yere of lands, tenements, or of rent, vpon paine to lese to the kings vse r. pound. And that those which shall be impanelled vpon such inquests at sessions and gailes, haue euery one of them to the value of vi. shillings by the yere. And if any such person arrested, whether it be by the Ordinaries, or the officers of the king, (M) either escape or deceiue prison before hee be thereof acquit before the Ordinarie: that then all his goods and cattels, which hee had at the day of such arrest, shall bee forfeit to the king: And his lands and tenements which he had the same day, be seised also into the kings hands, and that the king haue the profits thereof from the same day vntill he render himselfe to the said prison from whence hee escaped. And that the aforesaid iustices haue full power to enquire of all such escapes and breaking of prisons, and also of the lands, tenements, goods, and cattels of such persons inuited. Prouided, that if any such person inuited, doe not retourne into the said prison, and doth (not being conuict) that then it shall bee lawfull for his heires, to enter into the lands and tenements of his ancestor without any other sute made vnto the king for this cause. And that all those which haue liberties, or franchises royall in England, as the County of Chester, the Countie and libertie of Durham, and other like: And also all the lords which haue iurisdictions and franchises roiall in Wales where the kings writs doe not run, haue like power to execute and put in execution in all points, these articles by them or by their officers in like maner, as doe the Iustices and other the kings officers aboue declared.

Notes touching the statutes prefixed.

Thus hauing recited the words of the statute, now let vs consider the reasons and obiections of this aduersarie, who grounding peraduenture vpon the preface or preamble of this foresaid statute; will proue thereby the lord Cobham, and sir Roger Acton, with the reſt of their abettours, to haue been traitors to their king and their countrie. Whereunto I answere, first in generall, that although the face or preface prefixed before the statute, may shew and declare the cause and occasion originall why the statute was made, yet the making of the statute impeacheth no necessarie probation of the preface allwaies to bee true that goeth before; which being but a colour to induce the making thereof, gueth no force materiall thereunto, nor is any necessarie part of the body of the said statute: But onelie abhereth as a declaration of the circumstance thereof, and sometime is cleane omitted and differeth much from the substance of the same. For as statutes in ciuill policie most commonlie doe tend to a publike end and are generall; so prefaces before statutes, which most commonly declare the cause or beginning thereof, are priuate: and doe stand onely but vpon particular facts, which either of will and displeasure may bee suggested, or by colour may be exaggerated, or for feare may be beleeued, at least suspected, as many suspitions doe oft times rise in princes heads, through false surmises, and malitious complaints of certaine ciuill disposed about them, whereby many cruell lawes rising vpon a false ground, are promulgate to the ruine of much innocent blood. Example whereof we haue not onlie in this present statute, an. 2. Reg. Hen. 5. but also in the like statute, commonly called the Statute Ex officio vel de comburendo, made by this kings father and predecessor, an. 2. Henr. 4. cap. 5. In the preface of which blouddie statute, is contained another like complaint of the prelates and clergie, not so hainous, as alsa most shamefullie false and vntrue against the poore Lollards, as by the words of the complaint may appeare, beginning; Excellentissimo & Gratiosi. principi, &c. Wherein, most falsly they slander and misreport the true seruants of Christ to bee Lollards, heretickes, subuerters of the common-wealth, destroyers of the Christian faith, enemies to all good lawes, and to the Church of Christ. The words of which statute proceeding much after the like course as doth this present statute, may easilie bewray the vntruth and false surmise thereof, if thou pleale (gentle reader) to marke and conferre the words according as they are there to be read and seene, as followeth: Conuenticulas & confœderationes faciunt, scholas tenent & exercent, libros conficiunt atque scribunt, populum nequiter instruunt & informant, & ad seditionem seu insurrectionem excitant, quantum possunt, & magnas dissensiones in populo faciunt, & alia diuersa enormia audiuntur horrenda in dies perpetrant, in fidei cathol. & ecclesiæ subuersionem, diuinique cultus diminutionem, ac etiam destructionem status, iurium, & libertatum dictæ ecclesiæ Anglic. And after a few words: Ad omnem iuris, & rationis ordinem atque regimen, penitus destruendum &c. By the which is to thall bee acquainted with old histories and with the shall practises of Satan the old enemie of Christ, from the first beginning of the primitiue Church vnto this present time, shall see this to bee no newes, but a common and (as ye would say) a quotidian feuer among Christs children, to bee vexed with false accusations, and cruell slanders.

False accusation no newes in Christs church.

Nemesion the Egyptian, and true martyr of Christ, was he not first accused to be a felon? And when that could not bee prooued, he was condemned at the same iudgement for a Christian: and therefore being cast into bands, was scourged, by the Example of Cyprian, pag. 62.

Against Cyprian in like sort it was slanderously obiected by Galenus Maximus proconsull: Quòd diu sacrilega mente vixerit, & nepharie sibi conspirationis homines adiunxerit: That he had long continued with a mind full of sacrilege, and that he had gathered vnto him men of wicked conspiracie, pag. 62.

Example of Iulius martyr.

So Iulius martyr, what false and criminous accusations suffered he by Crescens? Cornelius bishop of Rome and martyr, was accused of Decius, quòd ad Cyprianum literas daret contra rempu. That hee wrote letters vnto Cyprian against the common wealth: vide pag. 59.

Lawes and statutes deuised vpon false suggestion against the Christians.

To consider the lawes and statutes made by tyrants and Emperors in the first persecutions of the primitive Church, against the innocent seruants of Christ, and to compare the same with the lawes and statutes in this latter persecution vnder antichrist: I am an shall find, that as they agreed all in like cruelte, so was there no great difference in false forging of pretended causes and crimes deuised. For as then, the Christians were wrongfully accused of the Gentiles for insurrections and rebellions against the emperors and empire, for being enemies to all mankind, for murdering of infants, for worshipping the sunne (because they prayed toward the east) for worshipping also the head of an asse, &c. vide pag. 48. 34. vpon the rumors wherof, diuers and sundry lawes and statutes were enacted, some engrauen in braille, some otherwise wrote against them: so in this foresaid statute, an. 2. Hen. 5. cap. 7. also an. 2. Hen. 4. cap. 15. and in such other statutes or indictments made and conceiued against the Lollards: the case is not so strange, but it may credibly be supposed, that the making thereof did rise rather vpon malice and hatred against their religion conceiued, then vpon any iust cause minisfred of their parts, whom they did wrongfully charge and accuse. Like as in the time of Domitianus, for feare of Dauids seede, all the nephewes of Iude the lords brother in flesh, were accused to the emperor. pag. 33. And also the like feare and hatred stirred vp other Emperours, and the Senat of of Rome, to proceed with perfecuting lawes against the Christian flocke of Christ: Euseb. lib. 5. cap. 21. thereupon, rose vp those malicious slanders, false surmises, infamous lies, and wrongfull accusations against the Christians: so that what crimes soeuer either malice could inuent, or rash suspition could minister, that was imputed against them vnde supra. pag. 34.

The persecuting lawmes in the primitiue church, & of the latter church compared.

Feare and hatred causes of persecution.

Vide supra. pag. 34.

Not vnlike also it may seeme, that the pope with his Prelates fearing and vndoubting lest the proceeding of the Gospell preached by these persons should ouerthrow the state of their maiesties did therefore by sinister accusations inflame the harts of princes against them, and vnder some coloured couert, to shadow their closed hatred, deuised these and other like crimes which were not true, but which might cleerly serue their purpose.

This hitherto haue I said as in a generall summe, answering to the preamble of the foresaid statute, for the defence of Sir Iohn Oldcastle, and sir Roger Acton, and other, not as defining precisely what was or was not (for here I may say with Hall, that as I was not present at the deed doing, so with him I may also leaue the same at large.) But as one by tracing the footsteps of the truth, as by all coniectures hunting out in this matter, what is most like, we did but only lap my minde fine strepitu (as lawyers say) & sine figura iudicij.

The matter declared by the causes wherefore the L. Cobham & the Lord Roger Acton were taken & put vp.

Now consequentlie it followeth, that we descend to the speciall points and particulars of the foresaid preamble: to consider what thereof may be collected, or necessarilie is to be iudged, either for proofe or disproofe, of this foresaid sir Iohn Oldcastle and his fellowes.

A

Rumors. Congregations. Insurrections.

(A) And first, where the proeme of this statute beginneth with rumors, congregations, and insurrections, &c. As it is not like, that if these men had intended any forceable entrees or rebellion against the king, they would haue made anie rumors therof before the deed done: so is it more credible to be supposed, all these flourishes of words to bee but words of course, or of office, and to fauor rather of the rankenesse of the inditers pen, who disposed either per amplificationem rhetoricam to shew his cope, or else per malitiam papisticam, to aggrauate the crime, and to make mountaines of molehils, first of rumors in their congregations, and from congregations riseth vp to insurrections; whereas in all these rumors, congregations, and insurrections, yet neuer a blow was giuen, neuer a stroke was stricken, no blood spilt, no furniture nor instruments of warre, no signe of battell, yea no expresse signification either of any rebellious word, or malious fact described, neither in records, nor yet in any chronicle. Again, if these rumors were words spoken against the king, as calling him a tyrant, an vsurper of the crowne, the Prince of priests, &c. why then be none of these words expressed in their indictments, or left in Records? Doth so. Cope thinke for a man to be called a traitor, to be enough to make him a traitor, vnlesse some euident proofe be brought for him to bee so in deed. as he is called? Rumors (saith he) congregations and insurrections were made. Rumours are vncertaine; congregations haue been and may be among christian men in dangerous times for good purposes, and no treason against their princes meant. The terme of insurrections may be added for more grace by prattle, or furmise of the prelats and pert men, who to bring them the more in hatred of the king, might adde this rather of their owne gentlenesse, then of the others deseruing. Certaine it is and vndoubted, that the priests in those daies being so mightily inflamed against these Lollards, were not altogether behind for their parts, nor vtterlie idle in this matter, but practised against them what they could, first to bring them into hatred, and then to death.

Examples of such kind of practise among the popish clergie, haue not lacked neither before, nor since. Moreouer, if these men had made such a rebellious insurrection against the king, as is pretended in the preamble before this statute, which were a matter of high treason: how chanceth then, that the whole bodie of the statute following after the said preface or preamble, runneth in all the parts or branches therof both in manner of arest, of inditement, information, request, allowance of officers, cognisance of ordinaries, of the forefact, &c. vpon cases of heresie and not of treason, as by particular tractation shal be (Christ willing) declared?

Insurrection of the L. Cobham against the king not likelie.

And for so much as these men be so grieuously accused of Alanus copus, for congregating and rising against their king, and the whole realme, if it had so much leasure to defend, as he hath pleasure to diffame: here might be demanded of him, to shape him some further ply (touching this mightie insurrection, where as they came in numbers twentie thousand as gainst the king) in what order of battell cast they marched, what captaines, vnder-captaines, and petie captaines they had to guide the wings, and to lead the armie: whether they were horsemen, or footmen. If they were horsemen (as is pretended) what meant they then to resort to the thickets nere to Saint Giles field, which was no meet place for horses to skirre: If they were footmen; how standeth that with the author, which reporteth them to be horsemen? Moreouer, is to be demanded, what ensignes or flagges, what shot, what powder, what armor, weapons, and other furniture of warr also what treasure of money to wage so manie, to the number of twentie thousand, what trumpets, drums, and other noise necessarie for the purpose they had? All these preparations so fine an enterprise is requisite and necessarie to be had. And peraduenture, if truth were well sought, it would be found at length, that in stead of armies and weapon, they were comming onlie with their bookes, and with Scuerlap their preacher, into those thickets. But as I was not there present at the fact (as is before said) so haue I neither certainely to define vpon their case, nor yet master Cope to exclame against them, vnlesse peraduenture he taking an occasion of the time, will thus argue against them: that because it was the hote moneth of Januarie the 2. day after the Epiphanie, therefore it is like, that sir Iohn Oldcastle with twentie thousand Lollards camped together in the fields in all the heate of the weather, to destroy the king and all the nobles, and to make himselfe Regent of England. And why not as well the King, as Regent of England, seeing all the nobles should haue beene destroyed, and he onely left alone to reigne by himselfe?

(B) A number of the Lord Cobham that he intended to destroy christian faith.

It followeth more in the preamble of the foresaid statute, (B) to abroll, destroy, and subuert the christian faith, and the law of God, and holy church, &c. Hee that was the forger and inuenter of this report (as it appeareth to procede from the prelats) semeth no cunning Dædalus, nor halfe his crafts master in lying for the purpose. Better he might haue learned of Sinon in Virgil, more artificially to haue framed and conueied his narration. Which although in no case could sound like any truth, yet some colour of probabilitie should haue beene set vpon it, to giue it some countenance of a like tale. As if he had first declared the lord Cobham, to haue bin before in secret confederacie with the great Turke, or if hee had made him some termagant or Mahound out of Babylonia, or some Herode of Iudea, or some antichrist out of Rome, or some grandpanch epicure of this world: and had theined, that he had receiued letters from the great Soldan, to fight against the faith of Christ and law of God; then had it appeared some what more credible, that the said sir Iohn Oldcastle with his fet of hercsie, went about to abroll, destroy, and subuert the christian faith, and law of God within the realme of England, &c.

But now, where will either he or master Cope find men so mad to beleeue, or so ingenious that can imagine this to bee true, that the lord Cobham (being a christian) and so faithfull a christian, would or did euer cogitate in his mind to destroy and abroll the faith of Christ in the realme of England? Whatsoeuer the report of this purtuant or preface saith, I repot me vnto the vnwitterent Reader, how standeth this with any face of truth: That he which before through the reading of Scripture lifted vp his eies to heauen, to earnestly conuerted to the law of God, who had also appointed himselfe such a faithfull seruant of Christ, that for the faith of Christ he being examined and tried before the prelats: pag. 518. not onely ventred his life, but stood constant vnto the fiercence of death, defined against him: being a condemned and a dead man by law; Et qui quantum tum ad eius deuotionem pertinet & timorē, passus sit, quicquid pati potuit, who had as much as to deuotion & feare appertained, suffered alreadie what he might or could suffer, as Cyprian said by Cornelius. That he (I say) which a little before in the month of September, stood so constant in defence of Christs faith, would now in the month of Januarie rise to destroy, annull, and subuert Christs faith, and the law of God, and holy church within the realme of England?

How can it be, not like only but possible to be true, that he which neuer denied the faith: which euer confessed the faith so constantly: which was for the same faith condemned: yea and at last also burned for the faith, would euer fight against the faith and law of God, to abroll and to subuert it? Let vs proceed yet further, and see when that he should haue so destroyed and abrolled the Christian faith and law of God in England, what faith or law then could he, or did he intend to bring into the realme of England? The Turkes faith? or the Iewes faith? or the popes faith? or what faith else I pray you? For hee that will be an enemie to the faith of Christ, and will throw himselfe fiend to one other faith beside, I account him not out of his right faith, but out of his right wits.

(C) Lord Cobham neither planted to intercept in destroying the king.

(C) And therefore euen as it is true, that Sir Iohn Oldcastle with his confederats and abettours were vp in armes to subuert and extinguish the faith of Christ and law of God in the realme of England: so by the like truth it may be esteemed, that the same persons rose also to destroy their Soueraigne Lord the king and his brethren. First, thankes bee to God, that neither the king, nor any of his brethren had any hurt by him. But his intent, saith the preface, was to destroy his Soueraigne Lord the king. Whereunto I answere, with this interrogatorie, whether his intent was priuie to haue destroyed him, or by open force of armes? If priuilie, what needeth then such a great army of xx. thousand men to atchieue that secret feat? Rather I would thinke, that he needed more the helpe of such as were nere about the king: as some of the kings priuie chamber, or some of his secret counsell: whereof, neither Chronicle nor record doth intimate any mention. If his intent was openly to inuade the king: How must vnderstand (master Cope) that to withstand a king in his owne realme, many things are required, long time, great preparation, many friends, great assistance, and alo of kindred, money, horse, men, armour, and all other things appertaining for the same.

How vnlike it is that the lord Cobham did rise against the king.

Example that an hard matter it is to rise against the king.

Earle Godwin of Westsaxe, who had married Canutus daughter, being a man both ambitious, and as false a traitor, for all his fire lonnes, and great alliance; yet durst not set vp on king Edward to inuade him within his Realme, although he sought many occasions so to doe, yet neuer durst enterprise openlie, that which his ambition so greedilie presumed vnto: pag. 147.

The nobles against king Henry 3.

In the time of king Henrie the third, Simon Montford earle of Glocester, Gilbert Clare earle of Leicester, Humfry Bone earle of Herrence, with a great number of lords and barons, thought themselues to haue great right on their sides; yet durst not for all their power openly assaile the king in his Realme, before great debatement and talke first had betweene: pag. 299.

The nobles against king Edward 2.

Likewise what murmuring and grudging was in the realme against king Edward the second, among the peeres and nobles, and also prelats (only Walter bishop of Couentrie excepte) first for Gauestone, then for the Spencers, at what time Thomas earle of Lancaster, Guido earle of Warwike, with the most part of all other earles and barons concordly consenting together to the displacing first of Gauestone, then of the Spencers, yet neither rashly nor without great feare durst stirre vp warre in the land, or disquiet or vexe the king, but first by all meanes of moderate counsell, and the like, thought rather to persuade, then to inuade the king: pag. 327.

The nobles against king Richard 2.

In like manner, and with like grudging minds, in the raigne of king Richard 2. Thomas Woodstocke duke of Glocester the kings vncle, with the earles of Arundell, of Warwicke, and Darby, with the power almost of the whole commons, stood vp in armes against the king: and yet notwithstanding all their power ioyned together, being so great, and their cause seeming to them so reasonable, yet were they not so hardy, straightwaies to sle vpon the king, but by way of Parliament thought to accomplish that which their purpose had conceiued, and so did, without any war striking against the king: pag. 472.

The nobles against king Henry 4.

After king Richard 2. was deposed, and was in prison yet liuing, diuers noblemen were greatly inflamed against king Henry the fourth, as Sir Iohn Holland earle of Huntington, Thomas Spencer earle of Glocester, the earles likewise of Kent, and of Salisburie, with Sir Iohn Cheiney and other mo, whereof diuers had been dukes before, and now deposed by king Henry 4. although they had conceiued in their hearts great grudges and malice against the said king Henry: yet had they neither heart nor power openly with mans force to assaile the king, but secretly were compelled to atchieue their conceiued intent, which notwithstanding they could not accomplish: Ex hist. D. Alban.

The insurrection of the lord Cobham against the king iudged by coniecture.

Thus, you may see, master Cope, or else master Parpisfield, what soeuer ye be, to gainsay and a king, and with open force to encounter with him in his owne land, and in his owne chamber of London, where hee is so sure and strong, what a matter of holy great chieuance it is, wherein so many and so great difficulties do lie, the attempt so dangerous, the chances so vncertaine, the furniture of so many things required, that scarce in any kings daies heretofore, any peeres or nobles of the Realme, were they neuer so strongly assisted with power, wit, or counsell, yet either were able, or else well durst euer enterprise vpon the case so dangerous, notwithstanding were they neuer of themselues so farre from all feare of God, and true obedience. And shall we then thinke, or can we imagine (master Cope) that Sir Iohn Oldcastle, a man so well instructed in the knowledge of Gods word, being but a poore knight by his degree, hauing none of all the peeres and nobles in all the world to ioyne with him, being prisoner in the Tower of London a little before in the moneth of December, could now in the moneth of Januarie, so suddenly, in such an hot season of the yere start vp an armie of xx. thousand fighting men to inuade the king, to kill two Dukes his brethren, to abroll Christian faith, to destroy Gods law, and to subuert holy Church? And why doth not he adde moreouer, to set alis all London on fire, and to turne all England into a hilly pole? Belike these men which giue out these figments of Sir Iohn Oldcastle, did thinke him to bee one of Deucalions flocke, who creating of stones ouer his shoulder, could by and by make men at his pleasure, or els that he had Cadmus teeth to sow, to make so many harnest men to start vp at once.

A rebellion to be of xx. thousand, and yet no counte to be knowne from whence they came, it is not like.

But let vs consider yet further of these rr. thousand souldiers so suddenly without wages, without victuall, or other prouision congregated together, what they were, from whence, out of what quarter, countrie, or countries they came. In other kings daies, whensoeuer any rebellion is against the king mooued by the Commons; as when Jack Straw and Wat Tiler of Kent, and Esser rose in the time of king Richard the 2. When William Sandwell of Abingdon, Jacke Cade of Kent, in the time king Henry the 6. In the time of king Henry the 8. when the common wast of rebels in Lincolneshire, then in Yorkeshire. When in king Edward the 6. time Humfrey Arundell in Deuonshire, Captaine Pyte in Northfolke made flerce against the king, the countrie and parts from whence these rebels did spring, were both noted and also diffamed. In this so traiterous commotion therefore let vs now learne, what men these were, and from what countrie or countries in all England they came. If they came out of any, let the Chronicles declare what countries they were. If they came out of none (as none is named) then let them come out of Vtopia, where belike this figment was first forged, and inuented. Wherefore seeing neither the countries from whence they came, nor yet the names of any of all these rr. thousand doe appeare what they were either in Chronicle or in record, but remaine altogether vnknowne, I leaue it (gentle Reader) to thy iudgement, to thinke thereupon, as thy wisdome shall leade thee.

Neuer was any rebellion of Commons in England, but the speciall countrie from whence they came was noted and knowne.

(D) Another false report of Sir Iohn Oldcastle, at the intended to kill at maner of estates in the realme.

(D) It followeth more in the foresaid preface: And to destroy all other manner of estates, of the same Realme of England, as well spirituall as temporall, &c. By the course of this preamble it appeareth, that the said Sir Iohn Oldcastle, was a wonderfull cruell tyrant and murderer, who being not yet satisfied with the bloud of the king, nor of the two Dukes his brethren, would also make hauocke and slaughter also, of all manner of estates in the realme of England. What, and leaue no manner of estate aliue? No, neither lord spirituall nor temporall, but all together should bee destroyed. And what had all these estates done, thus so miserable to bee destroyed? Although perease the mode of this man might haue been incensed and kindled against the king, and the lords spirituall, by whom hee had been condemned, as is afore said: yet why should all other maner of other estates both spirituall and temporall bee killed? If none of all the estates in England, neither duke, earle, baron, lord, knight, or other gentleman had been his friend, but all his enemies, bolo then is it like, that he hauing all the estates, peeres, nobles, and gentlemen of the realme against him, and none to stand with him, either could or durst attempt any commotion against the whole power of the land, he being but one gentleman only with sir Roger Acton, and master Browne left alone? At least, good reason yet would, that those hundred knights should haue been spared out of this bloudy slaughter, whom he offered to produce vnto the king before, for his purgation, pag. 515. And finallie, if this was his purpose, that all these estates both spirituall and temporall should haue been cut downe, what needed then that he should haue made himselfe a Regent, when he might as well haue made himselfe a king, or what else hee would, being left then prince alone?

(E) The preamble as it began with vntruth, and continued in the same figure, heaping one vntruth vpon another: so now endeth with another misreport as vntrue as the rest, shewing and declaring, the intent of sir Iohn Oldcastle was alto destroy all manner of policie, and finallie the lawes of the land, &c. We reade of William Conquerer, otherwise named William

(E) An hard matter to destroy all policie and lawes of a land.

William Wallard: who being a puissant duke in his countrie, when that the crowne of England was allotted to him, and he comming ouer with all his peeres, nobles, and barons of his whole land, into this Realme, and had with great difficultie obtained victorie against king Harold: yet to alter and destroy the policie and the lawes of the land, it passed his power. Insomuch that it had not been permitted vnto him to haue proceeded so farre as he did, vnlesse he had first sworne to the nobles of this land, to retaine still the lawes of king Edward, as he found them. And albeit he afterward forswore himselfe, breaking his oth in altering and changing many of the foresaid lawes, yet wild he, nild hee, could not so destroy them all (for the which, much warre and great commotions endured long after in the Realme) but that hee was constrained, and also contented to allow and admit a great part of the said lawes of king Edward. pag. 154. And if he being king and conqueror, with all his strength of Normands and Englishmen about him, was too weak and insufficient to destroy all maner of policie and lawes of this land, which he had conquered: how much lesse then is it to be supposed, that Sir John Oldcastle being but a priuat subiect, and a poore knight, and a condemned prisoner, destitute and forsaken of all lords, earles and barons, who to saue his own life, had more to do, then he could well compasse, would either take in hand, or conceiue in his head any such exploit, after the subuersion of Christian faith, and law of God, after the slaughter of the king and all manner of estates, as well spirituall as temporall, in the Realme of England, after the desolation of holy Church, to destroy also all manner of policie, and finally, the lawes of the land? Which monstrous and incredible figment, how true it may seeme to master Cope, or to some other late Chronclers of the like credulitie, I cannot tell: Certainly to me, and as I think to all indifferent readers, it appeareth as true, as is the verse of the Satyre, wherewith it may well be compared:

Nil intra est oleam, nil extra est in nuce duri.

Obiection. But here will be said again perhaps, that the matter of such preambles and prefaces being but pursuants, of statutes, and containing but words of course, to aggrauate, and to giue a shew of a thing, which they would haue to seeme more odible to the people, is not so precisely to bee stand on or enquisitely to bee stood vpon, as for the ground of a necessarie ease of truth.

Answere. This is it (M. Cope) that I said before, and now do well grant and admit the same, that such preambles or forefaces lined with a non sequitur, containing in them matter but of surmise, and words of course (and rather monsters out of course) and many times rising vpon false information, are not always in themselues materiall, or necessarie probations in all points to be followed: as appeareth both by this statute, and also by the statute of this kings father, an. 2. Hen. 5. chap. 15. beginning, Excellentissimo, &c. And yet notwithstanding out of these same preambles, and forefronts of statutes, and other inditements, which commonly rising vpon matter of information, run onely vpon words of course, of office, and not vpon simple truth, a great part of our Chroniclers do often take their matter, which they insert into their stories, hauing no respect or examination of circumstances to be compared, but only following bare rumors, or else such words as they see in such fabling prefaces, or indictements expressed. Whereby it commeth to passe, that the younger Chronicler following the elder, as the blind leading the blind, both together fall into the pit of errour. And you also (master Cope) following the steps of the same, doe seeme likewise to erre together with them, for good fellowship. And thus concerning the face of this statute hitherto sufficiently.

For the small faith that Hen. 4. c. 15. Circumspecte and Cumque de plurimis articles of the plaintes to be beleeued.

Alanus Copus beguiled by the Chronicles.

Now let vs consider and discusse in like maner, first the coherence, then the particular contents of the said statute. As touching the which coherence, if it be well examined, a man shall finde almost a Chimera of it. In which neither the head accordeth with the body, nor yet the branches of the statute well agree with themselues. Wherein he that was the drawer, or first informer thereof, seemeth to haue forgot his verse and art Poeticall:

Horat. art. Poet.

Atque ita mentitur, sic veris falsa remiscet,
Primum ne medio, medium ne discrepet imo.

For whereas the preface of the statute standeth onely vpon matter of treason, conceiued by false suggestion and wrong information; the bodie of the said statute which should follow vpon the same, runneth only vpo matter of heresie pertaining to the ordinaries, as by euery branch thereof may appeare.

(F) For first where he saith, at the instance and request of the ordinaries or their commissaries, &c. Hereby it appeareth, this to be no cause of treason, nor felonie. For that euery man of dutie is bound, and by the lawes of the realme may arrest and apprehend a traitour, or a felon, if he can: where otherwise by this statute an officer is not bound to arrest him which offendeth in case of this statute, without request made by the ordinaries or their commissaries; and therefore this offence seemeth neither to be treason nor felonie.

(F) The bodie of the statute is not agreeable to the head.

(G) Secondly, where it followeth, that the same ordinaries and commissaries bee payed for their costs, &c. This allowance of the officers charges in this sort, prooueth this offence neither treason nor felonie.

(H) Thirdly, where the statute willeth the king to bee answered of the perc, pap, and wall, &c. by this also is proued the offence not to be treason. Onelie in cases of treason, the whole inheritance (I trow, master Cope, speaking as no great skilfull lawyer) is forfait to the prince.

(H)

(I) The fourth argument I take out of these words of the statute, whereas such lands and tenements which bee holden of the ordinaries are willed wholly to remaine to the king as forfait, &c. Whereby it is manifest, that the prelates (for their matter of Lollardie onely) were the occasioners and procurers of this statute: and therefore were barred of the benefit of any forfeit rising thereby, as good reason was, they should. And thus it is notorious, that the preface running specially and principally vpon treason, and the statute running altogether vpon points of heresie, doe not well cohere nor ioyne together.

(I)

(K) Fiftly, in that such persons indited, shall bee deliuered vnto the ordinaries of the places, &c. it cannot be denied, but that this offence concerneth no maner of treason: forsomuch as ordinaries cannot bee iudges in cases of treason, or felonie, by the lawes of our realme. Bracton, in fine 1. libri.

(K)

(L) Sixtly, by the indictements prouided not to be taken in euidence, but only for information, before the iudges spiritual, &c. it is likewise to be noted; to what end these indictements were taken, to wit, only to informe the ordinaries, which cannot be in cases of treason.

(L)

(M) Lastly, where it followeth toward the end of the statute touching escape or breaking of prison, &c. by this it may lightly be smelt, whereto all the purpose of this statute driueth, that is, to the speciall escape of the Lord Cobham out of the tower, to this end, to haue his lands and possessions forfeit vnto the king. And yet the same escape of the Lord Cobham in this statute considered, is taken by Master Justice Stanford in lib. primo of the pleas of the crowne cap. 33. to be an escape of one arrested for heresie, where hee speaketh of the case of the lord Cobham.

(M) Iustice Stanford of the pleas of the crowne, lib. 1. cap. 33.

Moreouer, as touching the parts of this foresaid statute, how will you ioyne these two branches together, whereas in the former part is said, that the lands of such persons conuict, shall be forfait to the king, not before they be dead: And afterward in the latter end, that their goods and possessions shall be forfeit at the day of their arrest, to the king. But herein (saueth no such great doubt nor matter to be weighed. This is without all doubt, and notoriously false, euidently, and most manifestly may appeare, by all the arguments and whole purport of the statute: that as well the preamble and preface thereof, as the whole bodie of the said statute was made, framed, and procured onely by and through the instigation, information, and excitation of the prelates, and the popish clergie, not so much for any treason committed against the king: but onely for feare and hatred of Lollardie, tending against their law, which they most dreaded and abhorred, then euer any treason against the prince. And then to set the king and all the states against them, whereby the more readily to worke their dispatch, they thought it best, and none so compendious a policie, as prettily to ioyne treason together with their Lollardy. Wherein the poore men being once intangled, could no waies escape destruction. Papæ concilium callidum.

The first preuention of the statute.

Practise of popish fatres to couple treason with heresie.

This M. Cope, haue I said, and say againe, not as one absolutely determining vpon the matter. At the doing whereof as I was not present my selfe, so with your olun Hall, I may and do leaue it at large, but as the reading the reader by all coniectures and arguments of probabilitie and of the circumstances, to consider with themselues, what is further to bee thought in these old accustomed practises and proceedings of these prelates. Protesting moreouer (M. Cope) in this matter to you, that those Chroniclers which you so much ground vpon, I take them in this matter, neither as witnesses sufficient, nor as iudges competent. Tho as they were not themselues present at the deed done, no more then I, but onely following uncertaine rumors, and words of course and office, bringing with them no certaine triall of that which they do affirme, may therein both be deceiued themselues, and also deceiue you, and other which depend vpon them.

Alanus Copus beguiled by the Chronicles.

Examples of diuers falsly accused for treasons.

And hitherto concerning this statute enough. Out of which statute you see (M. Cope) that neither your Chroniclers, nor you can take any great aduantage, to proue any treason in the lord Cobham or in his fellowes, as hath been hitherto abundantly declared in the premisses.

It remaineth further, that forasmuch as you in your sixth dialogue with your author Edward Hall, do alleage the records Et publica iudicij Acta, to affame these men for traitors (although what records they be, you bring forth neuer a word) I therefore in their defence doe answere for them, which cannot now answere for themselues. And because you to accuse them doe mention a certaine record, and yet doe not shew vs what record it is, and peraduenture cannot, if ye would: I haue taken the paines therfore, for the loue of them whom you so hate, to search out such Records, whereby any occasion can be raised against them. And first will declare the commission granted, then the indictement commenced against them.

The which commission, and indictement, albeit in countenance stance of words will seeme to minister much suspition against them, to the simple Reader, before he be better acquainted with these subtill dealings and practises of Prelates: yet trusting vpon the godnesse of the cause, which I see here so falsly and sleightly to be handled, I nothing feare nor doubt, to produce the same out of the records in Latine as they stand: to the intent that when the craftie handling of the aduersaries shall be disclosed, the true simplicitie of the innocent, to the true hearted Reader, shall the more better appeare. The words first of the Commission heere follow vnder written: which when thou shalt heare, let them not trouble thy mind, gentle Reader, I beseech thee, before thou vnderstand further, what packing and subtill conueyance shall be couered and hid vnder the same.

In cuius, &c. T. R. apud Westm. (B) x. die Ianuarij. Per ipsum Regem.

(B) By these high and tragicall words in this commission sent downe against the lord Cobham, sir Roger Acton, and their fellowes: it may peraduenture seeme to the ignorant and simple Reader, some hainous crime of treason to rest in them, to conspiring against God, the church, the king and their countrey. But that cannot the fetching practise of the Romish prelates bring about, but they must needes haue a colour, why they should 60 soze maruell not (good Reader) at this, nor iudge thou according to the words which thou hearest. But suspend thy iudgement a while, till the matter be more opened vnto thee. Examples of like handling be not so rare, but thou maist some iudge by other times the like also of these. George Egle, of whom mention was made before, did but preach in time of queene Marie, and yet commission was directed against him, as in case of raising by a commotion against the queene. Adam Damlip in Calice did but preach, and the rereuing of one penie crotone two yeres before at Rome was enough to make him a traytor. In the time of king Henrie the eight one Tingleton chaplaine to queene Anne, the queenes Paiscelles mother that now is, did but preach the Gospell, moued by zeale (as I haue credible witnesse of his owne scholar that heard him speake it being with him) and yet by vertue of commission it was obiected to him: for raising vp commotion against the king, yea and also for killing of Pakington, and suffered for the same as a traytor. So here, what matter 02 maruell is it, if the king incensed, 02 rather circumuented by the wrong information of the prelates (whom he beleeued) gaue out his commission, against things neuer wrought nor thought?

Examples of like handling.

Wherefore I exhort thee (christian Reader) as I said before, iudge not by and by the truth, by the words of the commission: but iudge the words rather of the commission by the truth. Set ther measure thou the line by the stone: but the stone rather by the line. At least yet deferre thy sentence, till both the Commission and the indictement being laid together, thou maist afterward see and perceiue more, what is to be iudged in the case.

In the meane season marke well these words of the king in his commission, (A) Cum nos plenius informemur, &c. By the which words it is easie to be vnderstood, that the king himselfe had no certaine knowledge thereof, but only by information of others (of bishops no doubt and prelats) and thereupon gaue forth his commission afo: said. And then how will this stand with our chroniclers and other epitomes and summaries, whom master Cope doth alleage? for if it be certaine that Robert Fabian said, that the king himselfe being in the field tolde certaine of them, as sir Roger Acton, master Brouine, and John Beuerley, and your owne Edward Hall, also and your Epitome agreeth to the same, and saith moreouer that they were brought before the kings presence: Thomas Couper also whom you alleage, addeth further and saith, that the king there by strength did take them:

Our English chronicles restrained by the words of the Commission.

I pray you (master Cope) what needed the king to write this by information, when as he both himselfe was present at the fact, was the taker of them, and a witnesse of the deed? The which and if it be true, that the king heard this but by way of information, how will you then defend your Chronicles & your Epitomes? But herein I will neither greatly sticke with you, nor contend with them: Desiring the Reader this only to braue in mind, the date of this present commission when it was giuen, (B) which foundeth to be the tenth day of Januarie, and afterward to compare the same with the date of the indictement here vnder following, which I will (the Lord willing) also hereunto ayner, leauing nothing out: yea rather ministring to the aduersarie all maner of helpes, what soeuer they can seeke 02 require for their more aduantage in this matter, to be desired. So sure and confident I am in the innocent cause of these good men, nor fearing what soeuer blind malice can cauill against them.

Notes or considerations vpon the inditement and commission aboue prefixed.

(A) The first note concerning the date and day both of the commission and of the verdict of Iurors comming on one day.

(A) Die Mercurij proximo post festum Epiphaniæ, &c. ☜ First here is to be noted and considered (good Reader) the day and date of giuing out the commission, and then of the verdict presented by the Iurers, which was both in one day, that is, on the Wednesday next after the Epiphany, in the first yeer of the reigne of king Henrie the fifth, which was the tenth day of the month of Januarie (as the date of the commission saith) an. 1413. after the vse of England, or after the Romish vse, anno 1414. So that after the vse ours we count whether it be anno 1413. or else an. 1414. the Dominicall letter beginning at the first day of Januarie to chynge, must needs be C. for the yeere, and so accordarily make Wednesday next after the Epiphanie, to be the tenth day of the said month of Januarie. Thus then this present Wednesday, which was the tenth day of the moneth, being well noted and borne in mind, on the which day both the commission was directed, and also the verdict presented, let vs now proceed further in the foresaid inditement. Itfolloweth.

(B) The ground here of the Iurers fetle out.

(B) Per sacramentum xij. iuratorum extitit præsentatum, &c. ☜ If there had bin true dealing in this, the Iurers should haue been named. But it is not like, that there was euer any such inditement found by any Iurers, and therefore they did well, not to name the Iurers, lest they would haue denied this inditement to be their act. It followeth more in proccesse of the inditement.

(C) The thirde argument, by making a Regent the king being yet in France.

(C) Et dictum Ioan. Oldcastle Regentem Eiusdem regni constituere, &c. ☜ If there were no other argument, this were sufficient to dispraue the manifest vntruth of this surmised inditement. When as the king was not yet gone to France, nor determined to go, how could they conspire then to make a Regent? For the king went in July following, viz. the second yeere of his raigne, leauing behind him the queene his mother in law, for Regent; whereby it may be gathered, that this matter was vntruly contred and stollen into the records with an antedate, or else at the least, there appeareth manifest vntruth, that they should conspire to make a Regent, when a Regent was not thought vpon, vnlesse it were alreadie runne into the heads of the clergie, who shortly after fearing their temporalities (as Carten saith) perswaded the king to make warre in France. This word Regent therefore proceedeth of the secret spirit of the clergie, and maketh the whole matter very suspitious, to be grounded altogether vpon the malice of the clergie, and their vntrue surmises. It followeth moreouer.

(D) The fifth argument by contrarietie.

(D) Quasi gens sine capite in finalem destructionem, &c. ☜ How doth this stand with that goeth before, that they conspired to make a Regent, creept you will say that to make a Regent, is to be a people without an heade? It followeth:

(E) The first argument by the vse of Cornewallie.

(E) Cum quamplurimus rebellibus dicti regis ignotis ad numerum viginti millium hominum, &c. ☜ A strange matter that they should know of the conspiracie of twentie thousand, and yet hardly of so more names of the rebels, but the lord Cobham only, or one or two mo. And all the rest were ignoti.

(F) The fift argument, by the vse of Cornewall.

(F) Prætatim insurgentes, &c. ☜ This smelleth of the clergies olwne penning, without any great aduice of learned counsell: for otherwise such as had been herein skilfull, would neuer haue put in præsertim insurgentes.

(G) The conclusion, gathered vpon the whole date and matter.

(G) Die Mercurij proximo post festum Epiphaniæ Domini anno R. R. prædicto, &c. This Wednesday next after the Epiphanie, was the tenth day of the month of Januarie, and the same day when both the conspiracie was put in execution, and the same day when the commission was giuen out to enquire, also when the fact was by inquirie presented. Whereby it may seeme a strange thing that so great a conspiracie knowen beforehand, was not suppressed nor inquired of by any commission but only by a commission bearing date of the same day, vpon which day by the purport of the inditement, the conspiracie should haue been put in execution, by open rebellion, as it is aforesaid.

(H) The ninth argument by circumstance and wresting naming the Dukes.

(H) Prædictum D. nostrum Regem fratres suos, videl. Thomam Ducem Clarentiæ, Ioannem de Lancastre, et Humfredum de Lancastre, &c. ☜ If the kings learned counsell had dealt in this inditement, as in case of treason they should haue done, if it had been a matter of truth, they would neuer haue handled it so slenderly, and wrongly, as to name the dukes of Bedford, and of Glocester; John of Lancaster, and Humfrey of Lancaster, who were made dukes in the thirteenth yeere of the raigne of king Henrie the fourth their father, as appeareth by Caxtones chronicle.

(I) The tenth note or argument by the absence of the partie.

(I) Et ibidem versus campum prædictum, modo guerrino arriati proditorie modo insurrectionis, contra ligeantias suas equitauerunt ad debellandum dictum D. nostrum regem, &c. ☜ This is fullified by plaine euidence of histories. And Cope himself confesseth no lesse. For he so saith: confesseth, pag. 837. lin. 12. That sir John Oldcastle was not there in person, but onlie, that his consent and good will was there.

The eleuenth note or argument.

Againe, seeing this equitation or riding toward Saint Giles field was vpon the Wednesday next after the feast of Epiphanie (as in this inditement and proccesse of outlawrie is aboue testified) which was the tenth day of Januarie, and commission also the same day was charged, and the iurie moreouer impanelled the same day, and yet no Iurer named: Item, the verdict the same day presented; how all these can concur together, and all in one day, let the Reader after he haue well considered the matter, vse his iudgement therein, not only whether it be like, but also whether it be possible.

The twelfth note or argument. The lord Cobham, sir Roger Acton, &c. pro eodem triplex.

Duer and beside all this it is to be noted, that if this matter had been truly and duely handled, as touching the treason, then had it not been needful to haue brought sir John Oldcastle into the Parliament house, before the lords to haue had his iudgement. For by the outlawrie (if it had been true) he was attainted, and without any more ado should haue had iudgement in the kings Bench as a traytour. But the chiefe Iustice knowing the handling of the matter, durst not beside enterprise so farre. Wherefore it was deuised, that he should certifie the record into the parliament, which he did together with the bishops sentence filed to the record, which was verie strange.

All things not true, that be found in stories.

And thereupon the lords gaue such a iudgement, as was not due for a traytour. For that they gaue no iudgement, that he should be drawen, hanged, and let downe aliue, and then bowelled and quartered, which is the iudgement of a traytour. And albeit the parliament might haue attainted him without anie more adoe: And by the same act of attainder haue obtained a special iudgement, as they should thinke good: yet when he was before attainted by the outlawrie, they could not lawfullie varie from the common iudgement of treason. At least how could or should the iudgement of Sir Roger Acton, maister Beawme, and Iohn Beuerley, who were iudged in the Guildhall before and without the parliament, varie from the said common iudgement of Traytours, if they had treason committed, and been conuicted of such high treason?

The thirteenth note of argument.

Adde this moreouer to the foresaid notes: that if sir John Oldcastle after his escape out of prison, had been culpable and so attainted of that high treason, whereby his lands had been immediatly forfeit vnto the king by the præcelle of his outlawrie: That needed the king then in the second yeere of his raigne, in the parliament after holden at Leicester, haue made that prouiso to haue his land forfeit to him by vertue of parliament, vpon his escape on the day of his arrest: when as the lands and cattel of his had been forfeit before, by the proccesse of the outlawrie, as is before specified?

Words without probation are not sufficient to proue matters.

Thus you see (maister Cope) how little aduantage you can weeft out of this commission and enditement against the lord Cobham and his fellowes, to proue them traytours. And admit the said lord Cobham was attainted of treason by the act, and that the king, the lords, and the commons assented to the Act: yet it bindeth not in such sort (as if in deed he were no traytour) that any may not by search of the truth vtter and set forth sincerely and iustly the very true cause, whereby his death hapt and followed.

Testimonie to the allegations of Fabian, Polydore, and Hall.

☜ Thus then hauing sufficiently cleared the lord Cobham and his partners, from all that you can obiect vnto them out of records and statutes: let vs now come to your English chronicles, wherewith you seeme to presse me, and to oppresse them, whom ye name to be Robert Fabian, Edward Hall, Polydor Virgilius, Thomas Cooper, Richard Grafton, with other briefe Epitomes and Summaries, &c. Concerning which authors, as I haue not to saie, but to their commendation in this place: so if that you had assigned the same, to the commendation rather then to the reproch of other, I would better haue commended your nature, and beleeued your cause. But now like a spidercatcher sucking out of euery one, what what is the worst, to make vp your lepstall, you heape vp a dunghill of dirtie Dialogues containing nothing in them but malitious railing, birulent slanders, manifest vntruthes, opprobrious contumelies, and stinking blasphemies, able almost to corrupt and infect the aire. Such is the maladie and cacoethes of your pen, that it beginneth to barke, before it hath learned well to write. Which pen of yours notwithstanding I doe not here reproch nor contemne, as neither doe I greatly feare the same. God of his mercie keepe the sword out of the Papists hand, it is not the pen of the Papists I greatly passe vpon, though twentie copes, and so many surpleses, were set against the booke of Monuments, were I so disposed (maister Cope) to dallie, or as the Greekes doe say κωμῳδεῖν, and to repay againe as I am prouoked. But in despitefull railing, and in this satyricall sort of barking I giue you ouer, and suffer you therein to passe not onely your selfe, but also Cerberus himselfe if ye will, the great bandog of Pluto. Mildnesse and humanitie rather beseemeth and is the grace of the Latine phrase. If ye could bit vpon the braine thereof, it would win you much more honestie, with all honest men. But the Lord hereafter may call you, which I beseech him to doe, and to forgiue you that you haue done.

Perfect commendation in writers.

In the meane time seeing this your prattling penne must needs be walking, yet this you might haue learned of these your owne authors whom you alleage, more ciuillie to haue tempered your fume, in exclaiming against them, whose cause is to you not perfitly knowne. And now briefly to answere to these your foresaid writers, as witnesses produced against these men: there be two things (as I take it) in these chronicle-writers to be considered: First the grounds which they follow: secondly in what place they serue.

Two things to be obserued in story-writers.

As touching the order and ground of writing among these Chroniclers, we must consider, and cannot be ignorant, that as none of all these by you forenamed, was present at the deed, nor witnesse of the fact, so haue they nothing of themselues herein certainly to affirme, but either must follow publicke rumor, and heare say for their author, or else one of them must borrow of another. Whereof neither seemeth to me sufficient. For as publike rumor is neuer certaine: so one author may soone deceiue another.

The ground of histories to be considered.

By reason whereof it commeth oft to passe, that as these story-writers hit many times the truth, so against all is not the gospell that they doe write. Wherefore great respect is here to be had, either not to credit rashly euery one that writeth stories, or else to see what grounds they haue whom we doe follow.

Now to demand (maister Cope) of you, what authoritie or foundation hath your Robert Fabian, hath Polydore Virgil, Edward Hall, and other of your authors, to proue these men to be traitors? What authoritie doe they auouch? what acts, what registers, what records, or out of what court doe they shew? or what demonstration doe they make? And doe you thinke it sufficient, because these men do onely affirme it, without any further probation, with your dorgen ten, therefore we are bound to beleeue it? Take me not so (M. Cope) that I doe here diminish any thing or derogate from the credite of those writers you alleage, whose labors haue deserued well, and serue to great vtilitie: but conuming now to triall of a matter lying in controuersie betweene vs, we are now forced to seeke out the fountaine and bottome of the truth, where it is not enough to say, so it is, but the cause is to be shewed, why it is so affirmed. And what though Robert Fabian, Polydore Virgil, and Edward Hall, should all together (as they doe not) agree in the treason of sir John Oldcastle and of the rest: yet neither is this any sufficient surety to proue them traitors. Considering that writers of stories for most part following either blind report: or else one taking of another, sle commonly all to sound together after one time, tanquam Dodonæi lebetes, so that as one saith, all say, and if one erre, all doe erre. Wherefore you see M. Cope, how it is not sufficient nor sure to sticke onely to the names and authorities of Chronographers, vnlesse the ground be found substantiall whereupon they stand themselues. Which yet in none of these whom you haue produced, doth appeare.

All things not true, that be found in stories.

Witnesses against the lord Cobham agree not together.

Chroniclers how far, and to what effect they serue.

Secondly, in alleaging and writing of chronicles is to be considered, to what place and effect they serue. If we would shew out of them the order and course of times, what yeeres were of dearth and of plenty, where kings kept their christmas, what conduites were made, what Maiors and Shrifes were in London, what battailes were fought, what triumphes and great seasts were holden, when kings began their raigne, and when they ended, &c. In such vulgar and popular affaires, the narration of the chronicler seemeth to good purpose, and may haue his credit, wherein the matter forceth not much, whether it be true or false, or whether any liketh to beleeue them. But whereas a thing is denied, and in cases of iudgement, and in controuerties doubtfull, which are to be decided and boulted out by euidence of iust demonstration: I take them neither for Iudges of the lawe, nor for arbiters of the cause, nor as witnesses of themselues sufficient necessarily to be sticked vnto. Albeit I deny not but histories are taken many times, and so termed for witnesses of times, and glasses of antiquitie, &c. yet not such witnesses, as whose testimonie beareth alwaies a necessary truth and bindeth belefe.

Disorder not rashly to be receiued.

The two witnesses which came against Susanna, being seruants both of ancient yeeres, bare a great countenance of a most eudent testimonie, whereby they almost both deceiued the people, and oppressed the innocent: had not young Daniel by the holy spirit of God, taken them aside, and seuerallie examining them one from the other, found them to be false liers both; leauing to vs thereby a lesson of wholsome circumspection, not rathly to beleeue euery one that commeth: and also teaching vs how to trie them out. Wherefore (M. Cope) following here the like example of Daniel in trying these your recordes whom ye infer against these men, we will in like manner examine them, seuerallie one from another, and so bolt their testimony agreeth: first beginning with your Robert Fabian. Which Robert Fabian being neither in the same age, nor at the barre being, can of himselfe giue no credite herein, without due proofe, and euidence conuenient.

The testimonie of Fabian against the lord Cobham examined.

How then doth Robert Fabian proue this matter of treason true? what probation doth he bring? what authoritie doth he alleage? And doth Robert Fabian thinke, if he were not disposed to conceiue of the lord Cobham, and those men a better opinion but to be traitors, that men are bound to beleeue him onely at his word, without any ground or cause declared, why they should so doe, but onely because he so saith and pleased him so to write? And if ye thinke (M. Cope) the word onely of this witnesse sufficient to make authoritie speaking against the lord Cobham, and proning nothing which followed so many yeeres after him: Why may not I as well and much rather take the word and testimonie of Richard Beluard a Northfolke man and of the towne of Crisan, who liuing both in his time, and possible knowing the partie, and punished also for the like trueth, is not reported, but recorded also in the registers of the church of Norwich, to giue this testimonie among other his articles, for the foresaid lord Cobham, that is, that sir John Oldcastle was a true catholike man and falsely condemned, and put to death without a reasonable cause, &c. Ex Regist. Episc. Norwic.

The testimonie of Richard Beluard for the lord Cobham.

Ex Regist. Episc. Norwic.

Against this man if you take exception, and say, that one heretike will hold with another: why may not I with the like exception replie to you again, and say as well, one papist hold with another, and both coniure together, to make and say the worst against a true Protestant.

Further, yet to examine this foresaid Fabian, witnesse against sir John Oldcastle, as Daniel examined the witnesse against Susanna: I will not here aske vnder what tree these adherents of sir John Oldcastle conspired against the king, and subuersion of the land, but in what time, in what yeere and moneth this conspiracy was wrought? Fabian witnesseth that it was in the moneth of Januarie. Contrariwise Edw. Hall and other our aduersenters following him, doe affirme that they were condemned in the Guildhall the 17. of December, and that their execution vpon the same was in Januarie following, so that by their sentence the fact was done either in the moneth of December, or else before, and so Fabianus mentitus est in caput suum, vt cum Daniele dicam: or if it were in the moneth of Januarie, as Fabian saith, then to Hall and his followers beclued, testifying the fact to be done in the moneth of December.

Fabian conflicted of a manifest vntruth in his story of the lord Cobham. Fabian. cent. 7. in vita Henr. 5. pag. 350.

And yet to obiect moreouer against the said Fabian, for so much as he is such a rash witnes against these burned persons, whom he calleth traitors: it would be demanded further of him, or in his absence of maister Cope, in what yeare this treason was conspired? If it were in the same yeare (as he confesseth himselfe) in which yeer John Cleidon the Skinner, and Richard Tarmine Baker were burned, then was it neither in y moneth of Januarie, nor in the first yeare of king Henry the fifth. For in the Register of Canterbury it appeareth plaine, that Iohn Cleydon was condemned neither in the time of Thomas Arundel archbishop, nor yet in the first nor second yeere of king Henry the 5. but was condemned in the second yeer of the translation of Henry Chichely, archbishop of Canturbury, the 17. day of August, which was the yeer of our Lord, 1415. So that if this conspiracy was in the same yeer (after the witnesse of Fabian) in which yeer John Cleidon was burned: then doth the testimony of Fabian neither accord with other witnelles, nor with himselfe, nor yet with truth. And thus much concerning the witnesse of M. Fabian.

Ex Regist. Archiepisc. Cant.

The testimonie of Polydore examined.

Let vs next proceed to Polydore Virgil, whose partiall and vntrue handling of our bishops in other places of his books, both offer vnto vs sufficient receptio not to admit his credit in this. And yet because we will rather examine him, then exclude him, let vs heare a little what he saith, and how he faileth, and in how many points, numbring the same vpon my fiue fingers.

5. Untruths of Polydore noted in one story.

Firt erring with the life of king Henry 4. hee saith that hee reigned 14 yeres and 6. moneths and 2. daies, Angl. hist. lib. 22. which is an vntruth, worthy to be punished with a whole yeres banishment: (to speake after the maner Apuleius) when as truth is, he reigned by the testimony of the story of saint Albans, of Fabian, of Hall, of our old English chronicle, and of Scalamundi, but 13. and 6. moneths, lacking, as some say, 5. dales, Hall saith he reigned but 12. yeers.

1. Untruth.

Cecil. The

2 Article.

The second untruth of Polydore is this, whereas he speaking of this section of sir John Oldcastle and his adherents, attempteth the same to be done after the burning of John Hus, an. 8 of Pierome of Prage, which was fauth he. An. 1415. in which yeare fauth he) Thomas Arundell died. His words be these: In eodem concilio damnata et Joh. Wicklifi hæresis, ac Joan. Hus, & Hieronymus Pragensis in ea vibe combusti sunt. Quod si religionis conscij, qui etiam tunc in Anglia erant patres, tanquam furijs agitati primum coniurationes in omnes sacerdotes, deinde in regem, &c. In which words her not only erreth, falsly affigning the cause and occasion of this sedition to the death of Joh. Hus, and of Pierome, but also misseth as much in the order & computation of the yers. For neither was sir Roger Acton with his forsaid fellowes alive at the time of the councell; neither doth bee agree therein with any of our English writers, creept onely with Hall, who also erreth therin as wide as he.

3. Hall untruth.

For the third and fourth untruth I note this, where he adeth and saith, that after this rebellion raised against the king, the sede sir John Oldcastle being there present himselfe, was taken and prisoned in the Tower, and afterward escaped out of the said Tower by night: wherin is contained a double untruth. For neither was sir John Oldcastle there present himselfe, if we beleeue Fabian and Cope, Dial. 6. pag. 833. lin. 11. neither yet did he eure escape out of the Tower after that comprisonment, if ever any such conspiracie was.

Cope pag. 832. lin. 11.

4. Untruth.

This vntruth not the last untruth in Polydore is this, that hee saith, Tho. Arundell to have died in the same yeare, noting the yeare to be Anno 1415. whereas by the true registers he died Anno 1413.

Another vntruth in Polydor noted.

To this untruth an other also may be ioyned, where he erring in the computation of the yeare of the said Tho. Arundell archbishop of Canturburie, reporteth him to sit 22. yeares. Which was there archbishop but onely 18. yeares, as is to bee seene in the records of Cant. The words of Polydor be these: Thomas Arundellius Cantuariensis amissis omnium iam tunc fere rerum & religionum vita excessit, lib. 22. Ang. hist. Albeit in this I doe not greatly contend with Polydore, and peraduenture the aduersarie will find some ease thrit for this matter.

The confidence of Hall, a gainst the L. Cobham reprooued.

But let us now passe from Polydore, not (as they say) out of the hall into the kitchin, but out of the kitchin into the hall, examining and perpending what saith Edward Hall an other writer in this matter: vpon whom maister Cope bindeth so fast, that he supposeth his sinot is never able to be loosed. And moreouer so reioyeth me deliuue under his feet in the dirt (as a man would thinke him some birdbandrers sonne) so that the spors receiue, he saith, will neuer be gotten out while the world standeth, and a day longer. Notwithstanding I trust M. Cope that your birde pen with verie cockish brags hath not so bedarkned and beshitten me, as not yet conuicted me to be such a deputer of falsehod, but I hope to spunge it out. At least way, with a little sprouges of the popes holy water, I truft to come to a dealbabor, well enough.

But certes M. Cope, your maistership must first understand, that if ye thinke so to depresse, and dispraue me of vntruth in my history, you must go more groundly to worke, and bring against me other authors then Edward Hall. You must consider (M. Cope if you will be a controller in histo-matters, it is not enough for you to bring a railing spirit, or a mind disposed to carpe and cauill where any matter may be picked: diligence is required, and great searching out of bookes and authors not onely of our time, but of all ages. And especially where matters of religion are touched pertaining to the church; it is not sufficient to sie what Fabian, or what Hall saith, but the records must be sought, the registers must be turned over, letters also and ancient instruments ought to bee perused, and authors with the same compared: finally, the writers among themselues one to be conferred with another. And so with indgement to be weighed, with diligence to be laboured, and with simplicitie pure from all addition and partialitie to be uttered.

This did Aventinus, thus did Sleidanus write. These helps also the eldest and best historiaans feared to haue, both Titus Liuius, Salustius, Quintus Curtius, and such like, as by their letters and records inferred may well appeare. The same helps likewise both in your Fabian and in your Edward Hall were to be required, but especially in you M. Cope your selfe, which take vpon you so cochishly (rather then wisely) to bee a controller and master moderator of other mens matters. In which matters (to say the truth) you have no great skill, and selfe experience, neither have you either such plenty of authors in the for that purpose, nor yet euer trauelled to search out the originals and grounds of that whereof ye write. But onely contented with such as commeth next to hand, or peraduenture receiuing such almose as some of your poore friends bestow vpon you, thinke it sufficient if you can alledge Fabian and Hall for your purpose.

Cope a carper of others where of he hath no skill.

Now what purpose and affection herein doth leade you, or rather doth driue you to the carping and barking against the history of these good men, that he peace giue and bad their punishment, all men may see it to bee no simple discretie of a mind indifferent, but the zeale onely of your sect of poperie, or rather of furie, which setteth your railing spirit on fire. But now out of the fiery kitchin, to come to the hall againe, let us see what matter hath in the testimonie of Edward Hall, to proue these men to be traitors. And here for so much (master Cope) as you seeme neither sufficiently acquainted with this your own master and author master Hall, nor yet well experienced in the searching out of histories, I will take a little paines for you, in this behalfe, to certifie you concerning the storie of this author, whereof perase you your selfe are ignorant.

E. Hall with the storie of Edward Hall.

The truth whereof is this, that as the said Edward Hall, your great master and testis, was about the compiling of his storie, certaine there were which resorted to him, of whom some were drawers of his pedigree and dinear, some were grauers, the names of whom were John Bets, and Tyrrall, which be now both dead. And other there were of the same sodalitie, who be yet aliue, and were then in the house of Richard Grafton, both the Printer of the said booke, and also (as is thought) a great helper of the penning of the same. It so befell that as Hall was entring into the storie of sir John Oldcastle, of sir Roger Acton, and their fellowes, the booke of John Vale touching the storie of the lord Cobham, was the same time newly come ouer. Which booke was priuilie conueyed by one of his seruants into the studie of Hall, so that in turning ouer his bookes, it must needs come to his hands. At the sight whereof, when he saw the ground and reasons in that booke contained, he turned to the authors in the forsaid booke alleaged, whereupon within two nights after, moued by what cause I know not: but so it was, that he taking his pen, raced and cancelled all that he had written before, against sir John Oldcastle and his fellowes, and was now ready to goe to the print, containing nere to the quantitie of three pages. And lest (M. Cope) you, or any other should thinke me to speake beside my booke, be it therefore knowne both to you and to all other, by these presents, that the very selfe same first copie of Hall raced and crossed with his own pen, remaineth in my hands to be viewed and seene, as need shall require. The matter which he cancelled out came to this effect. Wherein he following the narration of Polydore, began with like words, to declare how the Sacramentaries here in England, after the death of John Hulle, and Hieronyme of Prage, being pricked, as he saith, with a demoniacall fiery, first conspired against the priests, and after against the King, hauing to their Captaines sir John Oldcastle the lord Cobham, and sir Roger Acton knight, with many mo lwods to the like purpose and effect, as Polydore and other such like Chroniclers doe write against him. All which matter notwithstanding, the said Hall with his pen at the sight of John Vales booke, did vtterly extinct and abolish. Adding in the place thereof the words of maister Vales booke, touching the accusation and condemnation of the said lord Cobham, before Thomas Arundell archbishop of Canturburie, taken out of the letter of the said archbishop, as is in his owne storie to be seene in vita Hen. 5. pag. 2. lin. 30.

Hall raced out his owne letter written against the L. Cobham.

Hall, in vita Hen. 5. pag. 2. b. lin. 30.

And thus Edward Hall your author, creeping and calling backe all that he had deuised before against the lord Cobham (whereof I haue his owne hand to shew), and witnesse sufficiall vpon the same) in his printed booke recordeth of him no more, but only the weth the proceese betweene the archbishop of Canturburie and him for matters of religion. And so ending with sir John Oldcastle, proceedeth further to the assemblie of sir Roger Acton (whom he falsely calleth Robert Acton) John Browne, and Beuerley, the narration whereof he handleth in such sort, that hee neither agreeth with the record of other writers, nor yet with truth it selfe. For where he recordeth the lord Cobham out of that assemblie, he recordeth therein from Polydore and other: And where he affirmeth the fact of that conspiracie, to be wrought before, or at the twelfth day of December: that is manifestly false, if the records before alleaged be true. And where he reporteth this assemblie to be after the burning of John Hulle, and of Hierome of Prage, therein he accordeth with Polydore, but not with the truth. Moreouer, so doubtfull he is and ambiguous in declaration of this storie, that no great certaintie can be gathered of him.

Hall in the story of the lord Cobham, and sir Roger Acton, agreeth not with other stories. Contrarie to Hall noted.

First, as touching the confession of them, he confesseth himselfe, that he saw it not, and therefore leaueth it at large. And as concerning the causes of their death, he leaueth the matter in doubt, not daring (as doth M. Cope) to define or pronounce any thing thereof, but onely recordeth the surmises and minds of diuers men diuersly. Some thinking it was for conuicting the lord Cobham out of the tower, some that it was for treason and heresie: and here commeth in the mention onely of a record, but what record it is neither doth he utter it, nor doth he examine it: other some againe affirming (as he saith) that it was for fained causes furnished by the spiritualtie, more of displeasure then truth. And thus your author Hall, hauing recited the varietie of mens opinions, determineth himselfe no certaine thing thereof, but as one indifferent, neither bound to the conceites of all men, nor to the writings of all men, referreth the whole iudgement of the matter free vnto the Reader. And so concluding his narration, forsomuch as he was neither a witnesse of the fact, nor present at the deede, he ouerpasseth the storie thereof.

Hall doubtfull in the deaths of sir R. Acton, &c.

And

And what witnes then will you, or can you (master Cope) take of Edward Hall, which neuerth himselfe to be a witnesse? Will you compell him to say that he saw not? and to witnesse that he cannot? Wherefore like as Susanna, in the storie of Daniel was quit by right iudgement in the case of aduiterie, because her accusers and testes being examined asunder, were found to varie and halt in their tale, and not to agree in the two trees: So why may not in like case of treason, sir Roger Acton, sir John Oldcastle, Browne with the rest, claime the same priuiledge? seeing among the testes and witnes produced against them, such discord is found, and such halting among them, that neither do they agree in place, person, yeere, day, nor month.

4. Repugnance in the moth.

5. Repugnance in the day.

1 First where Fabian and his fellowes say: that they were assembled together in a great companie, in the field nere to S. Giles, the forged indictement aboue alleaged, saith, they were but riding toward the field.

2 Secondly, where the forsaid indictement and Polydore, giue the lord Cobham to be present personally in that assemblie, Hall, and Alanus Copus Anglus, do exclude his personall presence from thence: and so doth Fabian also seeme to agree, speaking only of the adherents of sir John Oldcastle.

3 Thirdly, where Hall and Polydorus report this assemblie to be after the burning of John Hus, and of Hierome at the councell of Constance, which was An. 1415. that cannot be, but if there were any such conspiracie in the first yeere of Henrie the fifth, it must needs be an. 1413. And here by the way, why doe certaine of your Epitome writers, speaking of the lord Cobham committed first to the tower for heresie, referr the said imprisonment to the yeere 1412. whereas, by their owne count, reckoning the yeere from the Annunciation, it must needs be an. 1413. being done in harueff time?

4 Fourthly, where Hall with his followers affirme that sir Roger Acton, Brownand Beuerley were condemned the twelfth day of December, the record is euident against it, which holdeth the fact to be in working the tenth day of Januarie.

5 Fifthly, whereas the forsaid record of the inditement giueth the Wednesday next after the Epiphanie, which was the tenth day of Januarie that present yeere, both the fact to be committed the same day, the Commission also to be granted and deliuered to the Commissioners the same day: the said Commissioners to sit in Commission the same day: the sheriffs of Middlesex to returne a iury out of the body of Middlesex the same day: and the Iurors to find the inditement the same day, and yet no iurer in the inditement named the same day:

Item, the lord Cobham the same day to be found conspiring to make himselfe Regent, when as the king, that day and yeere, was not yet passed into France: how all these can concurre and hang together, and all in one day; I suppose it will cost you two dates, before you, with all your learned counsell will studie it out. And when you in your vnlawfull assemblies haue conspired and conferred together all ye can, yet will yee make it (as I thinke) three dates, before you honestly dispatch your hands of the matter.

And where ye thinke, that you haue impeached me in such a foule note of lying, neuer to be clawed off vp le the would standeth, yet shall the posterite to come iudge betweene you and me, whether shall appeare more honest and true, my defence for that worthie lord, then your vncourteous and viperous wrangling against him, mused with no other cause, but onlie with the pœuish spirit of poperie, which can abide nothing, but that fauoureth of your owne set. For else how manie loud lying legends, yea what legion of lies are daily bred and received in the popish church? What doltish dreames? what fained miracles? what blasphemous tales and friuole fables, and idle inuentions, fighting against the sincere religion, doctrine and crosse of Christ? And could you hold your pen from all these, and find nothing else to set your idleuesse on worke, but onlie to write against the lord Cobham, sir Roger Acton, Browne, Duley, Cobbrige, with a few other, whom with much ado, at length you haue sought out, not so much for anie true zeale to rebuke iniquitie, as craftilie seeking matter by these to deface and blemish the booke of Acts and Monuments? Which seemeth belike to make you scratch there, where it itcheth not. And if I should after the like dealing take in hand your popish postiles, and with like diligence excuse euerie popish Martyr and Saint there canonized: thinke you maister Cope, I could not make you out halfe a dosen as ranke traitours and rebels to their kings and princes, as euer were ante of theefe of your pieking out: What pope almost hath there been these last 500. peeres, which hath not been a traitour to his emperour and prince, and to his countrie: either openlie rebelling against them, or priuilie conspiring their destruction, or possible setting their feet vpon their necks, or spurning their crownes off from their heads, or making the some to fight against the father: how manie haue they deposed, and set vp other in their seats: how manie emperours and kings haue they wrongfullie cursed: what Consuls of Rome haue they resisted, deposed, and put to death: What warres haue they raised vp against their owne countrie of Rome: What the continuall holding of the citie of Rome, from his lawfull emperour, what is it but a continuall point of treason?

Papists cannot see great beames in their owne eyes, which yet small motes in other.

Popes traytors to their emperours and princes.

What will you answere me (master Cope) to the pope, which conspired to let fall downe a stone vpon the emperours head, tweling at his praiers? pag. 160.

The popes saints and confessors many were traytors.

And though this treacherie being as big as a millstone, seemed but a small mote in your eie, that it could not be espied: yet what will you say by the monke of Swinsted, that poisoned king John, who was both absolued by his abbat before his treason committed, and after his treason had a perpetuall psalme sung for him, to helpe him out of purgatorie?

And what thinke ye in your conscience is to be said of Thomas Becket, who did enough, and more then became him, to set the French king, and the king of England together by the eares? Of Anselme likewise, and of Stephen Langton, who departed both out of the realme to complaine of their princes and soueraignes? the like may be said also of John Peckham. John Stratford archbishop of the same see, notoriously resisted the kings commandement, being sent for by king Edward the third, to come to the parliament at Poske, through the default of whose comming, the present opportunitie of getting of Scotland was the same time lost.

Thomas Becket a traytor.

Richard Scrope archbishop of Poske, was openlie in armes to rebell and fight against king Henrie the fourth, for the which he was condemned and put to death. And yet notwithstanding commission was sent down from the pope that he after, to excommunicat them which put him to death, his treason notwithstanding. Reade the storie sincerelie of pope Benedict the twelfth, and of pope Clement the sixth. And see how the traiterous rebellion of these two popes against Ludouicus their rightfull emperour can be defended: which emperour at last was also empoisoned, and that not without the praise of pope Clement, as both Hieronymus Marius credibile witnesse.

Rich. Scrope archbishop of Poske traytor, and yet counted a holy man.

Popes commonly traytors.

In the raigne of king Edward the second, mention was made before of Thomas earle of Lancaster. Who with a great number of other nobles and barons of the realme, rose in armour against their prince, and therefore at length were put to death as traitors. And yet notwithstanding this treason committed (master Cope) if you be so ignorant in our stories, that you know it not, set your setters on to search, and you shall find it true, that certaine noble men went by to Rome, for the canonizing of the said Thomas of Lancaster to be made a Saint, and obtained the same. In so much that in a certaine old Calendar, the name of the said S. Thomas of Lancaster is yet extant to be seene.

Tho. Lancaster a traitor, and yet made a saint by the pope.

In the former booke of the Acts and Monuments aboue, about the pag. 353. & 354. mention was made of Edmund of Abbendon archb. of Canturb whom although I do not dispraue, but rather commend in my historie, for his bold and sage counsell giuen vnto king Henrie the third: and also for offering the censure of excommunication against the king in so necessary a cause: yet notwithstanding the same Edmund afterward about his latter end, went by with a rebelling mind to complaine of his king vnto the pope, and in his iourney died, before his returne: who afterward for the same, was canonized by the pope, & so sineth among the Saints in the popes Calendar.

Edmund archbishop of Canturburie rebelled against his prince, and yet made a saint by the pope.

Lastly to passe ouer those other to these dates and times, and consider the doings of Thomas Arundell archbishop of Canturburie, who being first deposed and exiled for his contemptuous deserts against the king, and afterward comming in with Henrie Bolinbroke duke of Hereford, in open armes and with maine force rose against his naturall and lawfull king: thinke you (master Cope) this is not as great a point of treason, as that which was done in Thickets fields: and though he be not placed among the postuous Saints, yet I thinke nothing contrarie, but in your heart you will not greatly sticke to say, Sancte Thomas ora pro nobis.

Thomas Arundell a traytor against his king, and yet a great prelate counted in the popes clergy.

All these things well considered, tell me (M. Cope) I pray you, is treason such a strange and unknowne thing in your popes catholike church, that your burning zeale of obedience to kings and princes, cannot reade the storie of the lord Cobham and sir Roger Acton, but your pen must needs be inflamed to write against them, and yet so many traitors in your owne Calendars neither seene, nor once spoken of? And if the traiterous conspiracie and rebellion of so manie your Calendar saints committed against emperours, kings and princes, cannot sir your zeale, nor moue your pen: How if the treason of pope Gregorie the ninth raising war against his owne citie of Rome, and caussing thirty thousand citizens in one battel to be slaine, pag. 256. deserued not to be cpied, and accused as much as this treason of the lord Cobham: yet what will you answer you and vnhonest to me (master Cope) as touching the horrible treason of pope Gregorie the seuenth, committed not against emperour nor king, nor any mortall man, but against the Lord himselfe, euen against your God of your owne making, being therein as you say no substance of bread, but the verie personall bodie, flesh, blood, and bone of Christ himselfe; which bodie notwithstanding the forsaid pope Gregorie the seuenth tooke and cast with his wicked hands into the burning fire, because he would not answere him to a certaine bould demand: Ben. Card. pag. 160. Soothly, if sir John Oldcastle had taken the bodie of king Henrie 5. and throwne him into the fire, the fact being so notoriously certaine as this is, I would neuer haue bestowed any word

Pope Gregorie the seuenth a traytor against the Lords owne bodie.

Vide supra, pag. 160.

See. iij. in in his defence. And could this, and so many other hainous treasons passe though your fingers, M. Cope, and no other to sticke in your pen but the lord Cobham?

Finally and simple to conclude with you (M. Cope) and not to flatter you, what is the whole working, the proceedings, actions and pranckes of your religion, or hath been almost these five hundred yeares, but a certaine perpetuall kind of treason, to thrust downe your princes and magistrates, to derogate from their right and iurisdiction, and to advance your owne maiesties and dominations, as hath been sufficiently aboue proued and lieth before your faces in a parliament holden in France, by the lord Peter de Cugnerijs: vide pag. 324. Wherefore if the assemblie of these forenamed persons, either within or without S. Giles field be such a great mote of treason in your eyes, first take vpon the great blockes and mittones of your owne traytors at home, and when you have well discussed the same, then after powre out your wallet of your trifeling dialogues or tetalogues if ye list against vs, and spare vs not.

Vid. Acta. pag. 324.

Not that I so thinke this to be a sufficient excuse to purge the treason of these men, if your popish calendars and legends be found full of traytors, Multitudo enim peccatorum non parit errori patrocinium: But this I think, that the same cause which made them to suffer as traytors, hath made you also to raile against them for traytors, that is, mere hatred only against their religion, rather then any true affection you have to your princes and governors. Wo if they had been as feruent in your poperie, and had suffered so much for the holy father of Rome, or for the liberties of the holy mother church of Rome, I doubt not, but they as holy children of Rome had been ring into your Romish calendar with a festum duplex, or at least with a festum simplex of nine lessons, also with a vigil peraduenture before them.

Religion commonly maketh traytors among the papists.

Now because they were of the contrarie profession, and enemies to your Magna Diana Ephesiorum, you play with them as the Ephesian caruers did with Saint Paul and his mate. He thrust them out as seditious rebels, not only out of life and bodie, but also cannot abide them to have any roze harbour in their owne friends houses, among our Acts and Monuments to be remembred. In the which Acts and Monuments, and if gentle master Irenæus, with his fellow Critobulus in your clerisie Dialogues, will not suffer them to be numbred for martyrs: per spraze a good word for them (M. Cope) they may stand for testes or witnesse bearers of the truth. And thus much for defence of them.

Answere to the first part of Copes accusation, concerning his untrue charge of falsifying our Acts and Monuments.

Now to the other part of his accusation: wherein this Alanus Copus Anglus in his [illegible], or firebol dialogues contendeth and chafeth against my former edition, to proue me in my historie to be a lier, forger, impudent, a misreporter of truth, a deprauer of stories, a deuicer of the worlde, and what else not: those virulent words and contumelious termes, how well they become his popish person, I know not. Certes for my part I neuer deserued this at his hands iustlingly, that I do know. M. Cope is a man whom yet I never saw, and lesse offended, nor euer heard of him before. And if he had not in the front of his booke intituled himselfe to be an Englishman, by his writing I would have iudged him rather some wilde Irishman, lately crept out of S. Patrikes purgatorie, so wildely he writeth, so fumishly he fareth.

For the whole processe of Queene Maries time, I have not purposed to write, but only of such as suffered in the first yeare of her reigne, which was the yeare of our Lord 1553. and the first of my booke.

But I cease here, and temper my selfe, considering not what M. Cope deserueth to be said vnto, nor how farre the pen there could runne if it had his scope, but considering what the traduction rather of such a serious cause requireth. And therefore forsomuch as I am vrged (M. Cope) in this matter, where you charge my historie of Acts and Monuments so cruelly, to be full of untruthes, falsehoes, impudent forgeries, depauate, malicious, fraudulent corruptions, and fained fables; briefly and in one word to answere you, not as the Lacones answered to the letters of their aduersarie, with ō, but with ō ſ: Would God (M. Cope) that in all the whole booke of Acts and Monuments, from the beginning to the latterend of the same, were neuer a true storie, but that all were false, all were lies, and all were fables. Would God the cruelties of your catholikes had suffered all them to line, of whose death ye say now that I do lie. Although I denie not but in that booke of Acts and Monuments contained such diuersitie of matter, some thing might ouerslippe: yet have I beſtowed my paine diligence. My intent was to profit all men, to hurt none.

If you (master Cope) or any other can better my rude doings, and find things out more finely or truly, with all my heart, I shall reioyce with you and the Comon in wealth, taking profit by you. In perfection of writing, of wit, cunning, dexteritie, finenesse or other indowments required in a perfect writer, I contend neither with you, nor any other. I grant that in a labassed stone, such as you seeme to require, containing such infinite varietie of matter, as this doth, much more time would be required: but suchtime as I had, that I did bestow, that for labeciously as other could, yet as diligently as I might.

But here par the I heare what you will say: I should have taken more leasure and done it better. I grant and confesse my fault, such is my vice, I cannot sit all the day (master Cope) fining and minsing my letters, and combing my head, and smoothing my selfe all the day at the glasse of Cicero: Yet notwithstanding doing what I can, and doing my good will, me thinkes I should not be reprehended, at least not so much be railed on at master Copes hand. Who if he be so pregnant in finding fault with other mens labours (which is an easie thing to do) it were to be wished, that he had enterprised himselfe vpon the matter, and so should have proued what faults might have been found in him. Not that I herein do vtterly excuse my selfe, yea rather am readie to accuse my selfe, but yet notwithstanding thinke my selfe vngently dealt withall at master Copes hand: Who being mine owne countriman, an Englishman as he saith, also of the same Vniuersitie, yea Colledge and schole that I was of: knowing that the first edition of these Acts and Monuments was begun in the far parts of Germanie, where few friends, no conference, small information could be had: And the same edition afterward translated out of Latine into English by others, whiles I in the meane time was occupied about other registers. And now the said Cope hearing moreouer and knowing that I was about a new edition of the same Acts and Monuments, at this present time to be set forth, for the amending of diuers things therein to be reformed: if he had knowen any fault needfull to be corrected, he might gently by letters haue admonished me thereof: gentlenesse would so haue required it, time would well haue suffered it. Neither was he so far off, but might haue haue written a letter to me, then a booke against me. Neither was I so ingratefull and inhumane, but would haue thanked him for his monition: neither yet so obstinate, but being admonished, would haue corrected willingly where any fault had been committed.

But here your nature (master Cope) both right well appeare. First in the said booke of Acts and Monuments, where manie other good things be contained, not vntruthfull nor vnprofitable peraduenture for the instruction of your conscience, and wherein my labours perhaps might haue deserued your thankes, all that you dissemble and passe ouer, only excepting those matters which make for cauillation. Thus the blacke spider out of pleasant flowers sucketh this poyson. And what booke is so pleasant or fruitfull, though it were the popes olme Postues, yea his olme Decretals, yea his olme berie Psalterbooke, to the reading whereof if I brought the like mind so disposed to cauill, as you bring to the reading of my historie, but I could find out twice as many mendacia, maculas, impudentias, dolos malos, fabulas, fucos, as you haue done in these Acts and Monuments: And yet you haue done prettie well.

Vngentlenesse noted in Cope.

The nature of the spider.

Besides all this, yet better to marke the goodnesse of your gentle nature: We it so I had been in some piece of my story deceiued, as I do not iustifie my selfe in all points therein: yet you vnderstanding that I was about the correction of my booke againe, might either haue taken the best, and left the worst: or else gently haue taken the paines to haue aduertised me of such notes as you had, without further exclamation, or at least might haue deferred your dialogues for a time, till the coming out of my booke, to see first what would in the latter edition be altered. But belike your gall was full, your hasse could not tarie, your benim must needs burst out:

Et finon aliquā nocuisses mortuus esses.

Copus Sycophanta.

Seeing therefore the order of your doings to be such, and disposition of your nature so far from all humanitie, dealing with me so extreamely, if I thus prouoked with your extremitie againe, should now after this your curstly nature shape you a name accordingly, and in stead of Cope godfather pou to be a perpetuall sycophant, and you much blame me: and both not your sycophantical booke well deserue it: or thinke you I could not repay you againe with like extremitie as you bring, and dresse your notwise or rather louse Dialogues, in their right colours, if I were so disposed: But my purpose is with patience to spare you, and rather to pray for you: God make you a good man. Peraduenture he may hereafter call you. And rather had I to win you, then to sling you. Leaving therefore the consideration of your ingratefull doings, I will now consider only the points wherein you charge me in your booke, answering briefly vnto the same. Briefly, I say, because the greatnesse of this volume, and abundance of other more fruitfull matter, giueth me little leasure at this present to stand about brawling words.

Copus pag. 161. in penultima.

Copus almost called Copius.

The Calendar of the Acts and Monuments defended.

First he taketh highly to be grieued with me, for my calendar prefixed before the booke of Monuments. Wherein he hath no cause either to be offended with me, or to chafe with himselfe. As touching which calendar I haue sufficiently and expressely declared before so much, as might quickly satisfie this scruple of master Cope, if he either would haue taken the paines, or else had had the leasure to reade the words contained in the Latine preface before the booke prefixed, which are thus:

Ex prooemio ad lectorem.

Quanquam a me quidem non aliter Calendarium hoc institutum est, nisi vt pro Indice duntaxat suum cuiusque Martyris nomen & annum designante, ad priuatum lectoris seruiret vsum. &c. In which words preuenting before the cauilling obiection of the aduersarie, I forewarned the Reader aforehand, touching the calendar, wherefore it was ordained and prefixed; for no other purpose, but to serue the vse only of the reader, reader, in stead of a table, shewing the yeere and moneth of euery martyr, what time he suffered, &c. What hurt I pray you is in this calendar prefixed before the book of Monuments, more then in the table of master Copes booke, set after his Dialogues? But master Cope had no leisure to peruse this place: it made not for his humour.

Obiection for martyrs in the calendar.

Answere.

But this grieueth him in the Calendar, and that very sore: For that I place in this Calendar, sir John Oldcastle, sir Roger Acton, Browne, Beurlie, and other for martyrs, and displace for them, other holy ancient martyrs and saints, as Anatholius, Sother, Dorothe, Clarus, Lucianus, Seuerinus, &c. Answere: If master Cope cannot abide the lord Cobham, sir Roger Acton, Browne and Beurlee, which were hanged (as he saith for treason) to haue the name of martyrs, then let them beare the name of witnesse bearers, or testes of the truth, because they were also burned for the testimonie of their faith. Seeing there is no difference in the said names, all is one to me by which they are called.

Vnderth noted in Ala. Copus.

And where he chargeth me for thrusting and shouldring out the old and ancient holy saints aforenamed out of this calendar, and placing other new come saints in their roomes: this is not the first vntruth that master Cope hath made in his dialogues, nor yet the least. Vnto whom I might therfore fitly answere against him with his owne familiar phrase, or rather the phrase of Cicero, which hee doth so much affectate: Quod nimirum hic ipse Alanus Copus Anglus, vnde me mendacij coarguit, inde sibi ipsi fempiternam ac ineluibilem turpissimi mendacij, ac singularis impudentiæ notam inurat. For why haue not I as iust cause to say this to him, as he to mee? For sothuch as in the first beginning and preface of the said booke of Acts and Monuments, I so diligently and expressely doe reserue all men before, first that I make here no calendar purposely of any saints, but a table of good and godly men that suffered for the truth, to shew the day and moneth of their suffering. My words be extant and euident, which are these: Neque verò ideo inter diuos à me referuntur isti, quòd inferuntur in calendarium, &c. And declaring afterward how the said calendar doth stand but in stead of a table, my words doe follow thus: Haud aliter calendarium hoc institutum est, nisi vt pro Indice duntaxat suum cuiusque Martyris mensem & annum designante, Lectori ad manum seruiat, &c.

Copus pag. 130. lin. 18.

Inprafatione ad lect. lectorem, &c.

The nature of the Copier.

Againe, neither did I receine these men into that calendar, that holy Anatholius, Sother, Dorothea, with other ancient holy Saints should be removed out, as you doe falsly and vntruely affirme, but because the course of that story reaching but 500. yeeres, did not comprehend those former times of such ancient Martyrs, but only of such as suffered in these latter dates: therefore requisite it was that in the table such should be placed chiefly, of whom the whole booke did then principally and onely entreat, to demonstrate thereby the time and day of their martyrdome. Neither yet were the other excluded out of this new calendar, which were neuer inserted in the same before, but only because both together could not there haue standing, nereffie so required these in no case to be omitted, and yet no iniurie meant to the other to be excluded out of their olwne calendars, whereto properly they did pertaine. As for this calendar or this table, because they were not pertinent vnto it, they could not therein, neither was it necessarie they should be included. And yet neither did I (M. Cope) without due and solemne protestation omit the same in my foresaid catalogue, to preuent and stop all cauilling mouthes: As by speciall words in the said preface of my booke vnto the reader doth appeare, following in this wise: Interim nullius ego boni sanctique viri (modo qui verè sanctus sit) causam lædo, nec memoriam extinguo, nec gloriam minuo. Et si cui hoc displiceat calendarium, meminerit, non in templis à me collocari, sed domesticæ tantum lectioni præparari, &c. And where is now (master Cope) this your reiecting, expelling, remouing, expulsing, exempting, deturbating and thrusting out of Anatholius, Sanct Dorothe, and other holy saints out of Catalogues, fasts, and calendars? Or what man is that, or where dwelleth hee, Qui veros Christi martyres è cœlo ad tartara deturbat? That is, Which tumbleth downe true martyrs fro heauen into hel: Which if we mean by me: In one word I answere, ye falsly belie me M. Copus, I had almost called you master Capus, so like a capon yee speake. Neither haue you nor any other euer heard me so say. Neither haue I euer heard of any so mad to play so the giants with their mountaines to clime the heauens, to tumble downe Gods true and holy martyrs out of heauen, downe into hell, vnlesse it were your selfe (as yet yee are, yee may be better) and such other of your gilde and popish fraternitie, which make of Gods true saints, stinking dunghils, (for so ye terme them in your bookes) and not only thrust into heauen your Pseudosanctos, saints of your olwne making, whom God by his word doth not allow: but also depusse downe from heauen, and make dunghils of Gods welbeloued seruants, his faithful people, and blessed martyrs, which haue died for the word of God. And what marueil then, if in your blasphemous books, ye cast down from heauen to hell, the pore saints of Christ, when in effect you deiect also the blood and crosse of the son of God, Christ Iesus himselfe, setting vp in his office and place, in Per Thomæ sanguinem, quem pro te impendit, hic nos Christe scandere, quò Thoma ascendit. Say, master Cope, your conscience indifferently, set all popish partialitie apart, where as the scripture teacheth vs simply: Quòd citra sanguinem nulla fit remissio. i. Without blood there is no remission: whether yee thinke, by this blood of the new Testament is meant the blood of Christ alone, or the blood of other mos besides? If the blood of one must stand alone, why doe yee then with the giants build vp your mountaines, and make a ladder of Beckets popish blood, for men to scale the heauens? Or in so doing, how can you, but either with the Protestants wipe out of your calendar, Thomæ sanguinem, or else demolish from heauen Sanguinem Christi, with the Papists?

Becket's blood set vp, to the iniury of Christs blood.

Papists present to set vp Christs cresse in earth: but enemies to Christs crosse in heauen.

A double contempt in Copus.

And here by the way, I cannot but muse, why you are so deuout in setting vp the crosse of Christ in your Church, which are such enemies to the true crosse of Christ to stand in heauen. Loke vpon this (M. Cope) and tell me, vtra pars verius veros Christi martyres è cœlo in tartara detrudat? And therefore as you falsly bely me in this, so detruding and tumbling out of heauen Anatholius, Iulianus, Clarus, Lucianus, Agatha, Dorothea and other, against whom I neuer yet spake any reproching word, but rather in this my volume haue set forth their commendation: so is it vntrue likewise, where you affirme, that in this my calendar I make an [illegible], or canonisation of false martyrs. I told you before when yee were in England, I tell you again, being now in your transmigration, in words as plaine as I could: Hanc ego Apotheosin mihi nunquam sumpsi, quam sibi tam confidenter sumpsit Gregorius nonus. Where not these words of my protestation massell enough? were they not sufficient to satisfie a reasonable Momus? And to make the matter more plaine, did I not adde moreouer as followeth: Porrò neque eò spectat hoc calendarium, vt nouam aliquam festorum dierum legem prescribam ecclesiæ, &c. And not contented with this, fore seeing before such swangling spirits to come, as now I sis in you: I shewed also the cause why I needed not so to do. My words were these: Festorum dierum iam plus satis erat in mundo, &c. And yet further, because no cauiller should take hold here of any iniurie done to the holy saints, either old or new in the church, therefore in expresse words I removed away all suspition of any iniurie, preuenting the obiection of the aduersary in these words: Habeat & Ecclesia suos sanctos, tum recentes, tum veterances, modò probatos, modò interim ijdem ne adoretur, modò quàm sint vetusti, tam etiam verè sancti sint, &c.

Copus monnes Copus pag. 820.

These places of my booke, if yee did see, why do you dissemble them? If yee had not so much leisure to read them; how had you so much leisure to write against any mans book, not knowing what is in the book contained? and how stands it then with truth, that so like a Mome ye crie out so in your booke, against these new made martyrs, qui non possunt nisi per aliorum iniuriam crescere? &c. And againe, where you exclaime against me, and say that I shuft out the ancient martyrs out from their seat and possession, and placed in their roomes, &c.

Also where you continuing yet still in your common place of lying (out of which you cannot digreste) doe charge me further, that I doe appoint out holy dates and working dates by colours of red and blache, in my foresaid calendar to be obserued: these leaud notes of yours, if they had been picked out of my calendar by you, without mine owne speciall declaration before made to the contrary, they might seeme to haue some bluth of credit. Now what will the reader say, or what may he iudge, considering and conferring this your cauilling with the matter of my premonition made before, but that you are altogether set to play the perpetuall Syre. I had almost called you by your right name master Cope. But God make you (as I said) a good man. Reading further in your book I could not but smile and laugh at this your ridiculous and most loud lying Hyperbolismum: where as you comparing my making of saints, with the popes making, can find (as yee say) in the pope no such impudent arrogancie in presuming, as yee find in me, &c. If the pope had not abused his arrogant iurisdiction in canonising and deifying his saints, more then I haue done: the yeere should not bee cumbred with so many idle holy daies, nor the calendars with so many rastall saints, some of them as good, as euer were they that put Christ to death.

Copus pag. 819. lin. 7.

Copus pag. 819. lin. 25.

Copus pag. 821. lin. 7.

But what will you find (Master Cope) any man to believe this your hyperbolicall comparison to be true, which seeth and knoweth the infinit and vnmeasurable excesse of the popes arrogancie, not only in thrusting such a rabble of blind saints of his olwne creating: but also in prescribing the same to bee received vniuersally in the whole world, and not to bee received only, but also to bee inuocated for gifts and graces: also to be worshipped for aduocates and mediatours, wherin riseth a double abomination of the pope, the one for his idolatrous making and worshipping of saints: the other for his blasphemous iniurie and derogation to Christ, in repulling him out of his office of mediation, and placing other mediatours of his olwne making. And now to consider what Saints these were, or what were the causes of their Sainting: what saint almost among all the Popes Saints shall you find (master master Cope) made within these fiue hundred yeres, but commande hee was either some pope, or some rich bishop and prelate, or some fat abbat, or some blind frier, some monke, or nun, some superstitious regulare, or some builder of monasteries, or some giuer and benefactor to the popish clergie, or maintainer against the rightes and liberties of the popish Church? What poore lay man or lay woman, were their liues neuer so Christian, their faith and confession neuer so pure, their death neuer so agonising for the witnesse of Christ, and truth of his word, shall find any place or fauour in al the popes martyrologe, that is in the popes calendar, either in red colour, or else in blacke?

Double abomination in the popes calendar.

The great fauourable of Rome, a whole day by 5 houres.

The great god-maker of Rome.

But here (master Cope) if ye had the wit, so much to defend as ye haue to ouerthwart, you might take me with the maner, and replie against me for the defence of your great saint-maker, or rather god-maker of Rome: that he maketh no martyrs and saints of these foresaid poore lay men, and lay women, then euer hee did of any other. For he burneth them, hee hangeth them, hee drowneth them, imprisoneth and famisheth them, and so maketh truer martyrs of Christ, then any other of his new shrined saints, whom he hath so dignified in his calendar. For the one hee doth rubricate, only with his red letters, the other he doth rubricate with their diuine blood. And therefore to answer you (M. Cope) to your comparison made betweene the pope and me, for making of holy martyrs and saints: Briefly I say, and repeat me to all the world, that herein is no comparison. For if we speake of true martyrs, who doth make them, but the pope? if we speake of false martyrs, who doth make them, but the pope? And furthermore, to compare together the causes of these martyred saints in my calendar, with them which shine shrined in the popes calendar, taking the same proportion of time as I doe, within these last 500. yeres, why may not I haue as good cause to celebrate these in my calendar, which lost their liues and were slaine, principally for the cause of Christ and of his word: as the pope hath to celebrate his double and simple feasties in his calendar, who in their doings, doctrine and life, as they seemed rather to serue the deuil, then Christ the lord: so in their death appeared no such cause, why they should be sanctified in the church beyond all other? Let not the church of Christ (M. Cope) be deluded with hypocriticall names, nor fained apparitions, and fabulous miracles, neither bee you deceiued your selfe, but let vs reason sincerely to the word of God. That it was in saint Francis (vnto whom his superstitious life, & presumptuous testament, wrought no doubt by Satan, to diminish and obscure the Testament of Jesus Christ) why he should be made a saint, and not an enemie rather of Christ?

The canonisation of S. Gilbert of Sempringham.

What was likewise in frier Dominicke, who before Francis ten yeres together persecuted the poore Waldenses to death and destruction: why should he stand a saint and a piller of the Church? I pray you what see you in Thomas Becket, but that he died for the ambitious liberties of the popish church: what in Athelmus, and in Anselmus, but only that they chased away married priests from the churches, and planted in the monks in their stead? The like also did Dunstanus, who was rubricated with a duplex festum. Elizabeth who was the wife of the marquesse of Thuring, when she had with much peraduenture got out her husband to fight against the Turke, and was there slaine, she afterward enclosed her self, and was made a Nun. And doe ye thinke these causes to be sufficient why they should bee made saints, worshipped in Churches, and set in calendars? Long it were to make rehearsall of all this rifraffe, and almost infinit. One example may suffice for many. S. Gilbert of Sempringham, was the sonne of Jocelin a knight, who for his deformity of his body was set to learning, and afterward made canon, and was author of the Gilbertines, in the time of king John.

This Gilbert after he had erected 12. monasteries of his order of Sempringham, was afterward laboured for vnto the pope to be made a saint: Who hearing of his miracles, wrote his letters to Hubert archbishop of Canturbury, in the behalf of the foresaid Gilbert, willing and commanding per apostolica scripta, that the feast of the said Gilbert should be solemnised through all the province of Canterb. Vt meritis nimirum eius & precibus apud misericordissimum iudicem misericordiam consequamur, &c.

Ex Vit. & vita S. Gilbertisancti fragmen.

Whereupon Hubert the archbishop directeth downe his writings to all the bishops within his prouince, the contents of which his writings doe follow. Hubertus Dei gratia Cant. Archiepiscop. totius Angliæ primas, dilectis in Christo frat. Epifco. per prouinciam Cant. Sal. grat. & benedictionem. D. Papa sicut ex literis ipsius manifestè perpenditur, de conuersatione, meritis, & moribus b. Gilberti magistri ordinis de Sempringham, & miraculis à Deo per eum factis per testes & testimonia sufficienter instructus, de consilio fratrum Cardin. ipsum mag. Catalogo sanctorum decreuit asscribi, solemnitatem eius constituit & mandauit per Cant. prouinciam solemniter celebrari. Insuper & corpus eius cum requisiti fuerimus præcepit ad honorem Dei & gloriam eleuari. Vestra igitur Vniuersitas huic mandato cum deuotione congaudeat, & secundum formam in ipso mandato præscriptam, prædicti confessoris domini depositionem annuam factis cum reuerentia & solemniter obseruari: vt apud Dominum & ab illo vestra debeat & possit deuotio commendari, nec non & ipsius sancti supplex intercessio vobis proficiat ad salutem. Valete.

The pope trieth not the matter of canonising of saints.

The summe of the which writing of the archbishop tendeth to this effect: That forsomuch as the pope hearing of the life and miracles of Gilbert, master of the order of Sempringham, by sufficient witnesse and testimonies, hath in his letters commanded him by the aduice of his cardinals, that the said Gilbert should be canonized and ascribed in the catalogue of saints, and that his solemnitie should be celebrate solemnelie throughout all the prouince of Canturbury. And also his bodie to be taken vp and shrined to the honour and glorie of God: He therefore at the popes commandement writing vnto them, willeth all the suffraganes within his prouince of Canturburie, perely to solemnize and cause to be solemnized reuerently the deposition of the said saint Gilbert confessor: to the intent that their deuotion may be commended of the Lord, and of him. And also, that the humble intercession of the said saint, may profit them to their saluation.

Is this good doctrine M. Cope, in the popes canonization?

Furthermore, for the more full canonising (canonising I had almost said) of this new made saint, the said pope Innocent writing to Hubert aforesaid, alleageth withall a collect of his owne making, which is this: Pleram in nobis æternæ salutor tuæ virtutis operare medelam, vt qui præclara beati Gilberti confessoris tui merita veneramur, ipsius adiuti suffragijs à cunctis animarum nostrarum languoribus liberemur: Qui viuis & regnas, &c. That is: Worke in vs O eternall Sauiour full remedie of thy vertue, that we which worship the worthie merits of blessed Gilbert thy confessor, being succoured by his suffrages, may be deliuered from all languors and diseases of our soules; who liuest and raignest, &c.

The blasphemous collect of the pope making for Saint Gilbert.

The consecration of this one saint (who perhaps was not the worst) I bought here to commemorate, to the intent that the reader preasuring by this one the canonisation of all the rest, may iudge the better vpon this comparison of master Cope, whether of vs both bendicate more impudent authoritie, the pope in his calendar, or I in mine: or to make the comparison more fit, whether is more impudent, the pope in his calendar, or else master Cope in his dialogues more doltish.

Copus pag. 119. lin. 7.

But briefly to make an end of this matter with you; to renounce or to authorise any saints, for man it is presumptuous: to prescribe any thing here to be worshipped, beside God alone, it is idolatrous: to set up any mediatours but Christ onlie, it is blasphemous. And whatsoeuer the pope doth or hath done in his calendar, my purpose in my calendar, was neither to deface any old saint, or to solemnise any new. In my booke of Acts and Monuments entreating of matters passed in the Church, these latter fiue hundred yeres, I did regulate out a calendar, not for any canon to constitute saints, but onlie for a table of them which within the same time did suffer for the testimonie of the word, whom I did and doe take to bee god and godly men. If any haue other iudgement of them, I binde no man to my opinion, as the pope doth to his. The day will come (which shall iudge both them and you. In the meane season it shall be best for you (master Cope) in my iudgement to keepe a good tongue to your head, and to quiet your railing mind. A hard thing it is to iudge before the Lord. Mans iudgement may faile and is vncertaine, the iudgement of God is alwaies sure. Well it is therefore either to be sure by the word and iudgement of God before, what you doe say, or else to say the best. Of such slanderous and intemperat railing, can come no good, neither to them whom ye raile vpon: nor to your selfe which raileth: nor to the church of God that heareth you raile. For them you cannot hurt, they are gone. To your selfe, and though your matters be true, yet little honestie it will bring, to bee counted a railer: and if it bee vncertaine, your state is dangerous, and if it bee false, most miserable: And as to the Church, what great edification can proceed of such contentious brawling and barking one against another, I doe not greatlie see. And if the zeale of the bishop of Romes Church haue so much swallowed you vp, that ye cannot but stampe and stare at traytours when ye see them put in calendars: (first master Cope) be ye sure first that they bee traitours (wisdome would) whom you call traitors. And if ye can so proue them (as ye haue not yet) then let your Irenæus, or Critobulus tell me, why both not this flagrant zeale of yours as hot as Purgatorie burne out, and flame as well against your owne traitors, hanging so many in your owne Calendar and Church at home?

The name of martyrs in the Calendar defended. What is a martyr.

Dole saints of Christ.

Cope counseled to cease his railing.

No good commeth of railing.

And if there be such a catholike zeale in you, that hath set your gentle breast on such a pelting chase, why then is not this your Catholike zeale equallie indifferent? Why take ye not so fell on the one side against sir John Oldcastle, sir Roger Acton, M. Browne, &c. A man would thinke you plaied Hercules furens in Orchestra. On the other side againe ye are Oleo tranquillior. What indifferencie (master Cope) call you this? Or that zeale make you this to be? Albeit, your zeale, I iudge not, as I know it not. Swift iudgement shall not become me, which goe about to correct the same in you. But this I exhort you, to beware (master Cope) that by your olme fruits and doings eudent, ye doe not bewray this zeale in you to be Non secundum scientiam, nor such a zeale as fighteth

The zeale of master Cope examined.

fighteth Pro domo Dei, sed pro domo Pontificis. As I said, I iudge you not. You haue your iudge to whom ye stand or fall: My counsell is, that ye doe not so zeale the bishop of Rome, that for his sake ye lose your olwne soule. Be remember the old vulgar voice, it is not good Ludere cum Lætis; worse it is Iludere: worst of all it is Debacchari in immerentes: Because that Deus ipse vltionum Dominus, many times taketh their cause in hand, according as it is written: Opprobria opprobrantium tibi cecidernnt in me. i. The rebukes of thy rebukers fell vpon me. And seldome haue I seene any such blasphemous railers against the end or punishment of Gods saints and seruants, without great repentance, to come to any good end themselues.

Vntruth in the popish epistles Decretal.

And admit this (as granted vnto you master Cope) that these men had been traitors, which yet are not able to proue. Well, they had their punishment therefore, the world can go no further, and what would you haue more? who and if they repented, why may they not haue as good part in Christs kingdome as your selfe? God forsomuch as the said persons also suffering a double punishment were so constant in the way of truth, and most principally for the same were persecuted, and chiefly therefore brought to their death: that part of example, because I can it pertaine to the profit of the church, why might I not insert it with other church stories in my book? Let the church take that which belongeth to the Church. Let the world take that which to the world pertaineth, and goe no further. And if ye thinke it much, that I would exemplifie these whom you call traitors in the booke of Martyrs: first ye must vnderstand, that I wrote no such booke bearing the title of the booke of martyrs: I wrote a booke called the Acts and Monuments, of things passed in the Church, &c. Wherein many other matters be contained beside the martyrs of Christ. But this peraduenture moueth your choler, that in the Calendar I name them for martyrs. And why may I not in my Calendar call them by the name of martyrs, which were faithfull witnesses of Christs truth and Testament, for the which they were also chiefly brought vnto that end? Or why may I not call them holy Saints, whom Christ hath sanctified with his blessed blood? And what if I should also call the theefe and murderer hanging on the right side of the Lord, by the name of a holy Saint and confessor, for his witnessing of the Lord, what can master Cope say against it?

Vntruth in the popes Legends and Masse bookes.

And as for colouring the names of certain martyrs in the said calendar in red or Scarlet letters (although that pertaineth nothing to me, which was as pleased the Painter or Printer) yet if that be it that so much breaketh patience, why rather doth he not expostulate in this behalf with the great saint-maker of Rome, who hath added thereunto much more then euer did I? For he did red and die them with their olwne blood, whereas I did but only colour them with red letters. And thus for matter of my Calendar enough.

Vntruth in the popes miracles and reliques.

Proceeding now out of the calendar vnto the booke, where he chargeth mee with so many lies, impudencies, banities, deprauations, and vntruths, it remaineth likewise I cleare my selfe, answering first to those lies and vntruths, which to the skore of sir Roger Acton, and sir John Oldcastle doe appertaine. And after to other particulars, as in order of my booke doe follow. And first where he laieth against me whole heapes, and cartloades, I cannot tell, how many of lies and falsities: I here briefly answer master Cope against (or what English Harpesfield else soeuer lieth couered vnder this English Cope) that if a lie be (after the definition of Saint Augustine) whatsoeuer thing is pronounced with the intent to deceiue another: then I protest to you master Cope, and to all the world, there is neuer a lie in all my booke. What the intent and custome is of the papists to doe, I cannot tell: for mine olwne, I will say, although many other vices I haue, yet from this one I haue alwaies of nature abhorred, wittingly to deceiue any man or child, so nere as I could, much lesse the Church of God, whom I with all my heart doe reuerence, and with feare obey. And therefore among diuers causes, that haue withdrawne my mind from the papists faction, almost there is none greater then this, because I see them so little giuen to truth, so farre from all serious feeling and care of sincere religion, so full of false pretended hypocrisie and dissimulation, so little regarding the church of Christ in their inward hearts, which they so much haue in their mouthes: so, as vnder the title therof they may hold vp their olwne estate. Otherwise so little reuerence they pelld to the true and honorable Church of Jesus the son of God, that what vnworthy and rascall ministers they take into it they passe not, what lies and fables, what false miracles and abhord forgeries they inuent to delude it, they care not. I speake not of all.

The lies and vntruthes which I am charged withall.

Some there bee of that set vnstained in conscience, and more religious, and better disposed natures, only of simple ignorance deceiued. But such commonlie haue been and be the chiefe guides and leaders of the papists church, that little true care and small zeale hath appeared in them, toward the Church of Christ, not much regarding what corruption increased therin, so that their commodities might not decrease. Thus out of this fountaine haue gushed out so many prodigious lies in Church Legends, in Saints liues, in manifold fictions, in fabulous miracles, in false and forged reliques, as in peeces of the holy croise, in the blood of Hales, in our Ladies milke, in the nailes of Christ, which they make to a great number. Likewise in their false and blind errours, corrupt doctrines, absurd inuentions, repugnant to the truth of the word. Item in their bastard bokes, forged Epistles, their Apocrypha, and Pseudopigrapha. Here commeth in their forged canons, their tolking and cogging in ancient councels and decrees, as in decret. pse. Isidori, in Canons of the Apostles if those canons were the Apostles) Excepta Romana sede, foisted into the decrees by Gratianus, also the cogging in a false canon to the councell of Nice for the maintenance of the sea of Rome, as appeareth in the sixth Synod of Carthage.

Where commeth in also the epistles of Clement, and other sundrie epistles Decretall, which as they are no doubt falslie inferred by other, so are they the well-head of many superstitious traditions, oppressing this day the Church of Christ. To speake moreouer of the liturgies of Saint Iames, of Cyprian, of Rome and other, of the first masse said by Saint Peter at Rome, and that Saint Peter sate 25. yeres bishop of Rome. To speake also of the workes of Augustine, Ambrose, Hierome, and Gregorie, what Dorso or famous writer hath there been in the Church, vnder whose name some counterfaited bookes haue not falslie been fathered, and yet stand still authorised vnder their patronage, to the great detriment of the Church? What should I speake of Abdias, Amphilochius, Dionysius Areopagita: The Dialogues of Gregorie, which falslie to this day haue been ascribed to Gregorie the first, where indeed they were first written in Greke, by Gregorie the third, and afterward translated out of Greke into Latine by pope Zacharie? vide supra, pag. 116. Likewise that worthy and Imperiall sermon intituled, Eusebij Pamphili Sermo ad Concentum sanctorum, hath to this day wrongfullie borne the name of Eusebius. Whereas in very truth it was made by the good Emperour Constantinus himselfe, in his owne proper tole tile in Latine, and afterward translated out of Latine into Greke by Eusebius, as he him selfe confesseth in his booke De vita Constant. lib. 4. But as touching this sermon, although the name be changed, so godly and fruitfull it is, that it mattereth not much vnder whose name it bee read, yet worthie to be read vnder the name of none so much, as of the emperor Constantine himselfe, who was the true author and owner thereof.

Vntruth in the popes Dialogues. Gregorius Turonensis. Eusebius. Sermo ad Concentum sanctorum. Constantine the emperour.

Briefly, except it be the bokes only of the new Testament, and of the old, what is almost in the popes Church, but either it is mingled or depraued, or altered, or corrupted, either by some additions interlaced, or by some diminution mangled and gelded, or by some glosse adulterate, or with manifest lies contaminate? So that in their doctrine flanketh little truth, in their legends, postues, and masse bokes, lesse truth, in their miracles and reliques least truth of all. Neither yet doe their sacraments remaine cleare and void of manifest lies and corruption. And specially here commeth in the matter I see, which bringeth in much sweete honie into popes hiues, the matter I meane of all lies, where the pope leauing not one crum of bread, nor drop of wine in the reuerend communion, vntrulie, and idolatrously taketh away all substance of bread from it, turning the whole substance of bread into the substance of Christs olwne bodie: which substance of bread, if the pope take from the sacrament, then must he also take the breaking from it: for breaking and the bodie of Christ, can in no wise stand literally together by the Scripture. Thus then as this is pronounced by the word of God to be a manifest lie: so think not much (good reader hereat) as though I passed the bounds of modestie in calling it the arch lie, or master lie of all lies. Because vpon this one, an infinite number of other lies and errors in the popes church, as handmaids doe wait and depend.

The arch lie.

A matter I see.

But forsomuch as I stand here not to charge other men so much, as to defend my selfe, ceasing therefore, or rather deferring for a time to stir this stinking puddle of these vnlawfull and intended lies and vntruths, which in the popes religion and in papists bokes be innumerable, I will now returne to those vntruths and impudent lies which master Cope hath hunted out in my historie of Acts and Monuments, first beginning with those vntruths which he carpeth in the storie of the foresaid sir John Oldcastle, and sir Roger Acton, Browne and the rest.

And first, where he laieth to my charge, that I call them martyrs, which were traytors and seditious rebels against the king, and their countrie: to this I haue answered sufficientlie before.

Now here then must the Reader needs slay a little at M. Copes request, to see my vanitie and impudencie yet more fullie and amplie reproued in refuting a certaine place in my Latine storie, concerning the kings statute made at Leicester, which place and words by him alleaged, be these, pag. 107. Quocirca Rex indicto Leicestriæ concilio (quod fortassis Londini ob Cobhami fautores non erat tutum) præposito edicto immanem denunciat pœnam his, qui cunque de incepto hoc doctrinæ genus sectarentur, vsque adeo in eos seuerus, vt non modo hæreticos, sed perduelliones etiam haberi, ac perduelle gemino mino eos supplicio, suspendio simul & incendio afficiendos statuerit,&c. Et mox: Adeo ille vires, rationesque intendebat omnes aduersus Wickleuianos. Wieleuiani id temporis dicebantur,quicunque Scripturas Dei sua lingua lectitarent,&c.

Thus these words out of my foresaid Latine booke alleaged, master Cope perswadeth himselfe, to haue great aduantage against me,to prowe me a notorious lier, in three sundrie points. First,in that, whereas I say that the king did bold his Parliament at Leycester, adding this by the way of parenthesis (quod forte fis Londini ob Cobhami fautores non erat tutum,&c.) here hee concludeth thereby, simpliciter and precisely, that the lord Cobham and sir Roger Acton with his fellowes, were traytors, &c. Whereby a man may sone thape a cauiller, by the shadow of master Cope. For whereas my Dialysis out of the text speaketh doubtfully, and uncertainely, by this word (forte fis) meaning indeed, the king to be in feare of the Spirituelliers, that hee durst not hold his Parliament at London, but went to Leycester: he arguetb precisely therefore, that the lord Cobham,sir Richard Acto, and his fellowes went about to kill the king. Secondly, where I affirme that the king in that Parliament made a grieuous law against all such as did bold the doctrine of Wickliffe, that they should bee taken hereafter,not for heretikes,but also for fellons,or rebels,or traitors, and therefore should sustaine a double punishment, both to be hanged,and also to be burned,&c. Here commeth in master Bonius, with his Cope on his backe, and prowing me to be a liar, denieth plainely that the king made any such statute: vide pag. 835. line 6. where his words be these: Atqui quod hæretici pro perduellionibus,& deinceps geminatas pœnas suspendij & incendij luerent, vt negatur Foxus, nullo modo illic traditur, &c.

First here would be asked of master Cope,that he calleth patriæ hostes,& proditores? If hee call these traitors, then let bs see whether they that followed the sect of Wickliffe, were made traitors and heretikes by the kings law, or not. And first let bs heare what saith Polydore Virgil, his owne witnes in this behalfe, whose words in his 27. booke, pag. 441. bee these: Quare publice edixit, vt si vlpiam cleinceps reperirentur,qui eam sequerentur sectam,patriæ hostes haberentur,quo sine omni lenitate feuerius ac ocyus de illis supplicium sumeretur,&c. That is, therefore it was by publike statute decreed, that whosoeuer were found hereafter to follow the sect of Wickliffe, should be accounted for traitors, whereby in thout all lenitie, they should bee punished more seuerely and quickly,&c.

Thus haue you (master Cope) the plaine testimonie of Polydore with me. And because we shall further see your selfe more impudent in carping, then I am in bepeaking of histories, you shall vnderstand moreouer and heare, what Thomas Walden, one of your olme catholike brotherhod, and who was also himselfe altue, and a doer in the same Parliament, being the prouincial of the Carmelites, saith in this matter writing to pope Martin, whose very words in Latine here follow, written in his prologue to the said Martin, in this wise: Nec mora longa processit, quin statutum publicum per omne regni concilium in publico emanauit edicto, quod omnes Wicleuistæ sicut dei proditores essent,sic proditores regis,proscriptis bonis censerentur & regni, duplici pœnæ dandi, incendio propter deum, suspendio propter regem, &c. That is: And it was not long after, but a publike law and statute came out, by the comn in assent of the generall parliament of the whole realme, that all Wickleuists, as they were traitors to God, so also should bee counted traitors to the king and to the realme, hauing their goods lost and confiscat vnto the king. And therefore should suffer double punishment, as to be burnt for God, and to be hanged for the king,&c. And thus haue you (M. Cope) not only my sentence, but also the very words of my storie confirmed by this author: because he shall not thinke me to speake so lightly or impudently without my book. And moreouer to confirme the said sentence of Thomas Walden, it followeth also in an other place of the foresaid author: Cons. lib. 1. De doctrina fidei Ecclesiæ Cathol. cap.46. vbi ita de Henrico 5. qui adhuc agit in sceptris, & de eorum perfidia per catholicos bene dictos, legem statui fecit, vt vbicunque per regnum Wickleuista probatus, vt reus puniretur de crimine læsæ maiestatis,&c. That is: And yet when the noble K. Henrie the fifth, who as yet doth liue and raigne, began first to raigne, began to set forth a law, by his learned catholikes which were about him, against the falsenesse of these men, so that whosoeuer was proued to be a Wickleuist, through the whole Realme, should bee punished for a traytor, &c. What words can you haue master Cope more plaine then these? or what authozitie can you require of more credit, which lined in the same time, and both did see and heare of the same things beeing also writting to pope Martine, was by the said pope Martine allowed, approued, and solemnlie commended, as appeareth by the popes epistle to him, wherin the pope declareth how he caused his bokes. Per solennes viros videri, & examinari: That is, by solemne persons to be seene and examined,&c. So that you must nes grant either this to be true, that Walden writeth, or else that the pope (tanquam papa) in allowing his writings, may erre and be deceiued. Chuse ye (master Cope) of these two options whether you will take.

And if yee thinke this my assertion yet not sufficiently proued with these authozities aforesaid, I will also hereunto adioyne the testimonie of another writer named Roger Wall, who writing De Gestis Henric. 5. and speaking of the said statute of this parliament soueething more plainely then the rest, hath these words: In hoc etiam Parliamento nobilitas regia hostes Christi sibi reputans proditores, volens dare intelligere vniuersis,quod ipse absque cuiuscunque fluctuationis dubio, quam diu auras hauriret vitales, verus & perfectus Christianæ fidei æmulator exilteret: statuit & decreuit, vt quotquot ipsius sectæ,quæ dicitur Lollardorum,inuenirentur æmuli & fautores eo facto rei proditorij criminis in maiestatem regiam haberentur,&c. In English: Also in this parliament, the noble king reputing Christs enemie to be traitors to himselfe, to the intent that all men should know without all doubt, that so long as he liued,he would be a true and perfect follower of Christian faith: did enact and decree, that whosoeuer should be found followers and maintainers of this sect, which is called the Lollards sect, Ipso facto, should be counted and reputed guiltie of treason against the kings maiestie,&c.

By these hitherto alleaged, if Cope will not be satisfied, yet let the reader indifferent iudge: Vtrum in hac re regis nugator Foxus, an Copus calumniator. And yet moreouer to make the matter more certaine, marke the clamation of the said Roger Walle, added to the end of these words aboue recited, whereby we haue to vnderstand more clearely both what were the proceedings of the king in the said Parliament, and also what was the blind affection of monks and priests at that time toward their king and prince (which was then called princeps sacerdotum) in condemning and destroying the poze Lollards. The words of the monke be these: O verus amicus, qui amico illatam iniuriam sibi inferri confimiliter arbitratur, præiudicium illi intentum reputat asse suum, & ad eius onera conferenda,auxiliationis humeros supponere non veretur, &c. That is: O true friend, who taketh and reckoneth that iniurie no lesse done to himselfe which is done to his friend: and that præiudice which is intended against him, reputeth to bee his owne; and to beare together the burdens of his friend sticketh not to lay to his owne shoulders, for the raising and helping of him,&c.

How can it now be denied (master Cope) in reading these authors, and seeing their testimonies, but that Lolladerie in this Parliament was made both treason and heresie, and had therefore a double iudgement of punishment annexed, to bee hanged for the one, and to bee burned for the other, according as in my former Latine storie I recorded, and yet I trust, I trifled not?

But you will say again (as yee doe) that there is no mention made for heresie to bee made treason, nor of any double punishment to bee inflicted for the same. In the booke of the statute (I grant) there is no expresse mention in words of heresie to be made treason, expressly signified in rigor of words: but inclusiuelie it is so inferred, that it cannot be denied. For first, where lands, goods and cattell of the said Lollards were lost and forfeit to the king, what doth this import else, but treason or felonie?

And where the lord Cobham (for whose cause specially this statute seemed to be made) did sustaine afterward both hanging and burning by the vigor of the same statute, what is here contained, but a double penaltie? Againe, where in the beginning of the statute mention is made of rumors and congregations, and after vpon the same followeth the seruices of the K. til cerunto the officers be first sworne should be first preferred for libertie of holy church, and punishment of heretikes, made before these daies? not repealed, vt supra, pag. 524. what meaneth this, but to make these congregations of the Lollards, to be forceable entrées, riots, great ridings, vnlawfull assemblies, affraiers of the people, armour, routs, and insurrections, and so forth them to the former statutes not repealed, that is, to the statute, an. 13. Hen. 4. chap. 7. where the punishment is left to the discretion of the king. Or else to the statute, an. 15. Richard 2. chap. 2. where the penaltie is made fine and ransome: Or else to the statute, an. 5. Richard 2. chapter 6. where such assemblies bee made plaine treason, in fine statuti.

And as here is matter of treason sufficiently contained, so for heresie likewise the same statute referreth them to the ordinaries, and to the lawes, properly to heresie appertaining, and to the statute an. 2. Henr. 4. chapter 15. where the penaltie is burning. Also to the statute an 5. Rich. 2. chapter 5.

5. So that in this present statute here mention is contained, as yee see, although not in expresse words, yet inclusiuely (by referring to other statutes not repealed) both Lolladerie which is punished with burning, and forcible entrees which is punished at the kings pleasure. And thus much concerning the second vntruth, which master Cope vntruely noted in me.

3. The third vntruth which he noteth in me concerning this matter is this, wherein he reproueth me, that I say, there was no other cause of deuising this sharpe law and punishment against these men, but only for hauing the Scripture bookes.

And therefore here is noted in the margent Foxi dolus malus, but let master Cope take he. d. he deceiue not himselfe and other. For my part I remember no such place in this my Latine storie where I so say. Only my words bee these, added in the latter end of the place aboue recited: Wieleuiani verò dicebantur quicunque id temporis scripturas Dei sua lingua lectitarent,&c. That is: They were called Wickleuists, whosoeuer at that time read scripture in English, or vulgar tongue, &c. I say not, that for the scriptures being read in the English tongue, therfore the law was enacted, but so in master Cope disposed to construe it. What law and statutes were made against writing, or reading of any bokes in English, or in any other tongue contrary to the catholike (that is, the Romish) faith, or to the determination of the holy Church (that is, of Rome) reade I beseech thee the bloudie statute made anno 2. Hen. 4. chap. 15. aboue specified pag. 482. Also read the constitution prouincial of Thomas Arundell aboue mentioned, pag. 484. col. 1. line 59. Where it was decreed, that the text of holy scripture should not bee had, or read in the vulgar tongue from the time of master John Wickliffe, for euer after, vnlesse the said translation be approued first by the ordinarie, or by prouincial councell, vnder paine and punishment of heresie. Now let the Reader iudge whether the reading of Scriptures bookes in the English tongue, by the making or translating of Wickliffe, or from the time of Wickliffe downeward, be counted heresie, or not. As for the appointing of the ordinarie, or of the prouincial councell added in the end of the said constitution, it maketh nose for a plea, or pretence, then for any iust exception, or any true intention. For what man hauing those scriptures translated in English, would either present them to their ordinaries being so set against the reading of such bokes? or what ordinarie would or did euer since Arundels time approue any such translation, presented vnto them? Or else why did the good martyrs of Amersam suffer death, in the beginning of king Henry the eight, for hauing and reading certaine bokes of Scripture, which were (as is said) only foure epistles of saint Paul, with certaine other prayers? And the other which heard them but only read, did beare faggots: and the same time, the children were compelled to set faggots vnto their fathers; at which time Longland being then bishop of Lincolne, and preaching to them at the stake, said: that whatsoeuer they were, that did but mouse his lips in reading those chapters, were damned for euer: as when we come to that time, by the grace of Christ, shall hereafter more amplie and notoriously appeare. And where then is this Dolus malus Foxi, nargined against me, for erastie dealing in my storie?

Moreouer, where master Cope proceeding farther in this matter, asketh me: how was the lord Cobham obedient to the king, when as for the feare of him, the king durst not then keep his Parliament at London? To whom I answer again, asking likewise of master Cope, how was the king then afraid to hold his Parliament at London for the lord Cobham, when the lord Cobham at that time was in Wales? And here maister Cope thinking to haue me at a narrow streait, and to hold me fast, biddeth me tell him, how it could be otherwise, but the lord Cobham must nedes haue fautors? And who should these fautors be (saith he) but sir Roger Acton, Browne and their fellowes? The which mightie question of master Cope, I answer againe: how could sir Roger Acton, Browne and their fellowes bee then fautors of the lord Cobham, for whom the king durst not hold his Parliament at London, when as the said Roger Acton, Browne, and the rest were put to death, a whole yeere almost before the Parliament at Leycester began?

And now as I haue hitherto briefly, and truly answered your askings (master Cope); let me be so bold with you again, to propound to you likewise another question, for so much as you haue put me to the searching of the statutes in this matter, wherewith before I was not much acquainted. How out of the same statutes riseth a double scruple, or question, worthie to be solued. The case is this, That forasmuch as so many good martyrs and saints of God hitherto in this realme of England, haue been burned from the time of king Henrie the fourth, Henry the fifth, Henrie the firth, Henrie the eighth, to the time, and in the time of Quéene Mary: my question is, that you, with all your learned counsell about you will tell me, by what law, or statute of the realme were these men brent? I know the ancient custome hath been, that heretikes conuicted by a prouinciall councell, were wont to be left to the secular power. But how will yée prowe me, these heretikes were either conuict by such prouinciall councell, or that these secular men ought to be your butchers in burning them, whom he haue committed to them? If yée alleage the fire articles made in the raigne of king Henrie the eighth: those articles neither did come before the time of king Henry the eighth, neither yet were they reuiued after his time. If yée alleage the statute made anno 5. Rich. 2. cap. 5. In that statute (I answer) its contained no matter of burning, but onely of arrest to bee done at the certifications of the prelats, without any further punishment there mentioned. To conclude, if yée alleage the statute made an. 2. Hen. 4. ch. 15. and reuiued in the raigne of Quéene Mary, mentioned before pag. 482. To that statute I answer, that although the pretensed statute appeareth in forme of words in the printed bokes to giue vnto the temporall officers authozitie to bring them to the stake, and to burne them, whom the bishop deliuereth: yet is it not to be proued, either by you, or any other, that statute to bee law, or warrant sufficient to burne any person or persons committed to the secular power by the clergie. And that I prowe thus; for although the same statute of king Henrie the fourth in the bokes printed, appeare to haue law and authozitie sufficient, by the full assent of the king, of the lords, and of the comnions: yet being occasioned by master Cope to search further in the statutes, I haue found that in the rolles and first originals of that Parliament, there is no such mention either of any petition or else of any assent of the commons annered, or contained in that statute, according as in the printed bokes vsuall in the lawyers hands to crafcike and falsike is foisted in, as by the plaine words therof may well appeare.

For where the said statute, an. 2. Hen. 4. chap. 15. being thus intituled in the rolles: Petitio cleri contra hæreticos, and allowed vnto in this forme: hath these words:

Stat. an. 2. Henri. 4. cap. 15. Intituled in the Rolle thus: Petitio Cleri contra hæreticos, and allowed vnto in this forme.

QVas quidem petitiones prælatorum & cleri superius expressas do noster Rex, de consensu magnatum & aliorum procerum regni sui, in præsenti Parliamento existentium concessit, & in omnibus & singulis iuxta formam & effectum eorundem ordinauit & statuit de cætero firmiter obseruari, and so forth according to the petition: and more words, are there not in the statute roll. Wherefore where as the statute bokes printed hath thus: Super quibus quidem nonnullus & excessibus superius recitatis (videlicet, in the petition of the prelats and clergie) prælati & clerus supradicti ac etiam communitates dicti Regni in eodem parliamento existen. dicto Domino Regi supplicarunt,&c. Qui quidem Dominus Rex, &c. ex assensu magnatum & aliorum procerum eiusdem Regni, &c. concessit, ordinauit, &c. These words, &c etiã communitates dicti Regni, &c. are put in further then the roll doth warrant, and seemeth to be the practise of the clergie, to make that as an act of Parliament, and to séme to haue the force of a law, which was neuer assented vnto by the commons.

And thus you see how this forsaid statute, printed both in English and in Latine among the prouincial councels of Oxford (by the vertue whereof so many good men haue been burned so long in England) both vtterly ouerthrowe it selfe, for that it swerueth from the record both in forme and in matter, and lacketh the assent of the commons. Which doubt I thought at this present to propound vnto you (master Cope) for that you haue so vrged me to the searching out of the statutes, by your declaiming against the lord Cobham.

Moreouer vnto this statute aforsaid, ioyne also withall an other statute made in the prattie daies, an. 5. Rich. 2. In the which yeere, where as a statute was concluded in the Parliament an. 5. Rich. 2. chap. 5. against certaine preachers specified in the same statute, which going about in certaine habits from place to place, did draw the people to sermons: And commissions were made and directed in the said Parliament to the therifes, to arrest all such preachers, and to impison the same, at the certifications of the prelates. Here is then to be noted, that the same statute, an. 5. Rich. 2. chap. 5. was reuoked by the king in the parliament, an. 6. Rich. 2. vpon the words of the commons being these, videl. Forasmuch as the same statute was neuer assented, ne granted by the comnons, but that which therein was done, was done without their assent, and now ought to be vndone, for that it was neuer their meaning to be iustified and to bind themselues and their successors to the prelates to more, then their ancestors had done before them. Ex Rot. Parliam. And yet this forsaid reuocation notwithstanding in Quéene Maries time, they inquired vpon that statute.

In searching of these statutes, as you haue occasioned me to find out these scruples: so being found out, I thought here not to dissemble them, forasmuch as I see, and heare many now a dates so boldly to beare themselues vpon this statute, and thus king so to execute themselues do say, they haue done nothing but the law, the law: to the intent that these men seeing now how inexcusable they be both before God and man, hauing no law to beare them out, may the sooner repent their bloudie and vnlawfull tyrannie, exercised so long against Gods true seruants, yet in time before that the iust law of God shall find out their vniust dealings, which partly he beginneth already to do, and more no doubt will doe hereafter.

In the meane time this my petition I put vp to the comnons, and to all other which shall hereafter put vp any petition to the Parliament: that they being admonished by this a bule, will shew themselues hereafter more wise and circumspect: both what they agree vnto in parliaments, and also what connech out in their name. And as these good comnons in this time of king Henry 4. would not consent nor agree to this bloudie statute, nor to any other like: For so we read that the commons in that bloudie time of king Hen. 4. when another like cruell bill was put vp by the prelates in an. 8. Henry 4. against against the Lollards, they neither consented to this, and also ouerthrow the other: so in like manner it is to bee wished, that the commons in this our time, or such other that shall haue to doe in parliaments hereafter following the steps of these former times, will take vigilant heed to such cruell billes of the popes prelacie, being put vp, that neither their consent doe passe rashly: nor that their names in any condition bee so abused: Considering with themselues that a thing once being passed in the parliament, cannot afterward be called backe: And a little inconuenience once admitted, may grow afterward to mischiefes that cannot be stopped. And sometime it may so happen, that though rash consent of voices, the end of things being not well aduised, such a thing may be granted in one day, that afterward many daies may cause the whole realme to rue. But I trust men are bitten enough with such blacke parliaments to beware of afterclaps. The lord Jesus onely protector of his Church, stop all craftie deuices of subtill enemies, and with his wisedome direct our parliaments, as may be most to the aduantage of his word, and comfort of his people, Amen, Amen.

The persecutors in burning Gods people haue bene against the law.

A necessarie admonition to the commons of England.

And thus much hauing said for the defence of the lord Cobham, of sir Roger Acton knight, master John Browne Esquier, John Beuerlie preacher, and of other their fellowes against Alanus Copus Anglus, here I make an end with this present Interim, till further leisure serue me hereafter (Christ willing) to pay him the whole interest which I owe vnto him. Adding this in the meane time, and by the way: that if master Cope had been a Momus any thing reasonable, hee had no great cause so to wrangle with mee in this matter, who as I did commend the lord Cobham, and that worthily, for his valiant standing by the truth of his doctrine before Thomas Arundell the archbishop: so touching the matter of this conspiracie, I do not affirme or define any thing thereof in my former historie so precisely, that he could well take any vantage of against me, who in writing of this conspiracie laid against sir Roger Acton, and sir John Oldcastle, doe but distinctiue-ly or doubtfully speake thereof, not concluding certainely this conspiracie either to be true, or not true, but only pawting the same not to be true at that time, as Polydore Virgil, and Edward Hall in their histories doe affirme: which say that this conspiracie began after the burning of John Husse and Hieronie of Prage: Which could not be. And thereto tendeth my assertion. My words are plaine, and are these: pag. 174. coll. 1. 2. Wherefore it is euident that there was either no conspiracie at all against the king: or else that it was at some other time, or done by other captaines, &c.

These be my words with other mee, pag. col. and line aboue noted. In the which proposition disiunctiue, if either part bee true, it is enough for me. His part it was to refell both, which he hath not done. But onely standing fast vpon the one part, disannulleth the other. And this is Alanus Copus Anglus, who by that he so all comes from Rome, whither he is now gone as I heare say) I trust he will returne a better Logician home again to his Anglians.

But to the truth of our matter, as I said before, so I say again, what soeuer this worthie, noble, vertuous knight, Sir Roger Acton was otherwise, this is certaine, that hee was alwaies of contrary mind and opinion to the bishop of Rome, and to that kind of people, for the which cause he had great enuie and hatred at their hands, and could as little beare it: neither doe I greatly dissent from them, which do suspect or iudge that the lord Cobham, by his friendly helpe escaped out of the Tower, and that peraduenture was the cause why hee was apprehended and brought to trouble, and in the end came to his death. Other causes also there might be, that these good men percase did frequent among themselues some conuenticles. (which conuenticles was made treason by the statute aforesaid) either in those thickets or in some place else, for the hearing of Gods word, and for publike prayer: and therefore had they this Beuerlie their preacher with them.

But to conclude, whatsoeuer this sir Roger Acton was, this is the truth, which I may boldlie record, as one writing the Acts and things done in the church, that he was at length apprehended, condemned and put to death or martyrdome 3. yeares and more before the lord Cobham died. Likewise malice John Wolmie, and John Beuerlie the preacher, suffered with him the same kind of death (as some say) in the field of saint Giles, with other moe, to the number of 36. if the stories bee true. Which was in the moneth of Januarie, an. 1413. after the computation of our English stories, counting the yere from the annunciation, but after the Latine writers counting from Christs natiuitie, an. 1414. according as this picture is specified.

These men, as is said, suffered before the lord Cobham about three yeares, of whole death diuers doe write diuerslie. Some say they were hanged and burnt in S. Giles field: of whom is Fabian, with such as follow him. Other there be which say that some of them were hanged and burnt. Polydorus speaking onlie of their burning maketh no mention of hanging. Another certaine English chronicle I haue in my hands borrowed of one M. Bowyer, who somwhat differing from the rest recordeth thus of sir Roger Acton, that his iudgement before the iustice was thus, to be drawne through London to Tiborn, and there to bee hanged, and so hee was naked, saue certaine parts of him couered with a cloth, &c. And when certaine daies were past (saith the author) a trumpeter of the kings called Thomas Cliffe gat grant of the king to take him solwne, and to burie him, and so he did, &c. And thus haue you the storie of sir Roger Acton, and his fellow brethren. As touching their cause, whether it were true, or else by error mistaken of the king, or by the fetch of the bishops surmised, I refer it to the iudgement of him which shall iudge both the quicke and dead, & seculum per ignem. To whom also I commit you M. Cope: God shield your tournie well to Rome, whither I heare say you are going, and make you a good man.

Sir Roger Acton commeth to the bishop of Rome.

Taxtes concerning all those sir Roger Acton with the rest, were put to death for treasons and Lollards.

M. Cope gone to Rome.

After the decease or martyrdom of these aboue mentioned, who were executed in the month of Januarie, an. 1414. in the next moneth following, and in the same yere, the 20. day of Februarie, God take away the great enemie of his word, and rebell to his king Thomas Arundell archbishop of Canturburie. Whose death following after the execution of these good men aboue recited, by the marueilous strokes of God so suddenly, may seeme somewhat to declare their innocency, and that he was also some great procurer of their death, in that God would not suffer him longer to liue, striking him with death incontinently vpon the same. But as I did the other before, so this also I doe referre, to the secret iudgement of the Lord, who once shall iudge all secrets openly.
